Thus doth the Capitular of Charles the Great charge it on the Biſhop of Cyprus in the Second Council of Nice, that he allows the Image the ſame worſhip which belongs unto the Trinity; (and ſome learned Papiſts, Aquinas, and Bellarmine, &c. have done little leſs.) But he that will ſurvey the Greek acts of that Council, will find the Capitular miſtaken. For when the Greek reads τὸν καὶ λατρείαν προσκύνησιν μονῇ τῇ τελείᾳ ἀναπέμπω, I perform that adoration of worſhip to none but the Trinity, (and ſaith of the images only δεχόμενος καὶ ἀσπαζόμενος τιμητικῶς εἰκόνας, &c. I receive and embrace them reverently) the Capitular reads it in a quite contrary ſence, for having ſaid, Servitium adorationis quod Trinitati debetur, ei ſe redditurum garrierit (which though it hath no great hurt in it, becauſe the word [Ei] that follows, may apply it to Trinitati, and cannot refer to imagines, yet by [garrierit] it appears the Capitular did not take it ſo) 'tis added, Servitium ſoli debitum Creatori, exhibere ſe fatetur Creaturis, &c. Which is a plain calumny to that Biſhop, and even contrary to the former part of the relation, (the Latine words cited from the Council) if the [Ei] be taken notice of. Sect. 60.

As for the very making of an Image of God the Father, who never was cloathed in fleſh, or viſible form, if it be on deſign ſo to repreſent him, or if (being made) it be received as a reſemblance, or image of him, this is a moſt irrational folly or miſtake, for which there is no excuſe; and though it be not idolatry, unleſs being thus made it be worſhipt alſo, yet is it a direct contradiction to one great end of Gods prohibiting Images, viz. that all men be admoniſht that he is inviſible; and 'tis worth obſerving, that the ancienter of the Heathens themſelves have reſolved God to be ſo far from any viſible ſhape, that they would not allow the making any image or picture of him. Thus Empedocles, ὔτε γὰρ ἀνθρωπέη κεφαλὴ, &c. No mans head, or feet, or knees, or other limbs to be conceived in God. Ἀλλα φρὴν ἱερὴ καὶ ἀθέσφατος, &c. but a ſacred ineffable mind; ſo ſaith Plutarch in Numa, that Pythagoras ἀόρατον καὶ ἀκήρατον καὶ νοητὸν ὑπελάμβανεν εἶδος τὸ πρῶτον, conceived God (under the title of the firſt) to be inviſible, &c. and that on thoſe grounds Numa forbad the Romans, ἀνθρωποειδῆ καὶ ζωομορφὸν εἰκόνα θεῶν νομίζειν, to conceive God to have the ſhape of any creature, or to have πλαστὸν εἶδος τοῦ θεοῦ, any formed Image of God. Which ſaith he, continued for one hundred and ſeventy years after the building of Rome, no ἄγαλμα ἔμμορφον, image of any form to be ſeen in their Temples. So ſaith Gerſon, I remember, of the Temple of Peace in Rome, which it ſeems was of that firſt erection, ſine ſimulachro, ſine imaginibus, it had no reſemblance or image in it. So Antiphanes of God; that he is not known by an image, nor likened to any thing, διὸτερ αὐτὸν οὐδεὶς ἐκμαθεῖν ἐξ εἰκόνος δύναται, and therefore no man can learn him by the help of an image. And Philoponus in his Preface to Ariſtotle de Anima conceives it very neceſſary to a pious man that would conceive, or pray to God, as he ought, to ſtudy the Mathematicks, by the help of which he may be able to abſtract and ſeparate ἀφ' ὕλης, from matter and ſo have a right notion of the deity. So agreeable to the general notion of wiſe Heathens (till a cuſtom of ſin had beſotted them) was that of God himſelf to Moſes, Thou haſt not ſeen any ſimilitude at any time, Deut. 4. 12. 15. On which the making any Image of him is prohibited. All which notwithſtanding, if in the repreſentation of a ſacred ſtory, there be ſet down any form, particularly an eye, a ray, a glory, &c. not to expreſs the perſon of God the Father, but to ſtand for him, not to ſignify any ſuppoſed likeneſs of him (which is impoſſible) but only to preſent him to the mind of the beholder, a doing ſome action of his (which is in effect to do the very ſame thing in a Table, which the word Jehovah or God would do in a Book) I conceive not what charge could be laid on it, at leaſt what degree or ſpice of Idolatry, unleſs I muſt be thought to worſhip the Name of God, becauſe I write or read it. Sect. 61.

As for the reſemblance of the man Chriſt Jeſus, the bare expreſſing and not worſhipping that form, that was ſo long viſible on this earth, as this pretends no more to the painting of divinity, than the lines of a body can be thought to undertake to expreſs the ſoul, (and ſo cannot be accuſed of that impoſture) ſo will it not be liable to any other charge with any that hath not reſolved all pictures even of his own parents unlawful, (unleſs it be perhaps in order to the danger of being worſhipt by others, which conſequently ought very prudently to be weighed and conſidered, before any ſuch be ſet up in any place, as before was touched.) Sect. 62.

And the ſame may be ſaid of the pictures of holy men, the diſcourſe wholly abſtracting from worſhip, or deſign, or thought of worſhip, as here it doth in our preſent conſideration; To which purpoſe it is obſervable, that Calvin himſelf is by Doctor Reynolds produced, and avouched (againſt Bellarmines contrary ſlaunder) to affirm the Images of Chriſt and the Saints, non eſſe prohibitas ſimpliciter, not to be ſimply prohibited; and ſo in like manner, Luther, the Zuinglians, Melanchthon, and the Magdeburgians, all deteſting the worſhip of Images, but not the Images themſelves. And ſo Illyricus and Peter Martyr alſo, who thinks the worſhip of images to be a prime part of Popiſh Antichriſtianiſm, doth yet reſolve, Chriſti & Sanctorum imagines haberi rectè poſſe, modo ne colantur atque adorentur, that the images of Chriſt and the Saints may lawfully be had, ſo they be not worſhipt. Sect. 63.

Once more, to worſhip the bread in the Sacrament, muſt (whereſoever 'tis to be met with) certainly be Idolatry too, in the literal notion of the word, i. e. the worſhipping that which is not God. And for thoſe that do this on any the ſubtileſt ground, that by any errour or miſtake (be it never ſo pioully taken up) do actually worſhip this bread, that firſt conceive it to be turned into the very body of Chriſt, and the elements after conſecration to be no longer bread and wine, but very Chriſt incarnate, and thereupon do worſhip it. Theſe I ſay, in caſe they be miſtaken, and thoſe elements be not ſo turned and tranſubſtantiated into Chriſt, though they are not guilty of the ſin of Idolatry in all the aggravations that belonged to it among the Heathen; being not guilty of their πολυθεότης, the acknowledgment of the many Gods, of which their Image-worſhip was an appendage; yet can I not free them from the charge of worſhipping an Idol, i. e. ſomewhat which is not God, viz. a piece of conſecrated bread, &c. Sect. 64.

He that conceives this too ſuddain or ſevere a cenſure, may know that the Papiſt-Doctors are very ready to make confeſſion of it themſelves. If the Elements be not ſo changed, ſaith Coſtenus of Tranſubſtantiation, we Papiſts are the meaneſt vileſt kind of Idolaters in the World, worſe (as I remember he adds) than the Laplanders that worſhipped a red Cloth. And there is no denying it upon that ſuppoſition, becauſe 'tis part of the ſuppoſition, that what is ſo worſhip'd for God, is not God, and that is אֱלִיל an Idol in the Scripture-ſence, which is all that I have now ſaid. Sect. 65.

And if it be replyed that they worſhip nothing, but what they conceive to be Chriſt, and conſequently that the ignorance and contrary perſwaſions which may be pretended for ſuch acts in ſome men, particularly the Romaniſts, may plead much for them in Gods Court, (as we read that the times of Ignorance God winked at in ſome Heathens; that was an idolatrous ignorance, ſo far at leaſt as not to deprive them, and their poſterity of all means of recalling them,) I ſhall then anſwer, that ſo I ſhall hope Sect. 66.

hope (and pray) that it may do in this matter alſo, move God's mercy ſo far at leaſt, as (if not to pardon the ſin without repentance, yet) to give grace to work a ſight and a change in ſuch ſeduced ignorants.

Sect. 67. And then putting the Caſe anew, whether, If the bread in the Euchariſt be not tranſubſtantiate (as, according to ſome other principles of the Papiſts, I conceive it near demonſtrable that it is not, that I mention not the direct contradictions which are affirmed or implyed in that Doctrine) and yet Coſterus and his friends think it is, ſuppoſing them to come honeſtly and blameleſly to theſe errours. If, I ſay, it be demanded, whether in this Caſe [that their ignorance or errour be grounded on miſunderſtanding of Scripture] This ſo ſimple and not groſs ignorance may ſerve for a ſufficient antidote to allay the poyſon of ſuch a ſin (of material, though perhaps in them not formal Idolatry, becauſe if they were not verily perſwaded, that it were God, they profeſs they would never think of worſhipping it) I ſhall then anſwer, that of this matter I had only temptation to make, and ſet the queſtion (as before I had of prayer to Saints, ſuppoſing the Petitioner to believe that they could hear him) but have now no neceſſity to define and ſatisfie it, being only to conſider what idolatry is, not how excuſable ignorance or miſtake can make it. Yet ſomething it will not be amiſs to add to direct our Charity.

Sect. 68. That this ignorance, or falſe opinion will not make the worſhipping of bread (remaining bread) to be the worſhipping of none but God, I conceive 'tis plain; Or if it would, it would make the Heathens worſhipping of an image to be the worſhipping of none but that God, whoſe image it was, for they ſure believed as much that that image was by conſecration become the body of God, and animated by it, as any Papiſt believes tranſubſtantiation. But whether this their errour was as capable of Apology or pardon, being infuſed into them by their falſe Teachers (which yet they thought to be true ones, (and pretended to Revelation for it (ſaith Maimonides) as this which is taken up upon the words of Scripture (though in a miſtaken and (as I conceive) impoſſible, becauſe contradictory, ſence) I ſhall now define no farther, than by ſaying theſe two things.

Sect. 69. Firſt, that the Heathen Idolatry was the worſhipping of the many falſe Gods firſt, and then of the images of them, (the former of which theſe men are not ſaid, or thought to be guilty of) ſecondly, that the more the Conſcience believes this errour to be a truth of God's, and the more innocently it comes to that belief, the eaſier in all probability will the ſentence be another day; That ignorance or miſtake which ſincerely and honeſtly (without mixture of carnal principle, or deſign, prejudice, or paſſion, &c.) founds it ſelf in the word of God miſtaken, (and would be laid aſide, if ſufficient inſtruction were offered) being very juſtly the object of our pity and our prayers, and neither of our cenſure, nor Scorn; And if it were meerly a ſpeculative errour, and had not the unhappineſs of ſome impious practice attending it, I ſhould make the leſs doubt of its obtaining pardon at God's hands; And howſoever I will hope, it may ſtill (at that gracious Tribunal) be far from being irremiſſible to him, who hath reformed his other known ſins, and for all known and unknown is truly humbled.

Sect. 70. This manner of ſtating of this difficulty, may in reaſon perſwade them that are concerned in it, to be willing to ſee and reform their errour, if it be poſſible, or if prepoſſeſſion have made it otherwiſe to them, yet in all juſtice not to expect of us, (who profeſs to believe that the Elements are not tranſubſtantiate, and that the humane nature of Chriſt is received and contained in, and confined to Heaven, till the day of reſtitution of all things; and this withal upon the ſame grounds, (I mean of literal affirmation of Scripture) on which they profeſs to believe that this is Chriſts body, and this neither contradicted by any other Scripture, nor implying any thing like a contradiction in reaſon, nor a ſavageneſs, or a ſin, as, Saint Auguſtin ſaith, eating of Chriſts fleſh doth, and that therefore it muſt not be literally interpreted) to worſhip that which we think a creature, or ſomewhat which is not God, or anathematize us and ſeparate from our communion for not doing ſo.

Sect. 71. As for our Church, which only adores Chriſt in the Sacrament (as that ſignifies the Action; in which certainly Chriſt is) and not the Elements themſelves, nor Chriſt's body locally preſent under the ſhape of thoſe Elements, (as certainly it cannot be, without either being no longer in Heaven or being in more places than one at once) which hath ſet the doctrine of that Sacrament in a moſt exquiſite temper to ſatisfie all rational Chriſtian pretenders, in that moſt excellent Catechiſm in the Liturgy, and in her practice allows the Elements no more than a reverent uſage proportionable to ſuch inſtruments of Gods worſhip, (which is both juſtified by * Ameſius, who aſſigns them a ſingular reverence in time of the uſe of them, and a privative kind of reverence after it) there can be no ſhew of charge againſt it for ſo doing, nor conſequently for kneeling at the time of receiving the Sacrament which is only a kneeling to God in prayer (which might be now farther enlarged on, but that it hath had its place in another † diſcourſe) unleſs it be a fault to worſhip Chriſt, or to chooſe that time or place to do it in the lowlieſt manner, when, and where he is eminently repreſented by the Prieſt, and offered by God to us.

* Caſe of Conſc. c. 31.

Sect. 72. As for the Eaſt, or altar, or ſyllables of the name of Jeſus, he that muſt think them worſhip'd, by thoſe who profeſs and proteſt to worſhip God, and none but God, (that way or on that occaſion) muſt either be of a very ſhort diſcourſe, (like them in Athenæus, that hearing men cry Ζεῦ σῶσον, God help, when the Neighbour ſneezed, thought the very thing which we call ſneezing, or elſe the brain from which it came, to be a God ſo worſhip'd by men) or elſe of a very pettiſh ſpleen, that can condemn the moſt blameleſs authoriz'd practices, not only of this preſent particular, but of the antient univerſal Church for the worſhipping God toward the Eaſt was moſt eminently ſuch) upon any the moſt irrational jealouſie, or diſlike.

Sect. 73. And ſo laſtly, for the ſign of the Croſs, uſed by our Church in Baptiſm, which hath been by ſome cryed down under the title of Idolatry, two things it will not be amiſs briefly to have obſerved, 1. That the ſame ground of zeal or paſſion that hath incited ſome men lately to charge it of a breach of the ſecond Commandment, hath long ſince moved * one of the ſame ſpirit to accuſe it as a ſin againſt the other nine, and to entitle his ſeveral Chapters, of the Swearing, Sabbath-breaking, Murther, Adultery, Stealing, Falſe witneſs, &c. and at laſt of the concupiſcence of the Croſs, as well as the Idolatry of it, the reaſons being much alike for the whole charge. 2. That the ſigning with the ſign of the Croſs in that Sacrament, is ſomewhat diſtant from that which the Papiſts uſe, and an act of departure from them in King Edward's ſecond Liturgy, more than had been in the firſt Reformation. The former cuſtom was to croſs the Child at the Church door, when it was brought to Baptiſm, but this of ours as a mark of initiation or reception into Chriſts flock, immediately follow my Baptiſm, and a kind of teſſera, or military ſign that the perſon thus conſigned into Chriſts Militia, ſhall for ever after think himſelf obliged manfully to fight, &c. A change made meerly out of compliance with them which were jealous of too great an inclination to Popery, and yet now charged with the guilt of that which it was on purpoſe deſigned to decline.

* Parker of the Croſs.

Sect. 74. I ſhould not I conceive be thought in earneſt, if I ſhould go about to vindicate the uſe of the Liturgy, and of all ſet forms of prayers from this charge of Idolatry; 'Tis true it hath been Printed, that words in a book are Images, and conſequently that to pray before a book, or uſe a book in prayer, is Idolatry, or Image-worſhip. But till this Argument be extended to all words ſpoken, as well as written, and ſo all vocal (though it be extemporary) prayer, condemned for Idolatry alſo, I ſhall not conceive that Diſputer to have believed himſelf, nor conſequently give him or my Reader the trouble of an Anſwer. Inſtead of extending this enquiry to the ſurvey and vindication of thoſe many other particulars, to which the phancies or furies of this laſt year have affixt this charge; all that I have now to add is only this, that I ſhall beſeech God to give ſuch miſtakers underſtanding firſt, and then Charity, to make uſe of it to edification, and not to deſtruction, to the reforming their own ſins, and not condemning or reproaching other mens laudable, at the leaſt innocent actions.

Judge not, that ye be not judged of the Lord.

THE ſecond Covenant being that by which we are now all either juſtified or condemned, and the condition of that, in reſpect of the facienda, being ſincere not exact obedience, not the not ſinning at all, but the not ſinning wilfully after our receiving the knowledge of the truth, Heb. 10. 26. (which though it ſeem to damn all irreverſibly that ſin wilfully after converſion, yet ſure is to be underſtood according to the ἐπιείκεια of the Goſpel; unleſs he do repent and return ſincerely unto God again, for whoſoever doth ſo, there is certain mercy by other places made over to him in Chriſt, and what is the full importance of that place will anon be explicated) It will be an enquiry though of ſome difficulty, yet of as great uſe and neceſſity as any one other in all Divinity, to ſearch what ſins there are, for which mercy is to be had under the Goſpel, and for what not. For that ſome men are damned, and not all finally ſaved, there is no doubt; and yet as little there ought to be, that this is for ſin that one man is guilty of, and t'other not; from whence it follows, that ſeeing no man is guiltleſs of ſin, ſome degrees or ſorts there muſt be of that guilt in one, which are not in another, and according to thoſe different degrees (though every of them be of it ſelf, or without Chriſt, or by the tenour of the firſt Covenant, damning, yet) under the Goſpel or ſecond Covenant, the adjudging of men to Heaven or Hell is proportioned. Sect. 1.

From all which this reſults, that ſome kinds, or ſorts, or degrees of ſinning, or more plainly, ſome ſtates of ſinners, are under the Goſpel damning, ſome are not; ſome reconcileable with a good eſtate, ſome not; ſome for which there is ſure mercy in Chriſt, ſome for which there is as certainly no mercy; for though the mercy of God be infinite, and ſo unfathomable by our finite wits, yet when he hath in Sect. 2.

the Goſpel defin'd how far his mercy ſhall extend, and beyond what terms it ſhall not, 'twill be no inſolence to affirm, that God will not have mercy on any who are not qualified according to that ſecond Covenant of his, who are not ſuch perſons to whom only he hath promiſed mercy, at leaſt if they be ſuch as of whom he hath affirmed [they ſhall not have mercy.]

Sect. 3. Thus far to juſtifie the fitneſs, and uſe, and neceſſity of this ſearch. Now for progreſs in it; It will be eaſie to define in the general, 1. That all ſins in the world, be they never ſo great, of what ſort or kind ſoever, if they be retracted with true repentance, ſhall certainly be forgiven; (for that any act of ſin ſhould be irremiſſible, they that affirm, do it on this ground, that they that commit that act ſhall never truly repent, implying that if they did repent, it would be remiſſible) and in this the only difficulty will be, 1. What true repentance is: And 2. Whether that be neceſſary to the obtaining pardon for every ſin.

Sect. 4. To the firſt, I anſwer, that true repentance is a change, a through change of mind, (called in the Scripture, and the ordinary ſtyle of Divines, the New creature, being regenerate, converſion, ſpiritual reſurrection, forſaking of ſin, mortification, habitual ſanctification, ſincere, faithful reſolution of new life, reformation, amendment, μεταμέλεια, μετάθεσις τῆς νοῦ, μετασχημάτισμος) and whatever doth not amount to thus much, is not true ſaving repentance, to which the promiſes or mercies of Chriſt do appertain. And ſo conſequently many ſpecious pretenders to that Title are excluded. Such are bare ſorrow for ſin, ſuch the votum pœnitentiæ, the wiſhing they were penitent, ſuch a bare warring of the Law of the mind againſt the Law of the members, whilſt we are carried captive to the Law of ſin; and many the like.

Sect. 5. To the ſecond, I muſt anſwer by diſtinguiſhing the equivocalneſs of the queſtion. For the meaning of it may be, 1. Whether amendment, or forſaking, or overcoming every particular ſin be neceſſary to the obtaining of pardon for that ſin, whether it be of infirmity or otherwiſe: and if that be meant, I anſwer, No. For that ſome ſins are of that nature, that as long as we have this mortal infirm fleſh about us, we can never hope to be rid of them, to get victory over them: ſuch as for which the ſacrifices were appointed to be offered under the Law, that are ſaid to be committed ἀκουσίως and ἐν ἀγνοίᾳ, unwillingly and in ignorance (not as thoſe words ſignifie in the philoſophical or ſtrict ſence, but as they note a fault without any fraud or deceit) as when any thing is done through forgetfulneſs of the Law, &c. and for which Chriſts ſacrifice once offered is a perfect expiation; and theſe by the tenour of the ſecond Covenant, or through the mercy of God in Chriſt ſhall never be imputed to the penitent ſinner; I mean to him who hath amended all others, and humbled himſelf before God, and beſought his mercy in Chriſt, and by faith laid hold of it for theſe, which though he labour againſt them ſincerely, he cannot throughly amend or overcome.

Sect. 6. But if the meaning be, ſecondly, Whether the actual amending of all his known ſins, which conſequently may by the Chriſtian be amended, be required neceſſarily to make a man capable of the pardon even of his ſins which cannot be amended; I anſwer, that it is very probable to be ſo. Becauſe Chriſts ſufferings ſeem not to be advantageous (at all, not ſo much as to the waſhing away of humane frailties) to any but thoſe who are in Chriſt, i. e. to new creatures, who alone are ſo; however that will not be a material ſcruple, though it ſhould be left diſputable, as long as this other propoſition be taken for infallible (which is ſo) that except we repent we ſhall all periſh, i. e. that he that hath not forſaken all wilful ſins, ſhall (whether for his wilful ſins only, or his wilful and frailties both together, it matters not) be certainly condemned.

Sect. 7. By the anſwering of theſe two queſtions ſo much hath been gained, as that we may make another general reſolution, and define ſecondly, that ſome ſins are reconcilable with a true penitent convert, regenerate eſtate, others are not. And conſequently, ſome not deſtructive under the ſecond Covenant, though others are. What theſe are in general will alſo in the third place be eaſily defined. Sins of infirmity are reconcilable, wilful ſins are not.

Sect. 8. Under infirmities I contain all ſorts that are uſually reduced to that head, and which have been briefly mentioned in another diſcourſe; Whether thoſe that proceed from any not culpable defect of

Of conſcience. my underſtanding, as ſins of ignorance; or from ſome preſent prevailing temptation, which though I uſe all means in my power againſt it, I cannot overcome; or from ſome advantage taken by Satan, &c. in the aſſaulting me either on the ſuddain, when I have not time to uſe thoſe means which I might otherwiſe uſe, which we call ſuddain ſurreption; or from the frequency or repetition, or almoſt continuedneſs of the temptation, which when I have repell'd it never ſo often, returns again, ſo that if ever my watch be intermitted (which conſidering our humane frailty it is, though not logically, yet morally, impoſſible, but it ſhould ſometime or other) I ſhall infallibly fall, (which we uſe to call ſins of daily incurſion;) or from the levity and undiſcerniblenes of the matter, or from any other Principle, which by that meaſure of grace that God affords me, (or, if I be not culpably wanting to my ſelf in neglecting the uſe of the means preſcribed, he is ready to afford me) I am not able to reſiſt. Suppoſing all this while that 'tis not upon ſome former wilful ſin of mine that God by way of puniſhment withdraws this grace neceſſary to the reſiſting of it; for if it be ſo, then though it may truly be ſaid, I cannot now reſiſt that ſin for want of that grace ſo withdrawn by God, yet will not this paſs for a ſin of infirmity.

Sect. 9. On the other ſide, under the name of wilful ſins I mean not all willingly committed, or voluntary ſins, (for all ſin as far as it is ſin is voluntary, and therefore ſins of infirmity are voluntary) but all that are not excuſable by any of thoſe former titles of infirmity, or all that are not included under ſome of thoſe heads.

Sect. 10. Thus far in the way of general defining there is no great difficulty. That begins to ſhew it ſelf when we come to the καθέκαστον or particular, to mention what ſins in ſpecie, or individuo, what ſorts of ſin or acts of thoſe ſorts, are ſins of infirmity, what not; and this is indeed an inſuperable difficulty, 1. Becauſe one man hath more knowledge, more quickneſs of underſtanding, and alſo more grace than another, and ſo that ſin in ſpecie, or individuo, that ſort or particular act of ſin, which he hath power to reſiſt and overcome, that other man that hath leſs power, hath not power to overcome; and if ſo, 'twill be an infirmity in him, though in t'other 'tis not. 2. Becauſe any ſpecifical ſin comes backed backed with more temptations (and ſo makes a more forcible impreſſion upon the will) at one time than another; and conſequently though it were not above his ſtrength at one time, yet at another time it may. Yea, and thirdly, becauſe the ſame man is at one time more able to reſiſt and overcome, than he himſelf at ſome other time, as of a man in ſtate of deſertion it is clear, as alſo when either by drunkenneſs or any other culpable extravagancy (through rage or luſt not reſiſted in the firſt motion) the man is utterly debauched from his natural and ſpiritual ſtrength, and no way able to reſiſt thoſe temptations, which at another time he would ſcorn to be captivated with.

But theſe two cauſes will not be very pertinent to the buſineſs in hand: becauſe, as is ſuppoſed in them, that which brought this weakneſs upon the man, was ſome culpable, nay wilful act, (or yielding of his) committed then againſt ſtrength, (though now that ſtrength be not ſufficient againſt the conſequent aſſault) and ſo no way apt to excuſe the ſin, that it primarily betrayed him to. But if the caſe be ſet of ſome innocent accident which cauſes this alteration, then it will be pertinent to the thing which I now affirm, (to wit the evidencing the difficulty of ſuch particular defining καθόλου) as we know a man in time of ſadneſs will be able to reject ſome jolly propoſals, which yet in time of mirth (ſuppoſing that moderate and harmleſs, and as perfectly ſinleſs in it ſelf, as that contrary ſadneſs) he will not perhaps be able, nay, as Hippocrates affirms in his tract περὶ ὕδ. ἀερ. καὶ τόπων, one ayr or place may ſtrongly incline a man to one whether vertue or ſin, which another doth not, and where the inclinations are ſtronger or weaker, there we know the ſtrength being in degree ſuppoſed the ſame muſt prove unproportionable to the one though not the other, and ſufficient to reſiſt the weaker, though unſufficient to ſubdue the ſtronger inclination. Sect. 11.

To come yet more clearly to that which is of every days experience. Suppoſe a man a little drowzy at one hour (which drowzineſs at that time particularly, is not a ſin, but a natural deſire of ſleep, which is natures due debt) and ſuppoſe him throughly awaked, and out of that fit of drowzineſs at another time; and then ſuppoſe that the ſame propoſal be made to him at both thoſe times, it may very probably be received at one time, and rejected at another; nay if the propoſal be an undertaking deſtructive of his preſent deſire of ſleep, it may eaſily be affirmed that in that drowzy fit he hath no ſtrength to reſiſt it, though at another time he hath. The reaſon is, becauſe ſleep being a ligation of the faculties, drowzineſs likewiſe is ſo in ſome degree, and the want of that degree may diſable the underſtanding or upper ſoul from repreſenting ſtrongly enough at that time, that which at another time it ſhall be able to repreſent ſo ſtrongly, that the contrary propoſals of the ſenſe ſhall not dare to appear before it. From whence I conceive it follows, that if the propoſal, ſuppoſed in this cauſe, be a ſinful propoſal, that ſin committed by that drowzy man will be a ſin of infirmity, which if it were committed by the ſame man broad awake, would be a ſin againſt ſtrength, and ſo a wilful ſin. From whence yet the man ſo deceived once or twice ought to receive admonition, that hereafter, if any weighty matter, wherein his duty be concerned, be repreſented to him in the like poſture, he will before he conſents or refuſes, diſcutere ſomnum, ſhake off ſleep, that he may not be ſo unfit a judge, or if he find his own weakneſs ſuch that he cannot, he will appoint ſome body elſe to awaken him throughly, that he be not thus conſtantly impotent; For if he do not uſe theſe means to recover his ſtrength, when he is aware of them, it may ceaſe to be an infirmity. Sect. 12.

From all which as we have evidenced the difficulty of the probleme applyed to particular individual ſins or perſons, ſo we conceive our diſcourſe to have given ſome hints which will be uſeful towards this diſcovery. Eſpecially this, that any ſin committed by him that hath at that time ſtrength or grace to reſiſt it, or whoſe wilful fault it hath been, that he hath not that ſufficient ſtrength (as if either ſome former waſting ſin of his, whether act or habit, have grieved the holy Spirit of God, and provoked God to withdraw it from him, which he would not otherwiſe have done, or if by the uſe of ſome means beforehand he might have prevented the ſtrength of that impreſſion, or better fortified himſelf, or by uſe of ſome other means, as of prayer, &c. at the preſent he might yet get ſtrength, or remove the tempter, and he make uſe of none of theſe means through ſenſuality or ſluggiſhneſs) is a wilful ſin, (not a ſin of infirmity) to that man at that time. Sect. 13.

And ſo though we have no other particular way of defining, yet this we have, that will ſtand any man in as good ſtead for the examining himſelf, and his own guilts, or any confeſſor (that hath received of his confitent an exact account not only of the action, but the circumſtances of the action, his qualifications at that time, and the particular vigor of the aſſault) as particular definitions concerning this, or that ſin univerſim would. Sect. 14.

As for example, if I would know whether any act of my own, or (being a confeſſor) of my pœnitent, be a wilful ſin or no, I muſt firſt inquire, whether in that point of time, when being tempted I committed it, my underſtanding or upper ſoul, and the ſpirit of God in me did move me more, or as ſtrongly not to do it, as the fleſh did to the commiſſion, allowing farther ſomewhat of grace to incline the will, or of the underſtanding to move it as much in proportion as the will ſince the fall is naturally inclined to the carnal appetite, (as you know when one Scale is heavier of it ſelf than the other, or by ſome default in the beam one is more apt to turn than the other, you muſt, if you would even the ballances and make an æquilibrium, put more weight in the Scale that is apt to fly up.) Or if this be an obſcure operation, why then I muſt deſire thee to examine whether at that time thy Spirit or Conſcience told thee, this was not to be done, and that on pain not only of Gods diſpleaſure, but alſo of thy eternal damnation, (which muſt certainly be far greater motives of determent even to fleſh and blood, than any pleaſure the fleſh can repreſent, can be allective to the contrary) and if thou findeſt it did, and yet for all this thy will conſented to the fleſh in its propoſal, then this is a ſin againſt ſtrength, a wilful ſin, and not of infirmity. Sect. 15.

But if thy conſcience, or ſpirit or upper ſoul, at that time did not this, then 'tis to be reſolved on, that it failed to do the duty of a watchman, and if it did ſo, then my ſecond inquiry will be, From whence that failing of thy ſpirit aroſe? (for if it be awake and diſpoſed as it ſhould be, (and as even yet by grace it is prepared to be, if we make uſe of that grace) it will ſpeak and admoniſh us, and that not in words which are ſubject to miſunderſtanding, but in ſence which therefore we cannot but conceive) Whether, firſt, from Gods juſt deſertion, the puniſhment of ſome former ſin, or Sect. 16.

ſecondly, from ſome preſent actual ſin of mine upon me at that time, as drunkenneſs, crapula, &c. or thirdly, from ſome habit which I have, by former acts of the ſin which I am now tempted to, contracted, to the blinding of my underſtanding, or grieving of the ſpirit, or glibbing that ſin, that it ſhall be able to paſs down inſenſibly and eſcape the ſearch of my underſtanding; In all theſe caſes, the original of that failing being ſinful, the failing it ſelf will not yield any excuſe or compleat apology, but the ſin will ſtill remain a wilful ſin.

Sect. 17. If none of all theſe be found chargeable upon thee, as the original of that failing and negative productive of that ſin, then I can as yet think of but one inquiry more, Whether thirdly, thy underſtanding and the grace of God in it, being thus layed aſleep as it were, by ſome natural, ſinleſs, or at leaſt invincible and ſo excuſable frailty, or elſe (as in a drowſie fit) not perfectly awake, there be not ſome means preſcribed and preſented to thee by God, which if thou hadſt uſed, thou mighteſt have wakened thy underſtanding, or fortified thy will, or weakened the temptation: and if ſo, and thou haſt, through negligence, or confidence, ſpiritual ſecurity or pride, omitted to make uſe of them, then will this ſtill amount to a wilful ſin or a ſin againſt ſtrength; as when the Lunatique Son was brought to the diſciples of Chriſt, and the Text ſaith, Mat. 17. 21. they could not caſt the evil ſpirit out, and Chriſt gives the reaſon why they could not, becauſe, ſaith he, this kind goeth not out, but by prayer and faſting, Chriſt yet chargeth them with infidelity almoſt unſufferable, (O faithleſs generation, how long ſhall I be with you? how long ſhall I ſuffer you?) becauſe there being ſuch means to enable them to do the work, they neglected thoſe means, and ſo only by that neglect became unable. The ſtyle of faithleſs in that place gives us yet a more perfect notion of a wilful ſin, than hitherto we have arrived to, that it is not only that which is againſt natural conſcience, or ſpiritual infuſions, but alſo that which is particularly againſt faith, i. e. comes to be committed by neglecting the uſe of ſome means, which the word of Chriſt, or the Scripture offers and preſcribes to us, eſpecially if by our former failings we have diſcerned the want we have of ſuch helps or anxiliaries. For in this reſpect of directing to ſuch means of victory, Faith is ſaid to be the overcoming the world, 1 John 5. 4. as well as in preſenting us with the promiſes and terrors of the Goſpel.

Sect. 18. Farther yet in the fourth place, if at the time of commiſſion of the ſin thou canſt truly ſay, 'twas not in thy power to reſiſt it, becauſe of the ſtrength of the temptation ſo hurrying thee, as not to give thee leiſure to judge or deliberate, (which may ſeem to intitle that action to the title of infirmity) thou muſt then enquire, whether thy yielding (voluntarily from contemplation of the pleaſure, &c.) to ſome entrances and beginnings of that ſin, whether moroſe thoughts, or ſomewhat farther, be not that, that hath made the temptation ſo ſtrong, or thee ſo weak; which thou wilt diſcern by this enquiry, whether before thoſe moroſe thoughts, &c. were entertained, thou wert not able to make reſiſtance to the actual ſin, and then, if ſo thou wert able, nay actually didſt, and only the intervenience of thoſe preparatory yieldings did betray thee to this impotence, and it was in thy power (by natural or ſupernatural ſtrength already had, or prayer, either as it hath a promiſe of more ſtrength, or as it is an excellent means of diverſion) to have reſiſted thoſe beginnings, when thou didſt yield, then ſtill is this a wilful ſin, or ſin againſt ſtrength.

Sect. 19. As for other ſins more clearly and immediately againſt natural conſcience, againſt Faith, (or directions of the Scripture for the overcoming the world) againſt ſupernatural ſtrength or grace, as contumacious ſtubborn preſumptuous ſins, there will be little ſcruple to any man, or cauſe to keep him from pronouncing of, and charging on them the crime of wilfulneſs, and concluding (without real change) the certain damningneſs of them even under Chriſt. I ſay particularly, preſumptuous ſins, when (preſuming that Gods mercy in Chriſt is either unlimited, and may belong to any the moſt unreformed, or that it is decreed abſolutely to ſome perſons, without any reſpect to qualifications or demeanures, to Saul the perſecutor, as well as Paul the Apoſtle) the ſinner runs comfortably and alacriouſly on, without any regret of conſcience: the doing ſo is certainly no ſin of infirmity, becauſe though ſome errour may be pretended for his ſo doing, and that errour ſeem apt to lend him excuſe;

Sect. 20. Yet firſt, errours, that are not ſimple errours, but bring vitious life after them, are not excuſable (becauſe not invincible) errours, the rule of the agenda or duties of life being ſo clear in the Scripture and in the heart, that no man can be invincibly ignorant of that, Rom. 10. 8, 9. and Deut. 30. 14. The word that is now commanded is not hid or impoſſible, or like fetching Chriſt from heavin, or the grave, a thing quite out of our power, but it is nigh thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayſt do it. And ſecondly, it will be apparent, that even thoſe errours on which that preſumption is built, being ſimply conſidered, are demonſtrable to be errours (ſuppoſita fide) or to one that acknowledges the Scriptures, becauſe there be ſo many places in the Scripture point-blank againſt them, particularly thoſe of the conditional promiſes every where ſcattered. Neither circumciſion, &c. but the new creature, but faith conſummate by love, but keeping the Commandments of God; Without holineſs no man ſhall ſee the Lord; He that confeſſes and forſakes ſhall have mercy; He that hath this hope purifies, &c. And having therefore theſe promiſes, let us cleanſe, &c.

Sect. 21. From what hath been ſaid, it will be more than probable, that all acts of fornication, adultery, &c. (which I ſhall ſuppoſe never to be actually committed without ſome ſpace of deliberation, or if they be, then I mean thoſe other wherein that deliberation interpoſes) are wilful ſins, and ſo alſo all acts of drunkenneſs, unleſs when through ignorance of the ſtrength of the liquor, or the weakneſs of the brain, the man ſuddainly fall into it by deſiring to quench his thirſt, or do ſomewhat which is lawful; wherein yet, if after one or more trials he miſcarry the ſecond or a third time, it will ſtill be a wilful ſin; So alſo lying, or ſpeaking that which we know to be falſe, to the defrauding and wronging of another, or for any vain-glorious deſign; So again, any ſin of oppreſſion, injuſtice, &c. or generally all thoſe where there is any time of advice and deliberation; For where-ever that liberty is, there is ſuppoſed an ability and readineſs in the upper ſoul of a Chriſtian to preſent arguments for obedience of God, ſtronger than any the devil, or the world, or fleſh, can offer for the contrary. As for killing a man, though the Law of the Land is wont to diſtinguiſh of wilful and not wilful murther, yet to any man in his wits, the ſtabbing his neighbour (or uſing any other ſuch means as may probably take away his life) would ſeem ſo ſtrange, that I cannot conceive but his ſpirit ſhould be able to deter him from it in that ſpace, which is required that any ſuch weapon may be prepared; for if it be ſaid, his rage doth gag or ſilence his ſpirit; I ſhall anſwer, that the raiſing of his rage to that pitch was not in a minute, but grew upon him by degrees, and then there was time and means to prevent that growth, which he that did not make uſe of, will hardly be able thereby to excuſe or extenuate the ſubſequent ſin.

For ſwearing alſo I know not how in ordinary diſcourſe or in any caſe (extra caſus juramenti legitimas, where it is ſuppoſed perfectly lawful) it can be made a ſin of infirmity; for in communication Chriſt's words are ſo plain [But I ſay unto you, Swear not at all, and particularly, Let your communication be yea, yea, &c. for whatſoever is more, is ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ, from the evil one] that it would amaze any man to ſee that it ſhould become an ornament or tolerable part of a Chriſtians dialect. And if it be in rage, then I dare ſay, that either that man hath formerly in ſome meaſure enured his tongue to ſwearing, or not ſo ſtrictly made conſcience of an oath, as Chriſt's precept obligeth him; for he that never ſwore, will not in impatience probably fall out into thoſe forms of ſpeech that he never uſed, (but always vowed and reſolved againſt) but into ſome other which he hath been more uſed to, or which he could hear in others with leſs horrour and deteſtation, or which were a more natural remedy for that paſſion. And if you mark it, that which rage doth, is principally to blind the underſtanding, (and ſo to ſteal out any proper and genuine effects of rage, as preſuming of their impunity, or not conſidering the contrary danger) but not to hurry us to the commiſſion of any or every other ſin indifferently, and at a venture. And why a rage ſhould caſt one upon uſing Gods Name in oaths, (which before he had never phanſied for any uſe but in his prayers) any more than on many other unheard of ſins, I am ſo far from conceiving any reaſon, that I muſt conclude it impoſſible, unleſs it proceed from the being uſed in ſome meaſure to that ſin; or having a more favourable eaſie opinion of it. And yet after all this, that rage it ſelf being ſo Un-Chriſtian a thing, which we are ſo obliged to prevent, (and if in time it be not prevented, will not always paſs for an infirmity in a Chriſtian) will be unable to patronize or excuſe any ſuch one oath, which that puts into our mouths; but on the other ſide, the obſerving that my rage hath made me ſwear, muſt in any reaſon give me ſo ſtrict a watch over my ſelf in time of provocation, as never to let looſe into a rage, which proves ſo inconvenient and ſo complicated a ſin unto me; as he that finds himſelf quarrelſome in his drink, hath the greateſt obligation to temperance. As for any other means that bring on ſwearing, cuſtom, pride, oſtentation, ἀναπλήρωσις λόγου, filling up the diſcourſe, none of theſe will excuſe it from a wilful ſin; eſpecially conſidering the natural intrinſecal untemptingneſs of that ſin, that were it not for ſome accidental or extrinſecal advantage, evil example, (which if it had been a good one, we could eaſily enough have rejected and not imitated) or cuſtom local or perſonal, or that other of the company we are uſed to, ſcarce any man that hears ſwearing forbidden by Chriſt, will diſcern himſelf to have any carnal invitation to ſwear, no not in time of rage. Sect. 22.

The ſame I think may be defined of all the groſs outward acts of ſin, or ſins in the members; becauſe for the acting of them, over and above the conſent of the will, ſome ſpace is neceſſarily required wherein the ſpirit or upper ſoul, if it be about us, will be able and ready to interpoſe, if it may be hearkned to, (which me thinks is intimated by the Turks in a cuſtom of theirs, who when they mean to give themſelves liberty to be drunk, uſe to make a great noiſe, which they ſay is a warning to their ſoul to retire into ſome extream part of the body, that it may not be ſpectator or Cenſor of this their beſtiality.) And if it be thus driven away, gagg'd, or not hearkened to, then that is a ſin againſt ſtrength, a wilful ſin. Which perhaps was St. James his obſervation, when he ſaid, Sin being perfected bringeth forth death. For the conception of luſt precedent ſignifies certainly the conſent or conjunction of the will with the carnal appetite, when in the wooing (or canvaſs for that conſent) of the upper ſoul on one ſide, and of the lower ſoul or carnal part on t'other, the will which is thus courted by both, yields to the ſecond, and ſo they joyn in mutual embraces, from whence, ſaith the Apoſtle, ſin is brought forth, that very conſent of the will to the ſenſual faculty, being formally ſin without, or before the acting of it; but this perhaps a ſin of infirmity, as the caſe may be (for univerſim or always it is not; but very often wilful and damning, though it never come to act) whereas of this ſin (of infirmity while it was only in the conception, i. e. conſent of the will) come to birth (i. e. actual commiſſion) or perfection, and fitneſs for birth, (which requires ſome ſpace, and time) it may juſtly be ſaid a ſin againſt ſtrength, and ſo in the very Covenant of grace a fatal mortiferous ſin. Sect. 23.

And therefore though before we ſaid that the ſame ſin in ſpecie, might be but an infirmity in one, and yet a wilful ſin in another, yet this affirmation will need this caution to interpret it, that the meaning of it be only this, that a ſin that is only an infirmity in one, may by ſome means of aggravation become wilful in another, but not è contra, that that which, upon ſome grounds or ſuppoſition of ſtrength common to all men, may be in univerſum defined a wilful ſin, can by any means be extenuated into an infirmity. That which I now ſay, I mean of any groſs outward act, or habit of ſin, becauſe in theſe I conceive there is ſome mora or ſtay, wherein the ſpirit may be adviſed with; and then that being ſuppoſed in good health or regenerate ſtate will not fail to ſuggeſt ſufficient arguments againſt that ſin, and ſo be a means to retract that ſudden ſtollen conſent, before it come to act, at leaſt to habit; Or if it be not it ſelf without auxiliaries able to combat with the temptation, yet it will out of the word of God be able to direct us to ſome aid, which being called in, will either improve us to a competent ſtrength, or help to diſarm and weaken the temptation, which we ſhall find by trying, and making uſe of thoſe means; be they our prayers either for grace in time of need, or as I ſaid prayer as a means of divertiſement, or be they faſting, vigilance, &c. or be it but a tempting to do our beſt, for this is very ordinary to obſerve in our ſelves, that (when we put our ſelves to it, and do our beſt) we prove able to do far more, than ever we dreamt, we had been able. And this is very remarkable, whether you conſider it, as a truth in morality, wherein it hath been obſerved that neceſſity or extream danger enables men to do miracles, which when they are paſt they are amazed to ſee them done by them, (as Hierocles excellently ſhews on that golden Pythagorean ἀμιςίχιον, Δύναμις δὲ ἀνάγκης ἴσχυσε ναίει) or as a truth of Scripture, wherein there be many promiſes that God will aid when we fight, cooperate when we work, aſſiſt when we endeavour, and not be wanting to them which are not firſt culpably wanting to themſelves. Sect. 24.

Having

Sect. 25. Having ſaid thus much of wilful ſins (for the diſabuſing of thoſe who are over-apt to flatter themſelves that their ſins are infirmities and no more, and therefore ſure of their pardon in Chriſt, though continued in, or not retracted by particular repentance) I ſhall not think this diſcourſe chargeable or accuſable of any dangerous or hurtful ſeverity, by being apt to drive men to deſpair. 1. Becauſe it is known in Scripture and acknowledged by all, and now confeſt by this Paper, that there is a tabula poſt naufragium, a plank after ſhipwrack, repentance, as it implies forſaking, and change of mind; and the working of that in every ſuch ſinner, is the thing that all this while I intend, and there is no way poſſible for the working it, but this, by repreſenting the danger, if it be not wrought, which he, that takes all his ſins for infirmities, will never be convinc'd of, while he ſo thinks. And 2. becauſe the deſpair that is dangerous, is that which is contrary to the purifying hope, to that hope that ſets upon amendment, by aſſuring that there is mercy to be had on ſuch terms; And as any other hope is but groundleſs confidence, ſo any other deſpair but that which makes us give over amending, is in ſome reſpects a very uſeful, at leaſt not very noxious, deſpair: uſeful, if it ſets us on mending, when without it we would not; as in caſe of deſpair or diſtruſt only of our preſent condition, in reſpect of our preſent ſins, but not of the future, becauſe there is yet place for repentance: or not noxious, I mean not ſo far, as to damn, or do any thing but deprive us of ſome comfortable aſſurance here, (the want of which, if we want nothing elſe, will never prejudice any mans ſalvation, whatever they think that take this aſſurance to be Faith) as in caſe of dying without all hope of Heaven, when that no hope proceeds only from an amazing ſight of former ſins, which though we have ſincerely forſaken, yet none but God infallibly ſees that we have, and our ſelves out of an humble lowly conceit of all our own actions, (our repentance particularly undervalued by us) think and reſolve we have not. For ſure if God ſee we have changed ſincerely, and ſo there be aſſurance reſpectu objecti, in reſpect of the object, 'tis an errour in us to think we have not, (from whence proceeds the non-aſſurance of the Subject;) and this error if it be only in the underſtanding, and produce no evil life, will ſure damn none that ſhould not otherwiſe be damned.

Sect. 26. For whereas it may be objected, that he may ſeem to want that affiance in Chriſt for ſalvation, which is a ſaving neceſſary grace, I anſwer, that that affiance (that is ſo) is the rolling my ſelf on Chriſt for ſalvation, and if I periſh, I periſh, the denying and renouncing all truſt in my ſelf in my own righteouſneſs, faith, repentance, my own any thing, but only Chriſt, and God's mercy in him; not the believing my perſonal election, or that I ſhall be ſaved what ever my ſins be, and how unreformed ſoever. For beſides that this in an unreformed ſinner (ſpeaking of wilful ſins) were the believing of a Lye, becauſe there is really no mercy or Salvation for ſuch; beſides this I ſay, there is no obligation or command in Scripture, which can be thought to make it duty or neceſſary for any to believe himſelf a true pœnitentiary even when he is ſo. 'Tis true we are commanded to prove our work, &c. Gal. 6.4. i. e. to ponder and ballance every action we take in hand whether it will bear the δοκιμὴ tryal of the teſt or no, and this we are incouraged by that which follows, that we ſhall have καύχημα μόνον εἰς ἑαυτὸν, boaſting only in our ſelves. But then, firſt, this precept of trying is not a precept of knowing or believing. Secondly, this trying his own work, ſignifies the direct act of conſcience, the doing each action with a good conſcience, but belongs not to the reflexive act of conſcience upon the whole life paſt, or if it do, requires not, that every man ſhould at every minute of his life believe or know infallibly that his ſtate is good, and ſhall be ſo to the end. Thirdly, the boaſting there is ſet only in oppoſition to boaſting over another (as appeareth by that which follows verſ. 5. for every man ſhall bear his own burthen, i. e. another mans being worſe than you will do you no good) to judging well of our ſelves by that deceitful way of comparing our ſelves with thoſe that are worſe than we: and therefore, fourthly, 'tis obſervable that it is not ſaid by way of promiſe ἕξει καύχημα εἰς ἑαυτὸν, he ſhall have matter of boaſting in himſelf, (for ſure the beſt man living hath little of that) but εἰς ἑαυτὸν μόνον, only in himſelf, all the boaſting or comfort that he hath ſhall be in himſelf and in the uprightneſs of his own conſcience, as that is oppoſed to comparing or comforting himſelf (as the Phariſee with the Publican) becauſe others are worſe than he. And ſo ſtill the want of this aſſurance being the utmoſt inconvenience that this doctrine can poſſibly at the worſt view of it bring upon him, this will amount no higher than ſome preſent diſcomfort, which will be recompenced abundantly by the gains it brings with it of being diſdeceived and brought timely and happily to repentance.

Sect. 27. The ſhort is, let theſe ſins which thou ſeeſt improved, perhaps beyond thine expectation, into wilful ſins, be ſincerely reſolved and laboured againſt, and all means uſed for the performing that reſolution, and then if by any unſuperable weakneſs of thine thou faileſt in performing it or overcoming them, perhaps I ſhall retract my doctrine in ſome part as it is appliable to thee; or if I do not, be confident I have done thee no conſiderable injury, though I ſhould have deceived thee in ſome particular; I am ſure I am not guilty to my ſelf of any deſign to do ſo, and therefore I hope my error ſhall not be a culpable one, becauſe error amoris, an error of kindneſs, or care, or love, in that I deſired to make Heaven as ſure to thee as I could, though not to make thee overſure of Heaven.

Sect. 28. Somewhat being thus ſet down by way of character to know wilful ſins by, we ſhall ſuppoſe that that will alſo be helpful to the defining what ſins of infirmity are. For of that no ſcruple will be made to affirm, that whatever ſin is not wilful in any of the former deſcriptions of it, muſt be reſolved to be of infirmity; there being no middle or third betwixt thoſe two in the ſecond-covenant-account of ſins. By the rule therefore of contraries we ſhall beſt proceed, 1. In general, to define a ſin of infirmity, that which is not againſt ſtrength or grace, or that which (though we labour and endeavour ſincerely againſt all ſin, and uſe what means we are convinc'd will tend to the overcoming of ſin) we yet fall into, either through humane frailty alone, or through Satans cunning, taking advantage of that our frailty.

Sect. 29. As firſt, when (as at firſt we gave hints of reſolution) any invincible and ſo excuſable ignorance of Gods will in ſome particulars betray me to ſome ſin, (for then my underſtanding or ſpirit is not of ſtrength ſufficient to adviſe me) then the ſin is of weakneſs, and therefore Rom. 14. they that are called the weak, v. 1. are explained to be they that lack knowledge, for that is it that made others apt to deſpiſe or ſet them at nought, v. 3. and v. 10. which all they that have are called the ſtrong through that Chapter.

Or

Or ſecondly, when the ſuddainneſs of the aſſault gives not my ſpirit leiſure to repreſent thoſe perſwaſions and determents which it would do if it were not ſo ſurprized; and ſo for want of thoſe repreſentations on that ſide, the preſent promiſes of the temptation do preponderate and prevail againſt all that is offered to the contrary; for as a man that hath time to ſet himſelf upon his guard will be able to reſiſt and vanquiſh that enemy which by ſurpriſal takes, and binds and conquers him with eaſe, ſo is the will of a man in caſe of ſuddain ſurpriſal; It hath no leiſure to make uſe of thoſe ſuccours that reaſon could afford, if it had time to muſter them up. And ſo being more weak at ſuch times than at other, the ſins that at ſuch time it yields to, but would not at another, are ſins of infirmity. Sect. 30.

For 'tis to be obſerved that the upper ſoul moves the will not as a natural but rational agent, uſes ſyllogiſms and arguments to perſwade, hath not that deſpotical power to have it at its beck or nod, 'tis not by a Go and it goeth, and come and it cometh, (as Ariſtotle's Philoſophy ſeems to ſet it) that what the underſtanding preſcribes to be done, the will muſt do; but the courſe is of ſome more length. The underſtanding muſt diſpute and canvaſs it againſt the carnal appetite, anſwer the motives brought by that, and then give more perſwaſive ones for the contrary; and then perhaps the underſtanding is otherwiſe buſie at that minute when the temptations come, and the popular carnal argument that it hath uſed, hath prevailed and gotten conſent before the underſtanding was aware of it, either through preſent buſineſs and inability to attend more things at once, or for want of an ἀγχίνοια ſuddenneſs of mind to repreſent preſently the arguments it hath on its ſide, or to find out the Sophiſms on t'other. Or however, To diſpute it throughly and clear all difficulties, and indeed (if it be but) to make this one Syllogiſm, [the terrours of the Lord belong to him that commits ſuch a ſin as thou art now tempted to, but that man is mad that will upon any carnal motives venture upon the terrours of the Lord, therefore that man is mad that will adventure on that ſin,] and then to prove and make good againſt the contrary fallacious ſuggeſtions of the fleſh, &c. every part of that Syllogiſm, and moreover to bring it home particularly to thee at that time, will require ſome ſpace, and that (by the ſuddenneſs and no warning of the temptation) being not afforded, the ſpirit in this caſe is not able to do its duty, and ſo the ſin will be committed for want of ſtrength. For the want of ſtrength that eſpecially denominates the ſin of infirmity, is not any want of bodily ſtrength (for whatever is committed for want only of that is a kind of rape, no voluntary action, nor conſequently any ſin ſo much as of infirmity, an act or defect of the body, not of the will, and ſo not chargeable upon the man which is primarily his ſoul, ὁ ψυχὴ σύ, thy ſoul is thou) but of ſpiritual or inward ſtrength, i. e. of grace, and of motives and ſuaſories to obedience, more effectual, or operative, or powerful, than any the world, or fleſh, or devil hath to the contrary. And ſeeing theſe arguments are perpetually to be had from every regenerate Chriſtian's ſpirit, and the only want is the non-repreſenting or non-producing of them in time of need, if the caſe ſtands ſo, that by reaſon of the ſudden ſurpriſal, or (which is ſomewhat different) clancular ſurreption (when from ſome indifferent acts a ſin ſteals on us, (as by drinking one glaſs of wine I am prepared to a readineſs to drink a ſecond, and perhaps by that ſending up ſome cloud to the underſtanding, or warning, and ſo emboldning me, I may be much induced to a third, and ſo every ſtep make me more unable not to proceed) they cannot be thus produced, this ſin thus conſented to muſt needs be a ſin of infirmity in him that meerly through ignorance of the power of wine is ſo betrayed, though to him that had one ſuch warning, and yet thus falls again, as before I ſaid, I cannot be ſo favourable. Sect. 31.

Or thirdly, when the vigilance and importunate diligence and indefatigable ſiege of the temptation is ſuch, as that if the man do not watch with as continued a diligence, the will will be taken unfortified, and ſo by that diſadvantage won to conſent, (as in caſe of daily incurſion of any one temptation, or of all ſins, ſome at one time, ſome at another, every minute almoſt ſome) then the ſin that is committed meerly thus, may paſs for a ſin of infirmity; becauſe though every aſſault particularly conſidered be ſuch as that the ſpirit might have been vigilant enough to prevent it, yet to be ſo perpetually upon the guard is morally impoſſible; and ſo ſometime to nod, and ſlip, or fall may paſs uncenſured for an infirmity. And therefore when to that which is ſaid truly of the ſecond Covenant (that the condition of it is feaſable becauſe there is now under the Goſpel no more required ſub periculo animæ, but to do what we are enabled to do, and no man can be unable to do that) 'tis wont to be objected that no man ever did all that he is able to do, and therefore though it be Logically poſſible to do ſo, and ſo to perform the condition of the ſecond (though not of the firſt) Covenant, yet 'tis morally impoſſible, i. e. 'tis not to be imagined that ever any man will do it, (and then that will be all one in effect with the condition of the firſt Covenant, which is acknowledged utterly impoſſible,) To this we anſwer, that therefore the Goſpel hath made proviſion even for theſe moral impoſſibilities, and not required the regenerate Chriſtian, ſub periculo animæ, to perform alway what ever he is able to perform, but indulged ſo much to humane frailty, that whatever is morally conſequent to that, ſhall be matter of excuſe to us, and ſo particularly to fall ſometimes through daily incurſion of temptation, only becauſe I do not (which it cannot be expected I ſhould) watch always, will be matter of excuſe alſo. Sect. 32.

Beſides theſe three heads of ſins of infirmity, ſome others there are, which will not ſo clearly be put under one or ſeveral heads, (ſuch as are thoſe that the levity of the matter and that inadvertence betrays us to, (ſuppoſing that that be not groſs, or affected, or cauſed by ſome wilful ſin) for ſome degrees of this there will be in the moſt knowing and moſt vigilant man, and ſome ſins will drop from us by this means, which wholly to avoid may be truly ſaid to be above Humane power. Sect. 33.

One head of theſe ſins of infirmity there is yet behind, containing many branches under it, of which 'twould be too long to treat particularly, and yet without a particular deſcending to particulars, hard to define whether they be infirmities, or no. Namely, ſins which paſſion betrays us to, meaning thereby ſuch paſſions which 'tis not in the Chriſtians power ſo to quell, but that they will be apt thus to betray him. Theſe ſins are either 1. inordinacy of theſe paſſions themſelves, which I think neither Nature nor Grace can ſo wholly conquer in this life, but that in ſome kind or other there will at ſome time appear ſome inordinacy, ſome act of either immoderate anger, or fear, or love, or joy, or ſorrow, at ſome time or other, and of theſe we may define in general, that he that firſt ſtudies himſelf ſo carefully as to diſcern which of theſe he is moſt inclinable to by his temper, and then labours Sect. 34.

ſincerely againſt all, but with moſt induſtry againſt that, to which he is moſt inclinable, (of which ſincerity he will be able to paſs ſome judgments by the daily impairing of the violence of thoſe paſſions, for ſure if he labour ſincerely, eſpecially by the uſe of proper means, he will be able to advance ſomewhat toward victory, though not abſolutely arrive to it) ſhall have the excuſe of infirmities for his ſome few acts of immoderate paſſion.

Sect. 35. Or 2. Theſe ſins are ſome other ſpecial acts of ſin which theſe paſſions betray men to, which though much different in guilt as well as nature from the mother-ſins, and many times very far from infirmities, (for ſure he that for fear would ſacrifice to Idols, through anger kill, &c. will hardly be thus excuſed) yet is it very poſſible that ſuch ſins that ſome paſſions may betray us to, may deſerve that title of infirmities. As when any natural trembling or other paſſion incident to the fleſh, being (without any improvement into an inordinate paſſion) an incitation of mind, makes me not diſcern or not weigh the ſinfulneſs of ſome ſmall light ſin, which offers it ſelf to rid me from my fear, &c. as if the venturing of ſome leſſer ſin ſhould promiſe me reſcue from death, which being otherwiſe repreſented to me as unavoidable, were withal very formidable to me.

Sect. 36. For although in this caſe the leaſt ſin be not in ſtrictneſs to be admitted, though it be for the ſaving of my life, and though the deliberate reſolution that in ſuch a caſe I will venture on ſuch a ſin, becauſe it is but a ſin of Weakneſs and ſo excuſable, do make it in that caſe to be wilful and unexcuſable; yet abſtracting it from this, and conſidering it not before-hand, but only at the time of ſudden ſurpriſal, it may be ſaid, that the temptation of the fear being ſo great above the proportion and ſize that the ſin is at that time repreſented in, this may paſs for a ſin of infirmity.

Sect. 37. To come now to ſpecifical or particular ſins, and define univerſim that they are ſins of infirmity (as of ſome I did that they were wilful) I ſhall not adventure, becauſe as I ſaid, ſome circumſtances might improve ſome acts under thoſe ſpecies into wilful ſins, in ſome men at ſome time. All that I ſhall ſay is, that 1. Evil thoughts being ſuddenly (or aſſoon as they are deprehended) rejected with indignation; 2. Wandering thoughts in time of prayer, following us only out of cuſtom of thinking on ſome honeſt or lawful things (which yet I deſire, and in ſome ejaculation pray for ſtrength to caſt away from me, when I ſet about that work) and never diſtinctly conſented to, but crouding in upon a confuſed imperfect conſent, or non-rejection; 3. Wicked motions unconſented to, or if on the ſudden conſented to, yet preſently retracted again, (and not only ſtrangled or fruſtrated for want of opportunity of acting them) are moſt capable of that title of infirmities.

Sect. 38. For any more particular knowledge of them, every man will beſt be able to adviſe himſelf, when he hath tryed his actions by this touchſtone, that [Thoſe only are ſins of infirmity, when our ſincere endeavour and induſtry, and the uſe of grace given us, and prayer for more grace, and other means preſcribed us, are not able to free us from ſome acts of thoſe ſins, or when all our failings in endeavour, &c. are but conſequents of humane frailty, not of wilful ſin.

Of theſe that which I ſhall ſay for cloſe, will, I conceive, be matter of as much comfort, as the former part was of diſcomfort to any. To wit, that through the mercy of Chriſt under the Second-Covenant, Infirmities unconquered, unforſaken, ſticking to us till our very deaths, may be and ſhall be moſt certainly pardoned to them, that have nothing elſe to be charged on them: i. e. by whom all wilful ſins be ſincerely forſaken and for infirmities, 1. their ſouls humbled in confeſſion, and contrition, 2. pardon humbly begg'd in Chriſt's name, and 3. ſincere endeavour uſed againſt them; they ſhall I ſay be pardoned, if not ſo far as not to be puniſhed in this life, yet ſo far as not to ſeparate from the love of God here, or viſion of God hereafter, though they be here never wholly overcome, or put off.

This I would make the interpretation of that diſtinction of a general and particular repentance, ſo ordinary among Divines, that the particular repentance ſhould not only deſcend to particular wilful ſins, eſpecially thoſe that are committed after the receiving knowledge of the truth, but alſo extend to the actual forſaking of them; but the general repentance belongs only to ſins of infirmity; and that 1. without deſcending to all particulars of that kind, 2. without extending our ſorrow, &c. for them to actual forſaking. For the ſacrifices of the law being appointed to be offer'd for theſe ſins, but not for wilful, argue that Chriſt typified by thoſe ſacrifices, when we were weak, died for us, and by his death hath obtained pardon (for all that walk not after the fleſh, but after the ſpirit) for all their ſins of weakneſs, on terms only of humiliation, particular, or, where that cannot be, general confeſſion, prayer for pardon, and affiance in Chriſt for that pardon, without any actual overcoming or caſting off, or getting rid of them, (which in wilful ſins muſt be ſuperadded to the former) ſo, that he that at the time or minute of his death ſhould be guilty of one of them, it would not hinder his ſalvation, any more than the ſame would be inconſiſtent with a regenerate juſtified eſtate in time of life.

So that the concluſion may be ſafe and clear. A true Chriſtian may ſafely live and dy with ſins of infirmitity about him, but live or continue in any wilful ſin, much leſs dy he cannot, or if he do, he ceaſeth to be ſuch. He that is born of God ſinneth not, and he that doth ſin is the ſervant of ſin. Some ſpots there are which are not the ſpots of ſons, Deut. 32. 5. and they that are guilty of them, may be reſolved, either never to have right unto, or if they had, to have forfeited all their priviledges of Saintſhip here, (ſuch are juſtification, &c.) and hopes and benefits of it hereafter.

A PARAPHRASTICAL EXPLICATION

Of Heb. vi.

FOR this cauſe (or becauſe it is an evidence of children and babes to be always fed with milk, ſtill taught nothing but the elements of the beginning of the Oracles of God, c. 5.12. and to know nothing of that higher doctrine of righteouſneſs, i. e. of our juſtification and ſanctification, v. 13. which depends extremely on the doctrine of Chriſts Melchizedekian Prieſthood, v. 10. to which being conſecrated, v. 9. he [became the author of eternal ſalvation to all thoſe that obey him,] which words are the compendium of the Doctrine of our Juſtification and Sanctification:) Let us proceed to this higher and more perfect doctrine, or ſuch as is proportionable to an upper form of Chriſtians, leaving or paſſing over theſe doctrines that Chriſt began with, (ſuch was that of repentance and faith, Mark 1.15. the firſt words of his preaching) and not beginning at the very elements of Chriſtianity, again, thoſe fundamental doctrines that the raweſt Chriſtians are taught; as by name thoſe, Firſt, of repentance and turning from our unregenerate works. Secondly, of Faith or belief on God. Thirdly, of Baptizing, as that contains both the Baptiſm of Repentance and of Faith Precedent, both John's Baptiſm, the Baptiſm of repentance, and Chriſt's Baptiſm adminiſtred by the Apoſtles, the Baptiſm of Faith in the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. Fourthly, of laying on of hands, whether that which is anſwerable to our Confirmation, oft mentioned of thoſe that had been baptized, or that in Abſolution, or a third, that on the diſeaſed, the ceremony of curing them, (of which there is ſo frequent mention in the Goſpels, Mat. 9. 18. Mark 5. 23. and 6. 5. and 7. 32. and 8. 23, 25. and 16. 18. Luke 4. 40. and 13. 13. and many times in the Acts in the deſcription of miraculous cures.) Fifthly, of the reſurrection of the dead. Sixthly, of eternal judgment or μισθαποδοσία, adjudging of men to eternal life and eternal death. And by the help of God, this we purpoſe to do, i.e. to proceed to thoſe ſublimer doctrines of Chriſt's Melchizedekian Prieſthood, forementioned, c. 5. and reſumed v. 20. of this Chapter. Only for thoſe that are ſuch non-proficients in Chriſtianity, that after ſo long profeſſion of that doctrine need ſtill to be taught the principles again, even that of repentance from dead works, being themſelves turned back or in danger ſo to turn to their former Un-chriſtian unregenerate courſes, let them know this important truth, for which I cannot but go out of my way a little, and tell them in a parentheſis; That it is impoſſible, that thoſe who have been once regenerated (for this is the reſult of that which is expreſſed by many phraſes) that have once been baptized or enlightned, the word ſignifies both, becauſe adulti were not baptized, till they had been catechiſed, and ſufficiently inſtructed in the faith. 2. That have had a guſt or taſte of the celeſtial gift, whether of Chriſt, that Tit. 2. is called σωτήριος χάρις, ſalvifical ſaving grace, or whether the grace of Chriſt, in the pardon of ſin, and the conſequent of that, peace of conſcience. 3. That have been partakers of the Holy Ghoſt, of thoſe gifts and graces which that worketh in the heart by the preaching of the word, or inviſible overſhadowing: and yet further, the extraordinary gifts of tongues, or propheſying, &c. in the Church. 4. That have had a guſt of the good word, or Goſpel (εὐαγγέλιον & καλὸν ῥῆμα, being all one) of Chriſt, and of the powers, whether of the Kingdom of grace, the ſtate of Chriſtianity, (for that is called μέλλων αἰών, the age to come, by the LXXII. Iſa. 9. 6. where it is ſet as the title of Chriſt, that he is πατὴρ μέλλοντος αἰῶνος, the father of the age to come, as oppoſite to that Judaical ſtate) or whether of the Kingdom of Heaven; and fall from that ſtate of regeneration, and thoſe priviledges of Gods Spirit that attend it, (for the παραπεσόντας is of equal latitude with all the former particulars, and is the falling from, or forfeiting of them all) ſhould renew or recover in an intranſitive ſence, or in an active reciprocal, renew or recover themſelves to repentance, (or once more, being applied to St. Paul's diſcourſe of repentance, that St. Paul's preaching (taken by it ſelf without * ſuperordinary) meaſure of grace) ſhould renew ſuch in a plain active ſence) being by ſuch ſins of theirs guilty of a kind of ‖ re-crucifying of Chriſt, and putting him to a ſhameful death: for Chriſt who was once crucified and ſlain, is as it were revived in the regenerate Chriſtian's heart, lives and rules and reigns in him by faith; and when that man falls to his old unregenerate courſe again, he doth as it were believe Chriſt an impoſtor, and ſo with the Jews crucifies Chriſt anew, and puts him to a contumelious death.

V. 1. Διὸ (λόγου δικαιοσύνης) ὅπῃ τὸν τελειότητα φερώμεθα, ἀφέντες τὴν τῆς ἀρχῆς τοῦ Χριστοῦ λόγον. μετανοίας ἀπὸ νεκρῶν ἔργων, καὶ πίστεως, βαπτισμῶν διδαχὴν τε χειρῶν ἐπιθέσεώς τε ἀναστάσεώς τε νεκρῶν, καὶ κρίματος αἰωνίου. 3. καὶ τοῦτο ποιήσομεν, ἐὰν ἐπιτρέπῃ ὁ Θεός. 4. Ἀδύνατον γὰρ τοὺς ἅπαξ φωτισθέντας, γευσαμένους τε δωρεᾶς τῆς ἐπουρανίου, καὶ μετόχους γενηθέντας πνεύματος ἁγίου, 5. καὶ καλὸν γευσαμένους θεοῦ ῥῆμα, δυνάμεις τε μέλλοντος αἰῶνος, 6. καὶ παραπεσόντας ἀνακαινίζειν εἰς μετάνοιαν,

* So when Wiſd. 12. 10. 'tis ſaid of the Amorites, &c. that miſchief was bred in them (i. e. was derived to them from Cham their Progenitor) and that their cogitation καὶ μὴ ἀλλαγῇ εἰς τὸ ἀιῶνα, would never be changed in them, 'tis not to be ſo underſtood, that they could not be mended (for the example of Rahab and the Gibeonites prove the contrary) but that they could not without thoſe ſad puniſhments of which the Author there ſpeaks. ‖ ἀνασταυροῦντας ἑαυτοῖς τὸν υἱὸν τοῦ θεοῦ, καὶ παραδειγματίζοντας.

The clear underſtanding of theſe 3 verſes 4, 5, 6. depends upon theſe ſix Goſpel-truths put together, Firſt, that without Gods Spirit or ſpecial grace no man can convert, repent, renew himſelf, much leſs recover after a defection. Secondly, that by this grace and ſtrength of God, man may convert and repent, and being a regenerate convert, do all things through Chriſt that ſtrengthens him, work out his own ſalvation; and when he falls, if God do not with-draw that grace, according to the words of our Article, he may by the grace of God riſe again. Thirdly, that if in caſe of fall,

God doth ſo with-draw his grace, then the man cannot ſo renew himſelf, or recover to repentance, nor can the ordinary power of the miniſtry work upon him. Fourthly, that God hath in the Goſpel threatned upon our not making uſe of this grace, to with-draw it or take it away from us, as appears by the parable of the talents, where 'tis ſaid, [To him that hath, ſhall be given, and from him that hath not, ſhall be taken away even that which he hath] i. e. To him that makes uſe of the grace given him, to the end for which 'twas given, the reſiſting of ſins, denying of luſts, and living ſoberly, and juſtly, and godly in this preſent World, Tit. 2. 12. to him ſhall more grace be given; but from him that makes not this uſe of it, (is an unprofitable ſteward of grace, hath grace but doth not thus reſiſt ſins by the help of it, from him) ſhall be taken away even that which he hath. Fifthly, that God doth not upon every ſin committed by a regenerate man, no not upon every ſin committed againſt knowledge, againſt grace (if it be but ſome ſingle act) preſently with-draw his grace, for this ſin may be preſently retracted by repentance, not indulged or ſtaid in, and then to ſuch humble ſinners God gives grace, doth not take it away from them. The caſe that ſuch acts of ſin bring regenerate men to, hath from the Scripture been explained in another diſcourſe, which I deſire may be there conſidered, and not repeated here. And though it be a ſad one, even God's delivering up to Satan, yet doth not that infer the with-drawing of his Grace, or forſaking, but rather the giving or continuing ſufficient grace, 2 Cor. 29. 9. paſſage out, and power of bearing it, 1 Cor. 10. 13. But then ſixthly, that upon the regenerate man's walking after the fleſh, relapſing into the ſins of his former unregenerate life, like a dog to the vomit, &c. or into a new ſet of other ſins, ſpiritual pride, faction (able to denominate a man carnal, 1 Cor. 3. 3.) and the like filthineſs of the ſpirit, then doth God with-draw his ſpirit from that man, and therefore ſuch ſins as theſe are called peccata vaſtantia conſcientiam, & triſtantia ſpiritum, grieving and quenching of the Spirit of God; which though it ſtrives with ſinners, yet ſhall it not always ſtrive, Gen. 6. 3. when unrighteouſneſs cometh in, i. e. any old or new vicious habit, then the holy ſpirit of diſcipline will not abide, Wiſd. 1. 5. And therefore 'tis ſaid, 2 Pet. 2. 21. That they that after they have known, turn from the holy Commandment, or the way of righteouſneſs, and are again entangled in the pollutions of the World, which they had once eſcaped, verſ. 20. fall into a worſe eſtate than they were in before their regeneration; which muſt needs be by the total with-drawing of grace from them. To which purpoſe is that of St. James out of Solomon, that God reſiſteth the proud, where reſiſting is oppoſed to giving of grace, and ſo notes taking it away, and the proud oppoſed to the humble, or as in Virgil to the ſubjecti, are the proud impenitent obdurate ſinners, (So Deut. 17. 12. ὁ ἀνθρωπος ὃς ἂν ποιήσῃ ἐν ὑπερηφανίᾳ ὥστε μὴ ἀκοῦσαι) or they that go on in any impenitent courſe againſt knowledge or conſcience. All which being premiſed, 'tis clear that they that are thus fallen from a regenerate ſtate to their old unregenerate courſe of ſin, &c. and ſo by Gods juſt puniſhment deprived of his grace, without which they were able to do nothing, are not now poſſibly able to recover or renew themſelves to repentance. As they that are only ſlipt or fallen, but not layn down in their mire of ſin, might by the grace which they yet have, and by the preaching of the word, be able to do.

That this is the meaning of the place, may yet farther appear by the ſimilitude following, v. 7, 8. brought on purpoſe to explain it. For the ground that hath the benefit of the rain to moiſten its natural drineſs, and ſo to make it able to bear fruit, and that hath ſuckt in that rain, and been actually moiſtned by it, (which is the lively expreſſion of the premiſed regenerate man) if it do bring forth fruit to the husbandman, perform that which is enabled (and is expected from it) to perform, (which is an expreſſion of him that makes good uſe of grace, lives like a regenerate man, this [he that hath] in the parable of the talent) it ſhall receive bleſſing from God (the more grace in the parable.) But that ſame moiſtned and manured ground (the ſame regenerate man) which bringeth forth nothing but thorns and briars, (the ſervant that proves evil and faithleſs, that makes not uſe of grace to its due end of reſiſting luſts, and overcoming the world, but falls into his unregenerate ſins, lives as if no culture had been beſtowed upon him) is rejected (deprived of that reward which t'other had) for ſo ἀδόκιμος, an agoniſtical word, ſignifies generally in this book, as 1 Cor. 9. 27. one that miſſes the prize, the reward, the bleſſing of more grace: And contrariwiſe is nigh to curſing, that puniſhment of withdrawing of grace due to it, and the end of it is to be burnt, or to burning, which whether it be ſet to note eternal perdition, or elſe an extraordinary kind of husbandry, which we call Devonſhiring, cutting off the turf, and Sæpe etiam ſteriles incendere profuit agros, Atque leves ſtipulas crepitantibus urere flammis, burning it upon the ground, to make that bear which ordinary culture would do no good on, I ſhall not define. Only from that latter interpretation, which I ſuppoſe will be rejected, I ſhall take the hint to ſay that which though the interpretation be not admitted, will yet be without contradiction true, that how impoſſible ſoever it be for ſuch an one to recover himſelf, or for the ordinary means to work upon him, yet 'tis ſtill poſſible, that God may by ſome extraordinary means of ſpiritual husbandry recover and reduce that man. An image of this you may ſee among the Iſraelites; When the power was put by God in the Sanhedrim, and a courſe provided for the choice of them anew as they failed; as long as this courſe was obſerved, the government was held up. Nay when by their careleſneſs and omiſſions, thoſe elections failed, and ſo the body of the government was diſſolved, as it were, no King, no Government in Iſrael, nor courſe imaginable to recover any again, then God ſtirred up extraordinary men, Schofetim, Judges, Dictators, and they did the ſame thing that the Ariſtocracy had done before, v. Grot. in Jud. 1. All that is here affirmed is only this, that there is no promiſe that he will, and the thing is only in the hands, the free hands of God, not ſo much as conſtrained by a promiſe, and ſo no ground either of depending upon it for my ſelf that God will do it for me, or prejudging others that for them he will not do it.

7. Γῆ γὰρ ἡ πιοῦσα τὸν ἐπ' αὐτῆς πολλάκις ἐρχόμενον ὑετὸν, καὶ τίκτουσα βοτάνην εὔθετον ἐκείνοις δι' οὓς καὶ γεωργεῖται, μεταλαμβάνει εὐλογίας ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ.
8. ἐκφέρουσα δὲ ἀκάνθας καὶ τριβόλους, ἀδόκιμος, καὶ κατάρας ἐγγύς, ἧς τὸ τέλος εἰς καῦσιν.

I can foreſee but one objection now producible againſt the probability of this interpretation, and it is this, that this impoſſibility of doing any good by our own natural ſtrength without Grace is ſo univerſal a truth, that it cannot be here appropriated to this one caſe of apoſtaſie or recidivation of the regenerate. For the regenerate, remaining ſo, can do no good thing without it, and thoſe that are not yet regenerate are as unable to convert themſelves, as theſe are to recover or renew. To which

which though I might anſwer, that the inſtancing in this particular, is moſt (and only) proper to the Apoſtles preſent purpoſe, who ſpeaks to converts, who were either thus fallen or in danger thus to fall, (and therefore though the Aphoriſm might be extended to thoſe others, yet we have no reaſon to expect, that the Apoſtle ſhould ſo far recede from his buſineſs in hand as to do it, and ſo the objection will be of no force) yet will the anſwer be more clear and ſatisfactory, if I add, that indeed that which is here ſaid, is proper only to this kind of ſinners, the relapſt regenerate. For of the regenerate not ſo faln, it is moſt certain and agreeable to Scripture-doctrine to affirm, that by the ſpirit of Chriſt he can do all things, that he hath ſufficient grace, and by that ſufficient ſtrength to do what God in the Goſpel requires of him, and therefore 'tis affirmed of him, i. e. his perſon thus enabled, that he is thus able; and conſequently he is every where exhorted to do accordingly, to work out his ſalvation, to ſtand, to quit himſelf like a man, to purifie himſelf, and a hundred the like, which (every one) ſuppoſe him to have grace by which to do it.

And for unregenerate, though indeed he having no grace, can as yet do nothing, yet ſome promiſes there are in the new Covenant of giving of grace to him, (mention of giving Chriſt for every man, (that Chriſt being the σωτήριος χάρις, the ſalvifical grace that appears to all, teaching them, &c.) and in Chriſt ſtriking a Covenant with thoſe to whom he is given, and part of the effect of that Covenant, δῦναι λατρεύειν, to give ſtrength to ſerve him; and again, mention of the talents diſpens'd among the ſervants, to all ſome, and upon the good uſe of the leaſt, more beſtowed. From whence ſure it may be concluded, that 'tis by ſome default of our own, whoſoever have not ſufficient grace given us, (eſpecially the promiſe being ſo punctual, that God will give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him of God by importunate unwearied prayer:) Whereas in caſe of the forementioned relapſe, there is no ſuch promiſe of Grace, to give us ſuch a claim to it, nor conſequently the ſame degree of poſſibility to renew, that the other hath to convert, Gods promiſe of giving grace to them, which do not reſiſt it, adding much to that poſſibility; and his no promiſe to the other, being ſufficient proof of the impoſſibility of the other, according to the importance of Aquinas his note out of Ariſtotle, l. 3. Eth. that thoſe things are ſaid to be poſſible to us which we can do by the help of our friends, (which we can do by a derived power, though of our ſelves originally we cannot) and God being a friend (I mean no enemy, but lover and helper beyond all friends) to unregenerate men, ſo far as to give Chriſt to dye for them, and his holy ſpirit to deſcend to them, being ſuch enemies, to love them and give them the effects of love, whereas to them that have rebelled and vexed his Spirit, he is not ſuch a friend, but an enemy to fight againſt them, Iſa. 63. 10. And ſo no ſuch ſecundary derived way of poſſibility competible to them, becauſe no ſuch aſſurance of any friend to aid them in it, there being none other imaginable but God, and he being to ſuch an one an enemy rather. Parallel to this place thus interpreted is that in the ſame Epiſt. c. 10.

For thoſe that after the accepting of the knowledge of the truth, after the embracing the Goſpel, or Chriſtianity, being regenerate and born anew of water and the Holy Ghoſt, do fall willingly into their old (or other new) courſes of ſin (for ſo ἁμαρτάνειν ſignifies, not the ſingle act, but the habit of ſin, 1 Joh. 3. 6. and 5. 18. Rom. 2. 12. Heb. 3. 17. and ἑκουσίως added thereto notes it to be a voluntary wilful trade of ſin, which is ſuppoſed by having received knowledge of the truth; whereas 'tis poſſible to continue ignorantly, and ſo by infirmity, in ſuch habit, and then that will not be capable of ſuch aggravations as there do follow, nor withal pertinent to this caſe) by this means fall into a condition, for which the Goſpel hath not provided any ordinary remedy. Which is the meaning of [there remains not now a ſacrifice for ſins.] And that ſence ariſeth thus. For them that had ſinned ignorantly under the law, there was place for ſacrifice, the Prieſt was to offer a ſin offering for them (called ordinarily in the 72. περὶ ἁμαρτίας) and they were not to be farther puniſhed or proceeded againſt in foro: but he that did wilfully or deſpightfully break the law, was upon ſufficient proof of it by witneſſes, put to death in capital, or otherwiſe puniſhed in other crimes, without mercy or pity to him, (which is the ſum of the 28. verſ.) and as Joſeph. 2. contr. Ap. ſaith ἀδύνατος ἡ τῆς κολάσεως παραίτησις, there was no poſſible eſcaping of puniſhment, no place for any ſacrifice, and therefore when David ſpeaks of his ſins of adultery and murther, Pſal. 51. he tells God, verſ. 16. לא־תחפץ זבח ואתנה עולה לא תרצה thou wouldſt not have ſacrifice, and if I had (or ſhould have) given thee burnt-offerings, thou wouldſt not be pleaſed, or accept them, i. e. my crimes are ſuch as for which there is no ſacrifice in the Law: And ſo in like manner proportionably to thoſe types, he that hath ſinned through ignorance, or ignorantly lived, and gone on in ſin, (and ſuch the ſins of the unregenerate life are counted to be, done ignorantly in unbelief, as St. Paul ſaith of himſelf, and the ſame will hold of the ſins of thoſe that are Chriſtians in profeſſion, baptized, &c. and yet have not amended their lives or forſaken their ſins, for they are ſtill in an unregenerate ſtate, not capable of that deſcription, c. 6. 4, 5.) there is mercy to be had for him (as St. Paul ſaith of himſelf, 1 Tim. 1. 13.) Chriſt hath died, offered himſelf a ſacrifice for ſin, and ſo delivered men from the danger of ſuch ſins, upon condition that they do repent of them, and amend; nay by this ſacrifice of his he hath purchaſed grace for ſuch, ſufficient to bring them out of that darkneſs to light, from that ſtate of unregeneration to repentance, ſo that for that man conſidered in that ſtate, though he be a ſinner, yet (as St. John ſaith, 1 Epiſt. 2. 1.) Chriſt is an advocate and a propitiation, and here there remaineth a ſacrifice, a means of pardon and a means of converting, Chriſt giving himſelf, both that he might redeem and purifie, Tit. 2. 14. juſtifie and ſanctifie. Yea farther, when this man being regenerate falls into any ſingle act of ſin, if it be through ignorance or weakneſs (as ſtill there remain ſome reliques of them in the regenerate, the ſtate in this nonage of ours, being but an imperfect ſtate) then ἔτι yet or ſtill this ſacrifice remains, and pardon is had by it to the regenerate diſciple upon acknowledgment and petition; nay if it be not capable of the excuſe of ignorance or weakneſs, yet if it be not continued in, but retracted preſently by repentance, this ſacrifice ἔτι ſtill remains in force for him, as in the Law when the leproſie doth not ſpread, Lev. 13. 23. or is healed in the Leper. 14. 3. then though the Prieſt ſhut him up again ſeven days, &c. anſwerable to excommunication or delivering up to Satan, yet ſtill v. 4. the Prieſt ſhall offer ſacrifice for his cleanſing; and ſo here though the ſin be leproſie, an unclean ſpot in the ſoul, yet being not ſpreading but preſently retracted by repentance, it may bring ſome inconveniences upon him, ſuch as have been mentioned

26. Ἑκουσίως γὰρ ἁμαρτανόντων ἡμῶν μετὰ τὸ λαβεῖν τὴν ἐπίγνωσιν τῆς ἀληθείας, οὐκ ἔτι περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν ἀπολείπεται θυσία.

28. Ἀθετήσας τις νόμον Μωσέως, χωρὶς οἰκτιρμῶν ἐπὶ δυσὶν ἢ τρισὶ μάρτυσιν ἀποθνήσκει.

elſewhere in the caſe of delivering up to Satan; but yet it may paſs for a ſpot of ſons, at leaſt ſuch as ſhall now not hinder from being a ſon; and this ſacrifice here, or 1 Joh. 1. 7. the blood of Chriſt parallel to it, cleanſeth from ſuch ſins as theſe, continues pardon and grace as yet to ſuch, obtains of God that he with-draw neither. But if any man, after the embracing of Chriſt, receiving the truth and grace, i. e. being thus regenerate, ſhall return to his old pollutions again, (or ſome new in exchange for them, the filthineſs of the ſpirit inſtead of that of the fleſh) to a courſe and trade of ſin, having not now the excuſes or alleviations, of which before he was capable, ſhewing himſelf to contemn both the mercy and grace of God, to deſpiſe that pardon, and (to make no uſe of, but contrariwiſe) to reſiſt that grace; there is no direction for any offering for ſuch; this very ſacrifice of Chriſt belongs not to him ſo far as by Covenant to obtain continuance of pardon for him, or continuance of grace; God may juſtly withdraw both, and Chriſt's blood ſay nothing to the contrary; nay, God hath told us that in this caſe he will with draw both in the places forementioned; and the ſame may be collected from this place from the aggravations here ſet upon the ſin, that it is the treading upon the Son of God, profaning the blood of the Covenant, i. e. making the blood of Chriſt uneffectual to his pardon, and contumeliouſly uſing the ſpirit of grace, and ſo grieving and quenching that ſpirit. And ſo v. 27. all that remains behind in juſtice, or by tenour of the ſecond Covenant, expectable from God, is that he ſhould proceed to judge ſuch a ſinner, and his zeal or wrath burn like fire, to conſume all ſuch gainſayers or adverſaries that walk thus contrary to all his methods of mercy, of grace; and from hence all that can toward comfort of ſuch be concluded, is, that 'tis not here ſaid, that God cannot or never will give grace again to ſuch, or uſe means for the recalling them, becauſe of God this is not here affirmed. From which negative argument, though the poſſibility of ſuch recovery may be concluded, yet there are little grounds to conclude it probable, or reaſonable for any man (that ſhould by that be encouraged to ſpiritual ſecurity) to depend or hope in it, for if the weight of one paſſage be obſerved (how much worſe puniſhment ſhall he be thought worthy of, or adjudged to? i. e. worſe than that under Moſes law, when the offender, v. 28. was put to death without mercy) we ſhall rather have reaſon to fear God will puniſh ſuch with exciſion or cutting off, without giving any new ſtock of grace to recal them again: For the word ἀξιοῦσθαι in this book doth not ſo often import being thought worthy, (which might conſiſt with contrary mercy) as meeting with that reward, actual receiving of it. So ἀξιοῦσθαι δόξης, Heb. 3. 3. is to have honour beſtowed upon him, (and ἀξιοῦσθαι τιμῆς, 1 Tim. 5. 17.) and not only to be thought worthy of it. In proportion to which if the words ſhould be interpreted and taken without exception or diſpenſation, [ἀξιωθήσεται, &c. he ſhall be puniſhed in a worſe manner] there will be little place of comfort for ſuch to depend on, and from thence to fall into ſuch dangerous ſnares; and yet becauſe after all this, 'tis poſſible that though ἀξιωθήσεται in the good ſenſe ſignifie actual giving, yet it may not in the ill, actual puniſhing, becauſe to think worthy and to reward, ſtill go together in God, in retribution of good, but not ſo in evil, his pardoning mercy oft interceeding; and again, becauſe thoſe words may well paſs not for any law ſet to God, (but only as a means to keep us from ſo falling, when we ſtand, by ſetting ſuch a direful character upon it, ſhewing us how promiſeleſs and dangerous ſuch our ſtate is,) it will therefore be no temptation to any who is in this ſad eſtate to be hopeleſs, or give over labouring to get out again, but rather a Summons or Proclamation of terrour, ſtraight to awaken him out of that eſtate to humiliation and prayers to God, leſt it be too late. And in this the example of David will be encouragement to him who after a years ſleep or lethargy in thoſe ſins of adultery and murther, &c. (which were ſuch falls of a regenerate man, and by God's ordinary means never retracted all that while) was yet by God's grace, and miſſion of a Prophet extraordinary recalled and reduced again, though it coſt him afterwards many flouds of tears and penitential expreſſions to waſh out thoſe ſpots which he had thus contracted (and though even ſtill he lies under the reproach of that ſin, when he doth not of any other, becauſe that only was indulged in ſo long) 1 Kings 15. 5. And the ſame may perhaps be ſaid of Solomon alſo, who after ſuch heavy falls, which beyond all the children of God are ſadly recorded of him in Scripture, was (as his Eccleſiaſtes gives us ſome grounds of hope) by reſtoring of Gods grace unto him brought back to repentance; God's mercy being beyond all promiſe (I ſhall add, beyond all other example) to him in this behalf.

29. ὃ γὰρ υἱὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ καταπατήσας, καὶ τὸ αἷμα τῆς διαθήκης κοινὸν ἡγησάμενος, ἐν ᾧ ἡγιάσθη, καὶ τὸ πνεῦμα τῆς χάριτος ἐνυβρίσας.

30. φοβερὰ, ἢ τὶς ἐκδοχὴ, &c.

29. πόσῳ χείρονος ἀξιωθήσεται τιμωρίας;

And therefore the cloſe muſt be, that if we have followed them in their ſins, we muſt be ſure to imitate them alſo, not only in the repentance, and ſincerity of that, but in all the degrees and demonſtrations of their repentance, if we hope for the mercy which they met with. To which I ſhall add no more ſave only this, that the product of that which from theſe places hath been concluded, ſeems to be very agreeable with that famous caſe ſet by St. Auguſt. l. de Perſever. of two men ſuppoſed to be converted together, to live the life of converts in the ſame manner, to fall together, and ſo to continue ſome time, and then one of them before death to recover and riſe again, and the other to dye in his ſtate of relapſe; where he makes this an argument and example of God's making a diſcrimination betwixt men, ſuppoſing this laſt act of recovery in the one, to be an act of ſpiritual extraordinary grace to him, which was not given, nor by any obligation due unto the other; which is the moſt that from theſe two places thus paraphraſed hath been collected.

Of a Late, or a Death-bed
REPENTANCE

CONCERNING a late or Death-bed repentance, (which I conceive much fitter for a ſad ſecret conſideration in the preſence only of God, and the Scripture, and ones own ſoul; than for a diſpute or debate, wherein either each party may be unwilling to yield, or willing to retain their own prepoſſeſſions, or elſe that perſon that hath long depended on the benefit of a late repentance, may think it great raſhneſs to reſign up that hold upon ſlight grounds, and ſuch will any ſeem to be at a ſuddain tranſient repreſentation;) It muſt firſt be acknowledged, that one of theſe two things is ordinarily underſtood by it, either the perfecting our accounts with God at that time, reinforcing all our former good reſolutions, and ſhutting up that buſineſs of our ſouls, which in time of health had been ſincerely begun, but not perfected; or elſe the Beginning of that work of Repentance at that time. Sect. 1.

For the firſt of theſe it is acknowledged, that the Cloſe of our lives, whether it be old age, or ſick-bed, is very proper and uſeful to that purpoſe. For the perſon that hath before that, ſincerely converted to God with unfeigned ſorrow and confeſſion of all former ſins, and firm reſolution of amendment, (which is the leaſt that true repentance can conſiſt of) may then, when he ſees himſelf drawing toward a period of a life, mixt with infirmities, and ſins, lay his full load on his own ſhoulders, and ſo with true ſorrow and compunction, come heavy laden to his Saviour, lay down that burthen before God by particular confeſſion, and beſeech his pardon through the ſufferings and ſatisfaction of Chriſt for every of theſe; which pardon the true ſincere penitent hath on thoſe terms promiſe to receive from Heaven. Nay, he that had before made many good reſolutions, and yet through cuſtom of the place, through ſtrength of natural conſtitution, and ſuch like temptations, hath hitherto not been ſo faithful to his reſolutions, as he ought, may now at laſt upon God's viſitation, and by help of this diſcipline of Heaven, radicate and ſettle ſuch reſolutions ſo deep, that they would be conſtant, and perſevering, if he ſhould again recover; and ſo this diſcipline may in that caſe be thought to have been deſigned by God to this wholeſome end, and the working of ſuch an effect will no doubt be acceptable in his ſight. Sect. 2.

But for the ſecond, the beginning, I ſay the beginning the work of repentance at that time, I deſire theſe particulars may ſeriouſly be laid to heart. 1. In a general view of it, whether it be not reproachful and contumelious thus to offer God the refuſe and vileſt of our age and parts, like that offering to Ceres Phygalienſis in Pauſanias; none of the honey of their bees, but only the wax, or juiceleſs part of their labour; and of their wool, thoſe fleeces which were not fit for uſe, but full of the daglocks, the courſeſt and fouleſt part of it. That kind of wool, if a late Critick's bold conjecture might be heeded, was it in which the ſponge of vinegar was put, when 'twas given Chriſt on the Croſs. The Criticiſm I ſhall confeſs very inſolent, but the obſervation on that ſuppoſition, true and obvious enough, that it was the greateſt contumely that could have been offered unto Chriſt. Sect. 3.

μαλισθὸν τὰ κηρία. τὰ μὲν εἰς ἱερασίαν τῶν ἥκοντα· ἀλλ' ἔτ' ἀνδαλέα τῷ ὀσύπῳ. ὀσύπῳ, non ὑσσώπῳ mendose. Heinſ. in Ariſt.

2. Whether a perſon that now in time of youth or health, depends in any meaſure upon that repentance of old age, or diſeaſe, that defers the forſaking of wilful ſins, or labouring to overcome paſſions or vanities for the preſent, in contemplation of the poſſibility of doing all this at the laſt, and of the conceived benefits or uſefulneſs of ſuch repentance, do not, for the preſent, grieve and reſiſt, and refuſe the holy Spirit of God, which at that time importunes to be heard and obeyed.

3. Whether he do not promiſe himſelf, that though Gods ſpirit be thus grieved and reſiſted, yet he will never be wearied out, but will be as bountiful and conſtant in giving of grace, after ſuch reſiſtance, as before. Sect. 4.

4. Whether to hope this, be not contrary, as to that of the Prophet, Iſa. 63. 10. They rebelled and vexed his holy ſpirit, therefore he was turned to be their enemy, and he fought againſt them; ſo alſo to the method of God in diſpenſing his Grace deſcribed in the Goſpel, eſpecially in the parable of the Talents, which goes upon this rule, that he that makes uſe of, and improves that meaſure of Grace which God affords, ſhall have more, but he that doth not, that which he hath ſhall be taken away from him; As Gen. 6. 3. where we read, my ſpirit ſhall not always ſtrive with fleſh; the Greek hath οὐ καταμενῶ, ſhall not abide or dwell with him; and the Hebrew is thought to have a peculiar notion (יָדוֹן from נרן a ſheath) my ſpirit, or the ſpirit which I have given to man, ſhall not be thus unprofitably laid up, and ſheathed in him, the talent that lies ſo long idle ſhall at length be taken away, and the floud be ſent to awake or drown ſuch unprofitable ſpirited men. It is the phanſie of a very learned man, that theſe were the τὰ ἐν φυλακῇ πνεύματα, 1 Pet. 3. 19. the ſpirits (in priſon ſay we) of whom God ſo complains that they were ſheathed, lay idly and unprofitable in mankind, in Noah's days who went and preacht to them. Which if it be rightly conjectured by him, will conclude them, and all ſuch others in the number of the ἀπειθήσαντες, v. 20. diſobedient, whoſe repentance and amendment God's patience (ἅπαξ ἐξεδέχετο) once expected, and at length gave over expecting; the very ſame provoking condition (expreſt by the ſame word, ἀπειθήσασι) that Heb. 3. 18. is put under that direful Oath of God, that they ſhould not enter into his reſt. Thus the preaching of the Goſpel, the means of working grace being allowed in an eminent manner to Gods people the Jews, and after the death of Chriſt, yet farther continued to them for ſome time, upon their reſiſting of thoſe means, is taken away from them, Matth. 21. 43. To which purpoſe that terrible paſſage ſo oft repeated and ſo little underſtood (Matth. 13. 13. Mark 4. 12. Luke 8. 10. Joh. 12. 40. Acts 28. 26. Rom. 11. 8. all Sect. 5.

taken out of Iſa. 6. 9.) is very obſervable, being in the place of the Acts peculiarly applied to this matter, the removing of the means of Grace from the Jews to the Gentiles, ver. 28. of all which ſeveral repetitions of the ſame words, this is the plain conſtant ſence, that becauſe they had firſt reſiſted that powerful means of grace, ſo long vouchſafed unto them, therefore they were by God's juſt puniſhment deprived of thoſe means (that ſpoken to them obſcurely in parables, which was to others plainly, as the places in the Goſpel ſpecifie) and ſo delivered up to hardneſs of heart. For this reaſon or cauſe (ſo γὰρ denotes) becauſe their heart was (in the preter tenſe, was before, not is, in the preſent) waxen groſs, and their ears were dull of hearing, βαρέως ἤκουσαν in the aoriſt, they had for ſome indefinite time been ſo ſlow and dull in hearing, καὶ ἐκάμμυσαν, their eyes had they cloſed, leſt they ſhould at any time ſee, or hear, or underſtand, or convert, and ſo God ſhould heal them. That this is the meaning of that hard place (a proclaiming of conſequent deſertion from God upon their precedent obdurating their hearts againſt Gods means, and not any abſolute, antecedent, unprovoked act of God's hardning of them) the manner of ſetting down the place both in Saint Matthew, and in the Acts, and the rendring it as a reaſon of Chriſt's ſpeaking to them in parables, in three other places, will inforce; as might be more largely here manifeſted, if it were ſeaſonable. And indeed (to return from this ſhort digreſſion) the promiſes of the Goſpel go generally on this ground, aſſurance of grace to the humble, that is, to thoſe that being ſenſible of their danger through ſin, do obey Gods call, and reſign themſelves up as Subjects to Chriſt, but withal that threat adjoined of reſiſting the proud or diſobedient, Ja. 4. 6.

Sect. 6. And though it may be ſaid that God doth not always withdraw his Grace, and his calls, the means of grace, upon every ſuch reſiſtance of ours, and therefore I may ſtill hope that he will continue them to me to the hour of my death, and then I may make uſe of them; yet the anſwer will be pregnant enough.

Sect. 7. 1. That although God upon every act of our reſiſtance doth not wholly withdraw all grace, yet we have reaſon to think that the oftner we refuſe, and reſiſt, the more apt God is to forſake and deſert us, and perhaps the weaker are his after-calls; As the Angel of God which he promiſed to ſend as a guardian before Iſrael, Exod. 23. 20. indued with the power of God, v. 21. was, ſay the learned Jews, upon their worſhipping the Calf, taken away from them, and an inferiour weaker Angel given in his ſtead, with no more than meer Angelical power; and this they ground on Exod. 33. 3. where God, that v. 2. ſaith, he had promiſed to ſend his Angel before them, now tells them, he will not go up in the midſt of them for they are a ſtiff-necked people. And then ſure this will be able to inforce that warning of Gods concerning that Angel, Exod. 23. 21. Beware of him, and obey his voice, provoke him not; as being ſure that any ſuch provocation will bring ſome revenge or puniſhment after it. A gleame of which truth it was, that the Heathens conceived that their τοπικοὶ θεοὶ, the Gods, or Angels of Cities or Nations, did upon the provocations and ſins of the inhabiters ſolemnly forſake their Altars and Temples, reſign up their care and tuition of them. Secondly, that every act of our preſent reſiſtance adds to our future obduration, as the beating of an hammer on an anvil (ſuch is the νοῦς ἀντίτυπος in Theod. the ſoul that reverberates every ſtroke or call,) makes the anvil the ſmoother, and in effect the harder, I mean leſs capable of impreſſion; and then in the ordinary diſpenſation of the ſpirit, though God ſhould continue the ſame degree of Grace, after our frequent reſiſtances, which he gave before; yet we ſhould then be leſs likely to receive it, than we were before, when yet it appears we did not receive it. Whether by one or both of theſe means it comes to paſs, I know not; but ſure every ſuch ſin that is thus added to the tale, makes the reduction of any ſinner more difficult and improbable than before it was; and I ſhall appeal to the conſcience of every ſuch man that hath for any time flattered himſelf with the hopes of what a Death-bed repentance may do for him, whether he do not find that ever ſince he entertained thoſe hopes, he hath grown more wretchleſs, prophane, Atheiſtical, and ſo much farther from the end he hopes for or depends on, and every day in an eſtate more deplorable, and deſperate, than other.

Sect. 8. Thirdly, that we have no reaſon of believing or hoping, farther than we have grounds from the word of God, (the foundation of all belief and hope) and that either from ſome promiſe, or example there.

And therefore the next thing I deſire ſhould be conſidered, is,

1. How far thoſe promiſes and examples may be extended, and from thence that it be reſolved unreaſonable and unſafe to extend our hopes or perſwaſions of our ſelves any farther, than thoſe will make it prudent for us to extend them.

Sect. 9. For the promiſes, that which is moſt familiar with us, and on which 'tis moſt likely moſt men take up this hope, is that, wherewith our Common-prayer-book begins, At what time ſoever a ſinner doth repent him of his ſins, &c. of which (that we miſtake it not) theſe two things are obſervable.

1. That that place contains no promiſe of God's giving the grace of repentance at all times, which is the only thing which all this time we conſider; but only that at all times God is ready to forgive on ſuppoſition that we do repent.

2. That that place cannot ſo fitly or probably be applyed to a death-bed repentance, becauſe if we look into the margent of our books we ſhall ſee the place cited from Ezech. 18. 21, 22. and therefore is in juſtice no farther to be extended, as an infallible promiſe of Scripture, than that in Ezech. will bear; and that upon examination will yield no more than this, that at what time ſoever a wicked man ſhall convert to God, turning from all his ſins, that he hath committed, and on the contrary live, and perform the actions of a new life, keep all Gods Statutes, that is, perform (though not perfect, yet) ſincere, univerſal, impartial obedience, and do that which is lawful and right, he ſhall ſurely live, he ſhall not die, his tranſgreſſions ſhall be forgiven, and in his righteouſneſs, his renewed ſincere obedience, he ſhall live. Which doing, and keeping, and righteouſneſs, how it can be applyed to him which begins his work not till he ſees that he is juſt ready to dye, will hardly be imaginable.

But having ſaid thus much of this one Place, I remember the ſaying of an ancient (uncontradicted by any that I have heard of) that though God promiſe pardon to all penitents at all times, yet he hath no where promiſed repentance to thoſe all at all times, and that is all we now ſpeak of, and therefore ſhall

now ſuppoſe there are no ſuch places, and therefore ſeek no farther for them; and though without ſuch promiſe 'tis poſſible God may ſtill give that grace of repentance, yet that he ſhould do ſo;

1. It is extraordinary, and therefore he that deſpiſes his preſent offers, hath little reaſon to hope that thoſe extraordinaries ſhall be reſerv'd for him, and if ſtill he will hope, Job hath told him, The hypocrites hope ſhall periſh, and I ſhall be bold to add, that there is no greater degree of Hypocriſie, than this want of ſincerity, which appears now in him by his not accepting of grace for the preſent, by refuſing or deferring to do that which he is enabled and ſolicited to do.

Inſtead of ſeeking after more ſuch promiſes I ſhall add one terrible threatning, Pſal. 95. which Sect. 11. is repeated by Saint Paul in the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, and by our Church thought fit to begin our daily morning ſervice. Where after theſe words To day if you will hear his voice harden not your hearts, which ſigniñes the time preſent, or at fartheſt the time of Gods calling to them in his word to hear his voice, 'tis ſtraight added to all others. I have ſworn (and Gods Oaths are irreverſible) in my wrath, that they ſhall not enter into my reſt. To which theſe two other places may fitly be ſubjoyned, Pro. 1. 26. where, as the puniſhment of thoſe that have refuſed Gods call, 'tis added in God's name, I will laugh at their Calamity, and mock when their fear cometh. A terrible place to him that hath neglected Gods ſeaſons and opportunities, and at laſt comes to be ſurpriz'd with Death, and the fears that accompany it, and then begins to fly to God for ſuccour, and grace, and pardon, and God inſtead of compaſſionating, ſcoffs, and laughs, and mocks at him; The leaſt that this can import, will be that that time is a very improbable time for that moſt neceſſary work to be wrought by Chriſt in us. The other place is that admonition of the author to the Hebrews 12. 16, 17. that no man be prophane as Eſau was, in ſelling his birth-right for a morſel of meat, i. e. (at leaſt by way of accommodation) that precious priviledge and birth-right of grace here, and (conſequent to the Chriſtian uſe of that) his eternal inheritance in Heaven, for ſome tranſitory pleaſure of this earth, leſt it befall him eternally, what befell Eſau here in reſpect of his father's bleſſing, he found no place of repentance, could not get his father Iſaac to repent, or reverſe the donation from Jacob to him, though he cryed bitterly for it, Haſt thou but one bleſſing, O my father? bleſs me, even me alſo, O my father; and ſo, as it follows there, ſought it carefully with tears. The full importance of the place is, that they that are guilty of Eſau's deſpight and contempt, which is there called prophaneneſs, may have reaſon to apprehend that they may fall into the ſame hazard for their ſpiritual eſtate, that Eſau did for his temporal, be irreverſibly loſt, and find no place for Repentance in God, though they ſeek it with ſorrow, and grief, and bitter compunction, carefully with tears. To which purpoſe Chriſt's dealing with the people of the Jews, is matter of example, and admonition to every of us, Luke 19. 42. when weeping over Hieruſalem, he ſaid, If thou hadſt known, or, O that thou, even thou didſt know, at leaſt in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace; and as if that time were paſt, juſt as he was a ſpeaking, he adds, But now they are hid from thine eyes. For the days ſhall come, &c. It ſeems before the point of the coming of thoſe days of their ſurprizal, the things belonging to their peace were hid from their eyes, to wit, upon that critical fatal act of their crucifying Chriſt, adding that bloody tranſcendent impiety to their former killing, and ſtoning of the Prophets, on which, certain irreverſible deſtruction went out againſt them; In which caſe though Noah, Daniel, and Job ſhould intercede, they ſhould not be able to reverſe it.

To which purpoſe 'tis obſerved generally by Divines from theſe, and the like grounds, that there Sect. 12. is to every wicked man a time when the meaſure of his iniquities are filled up, and God's patience in waiting for him ſo wearied out, that he gives over calling, or expecting, or waiting his repentance. This was wont to be called by the Jews the meaſure of judgment, i. e. a pitch of ſin, upon which judgment infallibly followed, deſtruction of whole Kingdoms, and the like. This time is not to be known by any man of himſelf, (nor to be diſcerned by any obſervation, and comparing of himſelf with others) either by the number of ſins, or calls of God, or years ſpent in ſin contrary to thoſe calls, there being ſo much variety in theſe, and in God's dealing with men, that nothing but Gods revelation can give us any certain knowledge in this point; Only this may be ſaid of it, 1. That the death of an impenitent ſinner, i. e. Gods plucking him away in that ſtate, is, when it comes, a certain indication of it. 2. That it is poſſible, I ſay poſſible, that it may be before the time of death, i. e. that the man which is come to that fulneſs of ſin and ripeneſs for exciſion, may be kept alive by God beyond that time, and if that, which I ſay is poſſible, ever actually be, then is that man concluded under a final ſentence, an irreverſible eſtate in evil, even in this life, and conſequently 'tis poſſible ſome impenitent ſinner may in this life arrive to that eſtate. For as Numb. 16. 38. the cenſers and the lives of Corah and his בנפשתם company were forfeited to God together, (as that place ſhould be read, the cenſers of theſe ſinners with their ſouls, or lives, ver. 38. are hallowed, ver. 37. i. e. conſecrated, forfeited to God, their goods and their lives together) ſo is it with grace, the ſpecial ſupellex or furniture of the ſoul, that, and life are betray'd together, the ſame degree of ſin, the ſame pitch of provocation makes forfeiture of both, and then God may uſe his power and dominion, as he pleaſe, take both together, or take one and reprieve the other for ſome time, withdraw grace, and leave life, for ſome ends in his wiſdom ſeeming good to him; and as there the cenſers were not deſtroyed but made into broad plates for the Altar, uſed to the ſervice of God, when the owners were ſwallowed up quick, ſo no doubt on the other ſide, might the owners have been kept alive, and uſed by God ſome way to ſet out his glory, and yet the cenſers have been deſtroyed. It being free to God to take the forfeiture, when, and how far he pleaſe, and in caſe of ſuch filling up their meaſure, either to withdraw grace only, (which if it be total and final makes up the irreverſible eſtate) or elſe if he ſo pleaſe, to call for both the depoſita at once, take away grace and life together.

That I thus take confidence to conclude, is upon the authority of Scripture, which hath made it Sect. 13. clear to me that it was thus actually with Pharaoh at one time of his life, after the ſixth judgment peculiarly (but not before, through all, or any part of the ſpace of the former calls, much leſs at, or before his birth, or before Gods meſſages to him) when God is ſaid to harden his heart, and to make him ſtand, or keep him alive, (when otherwiſe he had cut him off from the Earth, but that he intended thus to reprieve him) that he might ſhew in him his power, Exod. 9. 14, 15. Which becauſe it is a notable (and as far as I have obſerved in Scripture, a ſingular) example, and becauſe by ſome miſtakes in our translation and by other prejudices it is become somewhat obscure, I will here set down as it lies in the story.

Sect. 14. Moses and Aaron are sent to Pharaoh with that message from God concerning the dismission of the Israelites, and with miracles and signs to give authority to their message, and Pharaoh refused to hearken or obey, but hardned his heart, Exod. 7. 13. In which place our ordinary Translation hath mistaken, for it is not to be understood, as we read it, that he, i.e. God (as yet) hardned Pharaoh's heart, for the words do not bear that in the Hebrew, nor had any such thing by way of story at that time been intimated (only by way of prediction, and evidence of Gods præscience, Exod. 3. 19. and by way of Decree what God would do upon it, c. 4. 21. and 7. 3. which was after fulfilled, and not yet, and might therefore be referred to that after-time) but ויחזק לב פרעה Pharaohs heart waxed strong, or hard, was hardned, or by an ordinary Hebraisme of Cal for Hithpael, Pharaohs heart hardened it self; and so it follows, v. 14. the Lord said to Moses, Pharaohs heart is waxen hard, he refuseth, &c. and so the very same words are rendred by our English, c. 7. 22. and c. 8. 19. was hardned, in the passive, or hardned it self, in the reciprocal, not actively, he hardned. And so this denotes only an act of stubbornness in Pharaoh, an obstinate resistance or refusal against Gods calls and miracles, and not any act of Gods either positive or privative (by way of desertion) in hardning him, only the Lord had said that it would be so, (in the end of that verse) which refers to Gods prediction of his stubbornness, c. 3. 19. I am sure that the King of Egypt will not let you go; and that, I say, grounded only in Gods præscience, which hath no more to do with (no more influence on) the effect, nor degree of causality in the producing it, than my seeing of any object, hath on the object, being perfectly as extrinsecal and accidental to the effect, as my sight or my knowledge is to another mans action, and the thing foreseen no more necessitated to be by that means, than it would if God did not foresee it, it being common to God with us to work by his will, and not by his præscience, and the absurdity being as great, to affirm that he willeth by his knowledge, as that he knoweth by his will, or that I see with my ear, or hear with my eye, and such like: the truth of which Calvin it seems discerned by some hint in Valla's writings, and from him Beza learn't and acknowledged it also. After this obduration of his against a call and a wonder, God proceeds to a judgment of turning the water into blood, v. 16, 17. and that it seems was a very sufficient means of conviction unto this obdurate Pharaoh, for so saith God, Hitherto thou wouldst not hear, but in this thou shalt know that I am the Lord; behold I will smite, &c. this visible judgment was able it seems to extort from him the acknowledgment of the hand that sent it, in this thou shalt know, and yet after this, it follows, that Pharaoh's heart was hardned, ver. 22. neither did he set his heart to this also, ver. 23. and the reason is given, because the Magicians did (in these two signs) the same thing also by their inchantments.

Vid. Instit. l. 3. c. 23. numb. 6. præscientiâ solâ nullam necessitatem creaturis imponi libenter concesserò, tametsi non omnes assentiantur; sunt enim qui ipsam causam rerum esse volunt. Verùm acutiùs, & prudentiùs Valla, &c.

Sect. 15. After this comes the plague of frogs, and that it seems came so near him (on him, c. 8. 4. and into the Kings chamber, saith the Psalmist) that, though the Magicians were able to do the like, yet being not able to deliver him from them again, he calls for Moses, and intreats his prayers for deliverance from this plague, and promises that he will let the people go, ver. 8. and Moses, to improve this mercy to him, that it may be a softning deliverance, that the Frogs and the obdurate heart may depart together, bids him chuse his time when, ver. 9. and it shall be done for him, ver. 10. That thou mayst know that there is none like the Lord our God. But it seems this had no effect on him neither, for when he saw there was respite, when the judgment was removed, (now God's mercy was his temptation, as before the Magicians inchantments) and when he saw it was so, i, e. not yet discerning God's purpose of vengeance upon him for his contumacy (as Kimchi, in קשח, saith that God hardens hearts by concealing his counsels of judgment from them, and instances in Pharaoh and Sihon) then again he hardned his heart, and hearkned not, ver. 15. And this was a third wilful act of his own obduration, agreeable to what God had foretold of him, as the Lord had said. Then comes the plague of Lice, verse 17. and in this the Magicians are posed, ver. 18. the Devil that before could hurt, but not deliver, that could do destructive, but not saving Miracles, is not now able to destroy, to do mischief, confesses and proclaims the finger of God, as he doth the Messias in the Gospel, when the Pharisees denied him, and yet for all this, this testimony and Sermon of the very Devil against him, it follows, his heart was hardned, ver. 19. and he hearkned not, as the Lord had said.

Θεῦ μαχεσθυμία ἀΐσια σκληροχαρδίας. Basil. l. εἰ Θεὸς ἀντ. κακῶ.

Sect. 16. After this comes the swarm of flyes, and that not only as a plague miraculously produced, but with a sign, v. 23. a division betwixt Gods people and his, no flyes swarming in Goshen, but in all Egypt besides, on purpose to make him sensible of his sin by the particularity of the punishment, to the end that he might know, ver. 22. on purpose to teach him piety. By this it seems Pharaoh is wrought on a little, first, to give leave that they shall sacrifice to God without going out of the land; then when that would not serve (because by so doing they should sacrifice the abomination of the Egyptians to the Lord before their eyes, ver. 26. i. e. those things which the Egyptians would detest to see so used, Gen. 43. 32. to wit in Manetho's phrase, τὰ ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ δεμισευόμενα ζῶα, cattel which were sacred among the Egyptians, first by law forbidden to be killed, and after, though not then, received into the number of their Gods, for so was Apis (saith * Tacitus, a bull, and the especial God of the Egyptians) he proceeds farther and giveth way that they may go into the wilderness, only you shall not go very far away, verse 28. and upon this promise, Moses promises to intreat for him, verse 29. But now Pharaoh had already hardned his heart four times, and at one of those times he had over and above dealt falsly, promised fair, c. 8. 8. but brake his promise, and therefore now Moses after this fifth judgment, though he promise to pray upon his promise to mend, yet doth it with a particular warning more than at any time before, but let not Pharaoh deal deceitfully any more, verse 29. as ominating that if he did, now the danger would be greater than ever before, and yet v. 32. as soon as the judgment was removed, Pharaoh hardned his heart, בפעם הזות hac vice, this turn, this time also.

* Caso Ariete in contumeliam Ammonis. Bos quoque immolatur quem Ægyptii Apim colunt.

Sect. 17. Upon this, God sends that plague of murrain upon all the Cattel of Egypt, c. 9. 6. and the heart of Pharaoh was hardned, ver. 7. and so still all this while though Pharaoh was obdurate, yet this by no act of God's, but Pharaoh hardens his own heart, and will not let Israel go, as the Lord commanded. Upon this God sends another judgment, that of boyls and blains, ver. 10. and then 'tis said in a new stile ויחזק יהוה the Lord hardned the heart of Pharaoh, ver. 12. (which sure was the time at first referred to by God by way of prediction to Moses, c. 4. 21. as our margent directs, and was the judgment before threatned implicitely in that ſpecial caution or warning, c. 8. 29. and this God never did till then; and therefore as after that warning 'tis ſaid that Pharaoh hardned his heart this time alſo, ſo 'tis here ſaid, v. 14. that בפעם הזות this turn, this time, now, though not before, God would pour all his plagues upon his heart, and thoſe plagues on his heart are ſure effects of Gods obdurating.

to

Upon which immediately follows the paſſage wherein the greateſt difficulty lies, c. 9. 14, 15. not as we read it [for now I will ſtretch out my hand, that I may ſmite thee and thy people with peſtilence, for the event proves there was no ſuch matter, Pharaoh was not ſmitten by the peſtilence, nor cut off from the earth by that means, but drowned in the Red ſea ſome time after. But thus ſhould the words be rendred, And (or For) now I had ſent or ſtretcht out my hand, and I had ſmitten thee and thy people by the peſtilence, and thou hadſt been cut off from the earth. It is שלחתי, in the preter tenſe, ſent, ſaith Ainſworth, or rather had ſent, (as 'tis ordinary in Hebrew for the preter tenſe to bear the ſence of the pluperfect tenſe) and Paulus Fagius from the Chaldee Paraphraſe, nunc prope erat coram me ut dimiſiſſem, I was near ſtretching out my hand, referring as 'tis probable to the plague of the murrain, in the beginning of the Chapter (called דבר both in this verſe, and that verſe 3.) which might have ſeized upon him and his people, as it did on his cattel, or elſe to thoſe boyls, verſe 11. which might be plague-ſwellings, and ſo proper enough to have cut him off; and ſo that which follows will be more clear, But (not And) in very deed for this cauſe העמרתיך I have (not [raiſed thee up] but) made thee ſtand, kept thee alive, ſuſtentavi te, ſaith the ancient Latine, ſuſtained thee, (for otherwiſe, had it not been for this, I had ſmitten thee with the murrain or plague before, and thou hadſt ſome time ſince been cut off utterly, but that I intended) to ſhew, or make known, or make to be ſeen (for ſo תראתך literally ſignifies) my power in thee, as in cutting up or anatomizing a man alive, which is condemned to death (ſaith Chryſoſtome) that others may be inſtructed and benefited by that diſſection. Sect. 18. Tom. 5. p. 781.

In this matter 'tis true Saint Paul reads εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο ἐξήγειρά σε, for this very thing I raiſed thee up, ſay we; but that muſt be underſtood and interpreted by what we have already found to be the meaning of the ſtory, and not on the other ſide this rendring of the paſſage in the ſtory (which the context inforceth, and Paulus Fagius, and out of him Ainſworth, acknowledge to be the importance of the Hebrew) brought to the ſound of our Engliſh phraſe in Saint Paul, for ἐξήγειρα muſt not needs refer to the time of Pharaoh's birth, or to any abſolute deſtination of his perſon, (it would be hard to bring any example of ſuch a ſence of it in Scripture, or other Author) but may belong to ſome particular paſſage or part of his life, and ſo directly to this point of time, when God ſays he might have ſlain him with plague or murrain; and ſo be rendred raiſing, as that ſignifies a raiſing one out of danger, or ſickneſs, a reſcuing or recovering him, and ſo keeping alive, as 'tis ordinarily uſed in Scripture of raiſing from ſickneſs or death. The ſence certainly is, that God continued him alive, when he had filled up his meaſure of obduration, and ſo in ordinary courſe was to be cut off by death; in the ſame manner as the author of the book of Wiſdom ſaith of Gods dealing with the Canaanites, cap. 12. 20. Thoſe who are due to death thou puniſhedſt with ſo much longanimity, and 2 Macc. 6. 13, 14, 15. ſpeaking of the Nations, 'tis ſaid, that God patiently forbeareth to puniſh till they be come to the fulneſs of their ſins; and ſo it's intimated by that which follows, Rom. 9. 22. God willing to ſhew his wrath, &c. endured with much long-ſuffering the veſſels of wrath fitted to deſtruction. Sect. 19. Rom. 9.

And then when Pharaohs heart was thus hardned by God in this extraordinary manner, God expoſtulates with him, v. 17. (in triumph as it were over this ſinner that now is the illuſtrious object of his judgments of obduration, plague of heart, and a kind of hell on earth, for he was reſerv'd, beyond the ordinary period of life, kept alive for this remarkable judgment) as yet exalteſt thou thy ſelf, &c? and in reference peculiarly to that expoſtulation is that objection to be underſtood, Rom. 9. 19. διὰ τί ἔτι μέμφεται; why doth he yet find fault? i.e. God might indeed, ſaith the objector, with good reaſon find fault all the while of the former ſix judgments, when Pharaoh hardned his own heart; but now when God hath hardned him, and by a total deprivation of grace (without which he cannot chuſe but ſin) ingulfed him in an irreverſible ſtate, as much as if he were in hell, διὰ τί ἔτι, why yet or ſtill doth he find fault, or expoſtulate? for who hath reſiſted his will? then God might be ſaid to will his obduration, which he had inflicted by way of puniſhment (though before 'tis confeſt he could not) and what poſſible reſiſting of his will is there, that he ſhould ſtill find fault? The anſwer to this objection (firſt by way of ἔνστασις, not for any exact determining or ſtating any point of controverſie or queſtion, particularly of that immediate precedent, [who hath reſiſted his will?] but for the puzling and ſilencing of the Objector, ver. 20, 21. and then by ſpeaking directly to the matter in hand about Pharaoh, ver. 22.) might out of St. Chryſoſtome be fully cleared, if this were not already too large an over-grown παρέργον, and this part of it impertinent wholly to the matter in hand. Sect. 20. ὁ πρὸς ἀκοὴν ἔσεσθαι τῆς ζητήσεως, ἀλλὰ διὰ ἀσφάλειαν. Chryſ. 1. 5. p. 778. And again, πρὸς ἔνστασιν (a figure of repelling the intention, or avoiding the beat of the objection) ὁ πρὸς ἀκρίβειαν δόγματος.

The reſult of all that I have laboured to lay down concerning Pharaoh is this, that although his ſtate were a long time but reverſibly ill, as long as he hardned his own heart, yet when his own obdurations were come to the fulneſs of meaſure, and he ripe and dropping into hell, as after the ſixth judgment he was, then God exchanged the firſt part of that due puniſhment of his in another world, that was inſtantly to have commenced, for a temporary cooler hell here, hardned his heart, and obſtructed all poſſibility of repentance from him, and ſo concluded him in this life in an irreverſible eſtate. Sect. 21.

Having gone thus far, I ſhall now demand, whether an impenitent Chriſtian, that in the midſt of many means of grace, many calls of Chriſt for many years together afforded, doth repeat and reiterate his reſiſtances, and hardens ſo oft his own heart againſt God, be not as great a provoker as Pharaoh was? I am ſure, that that which Joſephus makes the character of Pharaoh, Ἀφροσύνη μετὰ πονηρίας καὶ κακίας, Folly with wickedneſs and malignity, is the juſt inſcription of ſuch for the moſt part. And if it be objected, that ſuch an one is not allowed thoſe ſigns and prodigies that he was, I anſwer, firſt, that 'tis but the greater mercy to him that he is not, thoſe being all deſtructive miracles; and if he complain for want of them, he may within a while (if he have not already) meet with ſome rouzing judgment, ſome ſharp diſeaſe of the ſtone, or ſtrangury, or fever, a thunder and lightning about his ears, which will be able to ſupply that place, and aggravate his guilt, perfectly as high as Pharaoh's, if he be not reformed. Secondly, Father Abraham's anſwer to Dives may be conviction to Sect. 22.

him, that he that hath Moſes and the Prophets in the Chriſtian ſence, the many Methods of the Holy Ghoſt, the many calls of Chriſt in the Church, and is not wrought on by them, neither would that man repent, though all Pharaoh's miracles were ſhewed before him; ſome Magician-inchanting-deceit, (flattery of his own corrupt heart) or comfortable hope, which the removal of a puniſhment would be apt to infuſe into him, would be as ſure divertiſements to avoid the force of the moſt powerful work of God upon him, as the like were then unto Pharaoh.

Sect. 23. 'Tis true, there may be ſome diſparity (in regard of ſome circumſtances) betwixt that Pharaoh and the Chriſtian impenitent, and therefore there will be no certainty deducible from Pharaoh's example, that any man now a days doth come in this life to that irreverſible eſtate: This I am moſt willing to grant, and from thence to conclude, that 'twill be a great madneſs for any melancholy hypochondriack from this diſcourſe to take occaſion to phanſie himſelf actually in that eſtate, and from thence to give over all hope, and labour to get out again; firſt, becauſe the doing ſo is the ſure way to ingulf him in it for the future, though he be not yet in it, which is one piece of fury, thus to run into that which I fear, when the fear ought in any reaſon to drive me from it. Secondly, becauſe this paper hath only laboured to prove that a man may fall into it, if he do not take heed, which if it be believed and made uſe of, he never ſhall fall into it; and to give over all heed is a uſe quite contrary to this doctrine. 3. Becauſe the only reaſonable, and the far more proper uſe of this doctrine will be, 1. To haſten our Repentance. 2. If it have been deferred too long, then to help to repair that defect by more zeal and intention, and vehement deſire, by more humiliation to root it deep, and by fruits (all that are poſſible) to evidence the ſincerity of it, and in all theſe reſpects to loſe no time in impious or melancholy thoughts, but by a ſpeedy change to confute our fears, and ſhew that we are not loſt irreverſibly. 4. Becauſe whoſoever is ſuppoſed to be ſubject to theſe diſcouraging thoughts, and ſo in danger to be hurt by this doctrine, is ſuppoſed for the preſent to be deſirous to repent and amend, and then by a principle laid in another diſcourſe, we muſt ſuppoſe his preſent eſtate, though it be ill, yet not to be irreverſible, this care and deſire to get out being a character and indicium of that ſtate of ſin, which is ſtiled ſin not unto death, for which the prayers of others, viz. of the Church, have that promiſe, 1 John 5. that God will in anſwer to them give him life, i.e. not preſent pardon or ſalvation, continuing as he is, but ſufficient means of Grace to bring him to repentance firſt, and then to life. But if he have caſt off all deſire of being better, then as I have no ſuch grounds of comfort for him, ſo will not the principles of diſcomfort, that this diſcourſe hath offered, prove matter of deſpair to him, but rather of rouzing and wakening him out of his preſumption. This one anſwer is alone abundantly ſufficient in this matter, and then for any man thus to give over the former only hope (not upon any appearance, or probable argument, but upon a phanſie or jealouſie of his own, raiſed only on ſome occaſion or pretence, I am ſure not ground or cauſe taken from this diſcourſe) will be ſo unreaſonable (and withal ſo impoſſible to clear or reſcue any the trueſt and wholſomeſt diſcourſe from ſuch accidental miſtakes and ſcandals, and inconſequent concluſions) that I ſhall not add any more words to prevent, or cure it.

Of Conſcience, pag.

The truth is, there is another kind of deſperation, that of going on ſtill in our wickedneſs, (as Jer. 2. 25. [thou ſayeſt there is no hope] is ſet to ſignifie, ſaith Grotius, abſtinere nequeo, I cannot abſtain, and that impotence an effect of a paſſionate will, or a cuſtome in ſinning, as follows in that verſe, I have loved ſtrangers, and after them will I go) the running headlong upon all the ſin, and danger, and miſery in the world, which we are wont to call a deſperate ſtate, becauſe it is the neglecting of the condition, upon which all the Goſpel promiſes (the only ground of hope) are made over to us; and to fortifie us againſt that, is the only deſign and project of this paper. I wiſh it may prove ſucceſsful to it.

All which being not only granted, but propoſed as neceſſary conſiderations to be taken along with this doctrine, it remains ſtill clear and uncontrolled, that God may, if he will, thus puniſh a hard heart with total and final ſubſtraction of Grace, and ſo with hardning irreverſibly, either here, (which I only ſay he may, but know not that he will) or at the hour of death, at which time there is no doubt but he will thus proceed with every impenitent. And though it be hard, if not impoſſible, to judge, when the former of theſe times is come, or before-hand to divine when the latter or former will come, either to another or to my ſelf, and ſo ſtill there is hope, to him that will make uſe of hope to preſent amendment, not to ſecure procraſtination, yet theſe three things may be reſolved on.

Sect. 24. 1. That there is or may be ſuch a time, as to nations and people, ſo to particular ſinners alſo. In the tenth generation the deluge came upon the old world, and in the tenth generation after that, the fire and brimſtone came upon Sodom, and nothing but Repentance could then have reprieved them, or put off their ruine; To that end 120. years warning was given to the former, and Noah deſigned a preacher of that Repentance; and to the latter the Chaldee reads, that God came down to ſee, whether they had made to ceaſe, or made an end (ſo paraphraſing עשו כלה) i.e. repented, Gen. 18. 21. and if not, I know, ſaith he, what I will do; Irreverſible deſtruction in that caſe. And our Saviours Parable of the Tree, that for ſo many years deceived the owners expectation, is to the ſame purpoſe, and the iſſue of it, Cut it down, why cumbreth it the ground? So in the 13. of Hoſ. verſe 13, &c. the words being rightly weighed and rendred do import: He, i. e. Ephraim, is a child that is not wiſe (as a fruit in the womb that provides not for it ſelf, that breaks not out of the womb) otherwiſe he would not ſtand ſo long in the place from whence children break forth (i. e. defer repentance ſo long, the only means to get him out of that encloſure of calamities.) 14. I would ranſome them from the power of the grave, I would redeem them from death; O death, I would be thy plague, O grave I would be thy deſtruction: (i. e. if they did repent) But now conſolation is hid from mine eyes (i. e. there is nothing that can comfort me, or appeaſe my wrath, as the phraſe is uſed, Iſa. 57. 6. Secondly, that every day ſpent in an unreformed ſtate, brings a man nearer to one of theſe periods of obduration, or exciſion irreverſible, as every of thoſe generations continuing unreformed, came nearer to that tenth and laſt generation. Thirdly, that every call of Gods being rejected, brings him yet nearer to the journeys end. He that being often reproved, hardneth his neck, ſhall ſuddenly be deſtroyed, and that without remedy. Fourthly, that an unreformed ſinner, if he do (on confidence of longer ſpace, and reſolution not to begin that ſo neceſſary a work of Repentance till the laſt, but in the mean to enjoy the pleaſures of ſin, till the days come, that he ſhall ſay, I have no pleaſure in them) continue ſo one minute longer, doth by ſuch preſumption terribly provoke God to bring that fatal puniſhment upon him, and ſo, if he will go on, may that next minute (for ought he knows, or any can inſure him) engulf himſelf in that irreverſible eſtate, out of which, when he is once in it, no eſcape or iſſue is to be expected.

And though after all this, one of Chriſts parables ſeem to allow as free a reception, and as fair an hire to the labourer that cometh lateſt into the vineyard, as to any other; yet this is in caſe he be not ſooner called, but come as ſoon as he is, not when the earlier call hath been oft rejected, on purpoſe to avoid the heat and burthen of the day; much leſs when 'tis therefore rejected, becauſe it is too early, and becauſe the going in later will ſerve the turn as well; for ſure God is not likely to be circumvented, and cheated, and mockt, by ſuch crafty merchants as theſe, nor to call ſuch at the eleventh hour, that would not come at the third, nor ſixth, nor ninth; nor to admit, or reward them that come in that manner, as they are likely to come (i.e. only with a deſire of heaven) when the doors are ſhut, when they are not called. To which purpoſe his dealing with the Iſraelites is remarkable; God commanded them at his bringing them out of Egypt to invade the Canaanites, and promiſed them ſtrength to overcome them, and poſſeſs the land, but they refuſed to go up; afterwards when he bid them not, they would needs go up, and then they miſcarried in the attempt: The application is eaſie, and terrible to the delayer, or refuſer; and the parable of the fooliſh Virgins ſeems to bring it home to our purpoſe, they come knocking, when the door is ſhut, and find no admiſſion, Matth. 25. 11. Sect. 25.

And beſide the determents that may be offered us on Gods part in this buſineſs, many other are ready at hand from conſideration of our ſelves: As, firſt, that though God do continue to call, yet we may be as likely to defer ſtill, as before we were, and to think that one other act of procraſtination may be as ſafe, as the many former have been. Secondly, that leiſure, will, or ſtrength, may then be wanting, and then far more probably than before, by how much a more chronical habit doth harden the heart, weaken, and ſtop the ear, and many the like; and ſo ſtill nothing is ſafe, but preſent inſtant returning. The Prophets ſpeech is remarkable to the confirmation and enforcing of this, Iſa. 55. 6. Seek the Lord while he may be found (it ſeems there is, as a time when God may be found עת מצא Pſalm 32. 6. ſo an end, a period of that time, and ſo a time when he may not be found, ὅτε ἐσφράγισαι ταμιεῖα, when the ſtore-houſes are ſealed up, ſaith Epiphan. Decreta damnatoria obſignantur, the decrees for condemnation are ſealed, Aben Ezra) call ye upon him while he is near. Let the wicked forſake, and return, &c. an actual forſaking and returning (ſorrow for loſs of Heaven, or apprehenſion of inſtant hell, will not ſerve the turn) and then comes the promiſe that God will have mercy, &c. And ſo Prov. 8. 17. Thoſe that ſeek me early ſhall find me, the promiſe is to the early ſeekers, and to no others; and ſo far of the promiſes. Sect. 26.

Then for any example in the word of God, on which to ground this hope, or make it prudent that a future Death-bed Repentance ſhould be depended on, I think there is but one that will be pretended, that of the thief upon the Croſs; concerning which it is obſervable, Sect. 27.

1. That it appears not of him, (nor have we any reaſon to charge it on him) that he ever procraſtinated or purpoſely poſted off his converſion, till this ſo late a date, and ſo he will not be matter of comfort to them that do.

2. That as far as we have any knowledge, he ſeems not ever to have heard of Chriſt, at leaſt to have been called or inſtructed by him, till he met him upon the Croſs, and conſequently he can be no precedent to any that hath lived an age, or a great part of it under the preaching of the Goſpel.

3. That for the thief to be converted then, and believe in Chriſt in that ſtate of greateſt humility upon the Croſs, (which ſo ſcandaliz'd the Jews, when by all other motives they were inclined to have believed on him) was a moſt notable illuſtrious eminent act of faith, and ought in any reaſon to be prefer'd before that which is ordinarily found among men.

4. That it was accompanied with as many effects of ſincere converſion, as that condition was capable of, confeſſion of Chriſt, and devout prayer to him for his mercy, or remembrance when he came to his Kingdom.

5. That it was not extorted by the fear of death, but proceeded from a ſight, and acknowledgment of the innocency, and power of Chriſt, even upon the Croſs, and this was an argument to himſelf and others, (and was it ſeems ſo acknowledged by Chriſt) of the ſincerity of his faith, and converſion to God, and that being ſuppoſed ſincere, will undoubtedly be accepted, be it never ſo late.

6. This was done by the thief in the midſt of all temptations to the contrary, the Croſs one great temptation, and ſuch as almoſt all the Diſciples were ſhaken with; and beſides, the other thief was his tempter to the contrary, railing on Chriſt, &c. Luk. 23. 39. and alſo the chief Prieſts, and Scribes, and Elders, mocked him, and they that paſſed by reviled him wagging their heads, Matth. 27. and ſo that new convert-Thief was a ſingular perſon, almoſt the only confeſſor in the company. Theſe particulars being obſerved will give us reaſon to acknowledge the difference great betwixt the example of the thief, and any that make uſe of that example to defer their repentance till the laſt, and will conſequently advertiſe us, that though it ſucceeded very well to him, it may ſucceed very ill to us.

For other examples it will, I believe, be very hard to produce any out of Scripture (and for allegations out of humane ſtory, or obſervation, it will not be pertinent to produce them, becauſe they bring not with them any evidence how they were accepted by God, as that of the thief did, This day thou ſhalt be with me in Paradiſe) and yet to be ſure to omit nothing, that may to any ſeem pertinent, we will ſuppoſe the converſion of Saint Paul to have ſomewhat in it, ſomething like that of the thief, for he was ſtrucken to the Earth, in the midſt of his threatnings and ſlaughters againſt the Church, and before he was recovered again, undoubtedly converted, and after lived to be a moſt gracious Apoſtle. To which example as far as can concern our caſe in hand, I anſwer, by propoſing theſe three conſiderations. Sect. 28.

Sect. 29. 1. Whether, ſuppoſing that Saul had died when he was thus ſtricken, (yea though it had been after the delivery of thoſe words, ver. 6. [he trembling and aſtoniſhed, ſaid, Lord what wilt thou have me to do?] conceiving no more to be meant by them than was by Saint Peter's auditours, when they ſaid, Men and Brethren what ſhall we do? to which he there anſwers, Repent, &c. whether I ſay) any man would affirm, that he had been ſaved (and yet ſure that trembling, and ſaying, amounted as far as ſorrow for ſin, without actual amendment) or at leaſt bring any evidence of Scripture to confirm any ſuch affirmation. If God's abſolute decree, that of Electing of his perſon be produced for ſuch argument, that will as much hold for the ſaving him, though he had died in the midſt of his blaſphemies, without any ſuch trembling; and then he might have been ſaved, without ever having been converted; which I have not yet heard to be aſſerted by any, unleſs the Antinomian doctrine may amount ſo far.

Sect. 30. 2. Whether the caſe of Saint Paul be not quite diſtant from that of a Chriſtian, delaying and deferring repentance to the laſt. For that is ſin againſt light, and ſo a wilful, deliberate crime, and by that God is provoked to withdraw, rather than invited to give more grace. But Saint Paul affirms of himſelf that he obtained mercy becauſe he did it ignorantly, in unbelief, 1 Tim. 1. 13. and therefore though ignorant Chriſtians, zealous in their erroneous way, may be allowed ſome of our charity, upon this precedent of Saint Paul's converſion, and it may be agreeable to analogy of faith, to hope that God will by an extraordinary way bring them to a ſight of their errours in time of life, or accept the Repentance for all ſins known and unknown, (ſo there were in them a preparation of mind to have depoſited their errours upon ſufficient light, and to have reformed their ſins conſequent to thoſe errours) yet that a bare ſorrow ſhall be accepted for wilful ſins, when it is on purpoſe deferred ſo long, till it cannot bring forth fruits worthy of Repentance, and ſo in effect can prove nothing but ſorrow, (no amendment being added to it actually; and whether the reſolution of amendment be ſincere, it is both to the party himſelf, and to others by ordinary means utterly un-evident, becauſe he is ſuppoſed to dye before any ſufficient trial of it) I conceive will not be thought concluded convincingly from that example.

Sect. 31. 3. Whether the enlarging of Sauls life and abundant labouring and ſuffering of his, after converſion, be not an intimation (very obſervable) that great ſinners, when they are converted, muſt do much more in Chriſtianity, (I mean exerciſe more acts of ſorrow and Repentance, whether by way of reſtitution to thoſe that are wronged, or of ſatisfaction to thoſe that were ſcandalized, or to expreſs the ſincerity of the change by way of ἐκδίκησις, 2 Cor. 7. 11. of revenge on himſelf) than would be neceſſary to the ſalvation of another: and if 'twere ſo of Saint Paul, whoſe former ſins were committed ignorantly, then how much more of wilful continuers in ſin, as he, that thus defers his Repentance, is ſuppoſed to be?

Sect. 32. The promiſes and examples from Scripture being conſidered, and found unconcluding: the fifth thing to be conſidered, is, whether he that thus depends on a death-bed Repentance, do it not becauſe that time will be more probable for him to repent in, than any other, and that though he repent not before that time, yet then it will be probable; which if he do, then muſt he think it either, 1. In his own power to repent without Grace, and that is Pelagianiſm; or 2. That Gods terrours, and the imminency of approaching dangers have that or a greater force in them, than ordinary Grace; which is quite contrary to the Doctrine of Father Abraham, Luke 16. 31. (If they hear not Moſes and the Prophets, neither will they be perſwaded though one roſe from the dead) and indeed to all Divinity, which aſſerts the principal or ſole cauſe of true ſaving Repentance, to be no outward impellent (for ſuch were an extorted, not voluntary, nor conſequently true Repentance) but the gift of ſanctifying Grace, meeting with an humble malleable heart (ſuppoſing that humility to be firſt wrought by Gods preventing Grace) in that ſence that 'tis ſaid, God gives grace to the humble; Or 3. That there is ſome aſſurance or probability that that ſpecial Grace ſhall not then be wanting; For which yet we have ſhewed there is no Aſſurance; and for the probabilities which may induce perſwaſion, though not aſſurance, let us now conſider,

Sect. 33. 1. Is it probable, that in this caſe God ſhould give more Grace than ever he gave before? Or,

2. That the ſame, or a leſs meaſure of Grace then, ſhould work that which before it wrought not? Or,

3. That that performance which would not have been accepted before, ſhould then be accepted?

Sect. 34. For the firſt, the rule of Scripture is, From him that hath not, that is, hath not made uſe of grace given, God will withdraw that which he had given, and Rev. 22. 11. He that is unjuſt let him be unjuſt ſtill, and he that is filthy let him be filthy ſtill; and this not only God permitting, but God deſerting, and ſometimes God delivering up, and poſſibly obdurating alſo.

Sect. 35. For the ſecond, 'tis certain that the longer a habit of impenitence in any ſin hath continued, the more obdurate the perſon is, eſpecially if it have been ſin againſt light, (as our caſe ſuppoſes) and though it be not ſimply impoſſible to God to melt ſuch, yet extreamly improbable it is, that they ſhall be melted without a far greater degree than that, by which before they were not melted. And though the ſickneſs it ſelf may be a means of ſome force to work good, and being added to that Grace, which without it prevailed not, may now poſſibly prevail, yet is this a great uncertainty. For 1. Some men are worſt under the Rod, Exod. 6. 9. They hearkned not for anguiſh of ſpirit and for cruel bondage, their anguiſh kept them from hearkning. This Hippocrates obſerves, de aqua, aere & locis, and from thence hath a pretty heatheniſh argument, that a diſeaſe among the Scythians which he ſpeaks of, was not θεῖόν τι, of Gods ſending, becauſe it fell not on poor men, on whom he conceived the Gods would inflict all their evil things becauſe of their murmuring and blaſpheming. 2. They that are affected by the Rod, do not all repent ſincerely, Hoſ. 7. 14. They have not cryed unto me with their hearts, when they howled on their beds; thus Ahab's humiliation, which the judgment produced, was we know no thorough Reformation, only a putting on ſackcloth, and going ſoftly, (not much of an higher pitch than what hath been related of an horſe, who by the help of a hot floor and ſome Traces was taught to dance to a tune) and to that perhaps belongs that of the Pſalmiſt, God's enemies ſhall be found lyars to him, ſubmit themſelves, as our other Tranſlation reads, but ſubmit feignedly, their love of God is but little improved, though there be an outward form of ſubmiſſion, extorted it ſeems even from haters; and ſo to this may belong that cenſure of St. Chryſoſtome, (l. 2. περὶ ἱερωσ.) which he brings as an argument why men ſhould be only perſwaded, not forced to reformation of any fault or error, ὁ τὸ ἀνάγκῃ τῆς κακίας ἀπέχομένῳ, ἀλλὰ τὸ προαιρέσει σεμνύντι τῷ θεῷ, becauſe God rewards not thoſe that upon neceſſity abſtain from evil, but only thoſe that voluntarily do it. And it is obſervable in the ancient Canons, that they that deferred their baptiſm till they thought they ſhould dye, the Clinici or bed-baptiſts, had an ill character ſet upon them, and if they recovered, though they were acknowledged Chriſtians, yet were excluded from any farther dignity in the Church, could never be admitted to orders, a mark of the Churches judgment of ſuch men. Nay, 3. that which is then done by any man, there is no certain judgment to be made, whether it be his will and intention, or no, whether it come from the man, or the diſeaſe. 'Tis a rule in Juſtinian that ſurdus & mutus teſtamenta non facit, there is ſmall heed due to a teſtament made by one that is brought ſo low: and ſure repentance is a very eaſie task, if he that is diſabled for all things elſe is ſtrong enough for that. 4. The great diverſions which the ſick bed preſents would be conſidered; 1. diſquieting, if not enraging or ſtupefying pains; 2. decay of ſpirits, and a conſequent numneſs and dulneſs; 3. the hurry of worldly buſineſs then to be compoſed and ſet in order; all which being put together will add extreamly to the improbability of any mans being wrought on, or melted at that time, and rather define that it is undoubtedly the unfitteſt and unlikelieſt ſeaſon to begin or perfect a work ſo great, ſo weighty, that before he could find no leiſure, even when time lay on his hands, to ſet about it; and yet farther, many diſeaſes there are, a Conſumption by name, wherein the more deſperately we are ſick, and the nearer our end, the leſs are we apt to believe we are ſo, and other ſharper diſeaſes, when they come to an height, deprive us of our wits, and hopes together, and by their indications to others, that they are mortal, diſable us utterly from preparing for that mortality.

For the third there is little hope of that, the condition which is now required under the Goſpel, being as indiſpenſably required of all that come to years and powers and means of knowledge, as ever the condition of the firſt Covenant was under that; And that condition is, Repent and believe the Goſpel; and Except you repent you ſhall all likewiſe periſh; now I hope, 'twill be no news to ſay, that repentance is more than ſorrow; if it be, then obſerve 2 Cor. 7. 10. and it will be convincing. Beſides, the example of Judas, that had this ſorrow before he hanged himſelf, and the example of Eſau's birth-right loſt, and the inſufficiency of ſorrow at laſt to get Iſaac to repent, or reverſe the bleſſing, which God had decreed from him to Jacob, will argue that bare ſorrow will not ſerve the turn to regain the ſpiritual inheritance. Beſides this ſorrow, the moſt that that ſtate is capable of, is a reſolution of amendment, (as for actual amendment, or the evidencing of that reſolution by actions, this ſtate is ſuppoſed uncapable of that. Sect. 36.

Now concerning a death-bed reſolution of amendment theſe eight things may be obſerved, 1. That it is at that time moſt improper and out of ſeaſon, very unreaſonable that the end of the life ſhould be the firſt minute of living well; It is an old rule in Heſiod, that 'tis too late to ſow ἠελιοῦ τροπαῖς, for then the corn ſhould be growing up; the death-bed is a ſpecial ſeaſon for the exerciſe and evidence of many Chriſtian vertues, and conſequently very improper for a ſeeds-time, or plantation. Sect. 37.

2. That it is a ridiculous thing, for a man to reſolve to live well upon no other conſideration, but becauſe the time is come when he thinks he ſhall dye. The very foundation of the reſolution being contrary to the performance of it, the condition of all his good life, a preſumption that he ſhall not live. And not only ridiculous, but null; 'twill be but an act of reaſon and juſtice to himſelf, to change the reſolution when the motives are changed, and a contrary imprudence and unkindneſs to adhere to the concluſion, when the premiſſes are confuted, and to do that which he reſolved, when that upon which the reſolution was made, (ſelf-love, and carnal advantages, and intereſts) ſhall as much oblige him to make contrary reſolutions; the invitations of the fleſh being as perſwaſive in health, as the terrors of hell affrighting in ſickneſs, the preſent pleaſure now as ſtrong an argument as was then the approaching pain, eſpecially when the pleaſure hath the advantage of being repreſented alone, without the rival; which was the only means by which the other came ever to prevail. From ſuch grounds of diſcourſe as this, what can be expected of this ſick reſolver, but that he reſume his ſins with his health, leave his new vows in that bed, where firſt he took them up, diſcharge his fears, and his good motions, his Phyſician and Confeſſor together.

3. That a deſire of dying well, of having Heaven in another world, may then eaſily be miſtaken for that reſolution.

4. That as a wearineſs of pains may be taken for a wearineſs of this world, ſo that wearineſs may be taken for mortification, and that mortification for reſolution of amendment.

5. That the no ſtrength then to ſin, may eaſily paſs for this reſolved amendment; or however, reſolution to amend at a time when I have no ſtrength to ſin, may laſt no longer than that impotence laſteth.

6. That although this reſolution, if it be ſincere, (and ſuch as God ſees would bring forth fruits of repentance, if time were given) ſhall certainly be * accepted by God, (according to that of Wiſd. 4. 7. although the righteous be prevented with death, yet ſhall he be at reſt) yet this reſolution while it is no more than ſo, firſt may be miſtaken and thought ſincere, when it is not, (there was little difference to any mans ſight, betwixt the ſeed that ſprung up without root, and that which was ſowed in good ground, till the ſhining of the Sun made the diſcrimination) and that errour not only others, but our ſelves may be ſubject to; we commit many things in time of temptation, which in abſence of the temptation we reſolved againſt, and really believed that reſolution had been ſincere; and ſo we omit in like manner: and the reaſon is, becauſe we reſolved it only abſolutely, but foreſaw not the price to be laid down for it, either did not diſcern, or elſe did not reſolve on the pains or difficulties that it would coſt us to perform it. He that is ſick, and is aſſured that ſuch a potion will cure him, reſolves firmly he will take it, and is perhaps at that time perſwaded that this reſolution is ſincere, and yet when the potion comes, and proves extreme offenſive to the ſtate, he will rather dye than ſwallow it; This argues the reſolution either not largely enough extended, or not deeply deeply enough radicated; he had only digeſted the potion, as phyſick, but not as loathſome, as preſcribed for his good, but foreſaw not then (or after is not couragious enough to overcome) the bitterneſs of it.

Sect. 38. And though I ſhall not affirm or conceive that every reſolution is unſincere which ever actually failes, or poſſibly might fail in time of temptation (becauſe thoſe failings my be but infirmities, and thoſe are reconcileable with ſincerity, or but ſingle acts of ſin, and thoſe if preſently retracted again by Repentance, and not continued, or perſevered in impenitently, are reconcileable alſo) yet ſtill ſure there is ſuch a thing as unſincere reſolution, and of the many kinds of that I ſhall name a few εἰς δεῖξιν. 1. The reſolution that doth not (or would not on ſuppoſition of tryal) hold out againſt the πειρασμοὶ ἀνθρώπινοι, the ordinary humane temptations, ſuch as are proportioned to the ſtrength which we have, or which, if we uſe the means preſcribed, we ſhall be ſure to receive. 2. The reſolution that is not deeply rooted in an honeſt heart (as that is expreſt firſt by the good, then by the moſt Hoſpitable ſoyl, contrary both to the thorny and ſtony ground, the one when the cares of the world are unweeded, unmortified, the other when the hard heart is unſoftned, unhumbled.) 3 The reſolution that doth not forecaſt the means, as well as the end, the difficulties and temptations, as well as the eaſier and more amiable part of the task: the man in the parable that ſets on building without conſidering the charge, without laying or deſigning the means whereby to go through with it, the Herod that rejoyced in John Baptiſts light, i. e. ſaith St. Auguſtine, beheld with joy the luſtre of his doctrine, heard him gladly, and in obedience to him, did many things, but fell off, when he lookt upon himſelf, and the pleaſant ſins, the brothers wife, that in obedience to him he was to part with; the reſolution that doth not extend to the undertaking the condition, the unpleaſanter part of the work, but only lays hold on the prize, or the duty abſtracted from the condition, which is the pleaſanter, the Balaams wiſh for the righteous mans death, without any real change, productive of righteous life, or the young Auguſtines wiſh, that would be chaſte, but would not yet part with the pleaſures of incontinence, or the general humour of the world, to like heaven as the place of bliß, and piety as the way to Heaven, but not to mortifie one luſt for the compaſſing of either. 4. The reſolution that proves weak, and falling, not for want of ſtrength, but of courage, not for want of the gift of grace on Gods part, but of our making uſe of this grace when 'tis given, or of thoſe means to which 'tis promiſed, (ſuch are that ſpiritual ἐλέπολις of prayer, humility, ardent importunate humble requeſts to Heaven.) 5. The reſolution that is not univerſal againſt all both ſins, and temptations to thoſe ſins, and thoſe not only ſuch as now he finds inclinations to in time of diſeaſe, but alſo all other that in time of health may be moſt likely to aſſault and to win him; And in a word, the reſolution which God, that ſees unerringly, ſees to be but temporary, or partial, or hypocritical, in any, or all theſe or any other reſpects; And then ſuch a reſolution as theſe (whatever it appear to us who are not ſuch infallible judges of our ſelves, but whoſe hearts are deceitful above all things) cannot have any rational, or Chriſtian ground of hope (meerly by the good hap of being taken away before tryal, i. e. in effect, before this hypocriſie was diſcovered) to be accepted and rewarded by God; or if it have, it muſt not be by the ſecond Covenant, under which nothing but ſincerity hath that promiſe.

Sect. 39. Secondly, ſuppoſing this reſolution to be ſincere, and ſo ſure to be accepted by God, yet there is no evidence to us that it is ſincere, or will be thus accepted, but by worthy fruits of Repentance, by enemies and temptations wreſtled with, and overcome; from whence though it follow not, that God will not accept of that reſolution, (becauſe he may ſee it ſincere without thoſe trials, which I conceive is the ground upon which the Schools affirm that a ſtrong contrition may on the death-bed be accepted without reſtitution, &c. i. e. that in him, who hath no time and ability for any thing but contrition, God may ſee that ſincerity of change, which he will accept, becauſe he ſees it would bring forth fruit if it were allowed time) yet we our ſelves in this caſe cannot know it, and conſequently the death-bed Repentance, if in any particular it prove to be ſuch as ſhall avail in another world, yet cannot afford the dying man any comfort or rational aſſurance in this, nor conſequently his friends any thing but the judgment of charity, which hopeth all things, for which there is no evidence to the contrary.

Sect. 40. 7. Let it be conſidered whether any example can be brought in Scripture or ſtory, of any that wilfully and adviſedly deferr'd preſent repentance, and rely'd and depended on late death-bed Repentance, to whom it ſucceeded well. I profeſs my ſelf to have heard terrible ones to the contrary, but as yet none in favour of ſuch deferrers. Methinks the mention of Felix in the Acts 24. 25. hath ſome efficacy in it. He when (after ſome preaching of Chriſt, v. 22. and knowledge of that way) he heard St. Paul reaſoning of righteouſneß and continence (things in which it appeareth by the Text and by ſtory, by Tacitus and Joſephus, that Felix was much failing) did, as 'tis added, tremble and anſwer, Go thy way for this time, when I have a convenient ſeaſon I will call for thee. This man upon advice and deliberation, through the prevalency of his ſins which he loved dearly, defers his repentance till a convenienter ſeaſon; And all that I obſerve is, that we never read of any ſuch ſeaſon that he made uſe of to this purpoſe.

Sect. 41. 8. Let it be conſidered, whether when the laſt hand of God comes on any man, (I mean that diſeaſe that cuts him off ſpeedily) if that man have remained impenitent till then, it be not a very ominous and inauſpicious ſign, that that man hath fill'd up the meaſure of his iniquities, and now the voice be peculiarly gone out againſt him, as againſt the Tree (even now mentioned) that had fruſtrated Gods continual expectation, [Cut it down, why cumbreth it the ground?] If on the coming of a diſeaſe, (which like the laying the axe to the root of the Tree is oft-times an hazning call to repentance) this uſe be ſuddenly made of it, and Gods long ſuffering do interpoſe in the counter-voice, Nay but ſpare it one year longer, and if it bear fruit, well, but if not, then cut it down, and that voice be hearkned to, that is, if that diſeaſe do not prove the laſt, but upon reſolutions of new living, the life be enlarged, and the reſolutions performed; then 'tis very well; But if not, if it be (without more time of repentance) cut down; if Gods long-ſuffering, and patience, which was on purpoſe to bring to repentance, have been made uſe of (as it was ſaid of Gods long-ſuffering to Pharaoh) as a means to harden his heart, have we not reaſon to fear, that Gods coming to ſtrike, is an argument of a ſevere purpoſe againſt that man?

man? or have we any reaſon to hope that when his patience is at an end, his mercy and gifts of effectual grace is not at an end alſo? that which the Apoſtle ſaith, Heb. 10. 26, 27, 29, 31. is much to this purpoſe. And I know not what will be called falling into the hands of the living God, if this be not, viz. to continue in ſin impenitently till we fall into Gods attaching apprehending hands, of which the doom is there moſt ſad: It is a fearful thing ſo to fall.

Having proceeded thus far in defining (as warily and as ſafely as I could, by the conduct of Gods Word and Spirit) one thing may perhaps be neceſſary to be added, though not by way of anſwer to the poſſible exceptions and objections of diſputers, becauſe the doing of that, I find, would lead into ſome more nice and leſs profitable ſpeculations, and contribute little to the direction of practice, the only aim of this paper, (and therefore what was thus prepared ſhall not here be inſerted) yet by way of neceſſary ſatisfaction to a practical queſtion. And the queſtion is this, In caſe I be a Miniſter, call'd to give comfort to ſuch an one, viz. an habitual cuſtomary ſinner, which were thus ſurpriſed by the hand of God, any mortal diſeaſe or wound, and were thus caſt down with extreme horrour of mind, and from thence profeſſeth himſelf reſolved that if God ſhall ſpare him, he will certainly lead a new life, whether I would not give that man comfort in that caſe, but ſuffer him to be ſwallowed up with deſperation. Sect. 42.

To this I anſwer, 1. by ſetting before our eyes an example of God himſelf in a caſe not very diſtant from this propoſed, which may be matter of direction to any who ſhall be called to for comfort in this kind, Judg. 10. 6. The children of Iſrael did evil again in the ſight of the Lord, and ſerved Baalim and Aſhtaroth, &c. and forſook the Lord and ſerved not him, v. 6. upon this Gods anger was hot againſt Iſrael, and he brought a double diſtreſs upon them, v. 7, 8, 9. and Iſrael was ſore diſtreſſed. And then v. 10. the children of Iſrael cryed unto the Lord, ſaying, We have ſinned againſt thee, both becauſe we have forſaken God and alſo worſhip'd Baalim. Here is that confeſſion and ſenſe of the provocations, which our caſe ſuppoſes, and that in time of the ſore diſtreſs, and ſo in that parallel alſo. And then Gods return to them is remarkable, 1. An expoſtulation continued for three verſes, to aggravate their crime and ingratitude, and the cloſe an abſolute refuſal, a denying preſent pardon to theſe confitents, wherefore I will deliver you no more. And then farther yet, a bitter reproach and ſarcaſm, v. 14. Go and cry unto the Gods which ye have choſen, let them deliver you in the time of your Tribulation. And then the ſtory proceeds to tell us the good uſe and effects that this ſeverity wrought upon them. And the children of Iſrael ſaid unto the Lord, We have ſinned, do thou unto us what ſoever ſeemeth good unto thee, deliver us only we pray thee this day, v. 15. And they put away the ſtrange Gods from among them and ſerved the Lord, v. 16. their penitence is approved to God by their patience, and ſubmiſſion, and importunity, by preſent reformation, and contrary acts of piety; and then it follows, his ſoul was grieved for the miſery of Iſrael, i. e. God ceaſed to afflict them; and on the other ſide proſpered them to victory in the next Chapter. And then this dealing of Gods being exemplary to us, as far as the caſes ſhall appear parallel, may paſs for a general or firſt anſwer. But then ſecondly, and more diſtinctly to the queſtion, I anſwer, that in this caſe the courſe I would preſcribe to others, or obſerve my ſelf, is this, according to this copy premiſed, not preſently to make haſt to apply comfort to that man (meaning by comfort words of pardon, or promiſe, or aſſurance, that his ſins, in this ſtate, ſhall certainly be forgiven) but to diſpenſe my comfort diſcreetly, and ſo that I may lay a foundation on which he may more ſafely build, and I more infallibly aſcertain comfort to him; I mean by preparing him to a right capacity of it, by encreaſing yet farther in his heart, and rooting as deep as I can the mourning (which if ſincere, hath the promiſe of comfort, Mat. 5.) the ſorrow for ſin, the humiliation and indignation at himſelf, the vehement deſire, the zeal, the revenge, the all manner of effects of Godly ſorrow, and indeed by doing my utmoſt in perfecting this ſo neceſſary work in him; which if by the help of God it be done, and thoſe graces deeply rooted, (through a conſideration not only of the inſtant danger, but deteſtable uglineſs of ſin, the provocation offered to a moſt gracious Father, and moſt merciful Redeemer, and ſanctifying ſpirit, together with all the other humbling matter from the particular ſins, and aggravating circumſtances of them) it will then be that Godly ſorrow which the Apoſtle ſpeaks of, and that will (if God afford ſpace) bring forth that Repentance, which conſiſts in a ſincere change and Reformation, (called by the ſame Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 7. 10. μετάνοια ἀμεταμέλητος, or as ſome manuſcripts read, ἀμεταγόητος, i. e. as I conceive, a Repentance, a change, or amendment, which will not be retracted again, a laſting or durable Reformation) and then there is no doubt, but to him which is in this eſtate, mercy infallibly belongs; And to him I ſhall then haſten to aſcertain it. And yet of this mercy if I through ſome errour or neglect of mine, ſhould not give him (nor he himſelf through the greatneſs of his ſorrow, the floud of tears in his eyes, otherwiſe find) any comfortable aſſurance, yet is he by Gods immoveable promiſe ſure (certitudine objecti, though not ſubjecti) to be partaker, and all that he loſes, by not being aſſured of it here by me, or by his own ſpirit, is the preſent comfort, and joy of ſome few minutes, which will ſoon be repaired, and made up to him at death, by Gods wiping off all tears from his eyes, the gracious revelation of his Saviour judge unto him, with a Come thou bleſſed of my Father, thou haſt cordially mourned and converted, and thou ſhalt be comforted. Whereas if I ſhould go about too haſtily and prepoſterouſly to grant him any ſuch comfortable aſſurance that he were already accepted (I mean not now that he ſhould be accepted, if his change be ſincere, or his ſorrow ſuch as would bring forth that change, for that conditional comfort I have all this while allowed him, but poſitive aſſurance for the preſent upon a view of ſuch his ſorrow) I might then poſſibly raiſe him up too ſoon, before the work were done, the plant rooted deep enough, (and that were utterly to ruine him; by giving him his good things, his comfort here, to deprive him of it eternally) or at the beſt refreſh him a little here before-hand, but not at all advantage him toward another life; which loſs being ſo unmercifully great, and acquiſition ſo unconſiderably ſmall, it were great uncharitableneſs to run that hazard, and ſo ſtill the beſt way muſt be by propoſal of conditional, but not of abſolute comfort, to humble him unto the duſt, if ſo be there may be hope, to ſet him this only task of working out his ſalvation with fear and trembling, laying hold on Gods mercy in Chriſt, his general but conditional mercy for all penitent purifying ſinners, (for confeſſours, and forſakers, and none elſe) and ſo labouring for that ſorrow, that purity, that confeſſion, Sect. 43.

contrition, and forſaking; and then, if he periſh, he periſh, no way is imaginable to do good upon him, if this do not.

Sect. 44. And if it be farther demanded, whether in this caſe ſuppoſed, I would upon his demand deny him Abſolution? I anſwer, that Abſolution may ſignifie two things. 1. The abſolution of the Church, as it is the Churches pardoning him all offences done againſt her, quantum in ipsâ eſt, viz. the ſcandal of his ſins, &c. and this abſolution the Church (and I, if ſhe have intruſted to me that power) ought to grant him in articulo mortis, when the binding him, or retaining his ſins is not probable to do him any further good, by way of παιδεία, or diſcipline; in like manner, as every ſingle perſon offended, or injured by him, is by charity obliged upon his demand (though he be not confident that he is ſincerely contrite) to grant him his free forgiveneſs, and the denying of this being thus demanded, were hurtful not to the dying man, but to him that were ſo uncharitable as to deny it; and the giving it, an obligation of charity both to him and to my ſelf: But for the ſecond thing ſignified by abſolution, viz. the pronouncing him abſolv'd in heaven, all that I am obliged to by duty or in prudence, is then to do it, when by examination of his ſorrow and reſolutions, I am inwardly perſwaded that his repentance is a well grounded and radicated repentance; and in that as I would not perſwade any man to be over eaſie, or popular, (that humour of the Emperour now adays ſtoln into the Confeſſor, neminem triſtem dimittere) becauſe of the poſſible hurt, and unproportionable gain of it; ſo if any man ſhould be over auſtere and difficult, only out of deſire to make the penitent yet more penitent, (and not to bruiſe the broken reed, to tyrannize over his wounded ſoul) to make Heaven more ſurely his, by his being not yet ſure of Heaven; this will be at the worſt but an errour of charity, which will never be imputed to the Confeſſor, much leſs to the penitent, it being acknowledged that the Miniſters abſolution doth not avail, niſi clave non errante, and conſequently that his denying abſolution (clave errante, ſtill) will never do any hurt; the errour of his key in ſhutting or retaining being in reaſon no more mortiferous, than the like errour in remitting is ſalvifical.

Sect. 45. Agreeable to this deciſion you ſhall find the practice of the Church anciently, when Eccleſiaſtical diſcipline was in its vigor. In ſuch or ſuch caſes they would not afford the dying man abſolution, becauſe they had no ground of aſſurance, that the ſtate of the perſon was capable of it, and yet would they make no ſcruple to allow him place of comfort and hope, that God might poſſibly abſolve him, God having other ways of diſcerning the ſincerity of Repentance, (viz. by ſeeing of the heart, or by conditionate preſcience) which they had not; and ſo much for the ſatisfying of the queſtion.

Sect. 46. All that I have now to add to this theme is only this, (which will bring the whole diſcourſe home to the particularity of the preſent eſtate of this Kingdom, and ſo give you the full end of the writing of this diſcourſe) that by this long debate, and the evidence of the truth aſſerted, concerning the ſouls of particular men, the condition of this poor calamitous Kingdom is now diſſected alſo. We have enjoyed a long day of Gods merciful and gracious calls to Repentance, and many ſolemn admonitions at the door as it were of every Church, at the beginning of our daily ſervice [To day if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts] and it is moſt ſadly evident by our preſent puniſhments, that we have not heard the voice in that day of peace and proſperity, but hardned the heart; The judgments being now fallen moſt formidably on the Land, and no part of it now remaining which hath not had its ſympathy in this ſhaking, falling fit, ſome ſorrow, and humiliation, and withal ſome acts perhaps of confeſſion have been extorted from us; Were there to theſe an addition of that other part of Repentance, that of a ſincere change and thorough reformation, no doubt there would be mercy; God would return upon our returning; Nay were the reſolutions of amendment, (which perhaps may be obſerved in many) ſincere reſolutions, ſuch as that all-ſeeing eye doth diſcern, would hold out againſt all the temptations of peace again, there were yet hope that for that ſincere change of thoſe many, the judgment (of the παρωλεθρία at leaſt, that final total exciſion, that ſeems to be threatned) might be reverſt, (according to the purport of the treaty that was about Sodom, betwixt God and Abraham.) But by the continuance and no kind of relaxation of God's heavy hand, it is as clear, as if Euclid had demonſtrated it, that yet that work is not done, that the repentance of the Land is but hypocritical, ſuch as the preſent weight of the judgments hath extorted from us, not ſuch as would continue upon their removal, like the ſtrange quick ſcent that is reported of the wild boy of Liege, to have been acquir'd by a thin Foreſt-diet, and to have been loſt again aſſoon as he came to full feeding, (perhaps only a ſorrow for the ſmart we are under) and this is ſuch a repentance as would not be for the honour of God to reward with ſuch a donative; The only courſe that a whole Synod and aſſembly of Angels could upon conſultation adviſe us to, and promiſe it proſperous for the averting of ruin from the Land, is ſo to improve our ſorrow above the occaſion of it (the afflictions that are upon us) as that it may be a ſorrow for ſin, purely for ſin (for though judgments may be the monitor to put us in mind of thoſe ſins, and ſo the occaſion of that ſorrow, yet nothing but ſin may be allowed the cauſe of that ſorrow, or if it be, as ſoon as ever that be removed, the ſorrow will be ſuperſeded alſo) and then that ſorrow bring forth ſuch a change of mind as would prove immutable upon Gods allowing us a time of reſpite, bring forth fruits of repentance worthy of ſuch reprieval. When the whole heart of this Kingdom, or of that part of it that ſtill cleaves to the houſe of David is thus ſmitten, and really affected by God's rod, ſo that he to whoſe eyes all things are naked, γυμνὰ, as when the skin is pull'd off, and τετραχηλισμένα, Heb. 4. 13. (as the entrails of a ſacrifice cut down the back, which the Prieſt doth μωμοσκοπεῖν, view it cenſoriouſly, and ἐξετάζειν εἰ ἔντελὲς, examine ſtrictly, whether it be perfect, whether there be any blemiſh in it or no) may pronounce it ἄμωμον, a blemiſhleſs repentance, a ſincere hearty change, then will there be a place for hope, aſſured hope, then may the Prieſt intercede with confidence, Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach; and the hearer of prayers will be obliged by that his Title to anſwer that importunity. But till this Rod of the Lord be thus Heard, all hope in God for mercy to the Land, or for victory, (though to the juſteſt cauſe that ever man eſpouſed) will be little better than Preſumption.

OF FRATERNAL ADMONITION, OR CORREPTION.

THAT the journey to heaven, through obedience to bliß, is not only a more rational, but a more grateful travel, than that error of our way that seduces us to destruction, and first torments us in the length and baseneß of the voyage, before it pours out the full vials of bitterneß at the journeys end, is a mystery not so sufficiently discern'd by the heathen world, till Christ having assured his Disciples not only of the lightneß, but * graciousneß, profitableneß, sweetneß, of his yoke and burden, when 'tis once taken up (the only difficult rough part of it being that of taking it on us, the laying down our former trades of sin, taking leave of our contrary habits, and preferring a new course of Christs chusing, before our old familiars) had vouchsafed to reveal it to us. That revelation of his, without any other inducement, must, unless we utterly disclaim his Disciple-ship, be matter and ground of full conviction to us; yet that our Faith, which is usually very infirm and crazie, may, as Parisiensis, have a staff or crutch to sustain it, an auxiliary of humane reason and observation, which may bear witness unto Christ, this one Aphorism may deserve to be considered by us, That there are few vices (the most dangerous and unchristian) but are placed ἐν μεθορίῳ, in the confines of somewhat, which is very good and pretious, and consequently that the change or migration from the folly and disobedience of the world to the obedience and wisdom of the just, is not so vast, and so astonishing as the worldling at the distance apprehends. 'Tis many times but the transplanting of the affection on another object, and then in that case let the affection retain the same (nay improve into a greater) intension and vehemence, and it shall have a more abundant approbation and reward from God and Conscience, than ever it could hope for from the passionate world and flesh: The same zeal of a blasphemous and persecuting Saul that haled men to prison for believing on Christ, being but directed from a mistaken to a true, from an impious to a Christian object, will lay another violence on mens souls, and drive whole sholes, whole nations before him to the Faith of Christ, which he once persecuted, and allow the Apostle more abundant, passionate, sensitive joy in seeing the work of the Lord thus prosper in his hands, than that kicking against the goads or thorns (as Christ calls it) could ever have yielded him. At another time perhaps the change is not so great, nor the chasm so wide, but a meer abating or heightning the degree of the affection, subduing it (if it were excessive) to a temper, or infusing a little more heat into it, if it were too cold, and the object may remain the same, and the inordinate or Lethargick sinner become an approved Saint of Christ, by no greater change, than that of a gradual alteration.

* ζυγὸς χρηστὸς, as Κύριος χρηστὸς, rendred by us, that the Lord is gracious.

This hath been all premised to demonstrate Christ to be, what he is prophetically entitled, the desire of all nations, that confluence of all that is desirable even by those that never heard of him, to shew how possible it is through Gods mercy, to satisfie our selves and God together, to make our own most irregular delights (as Satan himself is sometimes fain to do) to minister unto Christ; now there is not a sin that hath more of our flesh poured out upon it, more of our wits, more of our licentious passions, than that of judging and censuring other men, one of the richest voluptuousnesses and sensualities of our life, a kind of savage rejoycing in the shame (as unhumane as in the blood) of others, and in order to that, the setting up a perpetual inquisition upon our brethrens actions, hunting for faults and infirmities in other men, as for our royallest game and prey, our triumphs, and our delights, and all our conversation (which should bring us in those Christian advantages, that we subsist on, all the rest of our lives) laid out intirely on this one commodity, the news that Pasquin or Marforius hath furnisht us with that morning, I mean the hearing or reporting the shame of absent brethren. Sect. 2.

Now that this viperous flesh of ours, that sets all the world on fire, being it self first begotten of that burning serpent, set on fire by hell, might like the vipers flesh, or the image of that poysonous serpent, it self prove medicinable, cordial, and useful to other more Christian purposes, of inflaming our chilly-frozen hearts, and infusing some spiritual gracious warmth or zeal into us, there will need no long preparation; Let but Charity design what passion is wont to forge, let but Christ supplant Satan for a while, and get into his place, and the same perspective that we use to observe our neighbours faults, and to convey them to others (to whom they become not a favour, but a temptation) may be used still as diligently and industriously, only with this difference, to communicate them to him who is Sect. 3.

alone concerned in them. And that this eaſie, happy Metamorphoſis may be thus wrought in the world, κατηγορία τῶν ἀδελφῶν, (that is in Scripture ſuppoſed to be Satans incloſure) accuſing of our Brethren or fellow Chriſtians, turn'd into fraternal correption or admonition, as it is the wiſh of every good man, ſo would it be the ἀγαλλίασις ἀγγέλων, the joy and exultation of the Angels in Heaven, and may therefore well be allowed the ſubject and deſign of a brief diſcourſe; which will be ordered moſt to the Readers advantage, if it proceed by theſe few degrees or ſtages, Sect. 4. And firſt, tell you what fraternal correption is, and how it comes to be a duty, Secondly, What are the benefits and advantages of it. Thirdly, what be the main prejudices and objections which men have conceived againſt the practice of it, together with the ſolution of them, that ſo there may be no excuſe left to them that will neglect it.

Sect. 5. For the firſt, 'twill not be amiſs to premiſe that there is a double correption or admonition; the former, paternal or authoritative; the latter, fraternal or charitative: The former is to be lookt on as an office of ſingular truſt referr'd by nature to the Parents, as a peculiar duty of theirs, required of neceſſity, to make that being, which under God they have beſtowed on their children, to become a benefit or advantage to them; it being for them who are engaged, and go on un-reformed in any ſin, far better, morally, and more eligible, that they never had been born; and by way of Phyſick to help and aſſiſt nature, by way of ſupplement when there is need, or in majorem cautelam, becauſe 'tis poſſible there may be need of it, when actually there is not. This is again by the Laws of Nature, of Nations, and of Chriſt referred to the Governours of Church and State, who are the Parents alſo in a political notion, and owe this due of legal and ſeaſonable correption of the ſons of the Civil or Eccleſiaſtical weal, as much as they do any exerciſe of commutative juſtice, as men, or (as parents again) of diligence and vigilance over them for their preſervation. But this is ἑτέρας σκέψεως, the ſubject of * another diſcourſe.

* Of binding and Looſing.

Sect. 6. Only by the way 'twill be worth the marking, that the authority and weight which is to be acknowledged in the paternal, over and above that which belongs to the fraternal correption, will, if it be obſerved, give us a ground of reconciling the three correptions, or admonitions mentioned by Chriſt, Matth. 18. with the firſt and ſecond, Tit. 3. 10. after the performance of which, in both places, they are to be proceeded againſt as obſtinate. For in the place of St. Matthew, the direction being given to a private man, (under the title of a Brother) that in caſe of treſpaſs he ſhall go firſt and reprove the offender privately; then privately again, though in a more publick manner [take two, farther, two or three with him;] and at laſt make it a publick matter before the Church, (which in what notion ſoever, will not exclude, but contain the Rulers of it:) and in the Epiſtle to Titus, the perſon to whom the direction is given, being now changed, no private perſon but Titus the Biſhop, and he alſo ſuppoſed to have a Presbytery aſſiſtant to him: The ſecond admonition being performed by ſuch an one, is proportionable to the third of the private man (or his complaint unto the Church, and the Churches backing his, with her admonition) and the ſtanding out againſt that ſecond, in thoſe more ſolemn hands, becomes as cenſurable a contumacy, as the not hearing the Church in the third and laſt reſort in the Evangeliſt.

Sect. 7. And ſo in like manner, 2 Cor. 13. 2. when St. Paul, that was no private man, but an authoritative Apoſtle, doth admoniſh them τὸ δεύτερον, a ſecond time, (and [in the mouth of two or three, &c.] which is the character of the ſecond admonition, Mat. 18. 16.) it follows, that they are to expect no third warning, but when he comes he will not ſpare, he will proceed to cenſure againſt them.

Sect. 8. The concluſion from whence will be only this, That though the Chriſtian Law lay a more weighty cenſure on thoſe that reject or diſobey the Father of the Church, in his paternal, authoritative correptions, yet the ſame Law hath a ſeverity of denunciations alſo againſt thoſe, that do not make a Chriſtian uſe of the fraternal; and therefore perhaps it is, that as Excommunication, or expulſion from the Church is the puniſhment of the former ſort of refractory ones, where there is an Eccleſiaſtick conſeſſus to inflict it, ſo where there is not that ſetled courſe of ſtrict diſcipline, through any defect or diſorder in a Church, the μὴ συναναμίγνυσθαι, the abſtaining from familiarity or near converſe, may be the Apoſtles counſel, not only to ſignifie our diſlike of thoſe whom our exhortations found ſo obſtinate, and to ſhew that we will deny our ſelves thoſe lawful joys of friendſhip, when they prove ſcandalous to others, either by encouraging them in their ſins, with whom we converſe, or inviting thoſe beholders to the like, who will be apt to conceive we do not diſlike them, but moreover to declare our acknowledgment of that great truth, that the main, almoſt ſole uſe of Friendſhip is the advantage of admoniſhing and amending one another; which when it begins to ceaſe, to be obſtructed, or to grow deſperate, Friendſhip is but an empty, formal, juiceleſs thing, fit enough to be laid aſide, being become ſo perfectly unprofitable.

Sect. 9. For this Charitative fraternal correption then, which is not any mans peculiar Province or incloſure, but the engagement and duty of every brother, or common Chriſtian, it is the ſame thing (though belonging to us in another capacity (that the firſt admonition both Matt. 18. and Tit. 3. was, and therefore will properly be expreſt by thoſe two common words there uſed of ἔλεγξις and νουθεσία, (which by comparing of Matt. 18. and Tit. 3. appear to be all one) the firſt ſignifying * the telling the brother the clear and undiſguiſed truth, and ‖ bringing him to the ſenſe of the fault, and making him aſhamed of it; the ſecond, a rectifying his judgment, putting him in mind of ſomewhat which was not before obſerv'd by him, and ſo * exhortation and counſel, ‖ reproofs and chiding, all deſign'd to that one end, the reforming ſomewhat which is amiſs, the not ſuffering ſin upon the Brother.

* ἐλέγχω, ἁπλῶς ἀληθὲς φανερόω, Phav. ‖ ἔλεγχος ἐπ' αἰσχύνῃ τίθεται. Ibid.

* νουθετῶ, παραινῶ, συμβουλεύω. Phav. ‖ νουθέτησις λόγος ἐπιπληκτικὸς ἕνεκα ἀποβολῆς ἁμαρτίας. Ib.

Of this (which is the adequate ſubject of our preſent diſcourſe) there be ſeveral degrees apportioned to the ſeveral occaſions or wants in the Brother, and preparative and previous one unto the reſt.

Sect. 10. 1. That of inſtructing one another, teaching the fellow Chriſtian whatſoever I know him ignorant of, on the which the purity and welfare of his ſoul doth depend, not the communicating to him all the

the secrets of my profession. or again all the knowledge Theological acquired by any, much less labouring to infuse into all others, all the opinions and persuasions I have imbibed, (which how true soever we conceive them to be, we are not to believe them all necessary, or profitable to all others) but particularly that practical knowledge which may tend to the preventing of sin, resisting temptations, (those especially to which I discern him most subject) mortifying of lusts, regulating of passions, subduing the Kingdom of Satan, and erecting the gracious Kingdom of Christ in the brothers heart. This is called, Coloss. 3. 16. διδάσκοντες καὶ νουθετοῦντες ἑαυτοὺς, teaching and instructing one another, and that as the means whereby the Word of Christ may richly, abundantly inhabit among us. The frivolous, impertinent, empty conversation of the world, but especially the detracting, noisome, wanton discourse, that goes for our only entertainment, or divertisement, is the inhabiting of Satan among us, either as Belzebub, a god of flies, or as a διάβολος, Calumniator, or as an ἀπολλύων, a destroyer, (either of which deserve a whole age of Fasting, and Prayer, if no other means will prevail to cast out that worst kind of noxious spirit) and only that kind of converse that is employed in spiritual instruction for the building up of the Soul, for the bettering of life, and which alone will be owned by the title of [πᾶσα σοφία, the all wisdom] in that place will be allowed the means by which Christ is said to inhabite in us, the Devil himself in the Oracle pronouncing this to be the only notion of true superlative wisdom, this of moral practical knowledge, and the Scripture by the mouth of Solomon especially, and Christ calling all things else but simplicity and folly.

A second degree is that of observing and watching over our Brethren. 1. To provoke to goodness, Sect. 11. putting them in mind of every occasion, wherein any Christian vertue of mercifulness, Alms-giving, Meekness, Purity, Peace-making is more than ordinarily seasonable, and by our example, and the examples of other pious men, (present, or read of in story, especially sacred) encouraging to abundance in well doing, and upon all occasions remembring them of the various dispensations of the love and mercy of God, through Christ, wherein they have had their peculiar portion and the infinite immarcessible crown, that super-abundant weight of glory, which is not in the same degree poured out to all, but dispensed according to works, according to the proportion of that labour of Love, and work of Faith, that shall be observable in every Combatant of Christs, when the great ἀγωνοθέτης, the * leader and crowner of our Faith shall come out to his day of retribution; and each of these is an excellent way to provoke all to well doing, the duty prescribed, Heb. 10. 24. Let us observe one another to * sharpen or provoke (in one another) Charity and good or laudable works.

* ἀρχηγὸς καὶ τελειωτὴς.

* εἰς παροξυσμὸν ἀγάπης καὶ καλῶν ἔργων.

2. To give the Brother a sight not only of his Sins (the not doing of which is an argument of a most mortal enmity, a hating the Brother in the heart whom we do not in that case rebuke, Lev. 19. 17. and no man must be ever accounted otherwise, than a treacherous contriver of his brothers destruction, that is guilty of it (but even of his passions, his inclinations, the weaknesses and peculiar distempers of his nature, things of which no man is a competent judge to discern them in himself, and wherein a man may live and dye ignorant, if he be not taught by anothers more impartial observation, and of which there is far more reason to expect to be admonisht by a friend that takes notice of them, than of a jaundice-look, or earthy breath, which being but symptomes of bodily diseases, and yet by all rules of friendship to be revealed to him who is concerned to know and seek out for cure of them, are not near so dangerous, to be concealed, or unlikely to be discerned by the patient, as the more subtile, secret diseases of the Soul. Thus, if the interpretation of learned men will stand good, St. Paul received benefit by the admonition of the by-standers, Acts 23. 4. without which he had not considered (as οὐκ ἤδειν seems best rendred) what was his duty to the high-Priest. And thus did Christ befriend St. Peter with the knowledge of his passionate temper (transported with zeal at the present, though he should dye with Christ he will not deny him, and afterwards, when danger was instant, transported as much with a contrary passion) and foretold him, that he peculiarly should deny him, which it seems, he never would have discern'd in himself: And if any had been armour sufficent against fear, this of all others would most probably have secured him.

The third is, (in case of falling into, but especially continuing in sin) frequent, repeated, importunate calling and rouzing to awake, and get out of it. That title of the friend among the heathens, to be the other or second self, being far from being lessen'd or superseded by Christ, (but improved indeed, and applied to the divinest and most sacred offices of friendship, and the rescuing from sin, as from the most formidable danger) laies an obligation upon every friend, every brother, i. e. Christian (toward every other, that comes within the reach of his warmth or influence) to supply all those offices, that every ones self, i. e. his * Soul, his Conscience is concerned and obliged to do. Thus when the Conscience, beside the directive office, hath another of punishing and disciplining too, of playing the Erinnys with the Torch within us, to scorch and light us out of our road of darkness, the Brother, the Christian, the second Soul, and Conscience within the fellow-Christians breast, received thus into his most venerable secrets, the knowledge of the deformities and sins of his very Soul, when either he hath neglected to perform the duty of the οἰκεῖος φύλαξ, the ἔνοικος θεὸς, the ἐπίτροπος δαίμων, the Domestick divine guardian, the assiduous watch to keep off the hostile approaches, or mines of sin, or hath not been obeyed in his warnings, he hath now this only last part of duty behind, that of becoming the Angel to Lot, calling him, leading him, forcing him out of Sodom, setting him without the port, with an escape, flie for thy life, neither stay thou in all the plain; and again reinforcing the admonition and warning, with an Escape to the mountains, lest thou be consumed. And he that hath no heart to be thus importunate upon his perishing brother, may by that ghess, how little he hath of that Angelical temper in him.

The fourth degree of this duty, is (in case any or all the former, though conscientiously and diligently used, have yet been without success, then) watching of seasons and opportunities, calling in prudence to assist Charity, the brain to aid the heart, either coming, as God to Adam, * in the cool of the day, when the temper of the wax may probably make it more capable of impression, or (as the Fathers say of Gods dealing with the Elect, whom he doth, as 'tis thought, by that means infallibly work on) calling him tempore congruo, at a fit chosen time, when in all probability a seasonable admonition may be hearkned to; Great variety there is of these opportunities, not defineable particularly, but only obſervable by him, that not only in his duty towards God, and toward himſelf, but alſo toward his weak or ſick brother, doth ἀκριβῶς περιπατεῖν, walk circumſpectly, and obſervingly, * not as an unwiſe, but wiſe watchman, and that is the meaning of ἐξαγοραζεσθαι τὸν καιρὸν, Eph. 5. 16. parallel to ἐξαγοράζειν καιρὸν, Dan. 2. 8. rendred in the former place, redeeming, in the later, gaining the time, i. e. delaying in time of the rage, or fury of the Prince, in Dan. or of the evil times in St. Paul; and ſo in the heat of a violent ſin, when admonition is out of its place, until the preſent tempeſt be over, and then there be more hope, or poſſibility for reaſon to be hearkned to. And as a branch of this comes in at laſt

Sect. 14. A fifth degree of this duty (when nothing elſe will, and that may probably, or poſſibly do ſome good, but never elſe, never upon wearineſs, or wrath, or any thing, but grounds of deepeſt charity) the breaking off familiar converſe with him, to whom all other methods of kindneſs have prov'd ſucceſſleſs. For as in the authoritative proceſs, when the cenſures of the Church are found neceſſary [to the σῶσαι τὸ ἀπολωλὸς] to which only Chriſt deſigned them, the ſaving that which is loſt, the courſe is to deny him the moſt intimate ſociety, that of the communion of the faithful, and neither joyn with him in the prayers and leſſons (the συναναμίγνυσθαι) nor in the participation of the Lords Supper, (the συνεσθίειν τῷ τοιούτῳ) ſo in the image of that, the ſociety of ſingle friends or Chriſtians (eſpecially where there is no place for the publick cenſures either through want of government in a new planted Church, or where Schiſm hath driven it out, or where the crime is not of that nature, as to be capable of that publick audience) when all the former offices of the Angelus cuſtos have been perform'd improſperouſly, then that of the Angel with Jacob, a wreſtling to get from him, to deny him the bleſſing of his company and familiarity, may prove ſeaſonable, not out of a faſtidious paſſionate diſpleaſure to the ſinner, (O, he is then the moſt natural, proper object of pity and kindneſs, the incorrigible ſinner is fit for any thing rather than our anger or impatience) nor again, leſt I be polluted by his company, (in this caſe 'tis with the friend as with the believing husband, if the unbelieving wife is willing to live with him, let him not depart, how knoweſt thou but that by thy Chriſtian contrary example thou mayeſt yet ſave thy impenitent heathen brother?) but I ſay only on that great principle of ſaving charity, ἵνα ἐντραπῇ, that by ſeeing himſelf avoided, withdrawn from, left to converſe with none (beſide his ſin) but fiends and flatterers, he may poſſibly be aſhamed, and by that confuſion of ſpirit awakened out of that ſnare, whence the calm, leſs ſenſible admonitions were not able to rouze him, and this perhaps was the kind of παιδεία, that belonged to the ἀτακτοι, the diſorderly diſobedient, 1 Theſ. 5. 14. which the Theſſalonians are ſo earneſtly entreated (peculiarly under the notion ὡς ἀδελφοὶ, as brethren) to uſe in this caſe; and an opportunity ſometime may be wiſely choſen, when it may prove proper and ſeaſonable.

Sect. 15. I have done with the firſt particular; only by the way of appendage to it, I promiſed to ſhew alſo how it comes to be a duty, and that being quickly reſolved, becauſe it is commanded by Chriſt and St. Paul; and yet again, the rule being old and true, that affirmative precepts though they always bind, yet do not ad ſemper, ſo as to lay obligation on every man, that he ſhould always exerciſe the duties ſo commanded; and for the making of it neceſſary at any particular time, there being ſome conditions required by the concurrence of which it becomes neceſſary, and not otherwiſe; it remains worthy of a brief conſideration, what thoſe conditions are, neceſſary as to qualifie this correption aright, ſo to make the particular exerciſe of it neceſſary as an act of duty in each Chriſtian. And of theſe a very pious man, John Gerſon, the Chancellour of Paris, about 250. years ſince, in a ſhort Tract on this ſubject hath given us a ſufficient account: I ſhall chuſe to receive it from him in groſs, and as briefly preſent it to you. This of Correption, ſaith he, is by Chriſts precept become our duty, whenſoever theſe ſix conditions do concur. 1. That I have a certain knowledge of the Brothers ſin; a ſuſpicion being not ground ſufficient for ſo doing. 2. That I uſe all mildneſs or manſuetude in admoniſhing; the angry paſſionate correption being apt rather to provoke, than to amend. 3. If on conſideration I diſcern not, that ſome other is fitter for that performance than my ſelf, i. e. either more familiar with him, or elſe his ſuperiour, that may have ſome authority over him (as for a third conſideration, whether ſome body elſe be not more pious, or better qualified, I ſhall not put that into the ſcheme, leſt the moſt pious men being alſo the moſt humble, ſhould by that κριτήριον judge themſelves ſuperſeded from that duty.) Yet this alſo with this limitation, that if all other do appear to neglect that performance, then it muſt devolve to me again, and as far as concerns that condition, become my duty, if all the other conditions do concur with it. 4. If I have any probable ground of hope that he will be reformed or better'd by my Correption; whereas on the other ſide, if there be no ſuch hope, but rather that he will be provok'd, inflamed and grow worſe, I am not then bound thus to contribute to his deeper condemnation. 5. That the matter of the ſin be of ſome weight, and again, that it were done upon advice and deliberation, not out of ſurreption, ſudden motion, or imperfect conſent, (for by thoſe two he otherwhere makes up the interpretation of his notion of mortal ſins as he oppoſes them to venial.) And laſtly, if there be not hope of ſpringing ſome happier opportunity for this performance at ſome other time, which may make it prudent and charitable to defer it till then. The concurrence of theſe conditions is that which makes the exerciſe of this duty neceſſary, and the neglect a ſin, and the concurrence of at leaſt ſo many of them, as may give me hope of the deſigned ſucceſs, (that unto which the firſt mention of it by Chriſt was ordered, to ſave that which was loſt) the reforming any lapſt treſpaſſer, lays it upon me as a moſt excellent work of Chriſtian mercy; the uſefulneſs of which to my poor brother, is able to commend it to every Chriſtians practice, though there were no obligation, or precept lying on him.

Sect. 16. Now for the ſecond thing propoſed, what are the benefits and advantages of this performance, they have many of them been more than intimated already, in reſpect of the perſon whoſe turn 'tis at that time to be ſo friendly dealt with. 1. Saving knowledge, (a natural product of the inſtruction) and probably a right judgment in thoſe things that are moſt worth our moſt diligent ſearch, the intereſts of our ſouls.

Sect. 17. Secondly, the bettering our κριτικὴ, or judicative faculty in general, which is much betrayed, and decayed by loneneſs, and is moſt naturally improved by comparing our ſelves with other men, hearing their clear undiſguiſed opinion of our thoughts and actions.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, repreſſion of paſſions by this check; the compliance of ſociety being of all things moſt apt to ſmooth and draw on the vicious diſpoſition into a corrupt habit, and proportionably the denying us that compliance, or company, the expreſſing diſlikes of our ways, but eſpecially the undiſguiſed correption of thoſe friends, whoſe compliance would have had that force in it, being the moſt probable means to traſh our Jehu-march, and make the Chariot-wheels drive heavily, to take off from the pleaſure, and guſt which we have of ſin. Sect. 18.

Fourthly, it robs Satan of one of his greateſt advantages, the faſhionableneſs and creditableneſs of ſin, by which moſt of his moſt poyſonous recipe's, are gilded over; it brings Chriſtianity into a reputation, when it ſhall be ſeen that Gods cauſe can be own'd by his profeſſors, and the ſame zeal layed out on that Chriſtian deſign of driving ſins, as of old in the heathen world of driving Centaures and monſters out of the Region. Sect. 19.

Fifthly, it is the ſanctifying the vicionſeſt noyſomeſt part of our lives, our converſation, and communication among men; 'tis the only way of carrying back friendſhip unto Paradiſe again, drayning it from all the cloſe impurities, that have long been ſo inſeparable to it, and making it the only Heaven, that this earth is capable of, a ſtate of love and purity, of enjoying and believing one another; this one rod, as Saint Paul calls correption, being once animated, will, as Moſes's did, devour all the rods or ſerpents of the Magicians, all thoſe other helliſh parts of our diſcourſe, backbiting, whiſpering, &c. which turn all our Paradiſe into a wilderneſs, make a kind of hell of that, which was intended for the greateſt and moſt hallowed bleſſing of our life. Sect. 20.

Sixthly, The mutual practice of this duty, fits for the benefit of mutual Prayer, and, beſide that great advantage which comes in from thence, in order to another life, Saint James mentions one peculiar to this life, ἵνα ἰαθῆτε, that you may be healed; the temporal puniſhments, diſeaſes, &c. (which are an effect of ſin in all; but eſpecially in Chriſtians lapſt, and not yet reformed, and ſometimes particularly of treſpaſſes againſt our brethren) are removed by the prayers of faithful men, to whom the παραπτώματα, whether treſpaſſes, or in general any ſins are confeſt, and as by the Apoſtle it appears, 1 Cor. 11. 13. the total omiſſion, the no kind of uſe of this correption publique or private, was it that brought theſe many ſickneſſes, infirmities, and deaths among them, which the practice of this Duty, and the opening their hearts to it would probably have prevented, for if we would thus judge, admoniſh, rebuke our ſelves, one the other, we ſhould not need any of that judgment of the Lord, that diſcipline from Heaven. And not only for diſeaſes, but alſo in matters of an higher alloy; Even pardon of ſin, and eternal ſalvation, may be the return of the brethrens prayers, 1 John 5. 16. for him that ſinneth not unto death, i. e. who although he hath faln into Gods diſpleaſure for his ſin, quench'd that grace in him, which was neceſſary to bring him back to life, hath yet in caſe of fraternal correption behaved himſelf meekly, not contumaciouſly againſt it, and ſo though he hath no promiſe to his own, hath yet a poſſibility of having other mens prayers heard for him (as Jobs for his friends, and Noah for all that would be perſwaded to come into the Ark) to obtain for him from God, repentance firſt, and then life, which no other humane means could in that deſolate eſtate give him any probable hopes, or aſſurance of. Sect. 21.

Laſtly, it is of infinite advantage to him that acts this part of a friend, he engages the other to the paying this debt of Gratitude and juſtice, hath the ſame charity return'd him again in time of need, and ſo lays up a good treaſure for himſelf, of all others the moſt profitable in this life; and acquires a right to his part in that glorious prophecy concerning him, that turns many unto righteouſneſs, that of ſhining like Stars in the Firmament for evermore; and that other (more than prophecy) down-right affirmation, James 5. 19. Brethren, if any of you do erre from the truth, and one convert him, let him know, that he which converteth the ſinner from the errour of his way, ſhall ſave a ſoul from death, and ſhall hide a multitude of ſins. Sect. 22.

Having now given you the parts, and the gains of this duty, which will be able to commend it to the Chriſtians conſtant practice, and ſet it up in his heart as a prime fundamental Charity and mercy to the moſt precious part of mankind, his fellow Chriſtians Soul, There were no fear that Satan would ever be able to diſſwade the exerciſe of it, were there not ſome Objections fitted to his hands, ſome prejudices that phanſie, and humour, and contrary cuſtomes do confront againſt it, when we come particularly to the practice of it. 'Twill be neceſſary therefore in the laſt place to remove thoſe obſtacles that they may not obſtruct ſo rich a medicinal vein of charity, when it is ready to overflow and bleſs the fields about it. Sect. 23.

The firſt Objection is, that of the fleſh, the ſame that is pretended againſt all other duty, the pain of doing it, the difficulties and uneaſineſſes of ſpeaking plain truth to any man, when it muſt be ſo unacceptable, as reprehenſions are generally found to be. This objection is at the very propoſing, the greateſt reproach to the objecter that could be charg'd on him by an enemy. 1. It ſeems this man can neither ſerve God, nor his brother, of that which coſts him any thing; If any uneaſineſs can be pretended by the fleſh, Chriſt and his Chriſtian member muſt be ſent away without their dues, and rather ſtarve for want of their neceſſary bread, than we diſeas'd, or (like him in the Goſpel) raiſed out of our beds to give it to him. 2. This gives a ſtrange character of that mans temper in judging of hard or eaſie; it muſt be hard to venture the doing any thing unacceptable to another; but certainly to deliver him up to deſtruction, for whom Chriſt died, and for whom, if I am any thing like affected with Chriſt, I would lay down my life alſo, there ſhall be no difficulty in this. 3. This is a piece of the perfecteſt phanſie, an effect meerly of ſluggiſh cowardiſe, which always pretends the Lyon in the way, and by that is kept from attempting any part of duty, which if it were but heartily approacht, would appear far from formidable, matter of eaſe, and pleaſure to any, whoſe phanſie were but once cured and purged of thoſe figments or chimæra's of difficulty, which keep us from ever trying to do any thing. Many men, I doubt not, which have taken heart, and caſt off theſe ſluggards phantaſmes, have found more comfort in the practice and exerciſe of one act of this duty toward a friend, than in all the other fruitleſs converſation of their whole age with him. 4. 'Tis a moſt ignoble degenerous humour this, to be able to flatter a friend, (for ſuch is all that civility of not rebuking when there is need) but not to be able to reprove him, to have the heart to ſee him poyſon'd clancularly, but not dare Sect. 24.

dare preſent him with an antidote, leſt that ſhould let him know, that he is conceiv'd to want it: this was the criticks nicety that would not let ὑγιαίνειν be the prayer for an Epiſtle to begin with, for fear of being thought to have reproacht him whom we meant to ſalute, to call him madman, by wiſhing him ſanity. The vileſt ſin that ever Moraliſt declaim'd at, that which never got any advocate to plead for it, nor ſcaped the rudeſt ſcoffs of the bittereſt Satyriſts, is that of flattery, and this is now owned by him who makes this objection, (the negative flattery being as truly, though not ſo groſly ſuch as the affirmative, the concealing of faults, as the depradicating of vertues) and never had the fate or favour to be ſo civilly uſed by any other kind of pultroon before him. 5. 'Tis in all probability (at leaſt in charity ſhould be conceived to be) an act of the greateſt injuſtice toward him, whom 'tis thus uneaſie for us to reprehend; It is by interpretation, the reproaching him of all the baſe humour, mean diſpoſition in the world, the telling him that he is, what the Poets do perhaps but feign of the Elephant, and the Phyſicians count a madneſs where ever 'tis diſcernible, one that dares not look upon himſelf, or ſee his ſhape in any reflexion, can be guilty of deformities, but dare not behold them, hath a perfect antipathy to the looking-glaſs, one that hates to be reformed, profeſſes the Art of begwiling himſelf into hell, and hath no other ſolicitude or deſign, but only to go undiſturbedly thither, hath promiſed himſelf to Satan, and will not indure to be ſo much as cheapned out of his hands. 'Tis clear what an accumulation of reproaches of the fouleſt nature is here pour'd out on this one man, whom the objecter was ſo nice to reprehend, and that he might keep him his friend told him covertly, and by way of interpretation (which are generally the bittereſt acts of reviling) that he was of all perſons the moſt uncapable of that title, one of a temper the moſt perfectly contrary to friendſhip, for ſuch is impatience of ſeaſonable reprehenſion where ever it is obſervable.

Sect. 25. A 2*d. prejudice* againſt this duty, is the danger of unſeaſonableneſs, either in reſpect of the perſons who may be our ſuperiours, and then ought not to be rebuked by us; or in reſpect of the time, if that be not ſo luckily choſen, for in that caſe there will be danger, not only of miſcarrying and doing no good, but even of bringing greater guilt and danger upon that man, whom we meant to reſcue out of it, that ill accident being common to this, with all other kind of Phyſick, that it hurts when it doth not mend, proves poyſon to him, whoſe diſeaſe gets the conqueſt over it, or hinders it from working; eſpecially if there be any errour committed but in the circumſtances of mixing or applying it, no errours being more fatal and irreparable than ſuch.

Sect. 26. To this again the anſwer will be prompt, firſt, That for the firſt kind of unſeaſonableneſs, as it is a real objection, ſo it will eaſily be avoided, and conſequently that care muſt be taken indeed, that our Conſcience or zeal of this duty do not put us on any publick rebuking of our ſuperiours, whoſe duty it is to beſtow that alms upon us, and ours on the other ſide to receive it meekly from them, and not to think that we are their Magiſtrates back again; ſuch an irregularity may be of dangerous Conſequence, may make the ſuperiours vile in the eyes of thoſe whoſe honouring of them is a neceſſary preparative to incline them to obey, and ſo may have a fatal influence on the publick; and the but poſſibility of this being ſo conſiderable, will in all reaſon put in a reſtraint and caveat, that this be not done in any manner, but what is perfectly private and remote from that danger, and that alſo competible with that honour and civility due to thoſe from all their inferiours: Nay, 2. there may come a great deal of hurt to inferiours themſelves by their apprehending this to be their office, or duty. They will not be ſo careful to obey uniformly, when they think they have another capacity, wherein they ought to be obey'd; it being more pleaſant and agreeable to paſſionate fleſh and blood to give, than to receive directions or rules of life, and a piece of prime ſenſuality to be tampering any way, or interpoſing in the actions of our ſuperiours, which we ſhall be ſure to do, when we have duty or charity to pretend for it.

Sect. 27. Nay yet farther, upon this ſcore, the caveat muſt extend, not only to our legal ſuperiours, but even thoſe, who by their learning or knowledge, are placed in an higher orb than other men, from whoſe mouth the people ſhould receive the Law, and not think themſelves obliged to inſtruct their teachers, but meekly to be inſtructed by them, in all thoſe things, wherein the knowledge of the one, and ignorance of the other may be preſumed to make it ſeaſonable. Wherein that our duty may not preposterouſly be inverted, it will be fit, that even, where there may poſſibly be ſome need, the exerciſe of that fraternal duty be ſuſpended ſo far at leaſt, as may not interrupt that regular order, which ought to be obſerv'd among men, i.e. without queſtion in publick (which will be always under ſuſpicion of proceeding from ſome other principle than that of Charity) and even in private alſo, unleſs it be in matters of that nature which are groſs and criminous, and confeſtly evil, and out of all doubt and queſtion among men, and that in caſe we be their equals alſo in condition, although not in knowledge. As for other points of opinion as are controverted among men, we ſhould in all reaſon ſuſpect our ſelves, when we find not the concurrence of more knowing judgments with ours, rather than take upon us to rebuke thoſe from whom 'tis much fitter for us to learn, to receive that dole of charity than to beſtow it.

Sect. 28. And for the ſecond ſort of unſeaſonableneſs, that in reſpect of the time and other circumſtances, I anſwer, 1. That ſeaſonableneſs is a prime ingredient in the duty: and the brother who is bound to admoniſh, is bound alſo to do it as prudently, i. e. as ſeaſonably as he can, with all the circumſtances that may aſſiſt the Phyſick, and help it to a kindly working; To which end, as the Phyſician, before he will adminiſter the moſt ſafe known medicine, will enquire not only into the diſeaſe, but the complexion, conſtitution, ſex, age, diet, courſe of life of his patient, the ſtate of his former health and inclinations, whether he formerly uſed to be thus, and how long and often; ſo will it concern (him eſpecially, that takes this to be ſtrong Phyſick, is not ſure 'twill be ſafe) to examine all theſe accidents, and circumſtances, (and to that purpoſe to be very vigilant over his patient) and then accommodate his Phyſick as prudence, and skill in this art (which would therefore be worth our moſt ſerious ſtudying) will beſt direct him. But then 2. as theſe hazards are not proper to make the Phyſician negligent or ſullen, but rather more careful over his charge, ſo will not this danger of unſeaſonableneſs excuſe any for a total omiſſion of this duty, but only increaſe his vigilance and care, that it may be wiſely and well performed; and if that man would know whether he have done his duty in this kind, he had beſt examine, whether having omitted to perform this act of mercy at a time unſeaſonable, he have ever found and made uſe of a fitter ſeaſon to practiſe it. Otherwiſe as Felix diſmiſt Saint Paul for that time, and when he had a more convenient ſeaſon, promiſed to call for him again, but is never read to have done ſo, and ſo demonſtrated, that 'twas the ſubject of Saint Pauls Sermon, juſtice and continence, and a judgment to come upon his ſcandalous guilt of the contrary ſins, and not the unſeaſonableneſs of it at that one time, that made him put off the hearing of it: or as the ſordid ſcandalous Miſer can quarrel with ſomewhat in every object of charity he meets with, and never find it perfectly ſeaſonable for him to be (what naturally he is not) a liberal Alms-giver; ſo this over-wary prudent pretender hath reaſon to judge of himſelf in this matter, that the unſeaſonableneſs of the duty was but the excuſe, the coldneſs of Chriſtian charity, the true cauſe of his neglects. And,

Sect. 29. The truth is, this Objection hath been ſo far admitted among men, as to make many of the moſt neceſſary Duties of Chriſtians, when there hath been moſt uſe of them, then particularly to be thought unſeaſonable: Thus confeſſion of our Chriſt in many of his Precepts, when they have been oppoſed, when obedience to them, eſpecially an avow'd reſolution never to diſobey, hath been thought a matter of ſome danger to us, to our eſtates, our liberties, our good names (though only the contrary it is that menaces danger to our ſouls) hath ſolemnly been reſolved to be unſeaſonable; and there is no way to fortifie us againſt this miſtake but by defining what unſeaſonableneſs is, taking off the diſguiſe, or equivocalneſs of it, and ſetting it its due limits, in which, but not beyond which, there may be ſome truth or reality in the Objection.

Sect. 30. And that will be done by ſetting one rule in general, and by remitting the reſt to prudence and conſcience, (not to ſloth or cowardice) to apply to the particular emergencies. The rule will be this, that whenſoever admonition may probably do good to the perſon to whom 'tis deſigned, and not harm either to him or any other, then it cannot by any ſecular poſſible inconvenience, that may be fear'd to my ſelf, become unſeaſonable; whatever cenſure falls upon me through anothers miſtake or ſuddenneſs of paſſion, (which are not in my power, and ſo cannot be my duty ſtrictly to provide againſt) it matters not, ſo the brother receive benefit by it, (and I were the perſon from whom it was due to him) and that he may poſſibly do, when he doth not expreſs it at the time, yea, when on the contrary he doth ſeem to believe, that he is cauſleſly reprehended. For he may be of a proud humour, and then he will not be apt to acknowledge any crime, leſt that paſs for a ſubmiſſion, which though it be in that caſe a perfect errour, (that victory over his paſſion, and over his ſin being an act of ſpecial magnanimity beyond all our little ambitions and emulations, and deſires of conquering others) yet may it perhaps have that real effect on him, as to make him unwilling to yield at the preſent through paſſion; which act of reſiſtance yet, afterward upon ſober judging, and diſcerning the truth of the reprehenſion, he may be willing to retract, and mend that privately upon his own pleaſure, which he would not be reproacht or forc'd out of by his brothers importunity. Many other occaſions may intervene which may keep our reprehenſions from the preſent deſired effect, which yet notwithſtanding, the ſeed may take root in the ground, and after many days ſpring up, though it do not inſtantly, and then the Parable of the Sower ſets no ill character on that ſoyl, which did not preſently ſhoot up, but brought out ſo leiſurely, that the Husbandman was fain to have ſome exerciſe of his patience for the while. And therefore I ſay, whenſoever the rebuke may moſt probably do good, either inſtantly, or for the future, by committing that ſeed to the furrows, which will after bring forth fruit in the harveſt, 'twill be all injuſtice and falſe witneſs, and puniſhable as the ſpreading of falſe news, to affirm it unſeaſonable. Every thing 'tis acknowledg'd from Solomon, hath its propriety of ſeaſon, and the ſeaſon for reproof is, when there is any fault committed, or when probably it may without a warning; Nay, if through errour, the phyſick be adminiſtred, when there was no need of it, only ſome appearance of it, which cauſed the miſtake, there may yet be ſome uſe of that, both to rectifie the miſtake in the one, and to warn the other, that ſuch a lawful action may yet be apt to be miſtaken, and this will be no hurt to either of them, the one to be rectified, the other to be inform'd. But then to be over-nice in judging of ſeaſons (any farther than by diſcerning that the man is awake, and in his right wits, and capable of what is ſaid to him) will be the ſame ſcrupuloſity that keeps the weather-wiſe husbandman from ſowing, and if upon ſtrict advice it ſhould yet be prudentially decreed, that ſome ſeaſons were not at all fit for this turn, I ſhould yet reſolve that 'twere corrupt cuſtome, popular errour, &c. which hath help'd this to be true, and then the planting the contrary truer notions in the World (to which this paper is deſign'd) viz. a belief and aſſurance that fraternal correption is not only a Chriſtian duty, and ſo an act of righteouſneſs, but that of the moſt neceſſary charity to our brothers ſoul, and that 'twere better and ſafer to venture the caſting away one Almes ſometimes, than by ſcruples and prudence to endanger the detaining a thouſand, when they are due and neceſſary, will ſoon diſpatch this Objection out of the way, how ſullenly and ſwiniſhly ſoever it be lain down in it.

Sect. 31. Should but an inhumane cuſtome come into the World, making it uncivil for Scholars to diſcourſe of books, allowing them any other kind of converſe, but that which might tend to the bettering one another, what were to be done by Students in this caſe? The only ſeaſonable, were a reſolution to bear down this irrational mad faſhion with the contrary, a conſpiration of all men, who are ſo nearly concern'd in it, to ſet themſelves againſt this, as againſt their mortalleſt enemy, deſign'd for the ruine of Academies and Libraries, and all that is civil; and within a while a more rational contrary cuſtome may get in, and then that prove ſeaſonable and neceſſary by the ſame argument, by which before 'twas unſeaſonable and ſuperfluous; and if this moſt reaſonable inſtance may be heeded, I ſhall reſolve, that then this objection will be anſwered, if before it were not.

Sect. 32. If it be further demanded here, whether ſome places may not be unfit for the exerciſe of this duty, and that will be equivalent with unſeaſonable; I anſwer, that if prudence, true, ſad, Chriſtian prudence ſay they be, thoſe places which are more ſeaſonable ſhould be choſen in their ſtead, and on condition that the duty be performed, the propereſt place ſhall be left to the Chriſtians choice; and for his direction this general rule may be reſolved on, that the more private the correption is, the more ſeaſonable it will be, and probably the more effectual. But then 2. that which is moſt eligible in ſome regards, may be leſs in others, a publick calm reproof may, beſides the good of the perſon to whom 'tis addreſt, prove beneficial to the whole ſociety: as 1. It may give them an example of that faſhion, which perhaps they may tranſcribe from thy practice, though they have not from the precept of Chriſt, and ſo make them both better men, and more valuable friends when they have acquired this moſt uſeful accompliſhment of friendſhip; and 2. it may arraign the like vices in other men, which are rebuked in one, which is but the placing our charity at the beſt advantage, (like the Almſ-giver at the corner of a ſtreet, which is viſible and exemplary both ways) ſo as may be moſt diſcernible, and ſo uſeful to many, (moſt contrary to the niggardlineſs of the incloſure) that ἀφθονία in Damaſcen, the ſpecial attribute of the true God (contrary to the φθόνος θαλμοῦ among the heathen) an improvement I ſay, ſuppoſing it free from the vain-glory and other vices incident to this kind, not any errour, or miſplacing of it. In this caſe if it be rightly ſet, there is place for exception to the general rule; And yet ſtill if the private reprehenſion may be probably the more available (and not only the leſs difficult) no queſtion the private is to be made uſe of.

Sect. 33. A 3*d.* Objection is the danger of undergoing the cenſure, either of proud, or cenſorious, or impertinent, and ἀλλοτριοεπισκοπος being over-buſie in other mens matters, if we thus take upon us to be ſuch ſevere Cato's to obſerve and rebuke others. This hath already been anſwered in the general, that the duty muſt be perform'd, what ever the hazards, dangers to us ſhall appear to the contrary. Our Apoſtle hath told us there is no fear in love, 1 John 4. 18. (and the love there is ἀγάπη μεθ' ἡμῶν, the Charity of Chriſtians one toward another, ver. 17.) and that perfect love caſteth out fear, i.e. (as the Text importeth to my ſeeming) all fear of danger that may attend the diſcharge of any charitable office to the brother; if the love be ſuch as Chriſts, ſuch as it ought, it will boldly ſet about the duty (Saint Paul will be content to be a fool, when his love thus conſtrains him) and never interpoſe ſuch ſcrupulous objections of fear to keep from expreſſing acts of love. But then more particularly for the ſeveral branches of the danger, 1. That of being counted proud: If it had been of being really ſo, of doing any thing that aroſe from any principle of animoſity, or inſolence, &c. I ſhould acknowledge great force in the objection; but as it is only the danger of being counted guilty of that, when we are not guilty; if that vain fear might be allow'd to be an excuſe, or ſuperſedeas for ſo weighty a duty, if our reputation of humility muſt be tended ſo warily, and the ſouls of our poor Brethren ſo prodigally and wretchleſly neglected, if we may not be content once to appear, what moſt of us conſtantly are, guilty of any degree of pride, though for the ſaving that ſoul for which Chriſt ſubmitted his glorious Majeſty to a reproachful death, yet certainly this may be a ſatisfaction to the objection, that the wiſer ſort of men have reſolv'd with Plutarch, that δυσωπία or baſhfulneſs, (ſuch is this of not daring to do our duty in rebuking our ſtray brethren) is a moſt certain evidence, and ſymptome of pride; He that dares not ſpeak to others, leſt he ſhould not appear ſo extreamly handſome to them, as he deſires to do, leſt he ſhould at all diminiſh himſelf in their opinion, by admitting them to a cloſer ſurvey of him, ſignifies that he ſets an huge value upon himſelf, and ſo not without reaſon, the moſt reſerv'd generally are accounted the moſt ambitious, if not the moſt proud; as the Heathen Gods that never convers'd with men, and are by the Epicureans conceiv'd not to meddle with the obſervation, or puniſhment of what is done here below, are ſaid to ſpend their whole time in admiration of their own excellencies; All which is little leſs than demonſtration, that this coyneſs, tenderneſs, niceneſs of reprehending any, that I may hope to amend by it, is a ſpice of the greater ſtate and pride: I am ſure ſo diligent a ſtrict watch over their actions, as not to venture on any thing that may bring that cenſure upon them, is an argument, that they are guilty of it, far greater, than the performance of this duty would be, (after men have imbibed the right notion of it) among the ſoberer ſort of Chriſtians, whoſe judgments are only worth the heeding; he that muſt approve himſelf to all others, and either ſeek, or receive the praiſe of men indefinitely, will never be a believer, or Diſciple of Chriſt, never profeſs thoſe truths, or practiſe theſe duties, which are oppoſed by any prevailing party.

Sect. 34. Next, for that of being counted cenſorious; This is the not diſcerning things that are moſt different, by wanting that faculty of κριτικὴ, the reproach of having of which he doth ſo paſſionately avoid. For ſure the judging betwixt good and evil, and making uſe of it, either to the avoiding of the evil in my ſelf or others, would never by any miſtake be ſhuffled under that title. The fault of cenſoriouſneſs is uncharitableneſs, and delighting to gnaw on the reputation of other men, or judging in their actions or counſels, that are ſet over us by God, and this is wont to be founded in miſtake and injuſtice, and accompanied with back-biting, ſlanders, and ſedition ſometimes; and though this of fraternal correption be the good quality that dwells neareſt that vice of any other, yet is that no more ground of diſcouraging, or blaſting that vertue, than it proves the drowning of the earth, that it hath the ſea ſo near it; 'Twas part of the deſign of this paper to root out the former of theſe, and to ſecure the Chriſtian againſt it, by planting this other in the room of it, as there is not a better anſwer to Satan, than that of the non vacat, there is no room, or place for him; and if the fear of being counted cenſorious now, muſt make the charity of reproving unfit for my turn, as before the ſin of cenſoriouſneſs did, Satan is ſure become a very dextrous artificer, able to get the victory, which ſoever ſide of the cauſe is ſet him to ſollicite, or rather our uncharitable corrupt hearts have prov'd ſuch, and Satan leſs guilty of theſe wiles and contradictious crafts, than we.

Sect. 35. Laſtly, for impertinence, or buſying our ſelves in that which doth not belong to us: Opinion or fame is very unjuſt, if it charge this guilt on us on no other grounds but theſe. For that we were not born only to conſider our ſelves, our own eaſe, or intereſts, was the heathens rule, and the Apoſtles plain words, that we are members one of another, and if the foot cannot ſay to the hand, nor the hand retort to the foot, or meaneſt member of Chriſts body, [I have no need of thee] then ſure the health, the ſafety of a periſhing brothers ſoul, that hath ſo ſpecial particular inſtant need of thee, may well claim ſome of thy aid, account it ſelf within the reach of thy providence and vigilance, and and till Chriſt ſhall make a new wall of partition, a γεισὸς or ſept, or μεσότοιχον τὸ φράγμα, ſuch as was anciently in the Jewiſh Temple to divide Jew from Alien, (and was ſaith Saint Paul, taken away by CHRIST) till he ſhall think fit to erect another in the ſtead, and preſcribe us our bill of divorce, or ſeparation to all mankind, with a [τὶ ἐμοὶ καὶ σοὶ] or [Res tuas tibi habe] that which is ſo preciouſly valuable to any other Chriſtian, muſt never be vile in thy eyes, never far baniſht from thy heart, I mean the conſtant faithful obedience of every Chriſtian to Chriſt, or his returning again after each miſcarriage; and when thy reprehenſions are thus inſtrumental in themſelves, and by thee thus deſigned, and withal the caution formerly mentioned, carefully obſerv'd, that our Fathers whoſe charge we are, be not by errour miſtaken for our charge, thy charity ſhall never by any reaſonable Judge be thought too diffuſive, to have roved impertinently out of its dioceſs, nor muſt ſo irrational a fear diſturb, or ſuſpend the exerciſe of that Charity.

I cannot gueſs at any more than only one Objection, that is ſtill behind: He that would excuſe himſelf from the obligation of this duty, will be apt to ſay, that he hath not ſuch an authority with him, as is required for the due diſcharge of this duty. To this I anſwer, 1. That if he have obſerved the cautions premiſed, and perform this duty to the equals, or brethren (as that doth not include the fathers or ſuperiours) the objection is evidently falſe: For to the due diſcharge of the Fraternal Correption there is no greater dignity required, than to be an equal or brother alſo. Or if he think he muſt be a ſuperiour, or elſe he is not fit for this performance, then 2. I anſwer, that this is a petitio principii again; that which is every mans duty neceſſitate præcepti, by force of that Precept of every mans minding and caring for the things of others, what may be for their edification, is not only preſcribed the Cato or the Ariſtarchus; He that looks in an even level, may ſee ſomewhat, and many times the full portraicture of every action within his reach, though he that looks down, hath the larger and more commanding view of all under him; The authoritative rebuke may require ſomewhat of Authority and gravity in the perſon that manages it, and therefore to the Biſhop Timothy the exhortation is not unſeaſonable, that he take care that no man deſpiſe him; but for the fraternal, which ſuppoſes not that gravity, he that hath Chriſts precept to back him, and practiſeth it within the due ſtrict limits, needs no authority that can accrue to him from any outward accompliſhment: beſides that rebuke that meets with uncapable objects, or is not prudently managed by the admoniſher, would proſper no more in caſe it brought authority with it, than from a friend; nay perhaps not ſo much, becauſe ſtout men are ſometime well natured, and therefore ſtill that is no objection. 'Tis true indeed, where Pride is rooted in the heart, there is little place for correption, fraternal or authoritative, nay the ἔλεγχος or conviction of the ſpirit it ſelf proves generally uneffectual on ſuch, the humble are the malleable perſons, (of whom is the Kingdom of Heaven, Matth. 5.) and the εὐαγγελιζόμενοι, the peculiar ſort of men are wrought on by the preaching of the Goſpel; but on the other ſide, the proud heart is fortified impregnable againſt all, and is conſequently the greateſt plague, and curſe, that a fiend could wiſh or help us to. But this is no objection againſt the preſent doctrine, but on the other ſide, the ſoft word may break the bone, that the more violent aſſault was not able to bend; the fraternal calm rebuke may do more good, than the moſt paternal and authoritative. Sect. 36.

But to ſuppoſe this objection yet to have ſome force in it, (though we have demonſtrated it hath none) I ſhall grant it very unfit for any private man, to think he hath any authority, or but σεμνότης or gravity, that may make him fit to rebuke his ſuperiour, nay that may render him venerable in his brothers eye: But then ſure that which is not ſo fit for him to aſſume to himſelf, (and without which he is yet obliged to do his duty, to rebuke when it is ſeaſonable) is fit enough for others to attribute to him, eſpecially thoſe, who by that means are to receive a ſoveraign ſaving benefit; even the ſuperiour himſelf, who is to be as wary of his ſoul, as any other, and wants in all probability more helps than other men for the preſerving it ſpotleſs from the world, (as much as his burthen is heavier, his duty more extenſive) may do well to call in the opinions of other men, and not refuſe to gain, or benefit by the meaneſt. And then to draw toward the concluſion of this Diſcourſe, and prevent all poſſibility of farther objections againſt it, the reſult will be, that it is every Chriſtians part, at leaſt to chuſe out ſome body as a Monitor, that may keep a daily watch over him, be it the friend, the ſon of his love, the wife of his boſome, (or any that is not too ignorant, too blindly fond, or too puſillanimous to diſcharge it.) For the truth is, it is moſt rational that the buſineſs ſhould lie at the ſick mans door, that he that finds his wants of this kind, (as every man will do, that is not perfectly inſenſate) ſhould ſeek out, and be at the coſt and expence of a little care at leaſt, and a little humility to repair them; And then the Phyſick will be ſure to come ſeaſonably, when 'tis call'd and begg'd for, when the perſon of the Phyſician is ſuch, as I can phanſie, and ſo confide in, eſpecially if ſuch, as Hippocrates appoints him to be, (directing the compoſition of the Phyſician, as well as the medicines) one of a good healthy conſtitution himſelf, that hath prevented thoſe diſeaſes in his own ſoul, which he profeſſes to cure in others. And that this may be done, is my humbleſt requeſt, and he whom the love of Chriſt, and the ſoul which he hath redeemed, will not conſtrain, O yet let the terrours of the Lord perſwade, to be in conſtant fee with ſome ſuch ſanctified familiar, (that like the Divine appointed to be aſſeſſor in ſome well order'd Senate, may ſit by, and watch, ne quid contra pietatem, that nothing be done againſt piety) with ſome faithful obſerver, and true relator of all the occurrences, and obſervables of his life, which it will concern him to be adviſed in, and in this ſence [væ ſoli, moſt ſad woes to him that is thus alone] was the interpretation of the terrours that I mentioned. He that is overtaken in a fault, if there be not ſome good Samaritan near to have pity on him, to pour ſoft, but healing oyl into his wounds, and ſo καταρτίζειν, to bind up, and reſtore him again, may unhappily lie ſo long in his ſin, that there be no more life left in him; the repulſed grace of Chriſt in this caſe conſtantly withdrawing it ſelf, and not ordinarily returning again to thoſe noyſome dwellings which have once ſo grieved, and baniſht him out of their coaſts. By which you will diſcern the advantage of a ſeaſonable friend, the benefit of a timely cure. Sect. 37.

Sect. 38. And yet once more, becauſe it may be expected from us, though we be never ſo fooliſhly kind, yet to prove neither truly juſt, nor charitable to our ſelves, It may be fit for me before parting, to call back again to them that are abroad, and tell them 'tis poſſible for one that ſtands or paſſes by to diſcern a ſeaſon, and interpoſe as fitly and opportunely, as if he had waited never ſo ſtaunchly for the patients call; fit for others that ſee a man in danger and inſenſible, to adviſe him to ſeek out for help to thoſe that are Maſters of the faculty, if poſſibly their skill and experience, and impartial ſurvey may enable them to ſee more by him, than he can do by himſelf. This is it that we never fail to do in the indiſpoſitions of the body, and the ſame in the hazards of our Eſtates: The Lawyer and Phyſician, every friend will importune to have call'd into the conſultation, leſt our confidence ſhould coſt us over-dear; and unleſs the ſoul be the only impregnable, ſafe, (our hold in our part of Gods decrees, an amulet, and abundant ſecurity againſt all dangers) or (which is more frequently the caſe) the only refuſe, vile, deſpicable commodity, this muſt be a good advice in the ſpiritual eſtate alſo.

Sect. 39. One thing only may yet farther be asked by way of caſe, to whom this office is due from every of us. To which I ſhall anſwer by giving you two marks or rules of diſcerning; The firſt very obvious and plain, that every brother that hath treſpaſt againſt thee, by the peculiarity of that character, and the force of our Saviours ſpeech, Matt. 18. 15. is pointed out to thee as thy peculiar lot or portion, whom thou art to take care of, to go and tell him his fault between him and thee alone, repay him charity for treſpaſs, if ſo be by that means thou mayeſt gain thy brother.

Sect. 40. The ſecond rule will be a reſult made up of ſome negative, and one poſitive obſervation, and will be beſt ſuggeſted to us by remembring, that this is a duty of charity to the brother, and conſequently to be determined and defined to the object, as other almes, and charities are wont. Now as the precept of giving or lending to all, muſt certainly have two reſtraints, 1. That it lay not a charge on me to take every man in the world into the Catalogue of my Beadeſ-men, but [all] only as that takes away the difference betwixt good and bad, and denotes indefinitely, without excluſion of any, the ſeveral ſorts of men, or Chriſtians, (ſo that every man of what qualifications ſoever may be capable of my liberality, if he be by any direct means of God's providence particularly preſented, or offered to it:) 2. That rich men are not thereby enabled to claim a part of my liberality, or lone, but only thoſe, whoſe wants render them fit objects of that charity: So in this matter it may negatively be reſolved, 1. That the precept of correption obliges me not to take all men living into my care, but only concludes againſt all uncharitable diſcriminations, every one that is capable of the title of Brother, being alſo capable of this charity that belongs to ſuch; And 2. That there is no part of this charity due to thoſe who have no need of it, thoſe I mean, whoſe careful, watchful lives, their growth in grace, and the practical knowledge of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt ſets them above all ordinary want or uſe of our charities, nay nor to thoſe that are eminently ſuperiour to us in knowledge or place, becauſe whatſoever the matter is, we have reaſon to conceive others of their quality or learning to be more competent judges, and more fit to diſcharge that duty than our ſelves: Which being taken in by way of caution, the reſult again is, that as in the negative marks of knowing to whom our charity is not a due, ſo in our poſitive determination of it to the particular object, the ordinary deciſion will here hold alſo, that as, when we cannot extend our munificence to all, who are fit objects for it, (for if each ſingle man ſhould do ſo, no others would have any objects left them) every man ſhould think himſelf obliged to take thoſe into his particular care, on whom as it were, the lot is faln, whoſe living near him, under his wing or verge, marks them out for his Peculium, ſo ſhould every man think his duty obliges him to practiſe this other more ſpiritual Charity towards thoſe who are by providence caſt or faln into his circuit; Not his ſuperiours, (in publick eſpecially, or any way but wherein prudence ſhall make it ſtrongly probable that good may come to them, and no incommodation to any) but peculiarly his equals, and of them particularly, his friends to whom he hath a nearer tie (and by that a more articulate call) than other men to them, or he to any other; and ſo this will be the ſecond poſitive mark, that I told you of, and from thence the reſolution no more than neceſſary to all that ſhall ever enter that precious league of friendſhip, and do not profeſs to turn Chriſt quite out of the company, that they will by compact, and bargain oblige themſelves, and never fail in performance of this duty moſt conſtantly and faithfully to one another; that they will reſolve of it as of an axiome or principle, that when ever any one act of this rebuke is exerciſed, it is by all Laws of Heathen and Chriſtian friendſhip, to be counted the prime evidence of true love in him that uſes it, and that which nothing but a reſolution not to fail in kindneſs and charity, could have extorted from him; and conſequently ſo to be received and uſed by him on whom 'tis beſtowed, as becometh a precious dole of charity pour'd out of the very ſoul, which is again, in all reaſon, to provoke him to that one gratitude of retributing readily, and chearfully in the ſame kind, whenſoever there ſhall be need of it.

Sect. 41. Thus have you a view of this ſpiritual, and in a manner Angelical charity, as the moſt excellent, ſo (in the generality of the World) the moſt deſpiſed, diſreliſht duty. The animal man receives it not, for 'tis like the other things of the Spirit, a meer fooliſhneſs unto him; and the rebuking this folly of the World, admoniſhing them of it, deliberately, and meekly, and (if abundance of ſin be the ſeaſon of ſeeking out ways of Reformation) I hope or fear opportunely, and ſeaſonably alſo, was a piece of my duty, and kindneſs to my brethren, and may ſerve for a δεῖξις, an eſſay, or experiment, how it may be likely to thrive among them.

Of Reſiſting the Lawful MAGISTRATE
Under Colour of RELIGION.

IN this propoſal of the point for debate, there are only two words will need an account to be given of them: 1. What is meant by Reſiſting. 2. Why the word Colour is put in. For the firſt, Reſiſting here ſignifies violent, forcible, offenſive reſiſtance, fighting againſt, as Heſychius the beſt Scripture-gloſſary explains it, (ἀντιτεταγμένον and ἀνθιστάμενον all one, and ἀντιστάτης * ὁ ἀνθίστη ἐν τῇ μαχῇ) and the Apoſtle in like manner, Rom. 13. 2. uſing ἀντιτασσόμενος and ἀνθεστηκὼς promiſcuouſly for the ſame, and ſo in other places, although it is true, it is uſed ſometimes in a wider ſenſe; but that will not here be material, when we here ſet down before-hand what we mean by it. For the ſecond, the word [colour] is in the Title added, only for this reaſon, (not to prejudge the Religion, which is fought for, to be only a colour but) becauſe it is poſſible for a man to fight for Religion, and yet not upon colour of Religion, to wit, in caſe the Religion for which he fights be eſtabliſhed by the Law of the Land, for then his colour for fighting may be the preſervation of Law, which the Magiſtrate is bound by oath to maintain, and though he fight for Religion. yet it is under that other colour: whereas he that fights upon colour of Religion, making that his only pretence of fighting, is ipſo facto ſuppoſed to fight for a Religion diſtant or contrary to that which is eſtabliſhed by Law, and ſo all pretence or colour of Law excluded, yea, and all ſuppoſition of failing in the Magiſtrate; he ſtanding for the Law preſent, not againſt it; which I deſire may be the ſetting of the caſe, to exclude the fallacy, plurium interrogationum, and to diſtinguiſh the quarrel of Religion from that other of Law, and ſo to meddle at this time only with that which is fully within the Divines Sphere, and leave the other to ſome body elſe.

* γρ. Ἀντιστάτης

Thoſe two terms being thus explained, and ſo the ſtate of the queſtion ſet, the lawful Magiſtrate, and the eſtabliſht Law of the Kingdom on one ſide; and ſome perſon or perſons inferiour to him, upon colour of Religion, i.e. for ſome Religion not yet eſtabliſhed by Law, on t'other ſide, that it ſhould be lawful to them to take up Arms againſt him, would ſeem not very reaſonable, if he were but a private man, abſtracted from Regal power, (which ſure doth not make it more lawful to reſiſt him than any body elſe) having broken no eſtabliſhed Law, (as is ſuppoſed in the caſe) for what Legal accuſation can lie againſt him in a point wherein he hath not broken the Law? But then this will be more unreaſonable, if moreover it be conſidered, that colour of Religion is ſo wide and unlimited a thing, that no man, that is never ſo much in the wrong in any opinion, but thinks himſelf in the right (for otherwiſe he would not continue in that errour) and ſo that colour will be plea equally good to all ſorts of errours, as well as truths: and beſides, he that hath not ſo much Religion as to be in an errour, may yet have ſo much wit as to make uſe of that Apology for his ſedition (to wit, colour of Religion) and plead it as legally as the moſt zealous profeſſour; and conſequently, if that will ſerve turn, who ever ſhall but pretend to believe contrary to the Religion eſtabliſhed in any Kingdom, ſhall be ipſo facto abſolved from all bond of Allegiance in foro humano, and if he will adventure the hazard of the judgment to come, ſhall have no reſtraint laid on him by any earthly Tribunal; and ſo by this means already, the grounds of the diſſolution of any government are laid by this one unpolitick principle, and the world given up to be ruled only by the Religion (which is in effect, the will) of every man; whereas before, there was a State as well as a Church, Policy as well as Religion, a power in the Magiſtrates hand, beſides that in every mans own breaſt or conſcience; and yet more particularly, a reſtraint for hypocrites, as well as any elſe, i. e. for pretenders of Religion, who, if this ground would hold, were left unlimited. Where, if it be interpoſed, that ſuch an one that fallaciouſly pretends Religion, though by this diſguiſe he eſcape here, yet ſhall ſurely pay for it hereafter; and that that is ſufficient, becauſe there is no other Court, but of that ſearcher of hearts, to which the hypocrite can be bound over; I anſwer, that although that be true, yet it is not ſufficient, becauſe, although there be a judgment to come for all crimes, yet it is notwithſtanding thought neceſſary to have preſent judicatures alſo, not to leave all offenders to terrours at ſuch a diſtance: and indeed for the continuance of the peace of Communities to provide ſome violent reſtraint at the preſent for thoſe, whom thoſe greater but future determents cannot ſufficiently work on. This every man knows is the original of humane Laws, yea, and of Dominion it ſelf, a proviſion that all men will not do their duties for love or fear of God, (it is apparent, the Jews would not under their θεοκρατεια) and therefore for good mens ſakes, and for peace ſake, and for the maintaining of Communities, thoſe ſuperadditions have been thought neceſſary, as ſome thorns in the hedge of Gods Law, that may pierce the hands and ſides of him that ſhall attempt tempt to break over or through it. From whence the concluſion will be evident, that the rules for the preſerving of Government muſt be ſuch as ſhall have force to reſtrain the Atheiſt or the Hypocrite, as well as the good Chriſtian (which ſure will leſs need thoſe reſtraints) or elſe they are utterly unſufficient to the attaining of their end, i. e. to the preſerving of Government, Peace, Community, or protecting any that lives under it: which being ſuppoſed, it will alſo follow, that nothing muſt be indulged upon any colour of Religion, (be his Religion never ſo true, and himſelf never ſo ſincere in it,) which will open this gap or outlet to others, that may make the ill uſe of it. For this will be utterly deſtructive of the end of Government (which is, that we may lead a peaceable and quiet life, 1 Tim. 2. 2.) yea, and of Government it ſelf.

This argument being thus proſecuted and cleared might be ſufficient to determine this whole buſineſs, were it not for one rejoinder which is ordinarily made, the force of which is taken from that ſupream care that every man ought to have of his own ſoul, and conſequently of the maintaining of his Religion on which (to abſtract from all poſſible diſputes concerning the particular truth of it, he being perhaps not acute or artiſt enough to uphold it againſt all objecters) he is fully convinc'd, the health and ſalvation of that wholly depends. For the maintaining of which againſt all the humane power in the World, if he may not take up Arms or do any thing, he cannot ſee what can be fit for him to fight for (nothing ſure being more precious, than that;) or conſequently, why he may not take up that opinion of the beyond-ſea Anabaptiſts, That it is not lawful to fight at all: which if it ſhould be yielded to, although for the preſent it would produce peace, yet it would be little for the advantage of Magiſtrates in the iſſue. To this I ſhall anſwer, by conceſſion of theſe four things: 1. That Religion is to be every mans Supream care, the prime Jewel in his Cabinet. 2. That it cannot, at leaſt in humane conſideration, be expected that any man ſhould be leſs careful of his falſe Religion (if he be really perſwaded of the truth of it) than any other is of the true. Nay, 3. that if he do not uſe any lawful means to defend that falſe (whilſt he is convinc'd it is the true) Religion; this is a ſin of luke-warmneſs in him, though indeed through prepoſſeſſion not to open his eyes to greater light and revelation of the truth offered to him, and perhaps through ſluggiſhneſs not to ſeek that light, be yet a far greater ſin in him. For though no man ought to defend the contrary to what he takes to be truih, yet ought he to be moſt ready to depoſite his errour, not only when it doth, but alſo when it may appear to him to be ſo, and to ſeek to thoſe helps that may be inſtrumental to that end. 4. That in ſome caſes the uſe of Arms is not unlawful. But then all this being thus granted, and ſo in effect, that all lawful means may be uſed for the maintaining of Religion, we muſt yet ſecondly deny the inference of the Objection; upon this only ground, becauſe though Arms may lawfully be uſed in ſome caſes, and Religion be to be maintained by all lawful means, yet Arms are not a lawful means for this end, and ſo may not be uſed in this caſe, that is, by Subjects againſt the lawful Magiſtrate in caſe of Religion, at leaſt when ſome other Religion is by Law eſtabliſhed in that Kingdom. Which aſſertion I ſhall confirm only by four Arguments; 1. Taken from the nature of Religion. 2. From examples of Chriſt and Chriſtians. 3. From the very making of Chriſtianity, and particularly of the Proteſtant doctrine. 4. From the Conſtitution of this Kingdom, which being ſubordinate to the other three may deſerve conſideration, as far as it agrees with them.

1. From the nature of Religion, which is an act of the ſoul, which cannot be forced or conſtrained by outward violence, and therefore, 'tis apparent, needs no outward defence for the maintaining of it, much leſs, invaſion of others. A man may be as truly religious under all the tyranny and ſlavery in the world, as in the moſt triumphant proſperous eſtate. They that have power to kill the body, are not able to commit the leaſt rape upon the ſoul; they may rob me of my life, they cannot of my Religion; the weakeſt creeple in the Hoſpital may defie the whole Army of the Philiſtines in this matter. But you will ask, Is not the outward profeſſion and publick exerciſe of Religion, ſome part of it, and that to be thus maintained, where any attempt to hinder it? To which I anſwer, That the firſt of theſe, the outward Profeſſion, can no more be hindred than the former act of the ſoul, but rather may be moſt illuſtrious in the time of depreſſion. I may confeſs Chriſt in the den of Lyons, in the furnace, on the rack, on the gridiron, and when my tongue is cut out, by patient, conſtant ſuffering in that cauſe. Religion is not ſo truly profeſſed by endeavouring to kill others, as by being killed patiently our ſelves rather than we will renounce it. When I fight, it may be malice, revenge, ſome hope of gain (or impunity at leaſt) by the preſent ſervice, any one of a hundred worldly intereſts, that may help to whet my ſword for me; or moſt clearly, a hope I may kill, and not be killed; and ſo all this while here is no act of confeſſion of Chriſt in thus venturing my life, although I do affirm I do this for my Religion; becauſe though I ſo affirm, men are not bound to believe me, there being ſo much odds againſt me, that I do it for ſomewhat elſe. But when I lay down my life patiently, the ſacrifice of my God, reſign up all poſſible worldly intereſts for the retaining of my own ſpiritual truſt, this is to the eye of man a profeſſion capable of no reaſonable ſuſpicion of inſincerity; and indeed none ſo, but this.

As for the ſecond, the publick exerciſe of the true Religion, it were by all men heartily to be wiſht that it might be enjoyed at all times, for the advancing of Gods glory, increaſe of charity, converſion of others, &c. But if it may not be had by the uſe of lawful means, it will not be required of us by God, without whoſe ſpecial providence it is not, that he permitteth us to be forbidden that exerciſe. Till the ſame providence be pleaſed to remove ſuch hinderance, and open to us a lawful way of obtaining it; the primitive Chriſtians ſecret meetings will firſt be imitable to us, and if thoſe be obſtructed alſo, their ſolitudes next. And however, that deſign of obtaining free exerciſe of our Religion, will never make any practice lawful to be uſed in order to that, that before was utterly unlawful.

But are we not to take care of our children and poſterity, as well as of our ſelves? If our Religion be now ſuppreſt, our poor children and progeny to the end of the world may in all probability be kept in blindneſs and ignorance, and ſo left to the place of darkneſs irrecoverably. This objection ſounds ſomewhat pathetically and is apt to affect our bowels, more than our reaſon; moves our com-compaſſion firſt, and through thoſe ſpectacles is then repreſented with improvement to our judgment. But for anſwer to it, though the doctrine of election of particular men, as well and as abſolutely to the means as to the end, might be to him that acknowledges it, a ſufficient amulet againſt this fear, and ſo no need of that their jealous care for their poſterity, any farther than it is in their power to contribute toward them (which ſure is no more than to do what is lawful for them to do) yet the anſwer will be more ſatisfactory to all that acknowledge Gods providence, however opinionated concerning decrees, that whoſoever conſiders himſelf as a man, much more as a father of Poſterity, muſt have many things to truſt God with, and only God, and among thoſe, nothing more, than the future eſtate of thoſe which are come from him. Yet if he be importunate and ſtill unſatisfied, unleſs he himſelf contribute ſomewhat to the ſecuring of his poſterity in this matter, let me tell him there is nothing (after his prayers to God and paternal bleſſing on them) ſo likely to entail his Religion upon them, as his ſealing it by his ſufferings. This ſure will be a more probable way to recommend his religion to them (when they ſhall hear and be aſſured by that teſtimony, that their fathers thus hoped in God) than that other ſo diſtant, that they died in a rebellion againſt the King, or that this Religion had been in their time turned out of the land, had not they done ſomething ſo unlawful to protect it. Beſides, the greateſt prejudice which that poſterity (of which we pretend ſuch care) can ſuffer by my non-reſiſtance, is only to be brought up in a contrary Religion, to hear that way firſt, but ſure not to have their ears deafed againſt all others when they ſhall be repreſented, nor to bring the guilt of non-repreſentation upon them if they be not. And if I bring forth reaſonable creatures, I hope they will, by the grace of God, make uſe of their reaſon and his grace, to find out that truth that their ſouls are ſo much concerned in; and if (through no default perſonal of theirs) they ſhould miſs of it, I hope the invincibleneſs of their ignorance, and their ſincere repentance for all their ſins and errours known and unknown, and their readineſs to receive the truth, if it were or might be repreſented to them, would be antidote ſufficient by Gods mercy in Chriſt to preſerve them from that poiſon, ſo they were capable according to their means of knowledge to eſcape all other dangers. And all this upon ſuppoſition, but not conceſſion, that the Religion of him that would fight for it, were the truth and only truth; whereas indeed there is not a more ſuſpicious mark of a falſe Religion, than that it is fain to propagate it ſelf by violence; The Turks and Papiſts being the only notable examples hitherto of that practice, till ſome others, directly upon Popiſh principles a little varied in the application, have faln upon the ſame concluſion.

Now ſecondly for the examples of Chriſt and Chriſtians, but firſt of Chriſt: his example (as to this purpoſe) is evident in three paſſages (beſides that grand tranſcendent copy propoſed from the aggregate of all his life and death, *Matth.*11.29. Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly.) The firſt is, Luke 9.54. the Inhabitants of a Samaritan village would not receive Chriſt, *verſ.*53. upon that James and John remembring what Elias had done in the like kind, 1 Kings 18. and 2 Kings 1. ask'd his judgment of it, whether he would be pleaſed that they ſhould command fire to come down from Heaven and conſume them, as Elias did; that is, in effect, whether they ſhould not do well to uſe what ever power they had (and be confident that God would aſſiſt them in it) to the deſtroying of thoſe who ever they were (and yet that they were not their Magiſtrates it is clear) which affronted them in the exerciſe of their Religion, or indeed which would not receive Chriſt. To this Chriſt anſwers ſternly, the words are emphatical, he turned (as to Peter when he gave him that check, *Matt.*16.23.) and rebuked them, and ſaid, Ye know not what manner of ſpirit ye are of: that is, Elias was a * Zelot, 1 Mac. 2.58. (the full importance of which will belong to another diſquiſition) & jure zelotarum might do ſomewhat againſt Baals prophets, which will not agree with that diſtant calling or profeſſion of a diſciple of Chriſt, or Chriſtian; they are miſtaken if they think they may do as Elias did. From whence by the way is a prohibition fully legal put in againſt all examples of the old Teſtament (if any ſuch there were) from being pleadable amongſt Chriſtians, upon this ground of Joſephus his obſerving, that the Jews were governed by a Θεοκρατεια, God being as it were their King on earth for a long time, preſiding immediately, and interpoſing by his oracle, and other particular directions, as well as ſtanding Law, as in that caſe of Phinees and Elias, &c. by which thoſe acts of theirs, though authorized by no ſetled or ordinary Law, were yet as legal as whatever in any other Common-wealth were done by authority legally deſcending from the ſupreme Magiſtrate. Which whoſoever ſhall now apply to Chriſtians, beſides, that he profeſſes himſelf an aſſerter of Enthuſiaſms, will meet with Chriſts check to the Boanerges, You know not what ſpirit you are of: I have not authorized you to pretend to the ſpirit of Elias, or to do what a Zelot among the Jews might do.

* Ἐν τοῦ ζηλῶσαι ζηλὸν νόμε. ἀναλήψη.

The ſecond exemplary paſſage to this purpoſe in the ſtory of Chriſt is, Matt. 26.51. when Chriſt was apprehended by thoſe tumultuous perſons, at the beſt but ſervants of the chief Prieſts and Elders (not again by any power of lawful Magiſtrate) Peter drew the ſword and ſmote off one of thoſe ſervants ears; upon that, Chriſts anſwer is the thing to be obſerved, verſe 52. Then ſaid Jeſus unto him, Put up again thy Sword into his place; for all they that take the ſword ſhall periſh with the ſword: The ſpeech particular to Peter, a prime Diſciple or Chriſtian, that he having drawn the ſword in defence of Chriſt, and in him of Chriſtianity it ſelf (a more juſtifiable courſe than ever any man ſince undertook under the colour of Religion) muſt put it up again; but the reaſon added of an unlimited univerſal obligingneſs to all Chriſtians; For all they that take the ſword (as Peter did, in defence of Chriſt, &c. or elſe the citation had not been pertinent to him) ſhall periſh by the ſword. And the two parallel places which are noted in the margent of our Engliſh Bibles are ſomewhat conſiderable, the firſt *Gen.*9.6. where that Law was given to the ſons of Noah, עַל שְׁפִיכוּת דָּמִים concerning the effuſion of blood, which ſure was not any prohibition to legal, though capital puniſhments of Malefactors (but rather the inveſting the Magiſtrate with that power of the ſword) and yet is by Chriſt urged as a prohibition to St. Peter, ſignifying that effuſion of blood by him in that caſe to be utterly illegal, and againſt the intention of that old Law, not abrogated (it ſeemeth) by Chriſt. The other parallel place is, Rev. 13.10. where immediately upon the repeating of thoſe words, He that killeth with the ſword ſhall be killed with the ſword, is ſubjoyned, Here is the patience and faith of the Saints, i. e. Chriſtian Martyrs, ver. 7. whoſe faith, it ſeems, and patience muſt go together, which ſure is moſt irreconcileable with forcible reſiſtance *.

* The force of this place of Chriſt to Saint Peter, I ſee Mr. M. hath laboured to delude, and therefore I have laboured to vindicate in another Diſcourſe hereto appendant, to which I refer the Reader.

The third exemplary paſſage of Chriſt was in his ſuffering, wherein many particular circumſtances might be obſerved, eſpecially his anſwer to Pilate, John 19. 11, in acknowledgment of his legal power given him from above. But all that I ſhall obſerve is only in the general, That he that had ſo many Legions of Angels, certainly ſufficient to defend him and invade his enemies (whatſoever will be thought of the Chriſtians ſtrength in Tertullians time to have done ſo too, of which more anon) did yet without the leaſt reſiſtance give himſelf up to ſuffer death. And if it ſhould be objected, that this was to accompliſh what God hath decreed (ought not Chriſt to ſuffer theſe things, and thus it is written, and thus it behoved Chriſt to ſuffer) and in obedience to that decree, not as matter of example to us, or of intimation, that it had not been lawful for him to have done otherwiſe: To this I anſwer, that as Chriſt was decreed to that death, and non-reſiſtence, ſo are Chriſtians (if S. Paul may be believed) predeſtinated to be conformed to the image of his Son, Rom. 8. that is, to that pattern of his in ſuffering, not fighting for Religion; and that revelation of Gods will in that decree being ſuppoſed, it will follow, That though Chriſt might have lawfully done otherwiſe, yet we Chriſtians now may not, eſpecially being commanded to learn of him particularly his meekneſs; i. e. eſpecially that Lamb-like quality of the Lamb of God in his ſufferings, Iſa. 53. 7. So much for the examples of Chriſt.

Now for the like of Chriſtians, it will be needleſs to mention any other than thoſe of whom Tertullian and S. Cyprian ſpeak, being ſo perfectly home to that purpoſe, Tertul in Apol. c. 37. and his book, Ad Scapulam, wholly to this purpoſe: and S. Cyprian in his book againſt Demetrianus, &c. the ſum of which is this; That the Chriſtians of that age had ſtrength ſufficient either to have reſiſted or avenged themſelves upon their heathen perſecuting Governours, but in obedience to the Laws of Chriſt, choſe rather to dye, than do ſo. The ſeveral teſtimonies (of which this is the Abſtract,) being ſo fully produced by many, and known by all, it will be more to purpoſe to vindicate them from all exceptions, and intercept all evaſions which the wit of this laſt * year (beyond all that any former age pretended to) hath invented to evacuate thoſe teſtimonies, witneſs Goodwins Anticavalieriſm, p. 23, &c. and this I ſhall take leave to do at large, becauſe it is ſaid, many have been ſatisfied in the lawfulneſs of their preſent courſe by thoſe Anſwers and Objections which that book hath helpt them to.

1. It is objected, The father (Tertullian) might eaſily be miſtaken in making the eſtimate of the ſtrength of Chriſtians in compariſon of the ſtrength of them that were to oppoſe them. This is in civil terms, to ſay, Tertullian wrote he knew not what, or at the ſofteſt, he might be ignorant of what he affirmeth he knew, and I am confident was more likely to know, living then, than the Objecter now, ſeeing or conjecturing at the diſtance of ſo many hundred years, who hath not the leaſt authority (which muſt be the Judge in matter of fact) on his ſide againſt ſo diſtinct and clear affirmation, not only of Tertullian in ſeveral places (and that in an Apology againſt the Gentiles, who could and would certainly have tript him in ſo manifeſt a falſehood, if it had been ſuch; and though the negative Argument be not fully convincing, that they did not thus trip him, becauſe we do not hear or read they did, yet will this be of as much force as any he hath to the contrary: This certainly, the writing to the Gentiles, will be able to conclude, that Tertullian had been very imprudent and treacherous to his own cauſe to have affirmed a thing in defence of it, which his adverſaries could ſo manifeſtly have proved a falſity, if it were not ſo as he affirmed) but of Cyprian alſo, who lived about the ſame time; and no writer of that age or ſince produced (I doubt not but I may ſay producible) to the contrary.

Of the proofs that are offered to make it appear poſſible and probable that Tertullian ſhould be ſo miſtaken, the firſt is, Becauſe this was no point of faith, &c. and therefore a devout father might fall under a miſpriſion herein. I grant he might; but that doth not prove he did; no nor that it is probable he ſhould be a more incompetent judge in ſuch a matter, than he that now undertakes to control him: nay ſure, leſs reaſon is there to deny the authority of the ancients in matters of fact (which if they were not evident to them, muſt needs be much leſs evident to us, who have no means to know any thing of them but their relations, nor cauſe to ſuſpect ſuch relations, but either by ſome impoſſibility in the things themſelves, which is not here pretended, or by ſome other as authentick relation contradicting it, which is as little pretended) than of faith, the ground of which being only the written word of God, is common with them to us, and therefore may enable us to judge whether that which they affirm to be matter of faith, be ſo indeed, to be found really in that ſacred Writ from whence they pretend to fetch it.

And whereas it is farther added, That no rule of charity or reaſon binds us to believe another in any thing which belongs to the art or profeſſion of another, and wherein himſelf is little verſed or exerciſed. I anſwer, that this ſaying thus applied will take away the authority of a very great part of thoſe Hiſtories which no body yet hath queſtioned. If it were ſpoken of Doctrines, it might hold, and ſure to that belongs the axiome quoted, Unicuique in arte ſuâ credendum eſt; but in narrations it is the unreaſonableſt thing in the world to require the Narrator to be of that profeſſion of which he relates the fact, for then no man muſt adventure to write a Kings life but a King; and if Mr. M. Mr. A. or Mr. S. being Miniſters of the Word, ſhall write their letters concerning the Parliaments victory at Keinton, and relate the number of the ſlain on that ſide ſo far inferiour to thoſe on the Kings, we muſt now upon this admonition retract that belief we then allowed them, and begin now (though too late) to queſtion whether it were indeed a victory or no, which cauſed ſuch ſolemn thankſgiving in this City. But then ſecondly, why this Relation ſhould ſo wholly belong to the profeſſion of another, i. e. not to Tertullians, I cannot yet diſcern. For the main of Tertullians teſtimony was, was, That the Christians chose rather to suffer than to resist, though they were able, because Christian Religion taught the one, and forbad the other: and this sure was not without the sphere of the Divine: but for their strength to resist, depending on the number of Christians, not as even ballancing the Heathens in the Empire, but as very considerable and able to raise an Army, if they would make head, I doubt not but Tertullian, a Presbyter, that now laboured in converting and confirming Christians, and was not always in his study, nay, who had lately been a Lawyer, and so not unacquainted with the publick, might know and relate with far better authority, than any who hath dared now to contradict him. For, for the art of ballancing the power of parties in a Kingdom, and grounds of precise determination of such differences (which as the Objecter denies Tertullian, so he is unwilling to yield to the States-man himself) you shall see anon that we have no need to make Tertullian Master of it; his relation will stand unmoved without it.

The second proof to blast Tertullians relation, is the ordinary one in fashion now adays, if any man differs in opinion from us, presently to examine his whole life, and if ever he did or spoke any thing unjustifiable, lay that vehemently to his charge, and by that defame him, and then we may spare the pains of answering his reasons, disproving his assertion: he once lied or sinned, and therefore it is ridiculous to expect any truth from him. The argument is this, He might mistake and miscarry in this, for not long after he miscarried so grievously, as to turn Montanist, who called himself the Holy Ghost, &c. Just as if I should resolve to believe no relation of any Minister (present in either of the Armies) of the strength of that Army, until I had examined, and were assured that he were not a Chiliast, an Arian, nor guilty of any other Heresie condemned by the Church: Yea and more, till I had some degree of assurance that he would never be such. Or as if I should resolve this man knew no Logick, because in this period he offends so much against Grammar in these words, [to turn Montanist, who called himself the Holy Ghost,] where the Relative [who] hath certainly no Antecedent; Tertullian cannot, for he called not himself the Holy Ghost (but onely used that stile so ordinary now adays [nos spirituales] and all others [animales psychici;] and Montanist cannot, unless as once * Areopagi signified the Areopagites, so now by way of compensation, Montanist must pass for Montanus, for he it was that called himself the Holy Ghost, not all or any of his followers. This way of concluding, from a slip in Grammar, an ignorance in Logick, (especially being backt with the suffrage of so many unconcluding Arguments) will be as fair Logical proceeding, as to infer, because Tertullian afterward turned Montanist, therefore then he spake he knew not what. But then Saint Cyprian was no Montanist, and yet he affirmed the same that Tertullian doth, contra Demetrian. As for the approving of dreams and furious phantasies for true Prophecies (which is added to be revenged on Tertullian for contradicting this Objecter) I confess I excuse not him, but wish we might learn any thing of him, rather than that. But I hope the narration we have now in hand was neither Maximilla's nor Prisca's dreams. If it was a phantasie, it was quite contrary to a furious one. And for the close of this Argument, wherein the warning is given, as it were from Heaven, how unsafe and dangerous it is to build on the authority of men, as I desire the Reader may take it home with him, and from thence resolve to believe no longer any thing upon this Objecters authority, so denudate of all reason, so I do not yet see, why he that once erred, must never be allowed to speak truth, the making of true narrations being compatible with the greatest Heresie in the World.

* Smect.

The third Argument against Tertullians testimony, is an observation of ὁ Νένα, that there is a proneness of inclination in much devotion in persons devoutly given to over-value the works and piety of other men. To which my onely answer shall be, that yet I hope it is not observed that devout men are so strongly inclined to tell plain lies, to this end that they may make themselves overvalued by others. This must be Tertullians infirmity (if the Objecter guess aright) being a Christian himself, and in his Apology labouring to raise an high opinion of Christians in the Gentiles to whom he writes, to which purpose if he should forge falsities, I must confess it were a shrewd weakness, very ill becoming devotion, whatever the practice of later times may say in excuse of it.

The fourth proof is from a second observation, that in the pious and Orthodox Fathers themselves there are some touches, and streins, some fibræ of the root of bitterness, which afterwards grew rank in the times of Popery, &c. The answer. All that I can collect from hence toward the conclusion designed, is, that this Objecters sence is, that, for Tertullian to say there were Christians enough in the Roman Empire to work revenge on their oppressours, was a spice of Popery; and so there is one new piece of Popery more added to the many which this age hath concluded under that title above the Inventory of the Trent Catechism. And so now to debate this any further, or profess my self to opine as Tertullian did, is to acknowledge my self Popish, and that is as bad as Prelatical: and so from henceforth all my arguments will but pass for temptations which none but carnal men must submit to, be they never so demonstrative. Yet must I have leave to wonder how in the close of this Section these words [the sounder and more considerate knowledge of these latter times] can have any reference to the point in hand. For certainly, for the strength of the then Christian party, our knowledge in these latter times cannot be sounder or more considerate, than theirs that then lived among them; or if it be, the words [latter times] will be improper, for sure it will be affirmed only of that time wherein Mr. J. G. wrote this part of this book; for I am confident he was the first that ever revealed this Act of more considerate knowledge to the World.

The fifth and last proof is, That whatever their number was, yet it is no ways likely they should be suffered to have any Arms, &c. To which, and to all the prudential state motives whereon it is grounded, (and so to all that Section) I shall return no answer, but the very words of Tertullian, which if all put together they do not defend their author from all their assaults, neither will I believe the Christians strength was sufficient to buckle with their adversaries. His words are plain; first, if we would hostes exertos agere, deal like profest enemies, desisset nobis vis numerorum & copiarum? should we have wanted force of numbers? (i. men) or armed souldiers (for so sure copiæ signifies.) Secondly, he saith as plainly, castella vestra, castra implevimus, we have filled your Caſtles and Camps, (there ſure they were armed; and ſo the Thebean Legion, which yielded themſelves to the Emperours butchery, wanted neither number nor arms to have reſiſted.) Thirdly, he ſaith, cui bello non idonei? what War had we not been fit for? (etiam impares copiis, though we had not had ſo many armed men as they) qui tam libenter trucidamur. Their deſpiſing of death, (nay, gladneſs to die) might have put them upon any hazard unarmed; and he profeſſes the only thing that kept them from reſiſting, was the Doctrine which they had learnt, that it was more lawful to be kill'd, than to kill. Fourthly, he ſaith, They had a way of revenge without Arms, to wit, by departing from them, by that ſeceſſion to have brought envy upon them (as for example, upon diſlike of the preſent ſtate, to have gone to New-England, &c. to raiſe an odium upon the Old) but this they would not be ſo malicious as to do neither: nay, beſides, amiſſio tot civium ipsâ deſtitutione puniiſſet, the loſs of ſo many Citizens would have been a puniſhment by making them leſs able to reſiſt other enemies; plures hoſtes, quàm cives uſque remanſiſſent, there would have been a greater number of enemies, than there would have been Citizens remaining. Fifthly, to put all beyond exception, he put them in mind how one night with a few fire-brands they might have wrought their revenge, if it were lawful for them to repay evil with evil. This one laſt particular being conſidered, is ſo full a demonſtration of the truth now in debate, that ſuppoſing there were but one Chriſtian at liberty to uſe that one fire-brand, there can be no longer doubt but that there was ſufficient ſtrength to work their revenge, if their Religion would have permitted them to do ſo. And if their Religion (as was ſaid out of him) were the only reſtraint, then certainly their weakneſs was not. Nay, though they ſhould after all this (by a morally impoſſible ſuppoſition) be ſuppoſed weak, yet if their Religion did truly reſtrain them, as he profeſſes it did, this were abundantly ſufficient to decide the controverſie betwixt us and the Objecter.

Having proceeded thus far in anſwer to the ſeveral exceptions againſt the truth of Tertullians aſſertion concerning the ſtrength of thoſe Chriſtians, I am invited farther by a ſecond proffer of the Objecter to make appear, that although Tertullians aſſertion ſhould be ſuppoſed true, yet it were unſufficient, it would not reach the queſtion, or caſe in hand. This certainly is ſtrange at firſt ſight, the caſe in hand being, Whether the reaſon of their non-reſiſtance were their want of ſtrength. Which in all reaſon muſt be determined negatively, when once theſe two things are ſuppoſed; firſt, that they had ſtrength; ſecondly, that the command of Chriſt, or making of Chriſtianity was the cauſe of their non-reſiſtance, and not want of ſtrength. But there is no truth ſo evident, but the cunning of ſuch a crafts-maſter will be able to transform, both from evidence and truth, and therefore (though in all juſtice a man might vow never to have commerce with ſuch a man more, that ſhould undertake thus to maſter his underſtanding, that he ſhould believe and not believe the ſame thing, yield the want of ſtrength to be the cauſe, at the very time when he acknowledges or ſuppoſes, firſt, no want of ſtrength; ſecondly, ſomewhat elſe, to wit, the command of Chriſt, to be the cauſe) yet I ſhall (to exerciſe that Chriſtian meekneſs which I deſire to aſſert by my actions, as well as words) wait on this great Artificer to the ſecond part of his Anſwer. The ſum of which, as he firſt ſets it, is this, that ſuppoſing the Father ſpake truth, concerning their ſtrength, yet on ſome conſiderations he mentions, It had been in thoſe that were called to ſuffer both want of wiſdom in reſpect of themſelves, and of charity in reſpect of others, if they ſhould have made the leaſt reſiſtance. To which my only anſwer ſhall be to beſeech him to conſider, that this is part of Tertullians teſtimony, that the thing that reſtrained them was (not this wiſdom but) the doctrine of their Chriſt; concluding it more lawful to be kill'd, than to kill, and utterly unlawful to repay evil for evil. And as for charity to others, I humbly wiſh that were, or may yet be conſidered, how much burthen, &c. this reſiſtance (of which he is the profeſt abetter) hath brought on others who are no parties on either ſide, nor I hope, ill Chriſtians, if their only puniſhable crime be, making conſcience of non-reſiſtance.

To the next Section, in anſwer to a ſuppoſed reply, where he ſaith, That it is not probable they had any ſufficiency of ſtrength. I anſwer, that I cannot be ſo tame as thus to be caught, or ſo wild as to imagine that improbable, at a time when Tertullians teſtimony is ſuppoſed to be true (as now it is ſuppoſed) the ſpecial part of which teſtimony is yielded to be, that they had ſufficient ſtrength. And where he adds 2. that 'twas not neceſſary they ſhould be of one mind and judgment touching this ſufficiency, &c. I anſwer, that we do not aſſert any ſuch neceſſity, nor doth our cauſe any way incline us to it, or want that refuge. For ſure we affirm not, that they did actually reſiſt (to which only, that concurrence would have been neceſſary) but only that they would not, though they were able, and to the evidencing of that, the concurrence of judgment you ſpeak of, is not material; for if they that did ſo think of their ſtrength, were upon grounds of Chriſtian patience and obedience, as far from doing or attempting it, as any other; theſe men would certainly have continued in the ſame obedience, though all the world had concurred with them in the opinion of their ſufficiency. For, to profeſs Chriſtian meekneſs firſt, and then upon any ſupervenient occurrence to be ready for reſiſtance, though it might be a character of the temporary (that I ſay not hypocritical) ſubjection of our days, yet muſt not we be ſo groundleſly uncharitable as to affix it on thoſe Chriſtians; and though the Objecter ſhould renounce his preſent ſuppoſition, and again contend, that Tertullian lied, and ſo diveſt him of all authority as a father, of common honeſty as a relater, yet ſure he will not be ſo ſevere to deny him ſo much of an ordinary Rhetor, as to make that an ingredient in his Apology for Chriſtians, which were the higheſt piece of an accuſation. Grant but Tertullian to have any skill in any of his profeſſions, ſuppoſe him but an Orator, if not a Divine, a tolerable pleader, if not a tolerable man, allow him but skill at the Desk, (his firſt Trade, before he was a Chriſtian) the reputation of a little eloquence, though no ſincerity) and his very pleadings will be argumentative, though his words may not.

But 'tis added in the third place, that having no invitation, countenance, or command from any authority, &c. their caſe was differing from ours. To which I anſwer again, 1. That it was not ſtill the want of ſuch command or invitation, that reſtrained them, but the contrary command of Chriſt, as hath been clear; but then ſecondly, I pray let me ask a queſtion as of one which I will in reaſon ſuppoſe not to be unacquainted with the ſence of Junius Brutus, and Buchanan, and it is only this, this, whether, if all temporal Magiſtrates neglect the work of Reformation, the Miniſters may not and ought not to attempt it, if they can hope to prevail? If ſo, then though the caſe be not juſt the ſame now and then, yet the difference is not material or pertinent, for then ſure Miniſters there would have been to invite, if that had been the Chriſtian way.

But when it is added within three lines, that we are invited, &c. by as great and as lawful an authority as this State hath any. I muſt confeſs I had thought that the King and both Houſes had been a greater authority; unleſs the meaning be not ſimply, but ad hoc, as great and as lawful an authority as this State hath any, to do what is now done, and then ſure it ſhall be granted by me, who profeſs my ſelf to ſuppoſe it impoſſible that any command given to this purpoſe ſhould be lawful, or able to ſecure any from that ſentence of Saint Pauls, They that reſiſt ſhall receive to themſelves damnation. Yet once more, it is poſſible that the Authour, by this State may mean a Republick, which though it be a word of ſome ſignification in ſome other Countries, yet that our Laws acknowledge any ſuch here, I have not yet been taught, nor ſure can any part of this Kingdom without the King, be capable of this Title, till we have moulded a new form of Government, and new Laws, as the Model of that; for undoubtedly the old ones are not acquainted with any ſuch. But that I will hope is not the meaning, becauſe it is added that inferiour Magiſtrates, &c. which ſeemeth to acknowledge that the Parliament without the King are but inferiour Magiſtrates. Of the agreeableneſs of that Title of Magiſtrates and Rulers, to that body without the head, I purpoſe not to ſpeak; only to that which is added, that they ſhould be obeyed, as well as Kings, I anſwer, (without canvaſing of the place in Saint Peter, which others have done) that if they are to be obeyed, but as well as Kings, then, 1. The King that commands not to do it, is to be obeyed, as well as they. 2. Not they againſt the King, for that the inferiority implies. An inferiour Magiſtrate, in that that is lawful, and within his Commiſſion, and not thwarted by a ſuperiour, is to be obeyed as well as if he were ſuperiour in that, or as well as the ſuperiour in any thing elſe; but ſure not to the deſpiſing of the ſuperiours lawful commands, when they do interpoſe, for that were more than as well. When the King commands that which God and the Law doth not forbid, it may be ſaid, that his commands are to be obeyed as well as God's, which the Apoſtle intimates, when he ſaith, you muſt be ſubject for conſcience ſake; and the ground of this truth is, becauſe indeed God the ſupream, commands that ſubjection to the King in ſuch matters. But ſure for all this the King is not to be obeyed againſt God, or where any countermand of his hath intervened, for this were in Saint Peters phraſe to obey men, (not as well, but) rather than God. Thus is it in that other caſe, the inferiour is to be obeyed, as well as the ſuperiour (in things lawful and not contradictory to the Superiours commands) upon that ground of neceſſity of obedience to the Superiour, from whom he hath his Commiſſion, and as Saint Peter ſaith, δι' αὐτοῦ πέμπεται, is ſent of him, i.e. of, or by that ὑπερέχων, ſupereminent perſon, the King; but ſure this holds not againſt the ſuperiour, as in the other caſe it did not. 3. Not they when they command to take up Arms againſt him whom Saint Paul bids me not reſiſt upon pain of damnation, and by my oath of Allegiance (if it were otherwiſe lawful) I have bound my ſelf that I will not. Whereupon it is obſervable, that the aſſertors of this War are now brought to undertake, that damnation, or κρῖμα, Rom. 13. ſhall not ſignifie damnation (poor men, what a weak thred doth the Sword hang in, that is juſt over their ſouls? and what a ſad condition would it be, if to one that dies a confident Martyr in this War, damnation at the day of doom ſhould prove to ſignifie damnation?) but ſome temporary mulct; and yet withal that this war is not againſt the King (when yet that other againſt the Earl of Eſſex his Army, is not doubted to be againſt the Parliament) which two ſo ſtrange, and yet diſtant holds (for if it be not againſt the King, what need of that other evaſion from the damnation, that belongs to reſiſters, or if reſiſters ſhall carry it away ſo eaſily, why may not War be avowed againſt the King, by any that will adventure his wrath?) do ſure ſignifie mens conſciences to be ſtrangely grounded, and themſelves very groundleſly confident, which are ſatisfied upon no better principles, and whoſe practices are capable of no better ſecurity.

Upon theſe grounds thus laid, of obedience due to inferiour, as well as ſuperiour (ſupreme it ſhould be, for ſo ὑπερέχων muſt here ſignifie, and I hope that our King amongſt us is ſuch) Magiſtrates, the Objecter puts a caſe, that the inferiour Governour requires that which is only honeſt, &c. as to do our beſt to defend our ſelves againſt thoſe that, contrary to law and conſcience, aſſault us, the ſuperiour that which is contrary to both, viz. to ſit ſtill, &c. In this caſe he reſolves it is moſt clear on his ſide, for (whether the lawfulneſs or neceſſity he intimates not of) reſiſtance againſt the ſuperiour. To this I anſwer, that it is hard to believe that the Objecter did not purpoſely intend to deceive his Reader by that phraſe [only honeſt, &c.] For that is a very doubtful ſence, it may ſignifie, that nothing elſe were honeſt, and then it is in that ſence apparently falſe, for if it were honeſt to take up Arms againſt a King, yet ſure may not-taking-up Arms be honeſt too, for (whatever the crime of neutrality ſignifies in theſe days) it may be lawful for a man to ſuffer injury, to ſuffer himſelf to be defrauded (and that by a King, as well as by an equal) 1 Cor. 6. 7. I hope reſiſtance, though it have lately commenced, and taken upon it the degree of vertue, yet hath not turned Projector, got the monopoly of vertue and honeſty into its hand, that it ſhould engroſs and encloſe that title, and there be no other vertue or honeſty beſides this; yet would the affirmations of ſome out of no meaner place than the Pulpit, [that all that are for the King at this time are Atheiſts or Papiſts] conclude and perſwade thus much. But I would fain believe that the meaning of the Phraſe [only honeſt, &c.] is, [no more than honeſt] i.e. not neceſſary. But if that be it, then ſure the ſuperiour Governour may deſerve to be obeyed in forbidding it, as well as the inferiour in commanding: For it will not follow in that caſe, that the King commands ſomewhat contrary to the Law of God, and nature, but only ſomewhat contrary to ſomething which was agreeable, i.e. not againſt the Law of God, and nature, i.e. prohibits a thing lawful, not neceſſary, as the other is ſuppoſed to command a thing lawful, not neceſſary: which ſure were as free for him to do, as for the inferiour, ſuppoſing, as the Objecter ſuppoſes, that the command of God indifferently extends it for obedience to either, in things that are lawful. Hence it appears that in the caſe here put, the command of the Superiour is falſly affirmed, to be an unlawful command (for then the matter of the inferiours command muſt be ſuppoſed, not only honeſt, but neceſſary) and if it be a lawful one, it may and will then make void that obligation for that particular, which is ſuppoſed by the Law of God to lye on us, to obey the inferiour in that which is lawful. The ſhort is, if that which is here ſpoken of, be in it ſelf neceſſary, we muſt do it, as in ſpight of all countermands of the ſuperiour, ſo without all commands or invitations of the inferiour Magiſtrate; but if it be not neceſſary in it ſelf, neither will the commands of an inferiour make it neceſſary to any who ſtands prohibited by a ſuperiour.

In the fourth Section the Objecter offers at a reaſon, why thoſe ancient Chriſtians (ſuppoſing ſtrength in them) ſhould rather patiently ſuffer, becauſe before their converſion they had conſented to the Emperours power, whereby thoſe Edicts were made for the murthering of Chriſtians, &c. To which I anſwer, that it is ridiculous to ſeek out or impoſe upon the Reader probable or poſſible reaſons for their non-reſiſtance, when Tertullian in their name ſpecifies the true only reaſon, the Goſpel doctrine of Chriſtian patience and obedience. But for the particular of their conſent, much might be added, to ſhew the vanity of that plea, if that were tanti, or pertinent. I ſhall only ſay, that if the Emperour legally murthered Chriſtians, then their conſent to that Law (or to the power of the Emperour who made it) would not bind or diſpenſe with them to omit any thing neceſſary or otherwiſe commanded by any greater power; for if I ſwear to do ſo, I muſt break my oath, non obſtante what is concluded from Pſalm 15. 4. And if it were not otherwiſe neceſſary or commanded by greater power, then neither is reſiſtance now. And then the Kings prohibition will as much reſtrain me in any thing not neceſſary, as their heatheniſh conſent could be ſuppoſed to reſtrain them then. Nay, he that makes that conſent a nullity (as this Objecter in fine doth) what reaſon can he render why he that gave that conſent, might not plead that nullity for ſuch (though carnal) advantages as life is, if he could make good his pleading, and no other reſtraint lye on him, but only that null-conſent?

For the fifth Section, How that may be lawful [for an entire body to do, which may not be lawful for a part] and ſo for us now, though not for them; I anſwer, That if the phraſe [entire body] ſignifie the head and members too, then the period is true; if not, then the whole Section is fallacious: for it follows not, that though the repreſentative body without the head is more, than a party in the Empire, without the repreſentation of the reſt, therefore the firſt may reſiſt forcibly, though the ſecond ſhould not: for he that from St. Paul denies reſiſtance of Subjects indefinitely to Kings, will not be moved from that hold, by diſcerning ſome other ſlight differences between Subjects, unleſs they may appear ſuch that on one ſide they may authorize reſiſtance. But then ſecondly, If the Doctrine of Chriſtian patience, &c. were the cauſe of Non-reſiſtance, then ſure was not this other conſideration wherein they differ from us, the cauſe of it.

Well, having gone thus far, in attendance on this Objecter, and to exerciſe that patience, which we ſo much deſire to perſwade: there is yet the greateſt Fort behind unvanquiſhed, erected in the ſixth Section, and reſcued from all ſuppoſed aſſailants in ſix particulars following, ſet up like ſo many fortreſſes about it. The ſum of it is (for I would not be bound to recite what every one may read in a printed Book) that if thoſe Primitive Chriſtians had ſtrength, and might lawfully have reſiſted, (by the way Tertullian only affirms the firſt, and is ſo far from ſuppoſing, that he abſolutely denies the ſecond) yet might God hide this liberty from them; and ſo his after diſpenſations did require that he ſhould hide it from them, and yet manifeſt it to us: and theſe diſpenſations he ſpecifies to be Gods counſel of Antichriſts coming into the world then, and of his being deſtroyed, and caſt out now. The hiding of this truth of Subjects power and right to reſiſt their Superiours, being neceſſary to help Antichriſt up to his throne. And the Commonalty of Chriſtians doing contrary to the will of their Superiours, being the men that muſt have the principal hand in executing Gods judgments upon the Whore. Revel. 18. 4, 5, 6, and 8. that is, in the pulling him down.

To this whole Diſcourſe (the firſt I am confident that ever was written on this Subject) I muſt anſwer by degrees, (that I may not omit any thing that is added for proof or explication by the Authour) and firſt, I muſt deſire the word may or might [may hide] may be changed into plain intelligible ſence. Say, did God hide the liberty of reſiſtance from thoſe Primitive Chriſtians, or no? If he did not, then away with this whole Section, and particularly that affirmation, Pag. 30. that God's diſpenſations did require that it ſhould be hid from them: but if God did indeed hide it; then firſt this is more than a ſuppoſition, it is a plain conceſſion that thoſe Chriſtians Tertullian ſpeaks of, might not lawfully have reſiſted, though they had had ſtrength (which was ſo long denied) for the light being hidden, they muſt have done it without faith, or againſt conſcience, yea, and againſt Gods determinate counſel, who, (the Objecter ſaith) had great cauſes to hide it, of which one ſure muſt be, that it ſhould not be uſed. 2. Here is a great ſecret of new Divinity, that God hides truths (not, as Chriſt ſpake in parables, becauſe they ſeeing ſee not, Matth. 13. 13. but) on purpoſe to help Antichriſt to his Throne, (of which more anon.) As for that inſtance of thoſe that eat herbs, I pray conſider, whether that be pertinent to prove that God purpoſely hides truths from us, or particularly this truth in hand. For ſure that liberty God hid from none in the Apoſtles time; for the preaching of the Goſpel manifeſted the lawfulneſs of meats, as well as herbs, only ſome ſaw not, or conſidered not, that that was manifeſted, and thinking ſome old legal obligation (as others did circumciſion) to lye ſtill on them, ſubmitted to it out of piety. Now apply this to the point in hand. Certainly the liberty of forcible reſiſtance againſt Superiours (though it ſhould be granted) would never be found of this kind, a liberty brought into the world by Chriſt, which before had not been there. If he ſhall affirm it was, (as he muſt if that inſtance of eating be pertinent) though by the conceſſion of the latter part, he muſt diſclaim all his former old Teſtament pleas for reſiſtance, from the people about Jonathan, from David, and from Eliſha; yet will he never give any probable appearance for the affirmation in the firſt part, that Chriſt gave any ſuch new before-unrevealed liberty: but rather, if any ſuch liberty before there were, it was undoubtedly taken away by Chriſt, from whoſe example and precepts it was that thoſe Primitive Chriſtians, and we alſo, dare not make uſe of that ſuppoſed liberty. The only thing I can imagine poſſible to be replyed, is, that though the compariſon hold not exactly, yet it may hold in this, that as that liberty of eating was hid to ſome (it matters not by whom, or how) ſo this of reſiſting to others. To which I return, that then it is confeſt, that this inſtance doth only illuſtrate the Objecters meaning, but not ſo much as probably confirm his aſſertion: and then I am ſorry I have conſidered it ſo long, and therefore to bring the point to an iſſue, I muſt thirdly ask, Where this liberty, or the authority for this liberty was, when it was thus hid. Was it in the old Teſtament? Though it ſhould be there, as it is not, yet it might be taken away in the New, (as thoſe things which in the old Teſtament, or the law of nature, are neareſt to giving of that liberty, are abſolutely reformed by Chriſts Doctrine and practice) and then that were good for nothing. Was it in the new? Then deal plainly, ſhew the place in the New Teſtament which gives that liberty, and is now found out by poſterity, though hidden to them. Sure we have found out no new Scripture, to them unknown (the Nazarites Goſpel though it rehearſe ſome ſpeeches of Chriſt not in our Canon, yet is not produced for any of this nature: that famous one which it fathers on our Saviour, Nunquam læti ſitis niſi cum fratrem in charitate videritis, is of another ſtamp, I would to God this Apocryphal Precept might be Canonical among us) and for any place of the known Canon miſ-underſtood by them, and now clearly unclouded and revealed to us in a right underſtanding, which inforces this, I muſt be ſo charitable to the Objecter, as to think that if he had diſcerned any ſuch, he would not have failed to have ſhewed it us, (as well as his interpretations of Rom. 13. and Revel. 17. 17.) if it were but to leave us unexcuſable for not being his Proſelytes. Beyond theſe ſeveral ways of revelation, if poſterity have had any other (or indeed any but that of underſtanding of Scripture, by Scripture light, or aſſiſtance of Gods Spirit, which was not before underſtood) from whence to fetch a liberty which is not in the old Bible, or is denied in the New, this is it which we deſire ſo to warn men of under the name of Enthuſiaſme, which is hardly ever diſtinguiſhable from a demure frenſie, and I muſt call it now the dream of the dreamers, Jude 8. that deſpiſe dominion, ſpeak evil of dignities, but far from divine revelation. And yet that this is the thing that this Objecter hath an eye to, (and not the underſtanding of Scripture more clearly, than before) may appear, in that he affirms this truth hid from their teachers, (though not from all without exception) who yet if it were hid in the Scripture, were of all others moſt unlikely not to find it. As for that offer of proof, that this truth might lye hid, becauſe there was no occaſion of ſtudying it: I anſwer, that in Tertullians days, when there was occaſion to ſtudy it, (as great as ever can ariſe any, becauſe the perſecutions then, were as heavy perſecutions) we may by that argument think they would have ſearcht into it, at leaſt the light then would not in ordinary account have proved more dim, as he ſaith it did, if the Scripture were the Candleſtick where this light was held out. That which he adds in the next place, of the ſpirit of courage, patience, and conſtancy, which was by God poured out on the Church in thoſe days, and ſo made Martyrdom ſeem a deſirable thing to them, is more like a reaſon indeed of their not enquiring into this liberty: and herein, I muſt acknowledge the ingenuity of the Objecter, or the power of truth which extorted this reaſon from him, ſo little to the advantage of his cauſe, and ſo much of ours. For this is certainly the bottom of the buſineſs, the want of Chriſtian courage, patience, &c. (for that kind of courage is not in fighting, but ſuffering) hath helpt us of this laſt age to that (dream, not) revelation of liberty, which was never heard of among the ancients. But by the way, it ſeems by the Objecter that now Martyrdom is no deſirable thing, nor taking up Chriſts Croſs, nor following of him. We are reſolved to have no more to do with Martyrdom, think that the thouſand years for the Saints to reign on earth are now at hand, and ſo ſuffering, or conformity to the image of Chriſt, no longer the thing we are predeſtined to, we muſt ſet up a new trade of fighting, deſtroying, reſiſting, rebelling, leave enduring to thoſe Chriſtians which were furniſhed with extraordinary ſtrength from Heaven. Which are the Objecters words of the Primitive Chriſtians, which, ſaith he, kept them from ſtudying caſes and queſtions about lawfulneſs of eſcaping, (which word meer ſhame hath put in, utterly impertinently, inſtead of reſiſting.) I confeſs, I had thought our Queen Mary Martyr had had this ſtrength from Heaven too; and that it was not like miracles, an extraordinary gift only for the Infancy of the Church: but now it ſeems we muſt expect to ſee no more Martyrs, till we can remove Mountains again: This Objecter, it is clear, is reſolved againſt it at this time, and that his actions, as well as writings, will be ready to teſtifie. For my own part, I truſt I ſhall be as ready to oppoſe the one, as I am to confute the other, and to think nothing more Chriſtian ſtill, than to be crucified with my Chriſt, and if I might chuſe the Article of Chriſtian Doctrine which I ſhould moſt deſire to ſeal with my bloud, I think it would be that of meekneſs, patience, non-reſiſtance, peaceableneſs, charity, which I conceive Chriſt hath been ſo paſſionately earneſt to recommend unto me, as moſt diametrically oppoſite to the moſt unchriſtian damning ſins of pride, ambition, malice, rebellion, unquietneſs, uncontentedneſs, &c.

Fourthly, for the whole diſcourſe about Antichriſt, there muſt many things be returned. 1. That it is not tolerable in a Chriſtian to affirm, that God purpoſely hid truths, that Antichriſt might come into the world; this ſo harſh ſence the Objecter firſt diſguiſes in another Phraſe, that God by ſpecial diſpenſation ſuffered him to make many truths his footſtool; but indeed that reaches not home to the buſineſs undertaken to be proved: For it follows not thence, that this of reſiſting Superiours was one of thoſe truths; if it were, then God ſuffered him to make uſe of it, which he could not but by its being made known, whereas he ſuppoſes it was then hid; If he mean Antichriſt hid it, and ſo made the hiding it, his foot-ſtool, Then 1. it was not God that hid it, as before he ſaid, but Antichriſt. 2. It had then been manifeſt before, and then began to be hid, when there was moſt occaſion to uſe it, which before he made improbable. If I were put upon the rack I could not give a rational account of thoſe words of the Objecter laſt-recited, or ſuch as may but be conſonant to his preſent undertaking: that which follows is more clear, that God cauſed a dead ſleep to fall upon thoſe truths: If he did, I wonder who firſt raiſed them out of that dead ſleep; Jun. Brutus, or Buchan. or Mr. Goodwin? but ſtill it ſeems God did on purpoſe hide truths in favour and aſſiſtance to Antichriſt to help him into the world, and this, not like the Spirit of ſlumber ſent on men for their puniſhment, but on divine truths which ſure had not deſerved it: yet more particularly that the doctrine of liberty to reſiſt Superiours ſhould be ſo oppoſite in a ſpecial manner to Antichriſt, that it was fain to be laid aſleep to give him paſſage into his Throne, ſeemeth very ſtrange to me; 1. Becauſe one piece of Antichriſts pride is to exalt himſelf above all that is called God, which is moſtly interpreted Kings; and if rightly, then they that do ſo enhaunce the power of the people, as to make the King univerſis minorem, and looſe the reins of obedience ſo far as to permit reſiſtance; will I fear diſcern ſome part of the mark of the Beaſt upon their own breaſts. 2. Becauſe the τὸ κατέχον, 2 Theſ. 26, and ὁ κατέχων, verſe 7. that hindred, or let Antichriſt, and was like to do ſo ſtill, till he were taken out of the way, was by the Fathers commonly reſolved to be the Roman Empire or Imperial Soveraignty of Rome, ſee Tert. De reſurr. c. 24. Ambr. com. in 2 Theſſ. Hier. qu. 11. ad Algas. Chryſ. in 2 Theſ. Cyr. Hier. catech. 11. Aug. de civ. Dei. l. 20. c. 19. Lact. l. 7. c. 25. Oecum. in loc. & ib. Sever. & Gen. and therefore on the ſacking of Rome by Alaricus the Goth, St. Jerome preſently expected that Antichriſt ſhould come, and in his book ad Ageruchiam de monogam. wonders that any one would think of marrying at that time. Hence, have learned men obſerved, was that cuſtom in the moſt ancient times to pray in their Liturgies for the laſting of the Roman Empire, that ſo Antichriſt might be long a coming, Tert. Apol. c. 33. ad Scap. c. 2. From whence though nothing elſe can be demonſtratively inferred, yet this certainly may, that in thoſe many Fathers opinion, the power of Kings continuing intire, was not like to help Antichriſt in, nor conſequently the bringing down that power by the revelation of the doctrine of reſiſtance, like to cauſe an abortion in Antichriſts birth, or now tend to the caſting him out of the world.

As for the evidence of that Revelation-rule that the communalty in oppoſition to their Kings, muſt have the great ſtroke in executing Gods judgment on Antichriſt, proved, Revel. 18. 4, 6, 9. I muſt anſwer, 5. That I ſhall never wonder enough at the power of Prejudice evidenced in this Objecter, by what he hath put together to this purpoſe, Pag. 32. To prove that the people contrary to their Kings ſhall deſtroy Antichriſt, this is thought by him ſufficient evidence, that the people are commanded to go out of her, verſe 4. when verſe 9. it follows that the Kings of the earth ſhall bewail her, and lament for her: The unconcludingneſs of the argument I ſhall not inſiſt on, but only look forward to another place which he cites immediately, Revel. 17. 17. Where the ten Kings are ſaid to hate the Whore, and make her deſolate. Now the word Kings in this laſt place ſignifies, ſaith the Objecter, not the perſons of Kings but their ſtates and Kingdoms, and to this purpoſe proofs are produced: But 1. I beſeech him to deal ingenuouſly; Doth the word King ever ſignifie the Kingdom oppoſed to the King, i. e. any part of the Kingdom excluding the King? But then 2. See the myſtery of prejudice which I mentioned; where it is for the Objecters turn, Revel. 18. The Kings of the earth muſt ſignifie their perſons in oppoſition to their people; but where it is not for his turn, Revel. 17. there the word Kings, muſt ſignifie the people, or any but the King: Would not the ſpirit of meekneſs have eaſily compounded this buſineſs, and have given the word [Kings] leave in both places, to ſignifie both their perſons and their Realms, and ſo have reconciled the places, that ſome Kings with their Kingdoms ſhould bewail her, and ſome again hate her? they bewail her, that continued with her till her deſtruction, when they ſee the ſmoak of her burning, 18. 9. and others hate her, who had once taſted of her filthineſs, and repented and left her before; this were very agreeable to thoſe texts, if we had not peremptorily reſolved to fetch ſome other ſence out of them. 3. That firſt place alone by it ſelf concludes only thus much, that good men come (or are exhorted to come) out from Antichriſt, and avenge the whore, and earthly men that have love to her, bewail her, but not that either the firſt are all common people (for ſure Kings may be called Gods people, or be in that number) or the ſecond none but Kings. As for the proof that thoſe people, verſe 4. are the ſubjects of thoſe Kings, verſe 9. becauſe they are ſuch as come out of Babylon, ſure that is very weak; for Babylon being the Province of the Whore, there may be Kings as well as ſubjects there, and thoſe Kings come out too, as well as thoſe ſubjects. For ſuppoſe King and people of England all Popiſh, why might they not all reform together? It ſeems Antichriſt muſt never be caſt out of a Kingdom till the people do it in ſpight of the King, and therefore it is concluded that it was not done here in the days of King Edward, nor Queen Elizabeth, nor King James, and now ſince the new Revelations have aſſured men that Antichriſt muſt now be caſt out utterly from among us, it is become neceſſary that our Soveraign ſhould be a Papiſt, and as much zeal and as ſolid arguments uſed to perſwade our friends that indeed he is ſo, (though his conſtant word and actions now evidence the contrary) as are produced to maintain any other article of our new Saints belief: One of the moſt ſuſpected and hated hereſies of theſe days, is to doubt of the Popiſh affections of our Superiours, eſpecially the King. Well by this doctrine, if the King ſhould chance not to be a Papiſt, he muſt turn to be one, or elſe Popery cannot be caſt out in his time. If ſo he ſhould do, turn Papiſt on purpoſe to prepare, or diſpoſe his Kingdom to turn Antichriſt out, this might be but anſwerable to Gods hiding of truths to that end to help Antichriſt in. But ſhould his Majeſty be ſo malicious as to prove Proteſtant in earneſt, then what would become of that ſure word of Prophecy that ſo many have been perſwaded to depend on, that Antichriſt muſt now be caſt out of this Kingdom, which ſaith the Objecter cannot be, unleſs the people do it while the King bewails. I hope I have ſaid enough of this.

As for the connexion of this obſervation, with the concluſion in hand (though it matter little, now, the obſervation is proved ſo falſe, yet) I ſhall add, that if the people were to do that great feat of caſting out Antichriſt, yet it appears not how liberty of forcible reſiſting their Kings ſhould be a neceſſary requiſite to the work, unleſs the lawful King be the Antichriſt in every country; for otherwiſe it is very poſſible that though they obey their Kings, they may reſiſt Antichriſt; though they love and reverence their lawful Superiour, they may hate and abjure their unlawful. Once more, whereas it is again repeated, that the knowledge of the ſuppoſed ſubjects liberty would have kept Antichriſt from his throne, I repeat again, that if it would, God ſure would have revealed it to them of all others, unleſs it appear, that God was more angry with the ſins of Chriſtians in

Tertullians

Tertullians age, and ſo more fought againſt them, than he doth in ours againſt us: For though God may of mercy undeſerved throw down Antichriſt, yet that he ſhould ſo immediately and illuſtriouſly labour to ſet him up, unleſs out of deſerved indignation to a people, is not eaſily reſolved; yet if this may appear de facto to be ſo, I ſhall yield; till then, ἐπέχω.

The laſt blot laid on Tertullian to obliterate all whatſoever can be fetcht from him, is, that the authority of Tertullian, and the ſubmiſſion of the Chriſtians being both Apocryphal, is too light to weigh againſt the practice of the great Prophet Eliſha, &c. To which I anſwer, that that being ſuppoſed, yet the grounds on which Tertullian ſaith the Chriſtians of his time did ſo patiently ſuffer, viz. the doctrine of Chriſtian patience and meekneſs, are not Apocryphal, nor inferiour to that of Eliſha, though it were ſuppoſed to be argumentative, or concluding for reſiſtance. For any thing elſe added by the Objecter in this buſineſs, as the diſproving of Tertullians relations on grounds of Chriſtian doctrine, from the contrary practice of David and Eliſha, though I might anſwer in one word, that Chriſtians are reſtrained from ſome things which were practiſed without fault in the Old-Teſtament, yet becauſe thoſe Old-Teſtament examples have been fully cleared by many others of our Writers, and indeed are not pertinent to the diſcourſe I was upon when this Objecter firſt met me in the way, and led me this chaſe after him, I ſhall not be ſo impertinent as to add any thing, but conceive my ſelf to have vindicated the teſtimonies of thoſe Fathers from all poſſible objections, and ſo to have joined the practice of Chriſtians, (thoſe ancient Primitive ones) and proved them correſpondent to the example of Chriſt, and ſo to have made good my ſecond argument from the example of Chriſt and Chriſtians.

My third is, from the very making of Chriſtianity, and particularly of the Proteſtant Doctrine. And 1. Of Chriſtianity, which as it differs from the Laws both of Moſes and Nature, ſo it conſtantly reforms and perfects thoſe (diſſolves not any thing that was moral in them, nor promiſes impunity for non-performance, but upon repentance and reformation) elevates and raiſes them up to an higher pitch, at leaſt than Jews or natural men had conceived or underſtood themſelves obliged to, which the ancient Fathers generally reſolve to be the meaning of his ἀλλὰ πληρῶσαι, Matth. 5. 17. to fill up all vacuities in thoſe former Laws, and add unto them that perfection which ſhould be proportionable to that greater meaſure of grace now afforded under the Goſpel. Thus in that Sermon upon the Mount, ἄκρον καὶ κορυφὴ τῆς φιλοσοφίας, that top of practical Divinity, (ſet down by way of particular inſtance of Chriſts purpoſe, οὐ καταλῦσαι τὸν νόμον, ἀλλὰ πληρῶσαι) beſides the third prooemial beatitude, Bleſſed are the meek; which certainly though it may contain more, yet excludes not, but principally notes the meek, obedient Subjects under Government, the non-reſiſters, and therefore hath the ſame promiſe annext which the Law had given in the fifth Commandment ('twas there, That thy days may be long in the Land; 'tis here, They ſhall poſſeſs the earth, τὴν γῆν, which Pſal. 37. 11. whence it is cited, refers clearly to the Land of Canaan, though improved into an higher ſence now in the Goſpel.) And again, beſides the ſeventh beatitude of the peacemakers, or peaceable (εἰρηνοποιοὶ and εἰρηνικοὶ, being equivalent in the Scripture ſtile, vid. Jam. 3. 18.) and the eighth, of thoſe that are perſecuted for righteouſneſs ſake, (whence ſure is not excluded the cauſe of Religion and Chriſtianity it ſelf) as alſo of taking up the Croſs (of which I deſign another diſcourſe to ſpeak more largely) which ſure are oppoſite enough to forcible reſiſting of lawful Magiſtrates, eſpecially for Religion: beſides all theſe, I ſay, in the introduction to that Sermon, there is in the body of the Sermon it ſelf, an Ἐγὼ λέγω ὑμῖν μὴ ἀντιστῆναι τῷ πονηρῷ, which ſure prohibits all forcible reſiſting or violence even to the ὁ πονηρὸς, the injurious or (πονηρὸς from πόνος) troubleſome perſon, which if it ſhould chance to be our King, would not certainly be more lawfully or Chriſtianly reſiſted, than any body elſe; eſpecially, when it is our Religion which is invaded, which of all other things a whole Army of plunderers cannot rob us of, (as they may of the cloke, ver. 40.) and therefore needs not our violence to retain it; nor is ever injured, but more illuſtrated by our ſuffering. To this may be added the conſideration of the depoſitum left by Chriſt with his Diſciples, pacem, peace, John 14. 27. (which it ſeems only the beloved Diſciple had recorded) Peace I leave with you, external peace, for the pacem meam, my peace follows after as a gift perhaps peculiar to them that priſed and kept this legacy; and if it be objected, that Chriſt came not to ſend peace, but a ſword, Matth. 10. 34. that ſure refers not to Chriſts prime counſel or purpoſe, but to the event; what he foreſaw it would be, not what he had determined it ought (which manner of ſpeech is very ordinary in all Authors) for the precept is punctual to Peter againſt the uſe of the ſword, and to all the Diſciples for preſerving of peace, Mark 9. 50. and to that it is thought the mention of ſalt belongs in that place, which among other qualities is, ἑνωτικὸν unitive, have ſalt in your ſelves, and peace one with another. On theſe Texts many effectual emphatical deſcants are added by the Apoſtles, Rom. 12. 18. If it be poſſible, as much as in you lyeth, live peaceably with all men, and Heb. 12. 14. follow peace with all men, διώκετε, an agoniſtical word to run for it as for a prize, or βραβεῖον, and 1 Theſ. 4. 11. φιλοτιμεῖσθαι ἡσυχάζειν, we render it, ſtudy (it is, be emulous, contend, ſtrive, make it your ambition) to be quiet; to which I ſhall only add two places more, Jam. 3. 17, 18. The wiſdom which cometh from above, is firſt pure, then peaceable, &c. which before, verſe 13. he had called meekneſs of wiſdom; then 1 Pet. 3. 3. where after direction for the ὑποτασσόμεναι obedience of wives to husbands (and we know the Kingdoms relation to the King is, beſides others, that of a wife to an husband, who is therefore eſpouſed to it with the ring at his Coronation) it is added, ἐν τῷ ἀφθάρτῳ τοῦ πραέως καὶ ἡσυχίου πνεύματος, that her bravery conſiſts in the ſincerity (I think it ſhould be rendred) of a meek and quiet ſpirit, which is in the ſight of God of great price. If it be objected, that theſe many places of peace are but general wide illations againſt reſiſtance, or however, no more pertinent to the caſe about reſiſting of Magiſtrates, than of any other private man: I anſwer, that though I might thus argue, à minori, (and alſo aſſume, that no other reſiſtance is near ſo deſtructive of peace, as that reſiſting of the Supreme power, that being indeed the ſhaking of Government it ſelf, which is the band of peace, and the diſſolving of which returns us to the ſtate of common hoſtility, leaves us a wilderneſs of Bears or Tygers, not a ſociety of men) yet I ſhall confeſs, that I intended not to lay any more weight on this part of the Argument, than any man will acknowledge it able to bear, and that therefore before I infer my concluſion of non-reſiſtance from the making of Chriſtianity, I

muſt add to theſe places ſo paſſionate for peace, another ſort of places concerning obedience, of which, (without naming the places being ſo known already) I ſhall venture this obſervation, that in the New Teſtament, eſpecially the Epiſtles of the Apoſtles, (which were all written in time of the reign of wicked Heathen bloody adverſaries of Chriſtianity, and can refer to none but thoſe) there is no one Chriſtian vertue, or Article of Faith more clearly delivered, more effectually inforced upon our underſtandings and affections to be acknowledged by the one (againſt all pretence of Chriſtian liberty to the contrary) and ſubmitted to by the other, than that of obedience to Kings, &c. It were moſt eaſie to vindicate thoſe places from all the gloſſes and ſcholia's that the Writers of this year, M. Goodwin in Anticav. M. Bur. M. Bridges, &c. have invented to free themſelves and others from the obedience moſt ſtrictly required there, but I would not again trouble any ingenuous man with ſuch extravagant diſcourſes as even now I learnt by experience would be neceſſary to anſwer ſuch exceptions, which mens wit or ſomewhat worſe hath produced; beſides, thoſe places have been by others vindicated already. I ſhall only ſay, whoſoever can without coloured ſpectacles find ground for the preſent reſiſtance in thoſe places of Scripture, Rom. 13. 1 Pet. 2. 13, 18, &c. ſo far as to ſettle and quiet a conſcience, I ſhall not conceive my underſtanding fit to duel with his, any more than I would wreſtle with a fiend, or combat with the fire, which Pythagoras tells me would avail little; he that can be ſure that damnation (Rom. 13. 2.) ſignifies not damnation, but ſome temporary Mulct only (if the King ſhould prove able to inflict it) when verſe 5. it is added, we muſt needs be ſubject, not only for wrath, (i.e. fear of temporary puniſhment) but alſo for conſcience ſake, (which when it accuſes, binds over to eternal wrath, or damnation) I profeſs I know not what Camel he may not ſwallow; I ſhall only in the bowels of Chriſt deſire him to conſider, what a ſad condition it would prove, if being on this confidence engaged, and by Gods hand taken away in this War, he ſhould at Gods tribunal hear Saint Paul avouch, that by κρῖμα or damnation in that place, he did mean no leſs than eternal damnation without repentance: O how would his countenance change, his thoughts trouble him, the joints of his loins be looſed, and his knees ſmite one againſt another, one general σπασμὸς poſſeſs all his faculties, and M. Bridg. &c. be unable to ſettle him or give him confidence any longer, when the Tekel ſhall come out of the Wall over againſt that interpretation of his, that it is weighed in the balance (of truth and judgment) and found wanting; Of this word κρῖμα I deſign another diſquiſition: only I could not defer to forewarn the Reader of his danger in this place, and now I ſhall not doubt from the making of Chriſtianity to infer my concluſion of non-reſiſtance, not doubting but the premiſſes will bear it.

For the other part of this third Argument from the making of the Proteſtant Doctrine, I would fain be very brief by way of compenſation for my former importunity, and therefore ſhall engage my ſelf not to trouble the Reader with citations or names, which yet might be brought by hundreds of reformed Writers for every Junius Brutus, and Buchanan that hath appeared for the contrary ſince the Reformation. Though the truth is, ſuch as theſe if they muſt be called Proteſtants, are yet in this ſomewhat more than that title ever imported, I may ſay perfect Jeſuits in their principles, and reſolutions concerning Kings (no Papiſt of any other Order hath gone ſo far) although they differ ſomewhat in the ſeat of that power of making ſuch reſiſtance. That which I deſigned to ſay on this point is only this; That the doctrine of Allegeance to Kings, and of their ſupremacy in all cauſes, hath always been counted a principal head of difference between the Proteſtants and the worſt of Papiſts; and a ſpecial evidence which moſt men have uſed, to conclude the Papacy to be ὁ Ἀντίχριστος the Antichriſt, is this, that the Pope exalteth himſelf above all that is called God, i.e. The Kings of the earth; that he in caſe the King be not a Catholick, abſolves Subjects from their Allegiance to him, that he pretends power over them in ſpiritual things, and in temporal in ordine ad ſpiritualia. It is not unknown to any that the Oath of Supremacy, if not of Allegiance, among us is principally deſigned to diſcern and diſcover Papiſts, of whom, one of the prayers appointed for the fifth of November affirms, that their Religion is Rebellion, that ſure is, that one main difference betwixt Romiſh and Engliſh, Popiſh and Proteſtant Doctrine is that of liberty to Rebel in ſome caſes, particularly in that of Religion: In oppoſition to all which Doctrines or inſinuations of theirs, there is no Church that ever expreſt their ſence in any Article more fully and largely, than ours hath in this particular, witneſs the ſeveral parts of the Homily of Diſobedience and Rebellion, printed in Queen Elizabeths time. And if herein all other parts of the Reformed Church have not gone ſo far as we, yet ſhall I not retract my aſſerting this Doctrine purely Proteſtant, 1. Becauſe this Kingdom hath always been eſteemed a prime part of the Reformation, wherein the Papacy was legally caſt out, not by violence or tumults of the people, and ſo nothing rejected but what in ſobriety was neceſſary to be rejected, and therefore our Church hath generally been the Norma, or rule by which others have deſired to compoſe themſelves, and never yet any other ſo preferred before us, as that our Anceſtours could think fit to conform to them. 2. Becauſe in many other Countreys the Government is not Regal, or Monarchical, as here it is; Bodin. l. 2. c. 5. de rep. can find none of this nature in Europe, but France and Spain, and England and Scotland (I conceive Ireland he contained under the word Angliam) in which, ſaith he, Reges ſine controverſia jura omnia majeſtatis habent per ſe: Singulis civibus nec univerſis fas eſt (it ſeems Maſter Dale our Embaſſadour, from whom he had received his advertiſements of the ſtate of this Kingdom, had not then heard that our King though Singulis major is univerſis minor, which certainly had diveſted him of all Soveraignty, it being impoſſible that the Soveraign or Supream of all ſhould be Minor than any) Summi principis vitam, famam aut fortunas in diſcrimen vocare, ſeu vi, ſeu judicio conſtituto id fiat, &c. As for the Emperour of Germany, Charles the fifth by name, he ſaith plainly, Tyrannide cives ac rempublicam oppreſſit, cùm jura majeſtatis non haberet, which if it be true, will be ſome excuſe to the German Princes in what they did at that time in taking up Arms for Religion, though it is moſt certain what he affirms, that when thoſe Princes conſulted with M. Luther about it, num id jure divino liceret, whether it were lawful in the ſight of God, Ille negavit, he reſolved it utterly unlawful: this anſwer, ſaith Bodin, Luther gave, Perinde atque ſi Carolus ſummam imperii ſolus haberet, and therefore much more muſt it be given, when the caſe is of a Monarch indeed, as he concludes; and though he acknowledge that diſtinction, which it ſeems Luther did not, betwixt that Emperour and true Monarchs, yet is he fain to paſs a ſad obſervation upon the fact of thoſe Princes in taking up Arms for Religion, againſt Luther's advice, Ita funeſtum bellum reique publicæ calamitoſum ſuſceptum eſt, cùm ingenti principum ac civium ſtrage, quia juſta cauſa nulla videri poteſt adverſus patriam arma ſumendi. I would to God thoſe words were Engliſht in every of our hearts: a direful and calamitous War with the ſlaughter of all ſorts; becauſe (though it were for Religion, yet) no cauſe can be counted juſt of taking up Arms againſt one's Countrey. The truth is, what was done there, though, 1. very unhappily, and 2. againſt no Monarch, hath been thought imitable by Knox and Buchanan in Scotland, and from thence infuſed into ſome few into England, as Penry, &c. but by Gods providence hath formerly been timouſly reſtrained, and not broken out to the defaming of our Proteſtant Profeſſion. It ſeems now our ſins are ripe for ſuch a judgment, the Land divided into two extream ſinful parts; one by their ſins fitted to ſuffer under this Doctrine, others ſinful enough to be permitted to broach and proſecute it. I meekly thank God, that though my ſins are ſtrangely great, yet he hath not given me up to that latter judgment. I conceive I have alſo given ſome hints at leaſt of proving my poſition from the making of the Proteſtant Doctrine.

Now for the laſt Topick, taken from the conſtitution of this Kingdom; Though that be the Lawyers task, very proſperouſly undertaken by others, yet one general notion there is of our Laws, which from my childhood I have imbibed, and therefore conceive common to all others with me; and it is this, That the Laws of this Kingdom put no man (no Papiſts I am ſure) to death for Religion. When Jeſuits and Seminary-Prieſts have ſuffered, every man is ſo perfect in the Law, as to know that it is for Treaſon, by a Statute that makes it ſuch for them to come into this Kingdom. The truth of this, and the conſtant pleading of it againſt all Objecters, hath made me ſwallow it as a principle of our Law, that even Popery ſtrictly taken (and not only as now this laſt year it hath learnt to enlarge its importance) is no capital crime. From whence, I profeſs, I know no impediment to forbid me to conclude, that in the conſtitution of our State no War for Religion is accounted a lawful War; for that it ſhould be lawful to kill whole multitudes without any inditement, yea, and by attempting it, to endanger, at leaſt, our own, i.e. many good Proteſtants lives, for that, which if it were proved againſt any ſingle man, would not touch his life in the leaſt degree, is, I muſt acknowledge, one of the Arcana belli, which I cannot ſee into. And therefore Sleidan tells us of M. Luther, that he would not allow a War, though but defenſive, with the Turk himſelf, com. lib. 13. pag. 403. and though after he had mitigated his opinion upon a new ſtate of the queſtion, and perſwaded the Emperour to it, yet it was with this limitation, Modò nec vindictæ, nec gloriæ, nec emolumenti causâ ſubeatur, (three things that are very rarely kept out of War) ſed tantùm ut ſpurciſſimum latronem, non ex religionis, ſed furti & injuriarum actione aggrediantur. It ſeems the cauſe of Religion, although it were of Chriſtianity againſt Mahometiſm, was not to * him a ſufficient warrant for a defenſive War. But then 2. For this War to be waged againſt the Prince, (or by any one but the Prince, in a Monarchy, as this is) who whatſoever he hath not, hath certainly the power of the ſword immediately from God, (or elſe muſt be acknowledged not to have it at all, for this power cannot be in any people originally, or any where but in God, and therefore it may be moſt truly ſaid, that though the Regal power were confeſt to be firſt given by the people, yet the power of the ſword, wherewith regality is endowed, would be a ſuperaddition of Gods, never belonging to Regal or whatever other power, till God annext it, in Gen. 9. 6. which alſo ſeems to be out of all diſpute in this Kingdom, even at this time, where the univerſal body of the commonalty, even by thoſe that would have the Regal power originally in them, is not yet affirmed to have any aggregate power, any farther than every man ſingle out of Government was preſumed to have over himſelf, which ſure was not power of his own life: for even in nature there is Felonia de ſe, and therefore the repreſentative body of the Commons is ſo far from being a Judicature in capital matters, that it cannot adminiſter an Oath) and therefore is not juſtly invaſible by any ſubject, or community of ſubjects, who certainly have not that power, nor pretend to have it, and when they take it, think it neceſſary to excuſe that fact by pretence of neceſſity, which every body knows, is the colour for thoſe things which have no ordinary means of juſtifying them (like that which Divines ſay of ſaving of children and ideots, &c. by ſome extraordinary way.) Nay, 3. For this War to be waged, not againſt Popery, truly ſo called, but againſt the only true Proteſtant Religion, as it ſtands (and by attempting to make new Laws is acknowledged as yet to ſtand) eſtabliſht by the old Laws of the Land, and therefore is fain to be called Popiſh (and our Martyr-reformers not able, by thoſe fiery chariots of theirs, to get out of the confines of Babylon) that it may be fit to be deſtroyed: juſt as the Primitive Chriſtians were by the perſecuters put in wild beaſts skins, that in thoſe ſhapes they might be devoured: this I confeſs it is to me a complication of riddles, (and therefore put by ſome Artiſts under that deep-dark-phraſe, and title of Fundamental Laws of the Kingdom) to which certainly no liberty or right of the Subject in Magna Charta, no nor legiſlative power, will enable any man to give any intelligible, much leſs legal name: At which I profeſs I am not ill pleaſed, becauſe this I hope will keep it from being recorded to poſterity.

* Vid. Luth in Mat. 13. in poſtillis. Hîc verò vide, ut maleſani hactenus fuerimus quòd Turcas bello, hæreticos igne, Judæos necis metu & aliis injuriis voluimus ad fidem compellere, & Zizania noſtris viribus evellere, ac ſi nos illi eſſemus quibus poteſtas eſſet in corda & ſpiritus, & in noſtra manu omnes homines ad juſtitiam & pietatem revocare, &c. Obſerve here, how mad we have hitherto been, who would by War compel the Turks to the Faith, Hereticks by fire, the Jews by fear of being put to death, and to pull up the to recal people to takes by our own ſtrength, as if we were they who have power over the hearts and ſpirits of men, and as if it were in our hands juſtice and piety.

I have done with my fourth Argument, and am heartily ſorry I have kept my Reader ſo long from his Prayers, which muſt ſet an end to this Controverſie, for ſure Arguments are too blunt to do it; I beſeech God to direct all our hearts to a conſtant uſe of thoſe means (together with faſting and abſtinence, at leaſt from farther provoking ſins) to exorcize that evil ſpirit that hath divided his titles (of ἔχθρος ἄνηρ, Σατανᾶς, διάβολος, καλήγορος τῶν ἀδελφῶν, and now at length, ἀβαδδὼν, & ἀπολλυὼν, among us, and by thoſe means infuſed his mortiferous poyſon into the very veins of this whole Kingdom.

I create the fruit of the lips, peace, peace to him that is far off, &c. and I will heal him.
Thou haſt moved the Land, and divided it; heal the ſores thereof, for it ſhaketh.

Of the Word KPI-MA.

THE word κρῖμα, according to its origination, ſignifies Cenſure, Judgment, and in its making hath no intimation, either of the quality of the offence to which that judgment belongs, or of the Judge who inflicts it: that it belongs to humane judgments, or ſentences of temporal puniſhments ſometimes, is apparent by Luke 23. 40. where one Thief ſaith to the other, ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ κρίματι εἶ, meaning it ſeems, the ſame ſentence of death, or capital puniſhment, called κρῖμα θανάτου, c. 24. 20. judgment of death temporal; and that at other times it ſignifies alſo divine judgment is as apparent, Acts 24. 26. τῦ κρίματος τῦ μέλλοντος ἔσεσθαι, judgment to come, that is, certainly at the end of this World, at the day of doom; So Rom. 2. 2. κρῖμα τῦ Θεῦ, the judgment of God, and ſo again, verſe 3. which verſe 5. is explained to be wrath or puniſhment againſt the day of wrath, &c. ſo Heb. 6. 2. reſurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment. The truth is, in this ſence it is moſt-what taken in this Book, ſee Matth. 23. 14. Mark 12. 40. Luke 20. 47. Rom. 3. 8. and therefore Heſychius, the beſt Gloſſary for the new Teſtament, renders it κρῖμα, ἀνταπόδοσις Θεῦ, Gods retribution or payment, or rendring according to Works. It will not be worth while to ſurvey and conſider every place where the word is uſed, he that ſhall do ſo, will perhaps reſolve with me to accept of that gloſſary, and underſtand it conſtantly of Gods judgment; unleſs when the circumſtances of the place ſhall enforce the contrary, as they do in the places firſt mentioned, and 1 Cor. 6. 7. But then when the context rather leads to the ſecond ſence, there will be great danger for any man to apply it to humane judgments, for by ſo doing, he may flatter himſelf or others in ſome ſin, and run into that κρῖμα, as it ſignifies eternal judgment, when by that miſ-underſtanding he doth not conceive himſelf in any danger of it. Of places which without all controverſie thus interpret themſelves, I will mention two, 2 Pet. 2. 3. οἷς τὸ κρῖμα ἔκ πάλαι οὐκ ἀργεῖ, we render it, whoſe judgment of a long time lingreth not: which that it belongs to eternal vengeance, appears by the next words, ἡ ἀπώλεια αὐτῶν οὐ νυστάζει, we render it, Their damnation, it is literally, Their deſtruction ſleepeth not. The ſecond place is, 1 Tim. 3. 6. εἰς κρῖμα ἐμπέσῃ τῦ διαβόλυ, fall into the condemnation of the Devil; that is, ſure, into that ſentence that fell upon Lucifer for his pride (being caſt out of Heaven, and reſerved to chains of eternal darkneſs) for the perſon ſpoken of here, is the Novice, or new Convert, lifted up with pride, juſt parallel to the Angels newly created, lifted up with pride alſo, the crimes and the perſons parallel, and ſo ſure the puniſhment alſo. Now three places more there are which appear to me by the ſame means of evidence, or rule of interpreting, to belong to the ſame ſence, though I cannot ſay of them as I did before, [without controverſie] for I ſee it is not only doubted by ſome, whether they do belong to this ſence or no, but that it is reſolved they do not: which reſolution ſure muſt be obnoxious to ſome danger, that I ſay no worſe of it. The firſt of theſe places is, Rom. 13. 2. οἱ δὲ ἀνθεστηκότες ἑαυτοῖς κρῖμα λήψονται· we render it, They that reſiſt ſhall receive to themſelves damnation: But ſay others, it muſt be rendred judgment, as that ſignifies ſome temporary puniſhment which the higher powers may inflict, and nothing elſe: and this they labour to make appear by the words following; For Rulers are a terrour to evil works, and he beareth not the ſword in vain, &c. To which I anſwer, That there is no doubt made by me or any, but that Rulers are to puniſh men for evil works, particularly that of reſiſtance againſt them, and not only that, but alſo crimes againſt our brethren, and God; and in that reſpect it is added, verſe 4. Θεῦ διάκονός ἐστιν ἔκδικος εἰς ὀργὴν τῷ τὸ κακὸν πράσσοντι, the Miniſter or Officer of God he is, and executioner for wrath, that is, puniſhment temporal to him (indefinitely) that doth evil. But doth it follow from hence, that either he that makes forcible reſiſtance againſt the Superiour or Supreme power, or that commits any other ſin (which the Supreme power is ſet to avenge or puniſh temporally) ſhall incur no eternal puniſhment? If this new Divinity ſhould be entertained, it muſt be priviledge and protection to other ſins, as well as reſiſtance and rebellion, even to all that any judicial Laws have power to puniſh, for in theſe alſo he is the Miniſter of God, ἔκδικος εἰς ὀργὴν, an avenger, or executioner for puniſhment; and there is no avoiding it, but this muſt be extended indefinitely, or univerſally, τῷ τὸ κακὸν πράσσοντι, to any malefactor puniſhable by that power, or that comes under this cognizance; and ſo by this Logick, he that is hanged may not be damned, whatever his crime be, an execution on earth ſhall be as good as a Purgatory to excuſe him from any other puniſhment. But then ſecondly, ſuppoſe a Rebel eſcape the hand of juſtice here below, by flight, &c. nay that he proſper in his rebellion, and get the better of it, that the King be not able to puniſh him; nay, yet farther, that he proceed higher, Depoſe the King, and get into his place, What κρῖμα is he like to receive, if that ſignifie only the Kings wrath or temporal puniſhment? Sure this proſperouſneſs of the crime muſt make it ceaſe to be a crime, make it commence vertue, as the Turks on their principles are wont to reſolve it, ſaith Busbequius, Ep. 4.---------- Ex opinione quæ Turcis inſedit ut res quocunque conſilio inſtitutas, ſi bene cadunt, ad Deum Autorem referant, &c. Or elſe give it, (though it be a ſin never ſo great, and unrepented of) perfect impunity both in this World, and in another; And certainly this is no jeſt, for he that obſerves the behaviours of many men, (the no manner of regrets or reluctancies in their courſe of forcible reſiſtance, (ſave only when they conceive it goes not on ſo proſperouſly as it was wont) and the great weekly induſtry that is uſed to perſwade all men of the continued proſperity of the ſide, as being conceived far more uſeful and inſtrumental to their ends, than the demonſtration of the juſtice of it, mens conſciences being reſolved more by the Diurnal, than the Bible, by the Intelligencer than the Divine, unleſs he turn Intelligencer alſo, I would we had not ſo many of thoſe Pluraliſts:) will have reaſon to reſolve that this Divinity is the principle by which they move; which if it be not yet brought to abſurdities enough, then look a little forward to the concluſion, deduced and inferr'd, verſe 5. Wherefore ye muſt be ſubject, not only for wrath, but alſo for conſcience ſake. Words by Prophetick Spirit added by the Apoſtle, as it were on purpoſe to contradict in terminis, that new interpretation. Wrath ſignifies that temporal puniſhment, verſe 4. which if it were the all that is meant by κρῖμα, then how can it be true that we muſt be ſubject not only for wrath? Certainly he that reſiſts is not ſubject (ἀντιτάσσων is all one with ἀντιτασσόμενοι, and both directly contrary to ὑποτάσσεσθαι, the word uſed both in the third and fifth verſe) and therefore if we muſt be ſubject not only for wrath, as that ſignifies temporal puniſhment, then he that reſiſts, ſhall receive more than wrath, as that ſignifies temporal puniſhment, viz. κρῖμα, in our rendring, condemnation, if he do not prevent it timouſly by repentance: which ſure is the importance of the ἀλλὰ καὶ διὰ τὴν συνείδησιν, but alſo for conſcience ſake; that if he do it not, it will be ſin to him, wound his conſcience, bind him over to that puniſhment which belongs to an accuſing conſcience, (which ſure is more than a temporal Mulct) which is farther clear from the firſt verſe of that Chapter, the command of ſubjection. For ſure every Divine or Apoſtolical Command entred into the Canon of Scripture, doth bind conſcience, and the breach of it known and deliberate, is no leſs than a damning ſin, even under the Goſpel, mortiferous and deſtructive without repentance, which is juſt equivalent to the κρῖμα λήψεται, he ſhall receive damnation in our way of interpreting it. So much for that firſt place.

The ſecond is, 1 Cor. 11. 29. He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation, (or as our margent, judgment) to himſelf, &c. This place I find avouched for the confirming of the former interpretation, Rom. 13. That κρῖμα ſignifies only Temporal puniſhment, and thus it is known the Socinians commonly interpret this place, per κρῖμα non ſempiternam damnationem nominatim, ſed ſupplicium in genere intelligendum eſſe. Volkelius l. 9. de ver. rel. l. 4. c. 22. That which is uſed to perſwade this to be probable, is that which follows, verſe 30. For this cauſe many are weak and ſickly among you, and many ſleep, which belonging only to Temporal puniſhments, is conceived to be a periphraſis of the κρῖμα judgment, which ſhould ſeem conſequently to be ſo alſo: and indeed Volkelius hath added other proofs, 1. Becauſe the Apoſtle ſpeaks of any one ſingle act of this ſin of unworthy receiving (not of any habit or cuſtome) which he conceives not actually damning now under the ſecond Covenant. 2. Becauſe it is verſe 32. and when we are judged, we are chaſtened of the Lord that we ſhould not be condemned, &c. To theſe three (and I know not that there are produced any more) probabilities, I conceive clear ſatisfaction may be given by thoſe who affirm κρῖμα to contain in it eternal puniſhment; Though it were only temporal puniſhment, yet being ſickneſs, &c. which are not inflicted by the Magiſtrate, but by the hand of God, it will not come home to that which was by Maſter Br. affirmed of the word, in Rom. 13. For this muſt be premiſed, that we do not conceive it to ſignifie eternal puniſhments, excluſivè, or ſo as to exclude temporal, but eternal and ſometimes Temporal too (for ſo ſure he that for his Rebellion receives damnation, hereafter, is not ſecured from being hang'd, drawn, and quartered here) or elſe eternal if he repent not, and perhaps Temporal though he do. By κρῖμα, as I ſaid, I underſtand with Heſychius, ἀνταπόδοσιν Θεοῦ, Gods vengeance whether here, or in another World, but I ſay in this place both of them, (and ſo ordinarily in the former alſo.) This being premiſed, the word κρῖμα may ſtill contain in it eternal puniſhments, verſe 29. though many for this cauſe of unworthy receiving did fall ſick and dye, verſe 30. for 1. they might both die and be damned too, or if as Volkelius ſaith, the word κοιμῶνται, obdormiſcunt, ſleep, be never uſed in the new Teſtament, of thoſe that are deſtinied to eternal deſtruction, then ſtill may this be very reconcileable with our interpretation that many for this cauſe are weak and ſickly, and many others ſleep, God chaſtiſing ſome by diſeaſes to reform them, and puniſhing others, who as Volkelius acknowledges, were guilty only of ſome ſingle act of the ſin only, with death temporal or ſhortning their days: which certainly hinders not but that God might puniſh others that did cuſtomarily commit this ſin (and perhaps with greater aggravations) with no leſs than eternal death; however that it were juſt for him to do ſo, what ever he did, it is plain by verſe 27. which is parallel to the 29. whoſoever ſhall eat and drink unworthily, ſhall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord, that is in Volkelius his own words, Ipſum Chriſti corpus ac ſanguinem contemnere & ignominiâ afficere, ac quantum in ipſis eſt profanare proculcaréque cenſendi ſunt, ſhall be thought to contemn and diſgrace, and as much as in them lies to profane, and tread under feet the body and blood of Chriſt, which what is it but to count the blood of the Covenant an unholy thing, Heb. 10. 29? which yet there is uſed as a main aggravation of that ſin, for which, ſaith the Apoſtle, there remains no more ſacrifice, verſe 26. It is apparent that the phraſe ἔνοχοι τοῦ σώματος, guilty of the body, &c. is parallel to the Latine, Reus Majeſtatis, uſed for a Traytor, and ſure ſignifies no leſs than a guilt of a great injury to Chriſt, which how any man can affirm to be a ſin to which no damnation belongs (ſuppoſing no antidote of invincible ignorance or weakneſs, nor recovery by repentance, nor gracious pardon of God in not imputing ſome ſingle act of it) I profeſs my ſelf not to diſcern, though I think I have weighed impartially all that is ſaid of it. This ſure will keep the firſt proof from being any longer probable; and for the ſecond, (or firſt of Volkelius) it is already in effect anſwered too, for though he that is guilty only of ſome one act of this ſin found mercy, yet ſure they that are guilty of the cuſtomary ſin, may ſpeed worſe; and indeed of all indefinitely the Apoſtle ſpeaks according to the ſin; as when he ſaith the drunkard and adulterer ſhall not inherit the kingdom of God: Where yet perhaps he that is guilty only of one ſuch act may find mercy. For the laſt proof, I conceive it ſo far from being a probable one againſt me, that I ſhall reſolve it a convincing one on my ſide, for if thoſe that were ſick, &c. were chaſtened of the Lord, that they ſhould not be condemned, then ſure if they had not been ſo chaſtened, nor reformed by that chaſtening, they ſhould have been condemned with the World; and ſo their temporal judgments may be a means through the mercy of God in Chriſt to free them from their eternal, but not an argument that eternal was not due to them, but a perfect intimation that it was.

The third place (which is not indeed of much importance in it ſelf, but only is uſed to give countenance to the interpretation in the two former places) is, 1 Pet. 4. 17. the time is come that judgment muſt begin at the houſe of God. Here, ſay they, κρῖμα judgment is that that befals the houſe of God, the godly; therefore but temporal judgments.

To which I anſwer in a word, that here is a miſtake in applying judgment in its latitude to the houſe of God, when only it is affirmed by Saint Peter of the τὸ ἄρξασθαι κρῖμα, or τὸ πρῶτον, the beginning or firſt part of judgment: for of the κρῖμα or judgment in this verſe, there are ſpecified two parts, τὸ πρῶτον, the firſt part, and τὸ τέλος the end (or as the word τέλος ſeems to ſound in our Engliſh, the tail) of it, as Pſal. 75. 8. the cup of Gods diſpleaſure, or punitive juſtice, is ſuppoſed to conſiſt of two parts, 1. red wine (or ἄκρατον) and 2. mixture of Myrrhe and other poyſonous bitter ſpices, called σύμος, Apocal. 4. 10. and χολὴ, Matth. 27. 17. and both together, οἶνος ἐσμυρνισμένος myrrhate wine, Mark 15. 25. Now this cup is poured out, and taſted of indefinitely, by the godly ſome part of it; but the dregs thereof, i. e. the myrrhe-bitter part, that goes to the bottom, is left for the wicked to wring out and drink: ſo that only the tolerable, ſupportable, eaſie part of the judgment belongs unto the godly, but the end, the dregs, the unſupportable part to thoſe that obey not the Goſpel of God. Or yet a little further, the beginning or firſt part, τὸ πρῶτον of the judgment, is ἀφ' ἡμῶν from the godly, (and ſo it was ἄρξασθαι ἀπὸ τοῦ οἴκου θεοῦ) intimating that the judgment doth not ſtay upon them, but only take riſe from them, but the τὸ τέλος, the ſecond ſadder part of it, is τῶν ἀπειθούντων of them (or belongs to them) that obey not, &c. So that ſtill in this place alſo κρῖμα ſignifies Gods judgment of this life and another both; not of this life only, to the excluding of the other, but one part in this life, another in that other; and though the godly had their part in it, yet there was ſomewhat in the κρῖμα that the godly never taſted of, but only the ἀπειθοῦντες, they that diſobeyed the Goſpel of God, and this is apparent by ver. 18. For if the righteous μόλις σώζεται, we read it, ſcarcely be ſaved, it ſignifies (by comparing that place with Pro. 11. 31. where inſtead of recompenced on the earth, the Greek Tranſlation reads μόλις σώζεται) be rendred unto, or recompenced, i. e. puniſhed in the earth, then where ſhall the ungodly and ſinners appear? There are again the two parts of κρῖμα, one ἀνταπόδοσις θεοῦ, Gods retribution to ſin here, wherein the godly have their part, and the other his rendring to the wicked hereafter, and ſo neither of them the puniſhment of the Magiſtrate in this life, as Mr. Bridg. out of Piſcator, contends to have it, Rom. 13. and as it muſt be here alſo, if others ſpeak pertinently, who uſe it to avoid that interpretation, which I confeſs Mr. Bridg. doth not.

They that are unlearned and unſtable wreſt the Scriptures to their own deſtruction. Ye therefore beloved ſeeing ye know theſe things before, beware leſt you alſo be led away with the errour of the wicked, and fall from your own ſtedfaſtneſs, 2 Pet. 3. 16, 17.

Of the Zealots among the Jews, and the Liberty taken by them.

* Eum qui Dominum execratus eſt per nomen alicujus ĭdoli, eum קנאים zelotæ, qui occurrerint, interficiunt. Maim. de Idol. c. 2. vid. Joſeph. Albo. & Philo. de Monarchiâ. Καλὸν ἅπασι τοῖς ζῆλον ἔχουσιν ἀρετῆς ἐν χερσὶν ἀναπράττειν τὰς τιμωρίας, μήτ' εἰς δικαστήριον, μήτ' εἰς βουλευτήριον, μήτε συνόλως ἐπ' ἀρχὴν ἄγοντας, ἀλλὰ τῷ παραχρῆμα μισοπονηρῷ πάθει καὶ φιλοθέῳ καταχρῆσθαι πρὸς τὰς τῶν ἀσεβῶν ἀπαραιτήτους κολάσεις, νομίζοντας αὐτὸς ὑπὲρ τοῦ κοινοῦ τὰ πάντα γεγενῆσθαι βουλευτὰς, δικαστὰς, στρατηγὸς, ἐκκλησιαστὰς, καπήλους, μάρτυρας, νόμους δῆμον, &c.

There was among the * Jews either truly or pretendedly a judicium Zelotarum, a peculiar liberty or power of Zealots (i. e. of private men led by zeal) to puniſh or execute malefactors, whether with death, or any lower puniſhment. Theſe they ſtile Pious-men inflamed with the zeal of God: and theſe were wont when they found any man in the fact, guilty of ſedition, blaſphemy, or any other crime of the greater ſize, openly and publickly committed, preſently to ſet upon him, to ſmite, and if need were, to kill him, without any proceſs of Law againſt him.

The original of theſe came from the fact of Phineez, Numb. 25. 7. of whom Mattathias in his dying oration to his Sons, hath theſe words, * Φινεὲς ὁ πατὴρ ὑμῶν ἐν τῷ ζηλῶσαι ζῆλον ἔλαβε διαθήκην ἱερωσύνης αἰωνίου, Phineez our Father (by zealing the zeal of God, ſaith the vulgar Latine) by behaving himſelf zealouſly, received the promiſe of an eternal Prieſthood, 1 Mac. 2. 54. Which is alſo affirmed of Elias, verſe 58. Ἠλίας ἐν τῷ ζηλῶσαι ζῆλον νόμου ἀνελήφθη εἰς τὸν οὐρανὸν, Elias by zealing the zeal of the Law, or behaving himſelf zealouſly for the Law, was received up to heaven, (which belongs to that fact of Elias immediately before his aſſumption, when he call'd twice for fire from Heaven on Ahaziah's Meſſengers, 2 Kings 1. 10, 12. unleſs you will rather apply it to that fact of his, 1 Kings 18. 40. againſt the Prophets of Baal, whom he apprehended and ſlew together every man of them) by which examples he there ſtirs up and incites his Sons ζηλῶσαι τῷ νόμῳ, to be zealous for the Law, verſe 50. though not to commit any ſuch particular act of that nature, as that, which thoſe had done, or as himſelf before, verſe 24. where 'tis ſaid of him, οὕτως ἐζήλωσε, καὶ ἐτρόμησαν οἱ νέφροι αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἀνετύναγκε θυμὸν κατὰ τὸ κρῖμα, καὶ ῥομφαῖαν ἔσφαξεν αὐτὸν ἐπὶ τὸν ὦμον. Where you have a zelotick killing one at the Altar, and the trembling of his reins, an evidence of his fury.

Teſtimonies of Jewiſh Writers to this purpoſe, Maſter Selden hath put together in his book De jure Natur. & Gent. ad Heb. plac. lib. 4. cap. 4. and given ſome hints of explaining ſome difficulties in the New Teſtament from thence. To this belongs that fact of Chriſt, John 2. 15. as appears by the Diſciples; of whom it is ſaid, verſe 17. that upon that occaſion they remembred how it was written written by the Pſalmiſt, Pſalm 67. 9. the zeal of thy houſe, or for thy houſe, κατέφαγέ με, hath fed on me, or carried me with a kind of Fury.

That Chriſt did not take upon him to be a Magiſtrate or a Judge, or a publick perſon here on earth, is ſufficiently acknowledged; as alſo, that as a private man he neither did, nor attempted any thing contrary to the Laws or Cuſtoms of the Jews or Romans: Or if he had, that the Jews who had a competent meaſure of animoſity againſt him, would not probably have ſuffered him to have done it Scot-free. From all which it will follow undoubtedly, that this was done by Chriſt jure Zelotarum, by the power that belonged to the Zealots, for whom only the Law allowed this liberty. The ſame is to be ſaid of that attempt of the Jews, John 10. 31. ἐβάσταζαν πάλιν λίθους οἱ Ἰουδαῖοι ἵνα λιθάσωσιν αὐτόν, The Jews therefore carried ſtones again that they might ſtone him; no legal proceſs having preceded.

The ſame Maſter Selden notes of the ſervant of the high Prieſt that ſtruck Chriſt, John 18. 12, whoſe anſwer is a ſeeming argument of it, verſe 23. If I have ſpoken well, why ſmiteſt thou me? intimating, that if he had ſaid any thing amiſs or irreverently of the high Prieſt, he ſhould not have queſtioned his ſtriking him: And yet the truth is, the phraſe μαρτύρησον περὶ τοῦ κακοῦ, bear witneſs of the evil, ſeems an advertiſement, that if Chriſt had offended, it would have better become the ſervant to have accuſed and witneſſed againſt him, proceeded legally, than thus jure Zelotarum to have ſtricken him. On the ſame ground was the fact of Ananias, Acts 23. 3. though ſitting in the Sanhedrin when he appointed Paul to be ſmitten, though without any juſt crime alſo. The like proceedings the Scribes were, it ſeems, afraid of, Luke 20. 6. the people will ſtone us: which muſt have been an act of popular zeal without publick judgment. That Saint Stephen, Acts 7. 57. was ſtoned after this manner, is obſerved by Hugo Grotius, and certainly upon good reaſons: for although he were accuſed of Blaſphemy, cap. 6. and falſe witneſſes brought to that purpoſe, yet after that, there was nothing legally paſt againſt him through all the ſeventh Chapter, beſides his Apology for himſelf to the high Prieſt. In the concluſion of which (no ſentence paſſing againſt him) it follows that the people διεπρίοντο ταῖς καρδίαις αὐτῶν καὶ ἔβρυχον τοὺς ὀδόντας ἐπ' αὐτόν, verſe 54. which Heſychius will help us to render thus, they were very angry, they were madded with fury or zeal againſt him, and gnaſhed their teeth (it ſeems that flame of zeal produced the ſame effect in them that the flames of Hell are ſaid to do, Matth. 8. 12.) againſt him, and crying with a loud voice, they ſtopt their ears, and ran with one accord upon him (all which were evidences of a moſt violent zeal) and caſt him out of the City and ſtoned him, which out of doubt was not now lawful for the Jews (all power of capital puniſhment being before this taken from them, John 8. 31.) nor before legal condemnation ever lawful by the common way of proceeding; no nor after condemnation, to be done thus tumultuouſly by the people; ſave only that by the liberty of Zealots it was permitted. As in the ſtory of Suſannah, Verſe 60, and 61. the peoples crying with a loud voice, and their ἀνίσησαν ἐπὶ τοὺς δύο πρεσβυτέρους, riſing up againſt the two Elders, is by the learned man interpreted to have been in a ſeditious manner, per modum ſeditionis, and ſo ex ſpiritu zelotypiæ, from the ſpirit of zeal, as Stephen and James the Biſhops of Jeruſalem were afterwards uſed by them. So Acts 14. 19. it befel Saint Paul (God in his providence permitting him to be thus dealt with, by way of retaliation for his having a hand in ſtoning Saint Stephen, when Barnabas met not with the like adventure) certain Jews that came from Antioch, and Iconium having ſtoned Paul, &c. by this judgment only of zeal, which we now ſpeak of.

Hitherto perhaps we may refer that of the Jews, who brought the Woman taken in Adultery to Chriſt, that ſhe might be ſtoned; not deſiring, as it appears, that Chriſt ſhould give Sentence of death on her by ordinary legal judicature, (for neither was Chriſt a Judge, nor had the Jews now power of capital puniſhment) but by the liberty of Zealots, which was thought principally to belong to that caſe of one taken ἐπ' αὐτοφώρῳ in the very fact, as appears by the example of Phineez. So Acts 23. that Κραυγὴ μεγάλη great cry (ſuch as was obſerved in the ſtory of Saint Stephen) was the beginning of the flaming zeal, and verſe 10. it follows, that the chief Captain or Tribune ſent Souldiers to reſcue and defend Paul, that he might not be taken by that party of Zealots, who verſe 12. had bound themſelves under a curſe, that they would neither eat nor drink until they had ſlain Paul; who ſure could not have done ſo impunè, had it not been thus indulged to them, as Zealots. So when James and John demand of Chriſt, whether they ſhould command fire from Heaven to deſcend on a Village of the Samaritans, Luke 9. 54. this they did by the liberty of Zealots, for the legality of their action taking their pattern from the example of Elias, and preſuming of the power to do it becauſe Elias had. (In reference to both which we read of πνεῦμα καὶ δύναμις Ἠλίου, Luke 1. 17. the ſpirit and power of Elias; that ſpirit by which he was incited to that act of zeal, and that power by which he could call for fire from Heaven; whereupon it is Procopius his expreſſion of Elias that he was θείῳ πυρπολούμενος ζήλῳ, accended with divine zeal, or ſet on fire by it) Now when Chriſt reprehendeth thoſe Diſciples, telling them they knew not, i. e. conſidered not, what ſpirit they were of, he advertiſeth them that this practice of Zealots is not agreeable to the ſpirit of the Goſpel, nor generally to the temper which he came to plant among Chriſtians.

And having now among the Apoſtles of Chriſt themſelves found ſome foot-ſteps of the Jewiſh zeal, 'twill not be amiſs to interpoſe a conjecture, that from the ſame original ſprung that bloody fact of Peter cutting off Malchus his ear, Matth. 26. 51. For that this was not lawful for him to do, or juſtifiable by the ordinary rule, may be gueſt by Chriſts anſwer of reproof and vouching the Law, [All they that take the ſword ſhall periſh by the ſword] and yet that it was not a fact very enormous among the Jews, or being compared with their avow'd practices (though clearly forbidden by the Goſpel) Origen and Theophylact ſeem to intimate. Origen on Matth. 26. Unus eorum qui erant cum Jeſu nondum manifeſtè concipiens apud ſe Evangelicam patientiam illam traditam ſibi à Chriſto, nec pacem quam dedit Diſcipulis ſuis, ſed ſecundum poteſtatem datam Judæis per legem de inimicis, extendens manum accepit gladium, &c. One of them that were with Jeſus having not yet any full clear conception of the Evangelical patience delivered them by Chriſt, nor of that peace which he gave to his Diſciples; but according to the power given the Jews by the Law of enemies, took out his ſword, &c. Theophylact yet more clearly in Matth. 26. μὴ ἐγκαλῶμεν τῷ Πέτρῳ, ὃ γὰρ ὑπὲρ ἑαυτῦ ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ διδασκάλου ζηλώσας τοῦτο ἐποίησεν, ὁ δὲ κύριος μεταρυθμίζων αὐτὸν εἰς εὐαγγελικὴν πολιτείαν διδάσκει μὴ χρῆσθαι μαχαίρᾳ κἂν ὑπὲρ θεοῦ δόκῃ τις ἐκδικεῖν Let us not find fault with Peter; for what he did, he did out of zeal, not for himſelf, but for his Maſter: but the Lord reducing him to the Goſpel-diſcipline, teaches him not to uſe the ſword, though thereby a man ſhould ſeem to defend or vindicate God himſelf. And in another place in Luke, Ζηλῶσαι μαθηταὶ καὶ μαχαίρας ἀνασύροντας, the Diſciples are mov'd with zeal and draw ſwords. And in a third place in Mark, Ἀποσιωπᾷ τὸ ὄνομα ὁ Μάρκος, ἵνα μὴ δόξῃ ἐπαινῶν τὸν διδάσκαλον αὐτῦ Πέτρον, ὡς ζηλώσαντα ὑπὲρ χριστῦ, intimating, that Peter himſelf counted this fact of his a piece of zeal, for which he might be commended.

Thus much was not amiſs to produce in behalf of this conjecture, that what Peter did in defence of Chriſt, he did as a Zealot; and yet to ſee Chriſt is ſo far from approving it, that it incurs the ſame reprehenſion, which James and John before had met with; nay ſomewhat a ſeverer, that all might diſcern, how diſtant the ſpirit of Zealots was, from that other of Diſciples, the Judaical fervour from the meekneſs of the Goſpel: Though the Apoſtles themſelves had not yet perfectly learnt this truth at Chriſts death, nor until the Holy Ghoſt came to teach them all things, and to bring to their remembrance whatſoever he had in perſon being preſent ſaid unto them.

A plain mention of theſe Zealots we find, Acts 21.20. where of ſome of the Jews 'tis ſaid, they are all ζηλωταὶ τῦ νόμυ Zealots of the Law, that were like to be very hot, if they ſaw any thing done to the prejudice of the Law; of whom therefore Saint Paul is adviſed to beware. So of Paul himſelf before his converſion, Acts 22. 3. 'tis ſaid he was ζηλωτὴς Θεῦ, a Zealot of Gods, or in God's cauſe, and preſently it follows ἐδίωξα ἄχρι θανάτυ, I perſecuted to death, &c. for ſo the Zealots were wont to do. So Acts 17. 5. ζηλώσαντες Ἰυδαῖοι, the Zealots of the Jews, or the Jews inflamed with zeal (as the old Tranſlation reads it Zelantes, better than the new, invidiâ commoti) of whom 'tis added ὀχλοποιήσαντες ἐθορύβυν τὴν πόλιν, took unto themſelves certain lewd fellows of the baſer ſort, and made a tumult, and ſet all the People in an uproar. Of which kind Maſter Selden has obſerved, that Simon was one, Luke 6.15. Acts 1.13. called by Saint Luke Σίμων ζηλωτὴς, Simon the Zealot; but by the other Evangeliſts Saint Matthew and Saint Mark, Καναίτης, or (as Schindler and other learned men are bold to mend it) Καννίτης, which we render the Cananite; but 'tis apparent the word is to be fetcht from the Hebrew קנא Canna, which ſignifies Zealot, (in like manner as the Maccabees are called, the word מקבי in Syriack ſignifying ζηλωτὴς, ſaith Ferrarius) and not from the name of the place: and ſo is all one with the Greek Ζηλωτὴς, as perfectly the ſame as Πέτρος and Cephas, Δόρκας and Tabitha, and many the like. And thus far by Scripture light we have paſt in this diſquiſition.

Now what tumults and riots have been wrought by the rude multitude among the Jews (or thoſe at leaſt who had no lawful power in their hand) under the pretence of the priviledge of Zealots, no man can be ignorant, who is not wholly unacquainted with Joſephus's ſtory. For in his relation there is nothing more ordinary, than to find all things diſturbed by them, the Temple or holy place defiled μεμιασμένοις ποσὶ, by their prophane feet to the reproach of God: chief Prieſts removed and others placed in their room without all reſpect of blood, elected by them either according as they pleaſed, or elſe by lot, (as it was in the election of one Phannias the ſon of Samuel to the high Prieſt-hood) a man (ſaith Joſephus) who ὁ μόνον ἀνάξιος ἀρχιερεύς, ἀλλ' οὐδ' ἐπισάμενος σαφῶς τί ποτ' ἦν ἀρχιερωσύνη διὰ ἀγροικίαν, was not only unworthy to be high Prieſt, but that did not ſo much as know what the high Prieſt-hood was, ſuch was his ruſticity.

Κ. ιβ.

Many paſſages we find ſcattered in this Author, in his books of the Captivity, and large ſtories of the ſeditions and uprores and Maſſacres by two ſorts of men among the Jews; the one called Σικάριοι, Swordmen or Cutters, (of whom Saint Luke makes mention, Acts 21.38. we render them Murtherers: and it ſeems four thouſand of them got together in a company) the ſecond Ζηλωταὶ, Zealots; of whom he makes relations, eſpecially lib. 4. c. 11. where he ſaith of them, that they killed many of the chief men of the Nation, and ſtill when they did ſo, boaſted and bragg'd of themſelves ὡς ἐυεργέτας καὶ σωτῆρας τῆς πόλεως γεγενημένους, that they were become the benefactours and preſervers or ſaviours of the City. And by the timidity and baſeneſs of the People concurring with their inſolence, advanced ſo far ὡς ἐπ' αὐτοῖς εἶναι καὶ τὰς χειροτονίας τῶν ἀρχιερέων, that they took to themſelves the election and conſtitution of the high Prieſts. ἄκυρα γῦν τὰ γένη ποιήσαντες ἐξ ὧν κατὰ διαδοχὰς οἱ Ἀρχιερεῖς ἀπεδείκνυντο, καθέσησαν ἀσήμους καὶ ἀγενεῖς, ἵν' ἔχοιεν συνεργοὺς τῶν ἀσεβημάτων and contemning the rules of birth by which the high Prieſts were to ſucceed, they conſtituted ignoble obſcure men in thoſe places, that by that means they might have ſome abetters and partners of their villanies: and c. 12. he ſaith the name of Zealots was of their own impoſing, ὡς ἐπ' ἀγαθοῖς ἐπιτηδεύμασιν, ἀλλ' οὐ ζηλώσαντες τὰ κάκιστα τῶν ἔργων καὶ ὑπερβαλλόμενοι, as if all that they did (Murthers, Sacriledges, Prophanations, before mentioned) were by them done in good intentions, and not, as indeed they were, in emulation, and even to the out-ſtripping and exceeding the worſt actions that had been recorded. Thus far Joſephus.

That theſe Zealots were a fourth Sect of the Jews, (added to Sadduces, Phariſees, Eſſens,) having its original from Judas Gaulonita and Sadduchus, is the affirmation of Bonaventura Cornelius Bertramus, in the end of his book De polit Jud. A Sect, ſaith he, Judæis ipſis omnibus perniciosiſſima, ut quæ Judæorum omnium excidium totiuſque reip. Judaicæ proſtrationem non modo accelerârit, ſed & eam tam miſeram & calamitoſam effecerit: A Sect moſt ſadly pernicious to the Jews themſelves; the deſtruction of all whom, and the proſtration of their whole Common-wealth, it did not only haſten and precipitate, but made it ſo miſerable and calamitous when it came. And to the ſame purpoſe, ſaith Grotius Annot. in Acts 7.57. Iſtorum hominum quos ζηλωταὶ Joſephus vocat, creſcens indies audacia, tandem & iram excitavit Romanorum, & Urbi temploque exitium attulit. The boldneſs of thoſe Zealots daily increaſing, at length ſtirr'd up the anger of the Romans, and brought deſtruction both on the City and the Temple.

Having

Having proceeded thus far by way of narration, it may chance to be worth the pains to present unto the Reader a conjecture upon the twelfth verse of the fourth Chapter of the first Epistle of Saint Peter, Μὴ ξενίζεσθε τῇ ἐν ὑμῖν πυρώσει, The vulgar Latine renders it by words utterly unintelligible: nolite peregrinari in fervore: Beza, ne tanquam peregrini exploratione illâ per ignem percellimini: as if ξενίζεσθαι signified a strangers being stricken or amazed: and πύρωσις, trial by fire: which whatsoever it may in some other place, it cannot do here; because here is added πρὸς πειρασμὸν γινομένῃ which is befallen for your trial, which word would be superfluous, if πύρωσις noted trial by fire. The more simple and clear rendring will be to set the words so, that πύρωσις may signifie a combustion, or fire, or burning (so both the Vulgar and Beza, Revel. 8. 9. render καπνὸν πυρώσεως fumum incendii, and the smoak of her burning) and ξενίζεσθαι may denote these three things, 1. To wonder: (So the Greek Scholiast, ξενίζεσθαι, θαυμάζειν) 2. To be affrighted: (So Tertullian, ne expaveſcite) 3. So as it may be all one with ξενοπαθεῖν, to be stricken as with an accident wherewithal we are unacquainted. These three sences each, as all of them, may be allowed their places here. Now the conjecture is, that by the πύρωσις, the combustion or burning, &c. should be meant, that notable combustion of the Zealots before mentioned, (for indeed the words are of some affinity, the one coming from πῦρ, fire, the other from ζέω, growing fervently hot or burning.) The grounds of the conjecture are these, 1. Because that last fatal day, the destruction of Jerusalem, is spoken of in that very Chapter, verse 7. as that which for some time had been at hand: for I conceive I can make it plain by comparing of places of the new Testament, that τέλος πάντων the end of all things is (not the final period of the world, but) that destruction of Jerusalem or the Jewish Common-wealth, and of that it is said, ἤγγικε, it is, or hath for some time been at hand, it was not yet come: but of this πύρωσις or combustion, that it was then, γινομένη, already come; which is directly agreeable to the observation of Josephus, and others conversant in the Jewish, who affirm that that raving and rioting of (and sad civil combustion wrought by) the Zealots, was antecedent and precursory to the final destruction of the Jews by Titus. 2. 'Tis affirmed of this πύρωσις that it was γινομένη ἐν ὑμῖν, i. e. among you, in your Land, in the midst of you, (as that phrase frequently signifies in the new Testament) by which is marked out some remarkable thing, which was fallen out among the Jews, at that time when Peter wrote, to which time that the raving of the Zealots endured, is apparent by mention of them, Acts 21. 20. Acts 22. 3. and that by their stirs these Christian Jews of the διασπορᾶ, or the dispersion to whom he writes, had been first scattered abroad, may be conjectured by Acts 8. 1. This may suffice for a conjecture, which whether it stand or fall, will not be much concernment to the business which occasioned this παρεργον.

To conclude this historical uneven discourse, I shall only annex these few animadversions by way of corollary.

1. That this law, or power, or custom, or liberty of Zealots, was never of force but among the Jews.

2. That the original and ground of it among them is to be fetcht from hence; that among that People, God immediately prefided, and reserved many things to be manag'd, and ruled by his peculiar and extraordinary incitation and impulsion, not by any rule of standing publick law; that so the Common-wealth might be truly capable of that title which Josephus bestowed on it, none of the kinds of humane Governments, but θεοκρατεία the government of God.

3. That it follows not from hence, that all things which were by the Jews themselves done under pretence of this right, and passed unpunished, were therefore well done; but only those which were undertaken by men truly incited by God, (such as Phineez and Elias) for that priviledge is not therefore stil'd zeli privati, of private zeal, because private men by their own incitation (ἰδίᾳ ἐπιλύσει, as that is opposed to Gods) did what they did; but because they did it without legal process, or publick judicature. And though I should be so sceptical, as not to dare peremptorily to affirm, that nothing was well done or justifiable in that kind, but what they did who were truly and immediately incited to it by God: yet should I not be so cowardly as to doubt, but that all those Jews were so bound to observe those examples of Phineez and Elias, that if they were not immediately incited by God, yet they should not dare to exceed the limits of those patterns commended by God, either in respect of the manner of doing, or matter of the action. In one of which you shall find all the examples mentioned in the New Testament, except that of Christ, to have miscarried. And therefore I hope no man will be so unjust to the charitable design of this Paper, so treacherous to his Readers, so unkind to his own Soul; as to borrow from these premisses new hints of arguments to sustain a desperate cause by his pretence of zeal: for that would be to extract Roseacre out of Treacle, poison from that which was designed for antidote. And he must withal resolve, that if the practice of Christ first mentioned, be his precedent, he must also prescribe to Christ's power; or if any of the other New Testament examples, he must be content to fall under their condemnation, for not one of them I ever yet heard of, was excused by any.

4. That this Sect of Zealots when they thus got together into a body was by the Jews themselves (among whom the priviledge of Zealots was yet in force) taken for the most unlawful, yea pernicious and fatal, most eminently destructive to the Commonwealth (as appears by Josephus and Bertram) and that those things which they did under pretence of law and colour of Zeal, were violations of Law and meer Sacrilege.

5. That all use of this liberty, all imitation of that Jewish priviledge of Zealots in the Old Testament, is clearly interdicted all Christians; First, because the written word is the only Oracle wherein God constantly reveals himself to Christians now under the New Testament, neither are any other incitations to be expected from God, but what in the Gospel or New Testament the διακονία πνεύματος, the administration of the Spirit (as preaching the Gospel is call'd) both yield or afford us; what is more than this, yea though it come to us from the Pulpit, savours of enthusiasms and seducing spirits; Secondly, because Christ hath both by his doctrine and example commended to his Disciples all manner of meekness (and Saint Peter the meek and quiet spirit, as most precious in God's sight under the Gospel, and this a grace most directly contrary to that spirit of Zealots)

yea and hath forbidden all private revenge of injuries (done not only to our ſelves, but God) referring all to the Magiſtrate (whom Saint Paul calls Θεῦ διάκονον ἔκδικον εἰς ὀργήν, Rom. 13. 4. the Miniſter of God to execute wrath; or an executioner for wrath) and therefore himſelf medled not with the Woman taken in Adultery; Thirdly, becauſe he interdicted James and John the uſe of this power, adding a reprehenſion, and words emphatical to this purpoſe, he turned and rebuked them, ſaying, you know not what ſpirit you are of; intimating, the Chriſtian ſpirit to be very diſtant from that of the Zealots among the Jews.

I ſhall add no more, but my prayer, that as many as have zeal, may have it according to knowledge, and that knowledge according to the directions of the Goſpel.

Of taking up the Croſs.

MAny places of the New Teſtament there are that require this duty of a Chriſtian, (of which I think I may truly ſay, that 'tis a duty never ſo much as in kind required before by God in the Old Teſtament, nor by the Laws of Nature, or Canons of any other Religion, and ſo a peculiar Chriſtian duty) the chief places are theſe, Matth. 16. 24. If any man will come after me, let him deny himſelf and take up his Croſs, &c. and in the ſame words in the parallel places Mark 8. 34. and Luke 9. 23. So again, to him who deſired to be put in a courſe by Chriſt to inherit eternal life, Mark 10. 12. in the cloſe, Come, take up the Croſs, and follow me. In all theſe places 'tis a duty of plain command; yet ſomewhat farther, Matth. 10. 38. He that taketh not his Croſs and followeth not after me, is not worthy of me; and in Luke 14. 27. the words are moſt punctual, and of unlimited extent, from whence 'twill be hard for any man to obtain any diſpenſation, or excuſe, ὅστις οὐ βαστάζει-----whoſoever doth not bear his Croſs and come after me, cannot be my Diſciple. No man will be exempted from the ὅστις οὐ-----and no Chriſtian it ſeems can be without it; for that is the meaning of [my Diſciple] not only thoſe peculiar twelve of his, and their Succeſſours in the Miniſtery, for that Relation belongs to them conſidered under another notion as Apoſtles ſent out after by Chriſt, anſwerable to the שליחים among the Jews under the Temple, but the Diſciples are all true followers of Chriſt, all ſincere Chriſtians, and ſo the Doctrine is moſt plain, that whoſoever doth not bear (which as from thoſe other former places appears, implies a taking up) the Croſs of Chriſt, cannot be a true Chriſtian.

Now the ἀράτω σαυρὸν, taking up the Croſs will be eaſily explain'd what its full importance extends to, the voluntary embracing of ſhame, contumely, (for the Croſs was a contumelious death, Heb. 12. 2.) and conſequently all other loſs of goods, liberty, &c. and beyond that, pain of body and death it ſelf: which are ſaid, to be taken up, not when we bring them unneceſſarily upon our own ſhoulders, (for that is to pull the Croſs upon us) but when by the providence of God they are laid, or permitted to lye in our way to Chriſt, or Chriſtian obedience, ſo that we cannot ſerve Chriſt perfectly, but it muſt become detriment or damage to us, then voluntarily to undergo that detriment, what ever it is, is to take up the Croſs; and patiently and chearfully to bear it, is βαστάζειν, to carry or bear the Croſs of Chriſt, which is the duty, without which a man cannot be a Chriſtian.

There is now one thing to be a little more punctually conſidered, the ſtrict and near dependance and connexion betwixt Chriſtianity and the Croſs, and that from the pleaſure and providence of God, and diſpenſation of things under the Goſpel, ſo ordering it generally that we ſhould not ſerve the Lord our God of that that coſt us nothing, but that true Chriſtian piety ſhould bring endurances and ſufferings upon us. This very thing may ſeem to be it (and to that the context inclines it) which Wiſd. 2. 22. is called the myſtery of Godlineſs, viz. Gods Counſel of bringing pious men, or Chriſtians by ſufferings to glory (quite contrary to the opinion of the Atheiſtical world, verſe 20, 21.) and you will the rather acknowledge this, if you compare with it, Col. 1. where ἀνταναπλήρωσις, the filling up (by way of correſpondence and antitype) in our fleſh the remainders or reliques of Chriſt's ſufferings, verſe 24. ſeems to be called the Myſtery which had been hid, &c. 26. Thus it is plain in Chriſt our elder Brother; the diſcharge of the office he had undertaken, brought him to the Croſs, and that Croſs was the only way to his conſecration to the Office of high Prieſt, to which at his reſurrection he was inaugurate; vid. Heb. 2. 10. it became him, &c. i. e. God, πολλοὺς υἱοὺς εἰς δόξαν ἀγαγόντα (not in bringing, but) bringing, (or being about that moſt gracious and mighty deſign of bringing) many ſons unto glory, τὸν ἀρχηγὸν τῆς σωτηρίας αὐτῶν διὰ παθημάτων τελειῶσαι by ſufferings to conſecrate or inaugurate, (for ſo τελειῦν critically ſignifies, being the word ſolemnly uſed by the Septuagint to ſignifie the legal conſecration of the Prieſts under the Law) the Captain of our ſalvation, that is Chriſt, who τελειωθεὶς, being ſo conſecrated, became the Authour of eternal ſalvation, &c. Heb. 5. 6. From hence, without more places it would follow, that we Chriſtians are to expect our τελείωσις (whether conſecration to our βασίλειον ἱεράτευμα our dignity of being Kings and Prieſts, i. e. Chriſtians here; or conſummation and crowning hereafter, as τελείωσις alſo ſignifies (τελείωσις ἀγάπης, Nyſſ.) by the ſame method and means that our Captain had his, which is διὰ παθημάτων by ſufferings: which courſe of divine Oeconomy is ſo general and without exception, (2 Tim. 3. 12. yea, and all that will be godly in this world, διωχθήσονται, ſhall be perſecuted) that Heb. 12. 6, 7, 8. the words are very very remarkable, Whom God loveth, he chaſteneth, and ſcourgeth every Son whom he receiveth: if you endure chaſtening, God dealeth with you as with Sons, for what ſon is he whom the father chaſteneth not? but if you be without chaſtiſement whereof all are partakers, then are you baſtards, and not ſons. Words of a large unlimited latitude, which I cannot diſcern any way in the world to ſoften, ſo as they may be ſupportable to him, that (as the Pſalmiſt ſaith) hath no changes, hath enjoyed an age of an uninterrupted continued proſperity, without ever having the Croſs on his ſhoulders. I confeſs I would fain find out ſome μαλακτικὸν or mollifying diſtinction, as that of the animus martyrii, the preparation to ſuffer, though God never ſend occaſion, that that might ſuffice for his qualification, who hath no other; but ſure that will not be able to allay or take off the force of [and chaſteneth every ſon, &c.] and if ye be without, not only if you be not prepared to bear, but if you be without chaſtiſement, then are you Baſtards, &c. which when it is ſet down as an aphoriſm of divine obſervation under the Kingdom of Chriſt, an Axiom of Gods Goſpel-providence, there will be no ſafety in diſputing or labouring to avoid the literal importance of it. To that purpoſe I conceive thoſe words tend, Rom. 8. 28. where to prove the concluſion premiſed, verſe 28. that all things tend to the good of them that love God, (and what thoſe all things are, is ſpecified, verſe 35. tribulation, diſtreſs, perſecution, famine, nakedneſs, danger, ſword,) the Apoſtle thus argues: For whom he hath fore-known, i. e. fore-appointed, the lovers of God premiſed, thoſe he hath alſo predeſtin'd to be conformable to the image of his Son, i. e. in ſuffering; and whom he hath predeſtined, thoſe he hath alſo called; to wit, to that conformity to which he hath predeſtined them, (as 1 Pet. 2. 21. the phraſe is uſed, εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ ἐκλήθητε, for to this ye were called, i. e. to this ſuffering as Chriſt did, and v. 3. 9. ye are thereunto called, that you ſhould inherit εὐλογίαν, bleſſing (not as we render it a bleſſing) i. e. that ye ſhould bleſs enemies as Chriſt did, and ſo inherit that exemplary grace of his, which as a grace may as properly be ſaid to be inherited; thus the context ſeems to inforce it [not rendring evil for evil, but bleſſing, knowing that you are thereunto called, that you ſhould inherit bleſſing, &c. i. e. poſſeſs that grace after him, ſo eminently diſcernible in him] and whom he hath thus called, he juſtified and glorified. Where the firſt and ſecond propoſition muſt be acknowledged univerſal, that all whom he hath foreknown, all lovers of God, are thus predeſtined, and all that are predeſtined, called (by their very title or profeſſion of Chriſtians) to this conformity with Chriſt in ſufferings. Add to theſe 1 Pet. 4. 18. if the righteous hardly be ſaved; which muſt be underſtood by the ſence of the Hebrew Phraſe, Prov. 11. 30. rendred by the LXXII. Εἰ δίκαιος μόλις σώζεται, and here retained by St. Peter, and then the ſence will be [and if the righteous be recompenced, i. e. by an Hebraiſm, puniſht in the earth, &c. or more literally to the Greek, If he eſcape hardly or with difficulty.] (as 1 Cor. 3. 15. ζημιωθήσεται, σωθήσεται δὲ, he ſhall be mulcted or ſuffer loſs, but ſhall eſcape) which Interpretation the former verſe in St. Peter confirms ὅτι ὁ καιρὸς τοῦ ἄρξασθαι τὸ κρῖμα ἀπὸ τοῦ οἴκου θεοῦ [for it is the ſeaſon of that act of divine diſpenſation, viz. of judgments beginning from the houſe of God, i. e. of Gods inflicting judgments of this life (which are the beginning or firſt part (τὸ πρῶτον as it follows) of Gods retribution for ſin) on the godly] which ſignifies that the ſtate of the Goſpel is that ſeaſon, though the Law was not: and to the ſame purpoſe, the Verſe following alſo, οἵ τε πάσχοντες κατὰ τὸ θέλημα τοῦ θεοῦ, &c. They that ſuffer according to the will of God. It ſeems by all put together, that the μόλις σώζεται [ſcarcely ſaved] is ſpoken of ſuffering, and the will or providence of God is that that diſpoſeth it ſo, and ſo the concluſion from thence is clear, and univerſal. The righteous ſhall be puniſh'd in the earth. 'Tis true indeed, under the Old Teſtament we find not any ſuch œconomy, but promiſes of a long and happy life, in a temporal Canaan to the obedient ſervants of God (though ſometimes God was pleaſed to interpoſe ſome variety in this kind, many troubles of the righteous in Davids time) but under the Goſpel 'tis quite contrary, even thoſe duties which are promiſed a reward on this earth, as mercifulneſs or alms-giving, are yet to expect the payment of this reward with ſome mixture (like Homers good cup poured out always with a daſh of the bad) the hundred-fold which ſuch men are promiſed to receive ἐν τῷ καιρῷ τούτῳ--------in this time, this firſt infeſtour harveſt of retributions, though they be ſecular bleſſings, houſes and lands, &c. yet muſt they be with perſecutions, Mark 10. 30. Which particular, though neither S. Matthew, nor S. Luke records, yet S. Peter (who had moſt reaſon punctually to obſerve thoſe words of Chriſt, being an anſwer directed to a queſtion of his propoſing, as all the three Evangeliſts acknowledge) remembred them, and ſo we find them in S. Marks Goſpel, which is reſolved to have been dictated by S. Peter. And therefore as 'tis Origens Allegory, that by the Baptiſm of Fire with which Chriſt ſhould baptize, are meant Perſecutions; So St. Auguſtine obſerves, that till after the coming of the Holy Ghoſt, (to which that Baptiſm is annext) no man was a Martyr for Chriſt; but after they came in ſholes; and therefore perhaps he is called the Comforter, as he that doth not deliver from the Croſs, but comforts under it.

Having thus far in the paſſage briefly pointed at this piece of Goſpel-Providence, 'twill not be amiſs as briefly to gueſs at the ends of this divine Oeconomy. 1. To adminiſter occaſion of the practice and exerciſe of many Chriſtian duties, and graces, as of patience, meekneſs, waiting on Chriſt, of loving our enemies, of the μὴ ἀντιστῆναι τῷ πονηρῷ, the non-reſiſting evil, we render it, or not uſing any violence againſt him that moleſts us, (rendring [τῷ πονηρῷ] of the Perſon, &c.) which if we have in ſeed or habit, 'tis certainly a great felicity to us, to meet with opportunities to actuate them, both in reſpect of the evidencing the ſincerity of them to God, to our brethren, to our own ſouls; and in reſpect of that reward, or Crown promiſed, the great degree of glory, Matth. 5. 12. that is proportioned to the τὸ ἔργον according to his work, Pſal. 62. 12. 2 Cor. 5. 10. ἵνα κομίσηται πρὸς ἃ ἔπραξε, according to the nature and number of the Acts, or operations of thoſe gifts or graces, as on the other ſide, a greater portion of the Torments of Hell is allotted to the more multiplied acts of wilful ſin. 2. To help to mortifie any remainders of ſin in us, which by continued proſperity are ready and apt to take root, and reflouriſh in us. 3. To aſſimilate, or make us like to Chriſt, to conform us to the Image of his Son, Rev. 8. 29. that is, the Image of the crucified Saviour, as was ſaid, that he might be the firſt born of many brethren, that is, might have a Church or Family, a multitude of brethren like himſelf, all ſufferers as he was. 4. That our ſins being puniſhed here, there might remain no arrear to be paid in another world; having had all our Purgatory here, there might remain nothing but heaven hereafter; which the Apoſtle expreſſeth, 1 Cor. 11.32. We are chaſtened of the Lord, that we ſhould not be condemned with the world: to which Father Abraham refers, Luke 16.25. Lazarus received his evil things in this life time, and now he is comforted.

Theſe and ſuch like being the deſigns of this act of God's Goſpel-Providence; It is next obſervable what a character the Spirit of God ſets upon the Croſs, i.e. Tribulation or affliction here, that it is the happieſt, bleſſedeſt eſtate, the moſt comfortable joyful condition that a Chriſtian can meet with. This riddle and paradox, or prodigy to carnal reaſon, is become the moſt ordinary beaten acknowledged truth in the New Teſtament. 'Tis the cloſe of the beatitudes in that inſtitution of Chriſtians, the Sermon in the Mount, Matth. 5.10. Bleſſed are they that are perſecuted, and v. 11. reviled: and the exhortation in this caſe χαίρετε καὶ ἀγαλλιᾶσθε, rejoyce, and be exceeding glad, ſo Luke 6. 22. (which there is ſome reaſon to think was ſpoken by Chriſt at another time) bleſſed are you when men ſhall hate you, and ſeparate you, and reproach you, and caſt you out, &c. χαίρετε καὶ σκιρτήσατε, rejoyce ye in that day, and leap for joy, &c. Saint Paul had learnt this, Col. 1.24. who now rejoyce in my ſufferings, yea, and glory too. 2 Cor. 11. 30. 12. 5. 9. And the former of thoſe places will be worth reviewing, Col. 1.24. I rejoyce in my ſufferings for you, καὶ ἀνταναπληρῶ τὰ ὑστερήματα τῶν θλίψεων τοῦ χριστοῦ ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ μου ὑπὲρ τοῦ σώματος αὐτοῦ, &c. The word ὑστερήματα ſignifies ſometimes in the ſacred Dialect, neceſſaries, or neceſſities, ſometimes, which is, congruous, profitable, 2 Cor. 9.12. ὑστερήματα τῶν ἁγίων, the neceſſities of the Saints, Ezra 6.9. ὃ ἂν ὑστέρημα, that which they have need of. The word חשח there uſed ſignifies in Chaldee (in which that Chapter is written) neceſſe habuit, indiguit, but in Syriack (which is the New Teſtament Dialect) aptum, commodum, congruens fuit, profuit, ſaith Schindler, which being applied to the word in this place, the importance of the Verſe will run thus, I am a Chriſtian, ſo called becauſe a Member, and Servant of Chriſt. Chriſt ſuffered for his Church, yea, and ἔδει παθεῖν, he ought ſo to ſuffer, Luke 24.46. i.e. it was very congruous and profitable, and in reſpect of God's decree and the Prophecies, neceſſary, that he ſhould ſo ſuffer. Conſequently it is alſo very congruous, yea and decreed by God (and therefore in ſo doing I fulfil God's Word, v.25. So as 1 Mac. 2.55. πληρῶσαι λόγον, is, doing what he was bid to do) that I ſhould ſuffer for you, who are the body of Chriſt. That I now do, I make up, or fulfil in my fleſh, that which is wanting of the ſufferings of Chriſt, or thoſe neceſſary ſufferings of Chriſt, and take pleaſure, rejoyce in ſo doing.

To the ſame purpoſe Saint James his exhortation is remarkable in the front of his Ep. 1. 2. My Brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations, πᾶσαν χαρὰν, all joy, i.e. the moſt joyous accident poſſible, and v. 12. Bleſſed is the man that endureth Temptation, &c. & cap. 5. 11. ἰδοὺ μακαρίζομεν τὺς ὑπομείναντας, behold we count them happy, we render it; it ſignifies more; behold we account them as a kind of Saints in Heaven, (for ſo ὁ μάκαρ uſually ſignifies) and Ariſtotle ſpeaking of ſome heroical ſuper-humane excellencies, οὐκ ἐπαινοῦμεν ſaith he, ἀλλὰ μακαρίζομεν) it ſeems that of ſuffering, a moſt bleſſed condition. To theſe add St. Peter, 1 Ep. 3.15. but ſanctifie the Lord God in your hearts; where the word ἁγιάζειν is to ſanctifie, as that is all one with glorifying or hallowing, or praiſing; a conſequent of the general rule, verſe 14. if ye ſuffer for righteouſneſs ſake, happy are ye; and perfectly oppoſite to [being afraid of their terrour, and being troubled,] in the end of that Verſe, and ſo is an expreſſion of this duty of praiſing, thanking, bleſſing God for our ſufferings in this life. So again, 1 Ep. 4. 13. μὴ ξενίζεσθε, verſe 12. be not frighted or ſtricken, &c. but rejoyce in as much as you are partakers of Chriſts ſufferings, and v. 14. if ye be reproached for the name of Chriſt, happy are you, &c. and verſe 16. if any ſuffer as a Chriſtian (not as a murtherer, a thief, an evil doer, a buſie-body in other mens matters, verſe 15. no great joy or comfort in any of thoſe ſufferings) let him not be aſhamed but let him glorifie God on this behalf, ὅτι ὁ καιρὸς τοῦ ἄρξασθαι τὸ κρῖμα, that it is the ſeaſon for judgment to begin, or of judgments beginning, at the houſe of God, as hath been explained, 'tis ſeaſonable that the τὸ πρῶτον, the firſt part of Gods ἀνταπόδοσις retribution to ſin, that which is in this life, ſhould befal the houſe of God, Chriſtians, and the moſt obedient of them; and being ſo, this is matter of rejoycing, and glorifying God. Other places ye will obſerve eaſily to the ſame purpoſe, as when St. Paul, Gal. 6.17. ſpeaks of his afflictions (in the height at that time it ſeems) he expreſſes it thus, στίγματα τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ ἐν τῷ σώματί μου βαστάζω· I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jeſus.] where the word στίγματα though it ſignifie brands of infamy, yet are here ſet, ſaith S. Chryſoſtome, for * τροπαῖα, trophaes, and marks of triumph, which therefore he is ſaid βαστάζειν, to carry triumphantly, and not φέρειν ſimply to carry, as acts of contumely; and ſo 2 Cor. 12. 9. I will glory in my weakneſſes] i.e. afflictions, that the power of God may dwell upon me. So Gal. 14. after he had ſpoken of ſome that had circumciſed their Proſelytes, only that they might not be perſecuted or purſued by the Croſs of Chriſt, ἵνα μὴ τῷ σταυρῷ τοῦ χριστοῦ διώκωνται, i.e. that they might avoid perſecution from the Jews, and ſo glory in their Flock, i.e. brag that they help their Diſciples to carnal advantages which others have not, to wit, eaſe and quiet, &c. In defiance and oppoſition to ſuch he cries out, and diſclaims all kind of glorying but this one, in the Croſs of Chriſt, i.e. Afflictions, &c. So Phil. 1. 29. ὑμῖν ἐχαρίσθη, To you it is granted as a grace, and vouchſafement of Gods ſpecial favour, to ſuffer for Chriſt. Let theſe for the preſent ſuffice, to ſoften this carnal paradox.

* So Ignatius mentioning his δεσμὰ, bonds, Epiſt. ad Epheſ. calls them, πνευματικὰς μαργαρίτας, Spiritual jewels, and adds his wiſh, ἐν οἷς γένοιτό μοι τελειωθῆναι, God grant that in, or by them I may be conſummate or crown'd: And anon, ἀξιώθην φορέσαι ταύτας τὰς ἁλύσεις, I have been vouchſafed, or thought worthy to bear theſe chains. And in his Epiſtle ad Magneſ. he ſaith, ἀξιωθεὶς ὀνόματος θεοῦ καὶ πίστεως ἐν οἷς περιφέρω δεσμοῖς, ᾄδω, &c. Being thought worthy of the divine and precious name of God, in or by thoſe chains which I carry about with me, (carry about as enſigns of honour, matter of glory and rejoycing) I ſing, &c.

But now having proceeded thus far in a matter, to him that is converſant in the New Teſtament, ſo obvious and vulgar, that I ſhall preſume it matter of wonder to him, what ſhould move me to ſo ſuperfluous and unneceſſary an undertaking; I muſt now take confidence to proceed to that which Arrian calls the ἐφαρμογὴ προλήψεως ταῖς ἐπὶ μέρους ὑσίαις, the applying of κοιναὶ ἔννοιαι known and granted principles, to particular perſons, or caſes, or practices. For therein, as that excellent Philoſopher obſerves, conſiſts the ground and beginning of all ſtrife and difficulty, and difference, betwixt men, no man having any conſiderable Temptation, to keep him from conſenting to the truth of a general propoſition ſufficiently aſſerted, as long as he appears not concern'd in it, and yet every man almoſt almoſt having ſome irreconcileable quarrel to it, when his actions are required to be ruled by it; hence is it, that the ſpeculative part of knowledge is far eaſier than the practical; and as Ariſtotle ſaith, the Mathematicks which are the moſt abſtruſe Science, are moſt eaſie to be learnt by a young man, or a diſſolute, of any the moſt untamed affections, ſo he have but an ordinary natural capacity, (and 'tis evident by his Organon, that he ſuppoſed children to have learnt Geometry before they came to Logick) whereas of the precepts of Morality, ſuch are utterly uncapable, λέγουσιν ἀ πίστανται, they can recite them by rote, but believe not a word of them.

I wiſh it were now uncharitable to affirm the ſame, of many that have taken upon them, to be the beſt, and moſt reforming Chriſtians amongſt us; that it continued ſtill to be but our jealouſie, what is now proved our ſence, that ſome of thoſe who have hitherto been admitted for our ſtricteſt Chriſtians, have at length confeſt themſelves fartheſt from the merit, and true deſert of that title, if the doctrine of the Croſs, which hitherto we have laid down for acknowledged truth, do not at laſt prove a fable.

The Apoſtle Phil. 3. 18. tells us even weeping, that there are many walkers, (I think he means by that phraſe πολλοὶ περιπατοῦσι, Chriſtian profeſſors (whom judging by their actions, he cannot chuſe but call ἐχθροὺς τοῦ σταυροῦ τοῦ Χριστοῦ) of whom it ſeems he had oft admoniſhed them, ἔλεγον πολλάκις ὑμῖν λέγω) enemies of the Croß of Chriſt; what thoſe were in the Apoſtles time will not be pertinent now to examine, I ſhall only with a ſad heart (not deſiring to judge my brother, but if it were poſſible, to direct him to prejudge, or at leaſt examine himſelf, and ſo either anticipate and prevent, or elſe prepare himſelf to approach with confidence Gods judgment, and withal, to help to undeceive others whom we find ductile to ſome modern ſins, much-what upon that dangerous prepoſſeſſion which the Apoſtle calls having mens perſons in admiration) make theſe few quære's, and leave every mans own ſoul to anſwer them.

1. Suppoſing our grounds laid to be true, I demand whether it be the temper of a true Chriſtian, and not rather of an enemy of the Croſs of Chriſt, inſtead of rejoycing to repine and murmur under the Croſs, and evidence that, by ſpeaking evil of thoſe powers who have laid it on our ſhoulders?

2. To be more refractory after ſuch ſufferings (inſtead of being more meek and more humble) more violent in matters of indifferency (by our own continued practice acknowledged to be ſo in our account, till after ſuch ſufferings our judgments or rather our practice altered) and more reſolved not to yield obedience in them, than before we thought our ſelves bound to be.

3. To plot and project, and to that purpoſe to hold correſpondence with other men, (whom we conceive already moved with diſcontents, or our ſelves have labour'd ſo to move) to find out the moſt probable way of delivering us from the Croſs, whatſoever that way be, beſide our addreſſes to God in prayer to remove it, if he ſee it beſt for us in all reſpects.

4. To make uſe of any means to this purpoſe, which we are not aſſured is adminiſtred and offered unto us by God, of which we can no way poſſibly be aſſured but by the evident goodneſs and juſtifiableneſs, at leaſt lawfulneſs, in all reſpects of that means which we thus deſign to make uſe of.

5. To move or ſtir the quiet and peace of one or more Kingdoms (though not principally yet collaterally, or at all) in this contemplation that we ſhall get the Croſs off from our own ſhoulders, come to a more proſperous condition, yea though it be but to a more peaceable enjoying of our manner of Religion, than hitherto we have attained to.

6. To venture on, and (though not primarily to deſign, if it may be done without it, yet if it may not, then ſecondarily and conſequently) to reſolve on the ſhedding of any one man's bloud, which we know would not otherwiſe be ſhed, eſpecially if it proceed further to the waging or but occaſioning of a war, in which (whether offenſive or defenſive on our parts) it cannot be hoped but a great effuſion of Chriſtian and Proteſtant bloud will follow.

7. To attempt or deſire the removing of the Land-marks, the altering of the Government of Church and State, the working of any conſiderable change in either (which we can have no revelation to aſſure us may not prove authour of ſome inconvenience which we foreſee not) the better to ſecure our ſelves or others that the Croſs ſhall not return to our ſhoulders again.

8. To think it juſt and reaſonable (and our ſelves injur'd if it be not ſo) that we ſhould have the greater portion of ſecular dignities for the future in regard of ſome former ſufferings of ours: which if it ſhould befal us, would be parallel to that curſe, Mat. 6. mercedem habent, they have their reward, in this life.

9. To endeavour to lay this Croſs on other mens ſhoulders of which we have freed our own, whether thoſe other men be ſuch as were not guilty of our former ſufferings, but perhaps pitied and mourned, and prayed for us, (for that were rewarding good with evil) or whether they be our greateſt perſecutors (for that will be rendring evil for evil) moſt perfectly contrary to Chriſts Doctrine, Matth. 6. 44. Rom. 12. 17, 19, 20, 21.

Secondly, ſuppoſing things to be as now they are in this Kingdom, my queſtion is, Firſt, whether we have not great reaſon to believe, that (the doctrine of the Croſs being not ſo well laid to heart by thoſe who three years ſince conceived themſelves the principal Scholars in that School) God is now pleaſed to call another ſort of men into that form, to try whether they will prove better proficients than their Predeceſſors have done; Secondly, whether thoſe on whom that lot is now faln, be not moſt eminently bound to glorifie God in this behalf, 1 Pet. 4. 16. Thirdly, whether by the experience of other mens failings in this kind, they have not reaſon to be earneſt in prayer to God, and diligent in uſing and improving all Gods directions for the due Chriſtian diſcharging of ſo glorious, and withal, ſo difficult a task, that when they are proved to the utmoſt, are brought forth to reſiſt to blood, they may be found faithful. Fourthly, whether the obtaining of this grace from God be not more highly conducible to every mans own individual intereſts, than the removing of the Croſs from us, though wrought moſt directly, and by means adminiſtred undoubtedly by God himself. Fifthly, whether it can become a Christian to make use of any means which he is not on sure grounds satisfied to be purely and perfectly lawful (i.e. agreeable first to the Gospel-rule of obedience to Christ in every particular, and secondly to the lawful commands of our undoubted Superiours not contradicted by any Law or power higher than they) to get now either totally or in part from this Cross, i.e. from any pressure which in the discharge of a good conscience God shall permit to fall on any of us.

When every man in this broken State, and Church, most sadly militant, of what perswasions soever he be, hath laid the several parts of these two Quære's to his heart, and examined himself by them (which truly I should not have laid thus plainly before him, had I had any other thought or aim, but this one of making it impossible for him to be blind in judging himself) I shall hope he will pardon his Monitor, and save this paper the labour of proceeding further to bear witness against him at any other tribunal than this of his own conscience.

The Lord prosper this short Discourse to the end to which it is designed.

V. de supra p. 304

A Vindication of Christ's reprehending Saint Peter, from the Exceptions of Mr. MARSHAL.

THere is nothing more unjust and uningenuous, than M. Marshall's dealing about Christ's reprehension of Saint Peters using the Sword; whilst he labours to answer the Objection, which from thence is brought against the use of Arms, though but defensive, taken up against a lawful Magistrate. The Argument is briefly this: Saint Peter, in defence of his Master (Christ himself) drew his Sword, and cut off the Ear of Malchus, one of the High Priests Servants, sent by commission from their Masters, to apprehend Jesus: and our Saviour commands him to put up his sword; adding by way of reason, for they that take the Sword (take it, not when 'tis put into their hands by God or the supreme Magistrate, or any Delegate of his, who hath the power of the Sword; but take it, usurp it, without legal authority or concession giving or permitting it to them) shall perish by the Sword. Which reason or backing of Christs reprehension is brought to infer, that 'tis a sin for any to use the Sword against the supreme Magistrate, though for defence of Christ or Christian Religion. To this Master Marshall's answer is threefold; 1. That the speech of Christ to Peter, is not a reproof of the sword taken for a just defence; but of the sword taken for unjust oppression, and a comfort to those who are oppressed with it. For Origen, Theophylact, Titus, Euthymius, interpret the meaning to be, that Christ doth not rebuke Peter for using defensive Arms; but to let Peter know that he need not snatch Gods work out of his hands: for God would in time punish those with the sword, that came thus with the sword against him. And that these words are a prophecy of the punishment which the Roman sword should exact of the bloudy Jewish nation, according with the like expression, Revel. 13. 10. He that kills with the sword, must be killed with the sword: here is the patience and faith of the Saints, i. e. this may comfort the Saints in their persecutions, that God will take vengeance for them: and for all this the Margin advises the Reader to consult Grotius de jure belli, l. 1. c. 3. n. 3. This is the place at length in Mr. Marshal his Letter to a friend, which (being of some concernment and importance to the present controversie of the times, though not to confirm his cause by this exposition, yet to dispatch one of his special adversaries out of the way) I shall now beg leave to examine; and of all together, observe these four things; First, that the ancient Writers, vouched by him, are not vouched from his own reading, but taken upon trust from Grotius, as also the observation of the Roman Sword, and the place in the Revelations; Secondly, that the interpretation, asserted by him out of them, is not asserted by them; Thirdly, that it is not asserted by Grotius; Fourthly, that Grotius to whom he owes all this seeming aid to his cause, is the most declared enemy of this whole cause of his, in behalf of defensive resistance of the Magistrate, that he could possibly have faln on; and upon occasion of these words of Christ to Peter hath said as much against it. If these four things be made good; I cannot guess what could be further added to prove the injustice and uningenuousness, I shall add the untowardness and unluckiness of this answer. And for the particulars, I shall but require a Reader with eyes in his head, and suppose him not possest with a belief of an absolute infallibility in Master Marshal, and then I shall be confident to demonstrate them.

For the first, the proof will be short, if you please but to look on Grotius in the place directed to in his Annotations on the Gospels, pag. 465. almost verbatim transcribing what he had before published de jure belli; you shall in each find every of the particulars mentioned: but for this I would not charge M. Marshal, I wish he would always glean out of so good Writers. The only fault here is, that having borrowed so much from him and digested it into nourishment of his own errour, he did not also take the pains to borrow what was present to be had, a most soveraign antidote for his own poison, means of rectifying his mistake; but like the man in Gellius, that had eat so much poison, and therewith so invenom'd his bloud, that he could poison the Flea that came to bite him: so, he the Grotius that came to prick and wound; or, if he had pleased, to convert, to bring him to repentance.

For the second, I shall not expect to evince it against so great an authority of Master Marshal, without transcribing the very words of those writers in this matter. Origen upon the place in Matth.

Matth. 26. tr. 35. p. 118. explains the whole period in theſe words. (I ſhall omit no word that is pertinent to the matter in hand:) Unus eorum qui erant cum Jeſu, nondum manifeſtè concipiens apud ſe Evangelicam patientiam illam traditam ſibi à Chriſto nec pacem quam dedit diſcipulis ſuis, ſed ſecundum poteſtatem datam Judæis per legem de inimicis, extendens manum accepit gladium, &c. Peter it ſeems had not perfectly learned the Doctrine of Chriſtian patience, and the peace which Chriſt commended to his Diſciples, but proceeded according to the Jewiſh law of dealing with enemies. This concludes Peters act contrary to Chriſtian patience and peaceableneſs, and ſo makes him capable of Chriſts reproof, which Mr. Marſhal will wholly divert from him, and caſt upon the Jews. Then he goes on, Mox Jeſus ad eum, converte gladium in locum ſuum: Eſt ergo gladii locus aliquis, ex quo non licet accipere eum, qui non vult perire maximè in gladio. (This clearly of Saint Peter again, and not the Jews, that he muſt not take the ſword out of its place, unleſs he will be content to periſh by the ſword:) Pacificos enim vult eſſe Jeſus diſcipulos ſuos, ut bellicum gladium hunc deponentes, (O that Maſter Marſhal would remember this; and after ſo fair an admonition, put the military ſword out of his mouth alſo.) alterum pontificium accipiant gladium, quem dicit Scriptura gladium Spiritûs. Simile autem mihi videtur quod dicit, Omnes qui accipiunt, &c. i. e. omnes qui non pacifici, ſed belli concitatores ſunt, in eo bello peribunt quod concitant, &c. Et puto quòd omnes tumultuoſi & concitatores bellorum, & conturbantes animas hominum, maximè Eccleſiarum, accipiunt gladium, in quo & ipſi peribunt. Excellent ſeaſonable Doctrine for theſe times if it might be laid to heart; but no way excuſing Saint Peter. Again, Qui accipiunt gladium, &c. cavere nos convenit, ut ne occaſione Militiæ vel vindictæ propriarum injuriarum (remember not for revenge of ones own injuries) eximamus gladium, aut ob aliquam occaſionem, quam omnem abominatur hæc Chriſti doctrina, præcipiens ut implcamus quod ſcriptum eſt, Cum his qui oderunt pacem, eram pacificus. Si ergo cum odientibus pacem debemus eſſe pacifici; adverſus neminem gladio uti debemus. Theſe are the words of Origen; out of which, he that ſhall infer that Origen conceived the meaning of the Scripture to be, that Chriſt did not rebuke Peter for uſing defenſive Arms againſt Malchus; I ſhall reſolve he hath gotten the Philoſophers ſtone, is Alchymiſt enough to extract fire out of water; any the moſt contrary ſence out of any words. Not ſo much as one word here of the Jews or the Roman ſword that ſhould give them their payment: but all of Peters Sword, and the miſcarriages of that: and ſo much for Origen.

What if a man ſhould conſtrue this (not on occaſion of the Militia.

Then for Theophylact; he is alſo punctual enough to this purpoſe. Μὴ ἐγκαλῶμεν τῷ Πέτρῳ, ὑπὲρ ἑαυτῷ γὰρ ὑπὲρ τοῦ διδασκάλου ζηλώσας τοῦτο ἐποίησεν· Let us not find fault with Peter (make not too much haſte, Maſter Marſhal, to catch that, till you ſee the conſequents) for he did this not for himſelf, but in zeal for his Maſter. Herein I ſhall interpoſe my conjecture that Theophylact might think Peter did this, as a Zealot; as James and John would have deſtroyed the Village of the Samaritans, jure Zelotarum: ſo his words alſo ſound on Luke p. 518. Ζηλῶσι μαθηταὶ ἢ μαχαίρας ἀνασύροντας: and then though that were unlawful for a Chriſtian, a piece of Judaiſm out-dated by Chriſt; yet in Peter, as a Jew, not perfectly illuminate or inſtructed in the Chriſtian Doctrine (as Origen before obſerv'd) it was not ſo blameable yet, till after the coming of the Holy Ghoſt, who was to bring all things to their remembrance which Chriſt had taught them. And therefore perhaps it is, that, although Saint Auguſtine calls this of Peter, carnalem amorem, yet amorem Magiſtri ſtill. The ſame Author upon Saint Mark hath theſe words upon this ſame occaſion, Ἀποσιωπᾷ τὸ ὄνομα ὁ Μάρκος, ἵνα μὴ λύπῃ ἐπαινῶν τὸν διδάσκαλον ἀντὶ Πέτρου, ὡς ζηλώσαντα ὑπὲρ Χρίστου, counting this zeal, as in a Jew, rather a commendable thing. If all this be yielded, yet will it be no juſtification of the like in a Chriſtian: becauſe now Chriſt hath reformed that Law, and checkt that Peter. And therefore, the ſame Theophylact goes on; that though we ſhould not aggravate Peters fault, nor chide him for it; ὁ δὲ Κύριος μετατρυθμίζων αὐτὸν εἰς εὐαγγελικὴν πολιτείαν διδάσκει μὴ χρῆσθαι μαχαίρᾳ κἂν ὑπὲρ θεοῦ δοκῇ τὶς ἐκδικεῖν, yet Chriſt reforms him, turns him to the Goſpel-diſcipline, and teaches him not to uſe the ſword, though by ſo doing he ſeems to defend or vindicate God himſelf. Could any man have ſpoken more expreſly or prophetically againſt Maſter Marſhal his doctrine, than this Father doth? (So likewiſe in other places upon Saint Lukes Goſpel, pag. 518. Ζηλῶσι δ' οἱ μαθηταὶ, &c. ἐπιτιμᾶται δὲ ὁ θερμὸς Πέτρος ὡς παρὰ τὸ σκόπιμον τοῦ καιροῦ ζῆλῳ χρησάμενος: he confeſſes Peter was chid for his zeal. And on St. Johns Goſpel, Ἀλλ' ὁ Κύριος καταπαύει μὲν τὸν Πέτρον, καὶ ἀπειλήσας, βάλε, φησὶ, &c. The Lord reprehends Peter, and threatning ſaith, put up, &c. threatning whom? ſure that perſon, in Theophylacts opinion, to whom he ſaid put up: and that ſure was Peter, not the Jews.) But to ſhew you the occaſion of Maſter Marſhal his miſtake; It follows indeed in Theophylact on Matthew, Αἰνίσσεται δὲ ὅτι διὰ τῆς Ῥωμαίων μαχαίρας ἀναιρεθήσονται οἱ κατ' ἀυτὸν λαβόντες τὴν μαχαίραν Ἰουδαῖοι· Inſinuat autem, as Oecolampadius renders it, Chriſt inſinuates that by the Romans ſword, the Jews that took the ſword againſt him, ſhall be deſtroyed. This acknowledged truth, (that the Romans ſhould deſtroy the Jews, the apprehenders and crucifiers of Chriſt, i. e. that were guilty of crucifying him,) was, ſaith he, inſinuated in thoſe words of Chriſt, wherein, as before we ſhewed out of Theophylacts words, he reproved St. Peter. Now we know that αἰνίσσεσθαι, or inſinuating, or intimating, ſignifies a ſecundary or allegorical ſence of a Scripture, as it is frequent in that Author. Speaking of the cutting off Malchus his ear, αἰνίσσεται γὰρ, ſaith he, he inſinuates, ὅτι παρήκοοι ἦσαν καὶ ἀπειθεῖς, that the Jews did not hear and obey the Scripture, as they ſhould: a meer allegorical interpretation. So when Chriſt bids him that had no ſword, ſell his garment and buy one, Luke 22. 36. πολέμους αἰνίσσεται, &c. he ſpeaks ænigmatically, and tells them by way of inſinuation, what wars and dangers ſhould betide them. Which inſinuated or ænigmatical ſence, though it be acknowledged true, will not evacuate that other literal. For I hope in Mr. Marſhal his own judgment, that 'tis lawful to uſe a ſword in ones own defence in time of war and danger, and that that lawfulneſs is authorized by Chriſt in thoſe words: which I ſhall not doubt to acknowledge with him, if it be not againſt the lawful Magiſtrate.

In Matt. p. 163.

The product then of Theophylacts interpretation will be this; that by theſe words, [for all they that take the ſword, ſhall periſh by the ſword] Chriſt reprehends and chides Peter for drawing his ſword, and uſing it, as he did: and withal inſinuates ænigmatically the deſtruction of the Jews by the the Romans. Which if it be acknowledged true in both sences, 'twill no way prejudice us, or serve Mr. Marshal, whose cause depends upon rejecting of the former sence, not on asserting the latter: and doth not only affirm that it is a reproof of the sword taken for unjust oppression, but also that it is not a reproof of the sword taken for just defence: which is absolutely false in Theophylacts opinion, if defending of Christ be just defence, or chiding be reproving: or if teaching not to use the sword, though one seem to defend God himself, be rebuking Peter for using defensive Arms for Christ. The short is, though Theophylacts interpretation bring the Jews under Christs threatning and reprehension, yet doth it no way free Peter from the same; but primarily subjects him to it: the contrary to which is the only thing would be for Mr. Marshal his purpose. 'Tis true indeed in his Scholia on Saint John, he saith, Christ comforted Peter, which seems opposite to rebuking; but that was not in these words, For they that take the sword, &c. but in those, the cup, &c. (παραμυθῆται δὲ ἐν τῷ εἰπεῖν τὸ ποτήριον, &c.) which Saint John immediately adds, omitting the words of the threatning out of the Law. And so much for Theophylact also.

Now that which hath been thus largely set down out of Theophylact will sufficiently clear this whole business without proceeding to examine what may be found in Titus Bostrensis, or Euthymius, to this purpose. The former of these, in his Exposition of Saint Luke in the Bibliotheca patrum Grec. hath not the least word sounding that way, but rather contrary; interpreting Christs command of buying a sword as a designation only of the Jews preparation against him, Καὶ ὅτι μέλλουσιν αὐτὸν συλλαμβάνειν, and that they were about to apprehend him: which (as Theophylact did, so) he calls αἴνιγμα μαχαίρας, the intimation of the sword, and saith, that therefore Christ adds, that the things written of him must be fulfilled. And again, that if Christ would have had his Disciples use any humane help at his apprehension, a hundred swords would not have been sufficient, εἰ δὲ μὴ τοῦτο, καὶ δύο περιττὰι, and if he would not, even these two would be too many. But all this he saith upon the passage of the two swords. The truth is, in the exposition of the Gospel, he saith nothing of this reprehension of Peter, but passes it over in silence: And for his notes on St. Matthew, as also for Euthymius his, though I confess, that I have them not by me, yet (besides that I find nothing that way in those Excerpta that Lucas Brugensis hath out of them, who would not probably have omitted the mention of such a rarity if it were there,) I think I may take upon me at a venture to say, that he that examines those books, shall not possibly meet with more than out of Theophylact was cited: These three Expositors running generally on the same notions, and all of them for the most part gleaning from Chrysostome (Euthymius being his Scholar, Titus his profest Epitomator) who I am sure hath nothing in favour of this Exposition. Out of him, as the Homer of those after-Expositors, I shall transcribe these few passages, πρὸς δόξιν in his Homil. 54. on Matthew, c. 26. Why did he bid buy a sword? to give them assurance that he should be betrayed: ἐχ ἵνα ἀπλίσωνται, (ἄπαγε) ἀλλὰ τὴν παράδοσιν δηλῶν: not that they should be armed on that occasion (away with that) but to signifie his betraying. Then that their having those two weapons at that time was upon occasion of killing the Lamb for the Passeover, and the Disciples then coming from Supper, and hearing that some would come to apprehend him, took them out from thence with them, ὡς πολεμήσοντες ὑπὲρ τοῦ διδασκάλου, meaning to fight for their Master, ὃ τῆς ἐκείνων γνώμης ἦν μόνον, which was their opinion only, not Christs intention: διὸ ἐπετιμᾶται ὁ Πετρὸς αὐτῇ χρησάμενος, wherefore Peter is chid for using of it: καὶ μετὰ σφοδρᾶς ἀπειλῆς, and that with a sound threat; which what can it be, but that about which we now contend, they that take the sword, &c. upon the hearing of which words, saith he, he straight obeyed and did so no more. Again, citing the passage in St. Luke, τῷ μαθητῇ ἐπετίμησε καὶ ἠπείλησεν ἵνα πείσῃ, he chid and threatned the Disciples into obedience; and then sets down the words of the threat, πάντες γὰρ, &c. for all that take, &c. And yet after all these plain words of reprehending and threatning Peter in those words (all they that take the sword, shall perish by it) he yet adds that he comforted his Disciples by two things, first the punishment of the betrayers, applying to that the same speech in a Parenthesis (They that take, &c.) and that he suffer'd not unwillingly. All which together signifie clearly the same that we found in Theophylact (and presume the utmost either of Titus or Euthymius their exposition) that in that threatning of Peter is intimated also or insinuated ænigmatically a threat of those other sword-men that came out with swords and staves to take Jesus: which will not be denied by any, or disputed of by me; so the other be granted, viz. that Peter was here reprehended and threatned, which is the only thing we quarrel in Mr. M. And so much for the second undertaking.

Now, that in the third place, Grotius himself who cites these four ancients, and is here cited by Mr. M. de jure belli, l. 1. c. 3. n. 3. doth not in this place, or any other of his writings, assert this interpretation; I shall thus prove. The thing that in that place he hath in hand is to inquire, Whether all use of the sword for a mans own defence, be unlawful under the Gospel? And he resolves, that in case of one private mans being invaded by another, 'tis lawful by the Law of Christ (not necessary, but lawful; a man is only not obliged to the contrary) or notwithstanding the prescribed rules of Christian patience, to kill another in defence of my own life. Against this, 3. objections he mentions out of the New Testament, Matth. 5. 39. Rom. 12. 19. and the saying of Christ to Peter, put up thy sword, &c. For all they that take the sword, &c. To these 3. he answers.

1. By opposing some other places of Scripture, that of Christ to his followers, Luke 22. 36. that to buy a sword they should sell a coat. In which company of his auditors there were, saith he, at that time none but his Disciples, and although, saith he, it be a proverbial speech, signifying the great dangers approaching; yet it referr'd to the ordinary use of swords at that time, for private mens defence in time of danger, not there prohibited by him: applying that of Cicero, Gladios habere certè non liceret, si uti illis nullo pacto liceret: We might not be allowed to have swords, if 'twere in no case lawful to use them. Which still confirms his point in hand, that in some case, the use of the private sword is lawful.

2. He proceeds to the particular places, saith, in the μὴ ἀντιστῆναι τῷ πονηρῷ, there is some exception allowed, that it binds only in tolerable injuries; such as the box on the cheek, &c. there mentioned: in the μὴ ἀδικηθέντες ἑαυτοὺς, ἀδικεῖν signifies not defence, but revenge. Then for that of Peter, it contains, tains, ſaith he, a prohibition of uſing the ſword, but not in caſe of defence: for he needed not defend himſelf; for Chriſt had ſaid, let theſe go; Joh. 18. 8. nor Chriſt, for he would not be defended, &c. Beſides, ſaith he, Peter took up the ſword (in eos qui nomine publicarum poteſtatum adventabant, quibus an ullo caſu reſiſtere liceat, peculiaris eſt quæſtio, infrà à nobis peculiariter tractanda,) againſt thoſe that came in the name of the publick powers, againſt whom, whether it be lawful to make reſiſtance in any caſe, is a peculiar queſtion, to be handled afterward peculiarly. (And, let me pawn my faith for it, Stated negatively.) As for that which Chriſt adds; All they that take the ſword, &c. that is, either a Proverb, or (which is the opinion of Origen, Theophylact, Titus, and Euthymius,) indicat, it ſhews or intimates, that we ſhould not ſnatch revenge out of God's hands; and to this applies the place in the Revel. a place in Tertullian, adeò idoneus patientiæ ſequeſter Deus, &c. and adds, Simúlque his Chriſti verbis vaticinium videtur ineſſe de pœnis, quas à ſanguinariis Judæis erat exacturus gladius Romanus. And alſo in the words there ſeems to be included a Prophecy of the puniſhment that the Roman ſword ſhould exact of the bloudy Jews. From all which put together this will be the utmoſt that Mr. Marſhal can conclude, that Grotius conceived, that the ſpeech of Chriſt to Peter prohibited not all uſe of the ſword, for private defence (no man ſaith it did; or that all ſuch defence is unlawful; our caſe is only of reſiſting Magiſtrates) that Origen, Theophylact, &c. owned an expoſition of it, that thereby we ſhould be taught, not to take God's office of revenging out of his hand, (which we alſo make a ſpecial part of the importance of that ſpeech, both there, and in the Revel. and ſo a plain check of Peter, who did take it) and that withal in theſe words a Prophecy ſeems to be implied of the revenge of Chriſts death, wrought by Titus upon the Jews, (And we can acknowledge the Scripture, ſo rich a mine of variety, that it may have this prophetick ſence alſo: though by the way, Grotius cites not this out of thoſe four Writers, (nor could he, for in Origen we find it not) but as from himſelf, ſimulque vaticinium videtur ineſſe, &c.) But for the literal ſence, that Peter ſhould not be rebuked by Chriſt, for uſing defenſive arms againſt the Magiſtrate, (when with the uſe of thoſe the leaving vengeance to God is utterly unreconcileable) (and Chriſtians conceive themſelves bound not to uſe thoſe arms againſt the Magiſtrate for this very cauſe, becauſe he is avenged by God & puniſhable, revengeable by God alone:) and yet be rebuked for ſnatching Gods work out of his hand: Or that theſe words ſhould not belong in the prime ſence to Peter's fact, as well as in a ſecundary prophetical ſeeming one to the Jews, there is not any appearances of ſound of any word in Grotius there, or in any other place in that Book, or his large annotations on the Goſpels: which if Mr. Marſhal had read with his own eyes, he would confeſs with me. And ſo much for his citation of Grotius.

Now in the laſt place, for the opinion of this learned man Grotius, (an excellent Caſuiſt, exactly diſtinguiſhing the ſeveral obligations of Nature, of Moſes, and of Chriſt, a Proteſtant, and, if an Arminian, far from deſerving that part of the cenſure which Mr. Cheynel lays on ſuch, of being as lawleſs as that faction at Munſter, (whoſe Law it was Magiſtratibus ac Principibus nullus ſubjiciatur) in the buſineſs of taking up Arms againſt a King for juſt defence, I ſhall refer you to his firſt Book, de jure belli, &c. cap. 4. (Not that I can hope you will be moved with his authority when he appears againſt you, that is not the manner of men now a days to be content to be tried by your own witneſſes: but for the ſatisfaction to conſcience which this Authours reaſons, and perſpicuity will yield any Chriſtian Reader) the very place whereto he referr'd the Reader even now for his reſolution in that point; and the ſtate of this queſtion being ſet (An aut privatis aut publicis perſonis bellum gerere liceat in eos quorum imperio ſubſunt) whether any private or publick perſons may lawfully wage War againſt them, under whoſe command they are, he defines, that by the very Law of Nature (ſo much now talkt of) 'tis not lawful. 2. That by the Law of the Jews it was not allowed. 3. That it was leſs allowed, but become more unlawful by the Evangelical Law, Rom. 13. 1. and 1 Pet. 2. 12, &c. and practice of ancient Chriſtians. 4. Confutes the opinion of thoſe that affirm it lawful for inferiour Magiſtrates to wage War againſt the Supreme, by reaſons and Scriptures. 5. Propoſes the caſe of extreme and inevitable neceſſity, when the King goes to take away a mans life unjuſtly: and (whatſoever might from nature or practice of the Jews, as of David, or of the Maccabees be brought to aſſert reſiſtance in this caſe) he defines from the Chriſtian Law, (which commands ſo oft to take up the Croſs) an exacter degree of patience, and particularly when for Religion our Superiours go about to kill us, though he will allow flight to ſome ſort of men, yet to no man more than flight; but rather rejoycing when we ſuffer as Chriſtians: This, ſaith he, was the courſe that brought Chriſtian religion to ſuch a height in the World: and reſolves it the greateſt injury that can be done to the ancient Chriſtians, to ſay, that it was want of ſtrength, not of inclinations that way, that they defended not themſelves in time of moſt certain danger of death. Tertullian, ſaith he, had been imprudent and impudent, if in a writing preſented to the Emperours (who could not be ignorant of the truth) he had dared to lie ſo confidently, when he ſaith Non deeſſet nobis vis numerorum, &c. moſt admirable paſſages out of ancient Writers he there cites for a leaf together to the ſame purpoſe of dying for the truth of Religion; and never defending themſelves by Arms againſt the illegal will of the lawful Magiſtrates. (I beſeech Mr. Marſhal to ſend to the ſhop and read the paſſages, and conſider how far he hath departed from the primitiveneſs, and Chriſtianity of thoſe examples. And to conclude, Though Grotius (according to his manner, which is to ſay all that can be wiſht in any Subject) mentions ſome caſes wherein a King may be reſiſted, yet if you read them, you will find little joy in any of them: As in caſe a King ſhall abdicate his Kingdom, and manifeſtly relinquiſh his power, then he turns private man, and ſo may be dealt with as any other ſuch. And ſome other the like.

Of Socin. p. 53.

Well, I have ſaid enough of Grotius in the buſineſs, and ſhould add no more; but I remember I promiſed to ſhew that on occaſion of theſe words of Chriſt to St. Peter, he hath as much againſt the expoſition pretended to be his, and the whole doctrine of reſiſtance, as the Kings friends could deſire; and that is in his Annotations on the place, Matth. 26. 52. Οἱ λαβόντες μαχαίραν, &c. Neque vero ad Petrum tantùm admonitio iſta pertinet; ſed & ad Chriſtianos omnes qui à publicis poteſtatibus ad pœnam expetuntur ob pietatis profeſſionem: The admonition belongs not to Peter only, but to all Chriſtians,

ſtians, when they are called by the Magiſtrate to ſuffer for the profeſſion of piety; and ſets the rule in that caſe, παρατίθεσθαι τὰς ψυχὰς τῷ κτίστῃ, to commit our ſouls to God, to expend our lives in his cauſe that gave us them; alledging to this purpoſe what this Peter had learned from this Maſter, 1 Pet. 4. 16. 19. and anſwering the common frivolous objection fetcht from the Law of natural defence or ſelf-preſervation, ſhewing the difference between the uſe of that liberty againſt thieves, &c. (againſt which the Laws and Magiſtrates give us the liberty) and againſt the commands of the Supreme Magiſtrate; whom if in any caſe of injury, &c. private men may have permiſſion to reſiſt, or repel force with force, omnia erunt tumultuum plena; nulla legum, nulla judiciorum authoritas: the perfect image of our Kingdom at this time when the words are Engliſhed, as God knows the ſence is: and then he concludes with the caſe of Religion, wherein there is no place of reſiſting the higher powers, be their violence never ſo unjuſt.

I have undoubtedly made good my four undertakings in this buſineſs: and ſhall beſeech Mr. Marſhal hereafter to write more cautiouſly, leſt he provoke men to put him and the world in mind of other unjuſtifiable paſſages in his writings, to tell him of (that which in meer charity to him I deſire he ſhould know men do take notice of) his dealing in a Sermon of his about Joſiah's reformation preacht before the Houſe of Commons long ſince: and of the applying of the curſe that fell on the Inhabitants of Meroz, Jud. 5. (for not helping their Soveraign, namely Deborah, againſt a foreign Enemy, Jabin) to thoſe that will not joyn with himſelf againſt his Soveraign and his Cavaliers, i.e. thoſe forces raiſed by him. I wiſh heartily that Mr. Marſhal having gotten ſo much authority, as to be the Auguſtine, the truly polemical Divine of our times, would be ſo charitable to his Diſciples, as to imitate him, in retracting ſo many of his miſadventures, as he cannot chuſe but know to be ſuch, and not to impoſe too intolerably on their credulity: or ſo tender of his own reputation, as to acknowledge thoſe himſelf, which every man that hath eyes doth diſcern in his books, and would, were it not for meer pity, and the duty of loving enemies, give a large account of.

But I muſt remember, that Mr. Marſhal adds two appearances of anſwer more to that allegation from Chriſt to St. Peter: a word or two of thoſe. Secondly, ſaith he, ſuppoſing it was a reproof of Peters uſing the ſword, then the plain meaning is to condemn Peters raſhneſs who drew his ſword and never ſtaid to know his Maſters mind whether he ſhould ſtrike or not, and ſo reproves thoſe who raſhly, unlawfully, or doubtingly uſe the ſword. But I pray Sir, are thoſe the words of Chriſt, They only that take the ſword without asking, or knowing my mind, ſhall periſh, &c. Or have we any reaſon to think that Chriſt would have then diſpenced with a known law, if he had asked him, and not rather have referred him to be regulated by it, as you ſee he doth, for all that take, &c.

2. To ſee the unluckineſs of it again; the Text Luke 22. 49. ſaith expreſly that they did ask him, ſaid unto him, Lord ſhall we ſmite with the ſword? ſo that the queſtion was askt before he ſmote: and ſure if it had been Chriſts pleaſure they ſhould ſmite, one ſyllable would have expreſt it and juſtified them; and that might have intervened before his ſtriking: and that it did not intervene is no argument of the lawfulneſs of that ſtriking in him, or the like in us: eſpecially when ſo ſharp a reprehenſion immediately follows.

3. I ſhall grant the meaning is to condemn Peters raſhneſs in doing a thing ſo unlawful, without any commiſſion; eſpecially, when it was denied by Chriſt upon asking: but not that the matter of the fact was perfectly juſtifiable if abſtracted from that raſhneſs: or that now Chriſts judgment being declared by his anſwer to him, it ſhould be more juſtifiable in us, who have his example for our document.

4. I ſhall ask Maſter Marſhal whether he hath asked and received knowledge of his Maſters mind or no: he muſt not mean any of his great earthly Maſters (that joyn with him in the war againſt the ſupreme: for ſure if ſuch tell us we may, or be ſo minded, that doth not prove that 'tis lawful; for then I muſt ask them what Maſter they asked, and ſo, if they have none, conclude them in the number of the raſh ſmiters) but Chriſt (for ſure he was Peters Maſter) or ſome taught by him in his Word, who may give him aſſurance of the mind of Chriſt: and if this be produc'd we will be his diſciples alſo. For, for his Supreme Maſter on earth, the meer-humane Chriſt, the Lords anointed, I believe he means not that he ſhould be asked, whether he may be, and ſhould be reſiſted: and as little reaſon is there for us to be ſatisfied by being told by any others inferiour to him (eſpecially by the chief reſiſters) that we may lawfully reſiſt.

3. Maſter Marſhal adds a conſideration, that now was the hour come of Chriſts ſuffering, and not of his Apoſtles fighting, wherein Chriſt would not be reſcued, no not by twelve legions of Angels, much leſs then by the ſword of man: therefore he ſaith to Peter, put up, &c. but intended not, that it ſhould always be unlawful for his people to uſe the ſword in their juſt defence againſt unjuſt violence: for then he would never have commanded them but a little before, that he that hath two coats, let him ſell one and buy a ſword. To this I anſwer, 1. That Chriſt might ſuffer, though Peter did reſiſt; as we know he did, and conſequently the hour of his ſuffering being come, could not make it in him a crime to reſiſt, if otherwiſe it were not. It might make Chriſt refuſe the help of his ſword, but not produce the Text proper to man-ſlayers againſt him, unleſs the fact in it ſelf were of that nature. 2. This patient manner of Chriſts ſuffering and prohibiting reſiſtance in his juſt defence, though it were then peculiar and by decree neceſſary to Chriſt, yet is it ſince become matter of example and neceſſary imitation to us, by force of that obſervation paſt upon it by Saint Peter, and entred into the Canon of our Scripture, 1 Pet. 2. 21. Chriſt ſuffered for us, leaving us an example that we ſhould follow his ſteps, &c. And this uſed as an argument to enforce on us that duty, verſe 18. of being ſubject not only to good and gentle, but alſo to froward Maſters. So that now thirdly, though that check had been peculiar to Saint Peters act cloathed with thoſe circumſtances, of being done when 'twas Chriſts hour of ſuffering; yet it will be obliging to us alſo, who are hereunto called, verſe 21. to ſuffer as patiently as Chriſt did. But then fourthly, we conclude not from any or all of this, that it ſhould be always unlawful for Chriſtians to uſe the ſword in their juſt defence: nor indeed, that it was unlawful then. Kings may and might ſubdue by the ſword their rebellious ſubjects: and private men might defend themſelves from private invaders, and beſides the proverbial bial meaning of that ſpeech (of ſelling a coat and buying a ſword, whereby, ſay the Fathers, he foretold them the dangers impendent over their heads, ἵνα ἵνα ὁπλίσωνται (ἄπαγε) Chryſ. and adviſed them to provide for their own ſecurity) I ſhall not doubt to acknowledge that this liberty of private defenſive reſiſtance is authorized by that ſame Scripture: But the reſiſting of the Magiſtrate by the Subject is the thing that from Chriſts words to Peter we undertake to ſhew unlawful, and not any other reſiſtance, and that the ſwords were appointed by Chriſt to be bought to that purpoſe, is not attempted to be proved by Mr. Marſhal; and to ſuppoſe it without proof, is to affirm, that no man could invade, or be fit to be killed but Magiſtrates. The truth is, here is ſome art uſed, either by Maſter Marſhal, or ſome other artificer (intereſt, prejudice, or the like:) By Maſter Marſhal to deceive the Reader; or by that other to deceive the compoſer by uſing the phraſe of juſt defence againſt unjuſt violence (which every man grants lawful among private men) and concluding that not to be made unlawful by this Text (which we do not affirm) whereas all the diſpute is of reſiſting (not ſimply any man, but peculiarly) the Magiſtrate (and thoſe that come with authority from him) which we do affirm to be the very thing exemplified and rebuked in this Text, and ſo ſtill ſtands (by that reprehenſion of Chriſt) forbidden to us, in deſpight of Maſter Marſhal's evaſions.

'Twill be now matter of wonder to any that all this Paper ſhould be ſpent in defence of this one Argument ſo briefly confuted and diſpatcht by Maſter Marſhal; but I ſhall anſwer that wonder too; Firſt, that at the entring on this examination of thoſe few, the neceſſity of this length of words was not foreſeen; Secondly, that though the eſcaping the force of this place would not be matter of triumph to Maſter Marſhal, becauſe there be other places of the New Teſtament produced by his Adverſaries, yet unanſwered; and one is enough to eſtabliſh a Chriſtian truth: yet the vindicating and clearing of this one from all exceptions, is the abſolute carrying the cauſe againſt him by that one: And therefore if this may be compaſſed, (which I am confident is by this diſcourſe) we may ſpare all further travel in this buſineſs: and command the Subjects ſword taken out (though upon ſuppoſition of juſt defence, how unjuſtly ſoever that be pretended) againſt the lawful Magiſtrate, to return to its ſheath again. I wiſh to GOD it would obey the command.

FINIS.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE LORD FAIRFAX AND HIS Council of War, THE Humble Addreſs of HENRY HAMMOND.

My Lord, and Gentlemen,

HAving by the Weekly occurrences of your proceedings, not only taken notice of the weighty matters which you have of late choſen to be the ſubject of your Debates, ſuch as never any Council in this Kingdom are known to have taken into their cognizance, or conſideration; but withal, diſcern'd the chearful and hoſpitable reception of one mean Perſons advice, which pretended to have received ſome Counſel from God to communicate to you: And having alſo as ſincere a deſire and zeal to your good, (teſtified by my daily prayers to God, that he will incline your hearts to thoughts of true Chriſtian meekneſs and charity) and conſequently, as deep an intereſt in the due management of your affairs, as any others; and as great an aſſurance, that what I ſhall ſay to you, proceeds from a peaceable, and an humble ſpirit; and which tends more immediately to your welfare, and honour, both before God and man, than any thing which is known of late to have been repreſented to you; And laſtly, having among you ſome of the neareſt of my blood, whoſe eternal weal muſt needs be very dear and precious to me; I am in the fear of God, and the proſecution and diſcharge of my duty and conſcience, deſirous to make this ſhort addreſs to you, to deſire you, in the name, and in the bowels of Jeſus Chriſt, and by all the obligations of Chriſtian duty and Charity, to review ſome of the Principles by which you ſeem to be acted, and whereon to ground the high enterpriſes which you have now in hand.

And 1. whereas you ſeem to believe, that God by his Spirit hath put it into your hearts to do what hitherto you have done, and what now you profeſs to deliberate to do further againſt His MAJESTY, and all others, who are now fallen into your hands; I beſeech you to conſider, in the preſence of that God, to whoſe directions and Spirit you pretend, what ſafe ground you have for ſo doing: for, I ſhall ſuppoſe that the plain words of Scripture are not that voice of the Spirit which is your only guide in this matter; or if it be, I deſire that Charity from you for my ſelf and others, that you will point us out thoſe Scriptures: and I muſt profeſs to believe you bound in duty to God, and man, and to your ſelves, to ſatisfie this deſire, to produce that voice of the Spirit in the received Scriptures of God, which may ſay that to other Chriſtians alſo which it appears to do to you: But if Gods Spirit be by you conceived to have ſpoken to you any other way than in, or by ſome part of the written Word; Then my ſecond requeſt is, that you will declare to others the ground of this your perſwaſion, that you have received any ſuch Revelation from God; that ſo that pretended Spirit may according to the rules preſcribed by God in his acknowledged Word be tryed and examined regularly, Whether it be of God or no, before the ſubject-matter of ſuch Revelation be believed infallible, or accordingly built upon by you as your warrant or principle of acting any thing: For, there are evil ſpirits that come into the World, and which many times are by God permitted to ſeduce men, and that they may do ſo the better, they conſtantly pretend to come from God, and aſſume divine Authority to recommend and authorize their deluſions; (a thing ſo ordinary in all Ages, that the Poet that would expreſs the Imbroyling of a Kingdom, thinks he cannot do it better than by bringing in Alecto, a Fury, with a Meſſage from Heaven, to avenge ſuch, or ſuch an injury) And of theſe our Saviour forewarns us, and tells us, that we ſhall know them by their fruits; and ſo directs us to judge of the truth of their pretenſions by the goodneſs and commendableneſs, at leaſt, juſtifiableneſs of their actions, and not to judge of their actions by their pretences. And beſides theſe evil ſpirits from without, there is alſo an evil ſpirit within, a great deal of diſguiſed wickedneſs in the heart of man, man, which when it remains unmortified in thoſe who believe themſelves to be Gods choſen Saints, and taught by him, is very apt to be miſtaken for an inclination of Gods Spirit, and a flame of zeal, when it is really the moſt contrary to it; and becauſe there is ſo much danger, that what is not fetcht from the acknowledged Word of God, may thus flow from one of theſe contrary principles, My next requeſt is, that it be conſidered, Whether when an Angel from Heaven, in caſe he ſhould teach any other Doctrine, than what had been by Saint PAUL preached to his Galathians, were to be anathematized, and when the judgments are ſo fearful, which are pronounced againſt them which ſhall add to the words of that Prophecy, which we now retain under the Title of the Apocalyps or Revelation, (which being the laſt Writing which is known to be dictated by the Spirit, may very probably contain a ſevere denunciation againſt all thoſe, who pretend to any Revelation or Prophecy after that, concerning the Chriſtian Church) whether, I ſay, it be not a matter of fear and juſt apprehenſion, to all thoſe, who ſhall affix, or impoſe upon the Spirit of God (or pretend to be revealed to them from that) any matter of Doctrine or Practice which acknowledges not the Spirit of God ſpeaking in the Scripture for its only warrant or foundation? Or laſtly, if from the Scriptures you conceive it may be proved, that any part of the Unction mentioned there ſo far belongs to you, that it ſhall ſurely lead you into all truth; then firſt, I beſeech you to conſider, whether you do not oblige your ſelves by the ſame, or ſome other Scripture to prove to others (and not only your ſelves to be perſwaded) that you are thoſe ſpecial Saints of God, to whom that priviledge peculiarly belongs, and as clearly to demonſtrate that all others who conceive that that Unction teaches them directly the contrary to that which you profeſs to be taught by it, are impious Perſons poſſeſt with that deluding Spirit, which I now deſire you to beware of. And ſecondly, to examine whether this differencing of your ſelves from others, this bearing witneſs to your ſelves, and judging others (beſide that it will look like an act of moſt Phariſaical Preſumption, and the very thing, which from Simon Magus downward, hath been obſerved in all Hereticks, calling themſelves the Spiritual, and all others Animal, carnal Men) will not be alſo a great injuſtice at this time toward them who pretend not to learn any thing from this Unction, but what they receive from the Doctrine of the Goſpel, in thoſe Books, which have in effect, and in the laſt reſult, the teſtimony of God from Heaven, that they are his true infallible Word, and dictate of his Spirit, and which deſire to make no other uſe of this to their own advantage, but only to preſerve them in a quiet poſſeſſion of what by Law belongs to them, and a capacity of making good their Allegiance to Him, to whom they have often by Law been required to ſwear it.

A ſecond Principle which I muſt deſire you to review, is that, upon which you conclude that God hath born teſtimony to your cauſe by the many Victories which he hath given you; This concluding of yours, firſt, proceeds upon a premiſe directly falſe in matter of fact: for, you ſay, that the KING by taking up Arms made His appeal to Heaven; which 'tis moſt certain that he never did, (but only uſed a ſtrength which God put in his hands to repel them, whom He looked on as His Subjects declining their duty to Him, and invading the ſetled Laws, and never referred the right of the Cauſe to be judged by the ſucceſs of His Arms) nor indeed could rationally have occaſion to do ſo, any more than any one of you would make ſuch appeal, when a violent Perſon ſhould invade, what you conceive to be your undoubted right: nor could He religiouſly, or Chriſtianly have done this, when thoſe Laws that allowed of ſuch appeals by Ordeale, or Duel, and the like, have been juſtly cenſured as unchriſtian and barbarous. Nay ſecondly, this concluding of yours will by the ſame reaſon infer that Chriſtianity is not, and that Mahumetiſm is the true Religion, becauſe when the Turks aſſerted one, and the Greek Church the other, and that difference begat a War betwixt them, 'tis clear that the Turks were ſucceſsful, and the Greek Church was moſt ſadly waſted and ſubdued by them, and ſo remaineth to this hour in that unreturn'd Captivity. Which will therefore be a fit opportunity to make you revert to the trying of that Spirit (which inclines you thus to argue) by this touch-ſtone, 1. by conſidering and examining whether in the written Word any thing be more frequent and viſible than the ſufferings of Gods people, the ſhedding the blood of the Saints, the faſtning all kind of contumelies on ſuch, particularly that reproach of [thou bloody man] upon David, who was a King after Gods heart, the ſending or permitting an Hoſt againſt the daily ſacrifice to caſt down the truth to the ground, and to practiſe and proſper. 2. Whether it were not Rabſhekeh's Argument againſt the Peoples adhering to their lawful King Hezekiah, that his Maſters Arms had been invincible? 3. Whether that ſaddeſt fate of Nebuchadnezzar, who for conquering of God's People, and others, was by God ſtiled [his Hammer, and Battleaxe of the whole earth,] may not be expected the final lot of others alſo; firſt, to deſtroy men, and then to be caſt out into the field, to inhabit among Beaſts? 4. Whether it were not a crime complained of by the People of God, in thoſe, which, when God was a little diſpleaſed, did as Adverſaries help forward this affliction? And 5. Whether the Pſalmiſt lay not the like ill character on all, who perſecute thoſe whom God hath ſmitten, and talk how they may vex them whom God hath wounded? By all which it is moſt evident, (without any neceſſity of defining or demonſtrating any thing of the juſtice of the Cauſe) that moſt commonly the proſperity of Arms hath not been the lot of the moſt righteous, but that either the chaſtiſement of the Sword is thought fit to be their diſcipline, or the comforts of Peace (and not the triumphs of War) their bleſſing in this life.

The third Principle is, your perſwaſion that the community of the People is the ſupreme power, and that the KING is inferiour to them, and to them accountable for his breach of Truſt, of which you now affirm Him guilty. In this procedure of yours, there be many things worthy of your ſerious pondering: As whether, 1. by Scripture? or 2. by Reaſon? or 3. by Story of times, it can be concluded, that the Supream Power was ever by God put into the hands of the community of the People? For the firſt way of concluding it, (the teſtimony of Scripture) I cannot but take notice of one place, which hath been produced to that purpoſe, 1 Pet. 2. 13. Be ſubject to every humane Ordinance, or Creature, or Creation, &c. This place I have ſome reaſon to believe to carry ſome weight with you, becauſe it was ſix years ſince for the juſtifying the Cauſe againſt the KING'S Party, produced by a Perſon of great dexterity, That very Perſon, who hath now undertaken to juſtifie your late proceedings ſo far as not only to clear them from all blame, but alſo to pretend to demonſtrate the honour and worth of them, and to lift them up to an high pitch, not only, 1. of a bleſſed victory (the higheſt that Chriſtians are appointed to aſpire to) of overcoming evil by doing good: But 2. of calling to mens minds the unparallelable example of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who went down into the Chambers of death, from thence to bring up with him a loſt world: And 3. of being a lineament of the face of Divine goodneſs, in the doing good to ſo many, as well Enemies, as Friends: And 4. deſerving that place at the Table of Honour, which the Roman Orator ſaith, all Nations beſtowed on the Aſſertors of their Countries liberties, even next to the immortal Gods themſelves: And 5. of imitating the method of the warfare of Heaven, and ſeeking to reconcile a Nation to themſelves by not imputing their unthankfulneſs. The largeneſs and exorbitancy of theſe expreſſions I was my ſelf ſo amaz'd at, that I cannot but mention them to you (by the way) as matters of horrour, which like the Peoples acclamation to Herod, or the Lycaonians to Paul and Barnabas, if they beget not in you a juſt indignation with the latter, may very probably bring the juſt fate of the former upon you, to be eaten up with Worms, (after you have been thus deified) now, that you have no other viſible Enemy but your ſelves, and ſuch Flatterers, (that I ſay no worſe) to appear againſt you. Having craved your pardon for this not unſeaſonable excurſion, I return now to the view of that Scripture, produced from Saint Peter, to prove Kings to be a creation, or creature of men, and ſo their power to be derived from the People. To which I Anſwer, 1. That there is a ſignal character in that very Text, that keeps it from concluding the Supreme power to be originally in the People, not only by calling the King in the end of that verſe, Supreme; ſuch as in Saint Paul's divinity, Rom. 13. are affirmed to be ordained of God, and ſo no humane Ordinance: but alſo by diſtinguiſhing the Governours, verſe 14. from the King or Supreme, verſe 13. by this, that the Governours are ſent by (i.e. have Commiſſion from) the King, which might in like manner alſo be affirmed of the King, that he were ſent by the People, if He were the Creature, or creation of them, but is not ſo much as intimated by that Apoſtle; but on the contrary, ſupremacy affixt to Him, and ſubjection commanded to be paid Him (not for the Peoples, but for the Lords ſake) as ſubordination to, and miſſion from the King, is affirm'd of all other Magiſtrates. But then 2. to take away all colour of plea for populacy from this Text, it is to be obſerved what is the meaning of the Greek word in the New Teſtament, which is there rendred * ordinance, or creature, or creation. That word when it is ſet in its largeneſs without any reſtraint, ſignifies generally, all mankind, Gentiles, as well as Jews. Thus [the creation] and [the world] are all one and [all the creation] (or every creature) Mark 16. 15. the ſame with [the whole world] in the beginning of that Verſe, and [all Nations] in the parallel places of Saint Matthew and Saint Luke. And thus Rom. 8. 19. [the expectation of the creature, or creation] is the hope which the heathen world had, that at the revelation of the gracious priviledges of the Meſſias, they (i.e. the Gentiles) alſo ſhould be freed from the ſlavery of corruption (their villainous heathen ſins) unto the liberty, &c. that true liberty not from obedience to Superiours, but from ſlavery to luſts and paſſions, which Chriſt came to beſtow upon us; And ſo when verſe 22. 'tis added, that the whole creation groans, &c. the clear meaning is, that the Gentiles as well as Jews, did thus, as might be evidenced at large. Agreeable to this notion of the whole creation, or every creature, is the ſame phraſe (with the addition of humane, to take off all reſtraint, and to extend it as far as all mankind) to be underſtood, and ſo the meaning of the precept of Saint Peter to his Jew-Chriſtians is clearly this, and no more, that they muſt be obedient not only to Chriſtian Magiſtrates, but to Gentiles, Heathen alſo, (ſuch as they ſhould fall under in all their diſperſions) i.e. to all whatſoever they were, and that for the Lords ſake who conſtituted thoſe Heathens alſo, as Saint Paul ſaith. If to this it ſhall be objected, that by this way of interpreting, the precept will be extended ſo, as to ſubject us to all Heathens, and not only to Magiſtrates: I anſwer, that this, which is the only objection againſt this interpretation, is of little force, and is anſwered, 1. by obſerving the word [be ſubject] which relating to Magiſtrates, will require our obedience to none but thoſe, as verſe 17. when he commands to honour all, it muſt be underſtood, all to whom honour belongs; Superiours, not Inferiours: or as, when chap. 5. 5. he commands them to be ſubject to one another, it muſt not be underſtood, that the Superiour muſt be ſubject to the Inferiour, as the Inferiour to the Superiour, but as the nature of the duty inforces to interpret, the Inferiour to be ſubject to the Superiour only: and 2. by the Apoſtles expreſs enumeration of thoſe to whom this obedience muſt be paid in the end of the Verſe, to the King as Supreme, and then verſe 14. to Governours, as inferiour Magiſtrates ſent by Him. That this is the full importance of that place, may (if there be any need) farther appear by the occaſion of the Apoſtles diſcourſe, which was confuting of the vile Sect of Chriſtians then calling themſelves Gnoſticks, (as a title of great perfection of knowledge in the Myſteries of Heaven) who taught the doctrine of liberty and manumiſſion to Chriſtian Subjects or Servants, from Heathen (yea and Chriſtian) Maſters and Kings; To which falſe doctrine of theirs this Exhortation thus interpreted is directly contrary (and cannot otherwiſe be pertinent to it) and very coherent to that Admonition in the 12. verſe immediately preceding, of having their converſation good among the Gentiles, that they might not ſpeak ill of them as evil Doers; which they would be juſtly apt to do, in caſe they ſhould withdraw their obedience to their lawful Princes, as ſoon as they were become Chriſtians; which, by the way, lays a very ill character upon thoſe, who by pretence of Chriſtianity or Piety, ſeek, or claim to themſelves any other liberty than what by the Laws under which they are born, doth confeſtly belong unto them.

* Κτίσις.

Having thus far enlarged to clear that teſtimony of Scripture, and not knowing of any other which is thought favourable to your pretenſion, I ſhall, inſtead of retorting the multitude of plain places directly oppoſite, which will abundantly take away all force from this, proceed next to the ſecond plea, that of Reaſon. And there I ſhall deſire you to conſider, 1. Whether if Adam had never fallen, and his Poſterity remained in the ſame innocence, they would not yet have been capable of poſitive precepts in order to civil life; and conſequently, whether in reaſon ſome one or more men ſhould not have had ſuperiority over all others, Parents over Children, and the like; and to this purpoſe, whether the divers Orders, and ſubordination of the Angels, that never fell, be not an evidence that even in ſtate of innocence, God deſigned ſuperiority, not equality. But then 2.

The

The paſſions of men being by ſin grown irregular, and ſo needing Rules and Laws, and Rulers and Law-makers, it was both reaſonable, that God ſhould, and is moſt certain that he did deſign and appoint Government (as appears by what is ſaid by God to the firſt Woman, and ſecond Man, to Eve, Gen. 3. 16. and to Cain, Gen. 4. 7.) and ſo gave not all men that freedom which is the ſuppoſed foundation of that Doctrine, which places Supreme power in the People. And of any rational Perſon, that yet thinks he did give this freedom to all mankind, I ſhould but ask this one Queſtion, Whether ever any man were by God or nature inveſted with power of his own Life? I mean, with power to take away his own Life, or to kill himſelf? in every thing elſe Man may be believed to have a power over himſelf, over his Body, to cut or lance it, when that is for his turn, and particularly over that freedom which naturally belongs to him; whatever the degree of that be, a man may by act of his own will, part with it irreverſibly. Thus might the Jew under Gods own Government give himſelf up wholly into the power of his Maſter, and by having his Ear bored thorow, become from a Freeman, a Slave for ever; and generally thorow the whole World the courſe hath been the ſame, that he which is moſt free hath power over his own liberty ſo to deveſt himſelf of it, as that it ſhall never revert to him again; and our Saviour that is thought to have brought liberty into the World, doth yet, by the quality of moſt of his precepts, given to Chriſtians by himſelf and his Apoſtles, mark out this condition of ſubjection to them, as that under which they were generally to live, and from which the Chriſtian Profeſſion ſhould be ſo far from freeing them, that the ſtrict practice of obedience to Heathen Rulers or Maſters, is oft preſcribed as a ſpecial means to advance Chriſts main end, to magnifie and promote the Goſpel. But for power over a mans own life no man can be believed to be born with it, for if he were, he might then as lawfully kill himſelf (and if he might do it lawfully, there are many caſes which might make it prudent for him to do it at ſome times) as pulling out an aking Tooth, or diſpoſe of his Liberty or Eſtate out of his own Poſſeſſion; a thing which no Chriſtian hath ever thought lawful, but made this felonia de ſe, this ſelf-murther, or felony againſt ones ſelf, a crime, as contrary to the ſixth Commandment, as the killing of any other man. Having proceeded thus far, I ſhall now take that for granted, which, that I know of, is denied by none, I am ſure, which is not denied in the publiſh'd ſcheme of the deſigned Repreſentative, viz. that the Supreme power includes the Power of Life (I mean not ſuch an Arbitrary power of killing whom they pleaſe without ſin, but a power of putting capital Malefactors to death, and ſo a power over every (call it Subjects or Freemans) life in caſe of Capital crime:) And the granting of this (as 'tis too viſible that it is by you a granted truth) being added to the former, doth to me irrefragably conclude, that the Supreme power neither is, nor can be in the community of the People, or in their Repreſentative, by force meerly of their original, or natural liberty; The inference is clear, becauſe the power of life which is part of the Supremacy, is not part of that natural liberty, and therefore is neither inherent naturally in that Community of men, (which is but, in other words, ſo many particular men together, indowed with that power (and no more) which every man hath ſingly over himſelf) nor conſequently by them communicable to any Repreſentative. And by this alſo it appears, that ſupreme Magiſtracy, whereſoever 'tis truly placed, is the Ordinance, and creation of God, (who alone hath power of all mens lives) and not of man, who hath no power of his own, much leſs of any others life, any farther than he is a Repreſentative, or Proxy, or Deputy of God, (who hath that Power) not of the People, who have it not. For it is poſſible I may put you in mind of an evident truth, which perhaps you have not taken notice of; That, as the original of Government in any particular place cannot be imagined to be by any more than two ways, Either by Gods deſignment; or, the Peoples act; ſo in either of thoſe two caſes 'tis God only, and not the People, that gives the power of the Sword, or power of Life to the Governour: when God himſelf ſets a King over men 'tis ſo clear that He thus impowers that King, that that need not be proved; and when the community of a People (ſuppoſe in the Original, ten men in the freedom of nature) chuſe one of themſelves, or more to rule over them, 'tis clear, they do not inveſt Him with more power than themſelves had; and that He that was thus choſen by them, hath the power of Life over any of them (which they ſingle, or all together in the community had not) muſt needs come from ſome other, and not from them; and if you will know from whom it comes, I Anſwer, that it comes from Gods appointment (for the œconomy of the World) that the ſupreme Magiſtrate ſhall as his Deputy have this power from God communicated to Him, as an endowment neceſſary to that power which is deſigned to protect, and govern others. And in caſe it were the act of the People, and not of God immediately, that deſigns or nominates the Perſon to that Office, yet doth not this nomination beſtow this power, but God who alone hath that power, beſtows it on him who is thus nominated. In this caſe all that the People beſtow, or part with by their act is their own liberty, or that part of it of which they voluntarily deveſt themſelves, that they may by obedience empower Him, whom they have ſet over them; and that they may reaſonably part with for that greater benefit of protection from him, which, while he is obeyed by all, he may by their united obedience to his commands be able to afford them, and could not probably without it; now this giving up their liberties to one, or more, makes that man, or men a Ruler over them; and being a Ruler, to him belongs (derived from God, not from them) that power of life, and death, which Gods forementioned decree hath enſtated on the Supreme power, or Ruler; who is therefore in that relation (of Avenger for wrath, or puniſhment) ſtiled by the Apoſtle, The Miniſter of God, Rom. 13. and not of the People. By this it appears that (for the original of power) the utmoſt that comes from the People, is that of which they have the power, till by ſome act of Gods, or their own, they have parted with it, the liberty or power of their Perſons (or in ſome ſort and degree, as they ſhall part with it, of their bodies, or poſſeſſions in like manner) but not of their lives; For that other is of an higher origination; and therefore, ſuppoſing the power they had parted with, ſhould, upon any emergent, revert to them again, yet the power of life and death, or of the Sword can never revert, becauſe it never proceeded from them; but as the ſoul that came from God doth, at the falling of the body back to its elements, or earth, from which it was firſt taken, return to the hands of God that gave it; ſo the power of life, the prerogative firſt, and then the gift or inveſtiture of God, muſt at the diſſolution of any Government, and the ſuppoſed reverting to its principles again, return to its proper fountain, to God, and none but him. And to imagine it to devolve to the community of the People, is the ſame unreaſonable, as to conceive the immortal ſoul, that one beam of divinity (as this power of Life and Death is another) to accompany the Carkaſe to the Grave alſo. I have inſiſted the longer on this to make the miſtake the more palpable, and the more impoſſible not to be diſcerned by you; and if I could foreſee any colour of reaſon, that could poſſibly pretend againſt this evidence, I ſhould yet enlarge yours, and my own trouble, to diſcover it; but being, I profeſs, unable to mention any thing, which the grounds, which are already laid, have not prevented, I ſhall now proceed to the third and laſt way of examining this truth,

By the Hiſtory of times, and there I ſhall be forced to retract, at leaſt to ſuſpend the acknowledging of that, which that I might examine it by reaſon, I was willing to ſuppoſe, but not grant, and ſhall now demand,

1. Whether by any authentick ſtory it appears, that there ever were any Nation or People in the World, who can be preſumed or proved to have had this Supreme power veſted in the whole community originally, or from their firſt coming together? or if ſo, whether Gods judgment ſo viſibly interpoſed, and the example of his inſtituting of Judges, and of Kings, (neither of them accountable to the People) be not to be preferred before all ſuch precedents?

2. If 'twere granted, that in ſome one, or more places the power hath been originally in the People, yet it will never appear by the originals of all, or of this Kingdom, that in all or in this it was ſo; or if men will ſtill opiniate, and affirm againſt the evidence of the Laws, and conſtitution of this Kingdom, and againſt thoſe Oaths which have for ſo many years acknowledged the ſeat of the Supremacy in the King, and not in the People; yet that, which is ſo falſe in matter of fact, being taken for truth alſo, there will again be matter of enquiry, in point of reaſon, which will deſerve your farther moſt ſerious pondering:

1. Whether, after that the People have upon deliberation, and from choice intruſted ſome one or more Perſons, (in any certain courſe of ſucceſſion by Law deſigned) to Rule over them, and after the Law hath declared the perſon of that Supreme Magiſtrate not to be accountable, but his Miniſters only, (which may be a prudence of State, more advantagious to a peoples peace, than poſſibly is well underſtood) whether, I ſay, in this caſe any number of men whatſoever, can, upon any pretence, recall that Truſt, and void that Law, by which that KING, and His Heirs for ever, were conſtituted the Ruler of them? or if they might, whether this were not moſt contrary to the end of all Government, quiet, and peace, and probably the parent of all confuſion in the World, which is much worſe than the hardeſt ſubjection?

Nay 2. if it ſhould be granted ſtill, that the community of people have power to recal, or void that truſt, yet 'twill be matter of more than doubt again, whether at this time in this Kingdom there be any way for the whole community to act, or whether it can by any man be reaſonably believed, that what is now done, is acted by the community of the People.

For if (to that purpoſe) it be conceived, that the Houſe of Commons is (or that the two Houſes together are) the Repreſentative of all the People; Then firſt, it is to be conſidered that there is a great number of men in this Kingdom, that are not repreſented by theſe, and who never put (nor can by any interpretation be thought to have put) into their hands that power, which is ſuppoſed to be in every Free Commoner in this Kingdom. 2. That you your ſelves have expreſt your opinion, that this, which now is, is an unequal Repreſentative, and have on that Conſideration thought your ſelves obliged to propound another Form. 3. 'Tis ſure, that (whatever poſſibly might have been) yet they, that have ever till this time choſen Knights or Burgeſſes to the Parliament, did never actually put into their hands, as into their Repreſentatives, all that power, which (in this caſe of the Peoples being the Supreme Power) is naturally ſuppoſed to be veſted in them, but only a power of doing thoſe things, for which the Writ (ſent out under the Broad Seal) did command them to be returned, i.e. to conſult with the KING of the difficult affairs of the Kingdom, not to ſettle any part of it without, or againſt Him. And 4. 'Tis clear, that in ſuch an acknowledged conjuncture of time as this is, a ſmall (far leſs) part of thoſe that were returned by the Countries, cannot be ſaid to be that entire company, or body, by which the whole community is repreſented: Or if it be ſaid, that the godly People of the Land, who by Petitions to the General, the Lord Fairfax, have expreſt their deſires, that Juſtice be executed upon thoſe, whom they call Delinquents, are to be reputed as the community of the People; then firſt, it will be clear, that thoſe that have ſo Petitioned (beſide, that they are moſt of the body of the Army) are not the thouſandth part of the people of this Kingdom, and therefore cannot by any rule of Judgment or Eſtimation be reputed as the whole Community; and if this precedent might be admitted, that a few perſons, under the title of the Godly, may pretend to the right of the whole, 'tis very well worth foreſeeing, how dangerous ſuch examples may prove to the peace of Poſterity. 2. All the evidence of their godlineſs that we can perceive, is only the deſiring liberty for themſelves and others, and therefore Juſtice on thoſe who ſtand in their way to that liberty; and I conceive it demonſtrable that a quiet ſubmiſſion and obedience, and a deſire not to caſt off their duty, but ſtill to continue under it, rather than to be their own carvers, or contrivers of liberty, is a far ſurer ſign of true godlineſs. And thirdly, there hath yet been no fair indifferent means uſed to know whether there be not far greater numbers of ſuch godly meek men, who would rather deſire that the KING ſhould be reſtored to His Government, than that any courſe ſhould be taken by any, without or againſt the KING. And the plain truth is, that if you will go on in the courſe you are in, and yet deſire freely to appear, and be accounted the Conſervers, and not Conquerours of the liberty of your Country-men, if you will not impoſe upon the People, as you ſay Kings have done; Nothing can be more ſutable to thoſe pretences, than to declare moſt publickly, that it ſhall be free for every man to ſubſcribe, whether he doth deſire this total change by you tendred in the draught of your Repreſentative, or the continuance of the preſent eſtabliſhed Government, (with an aſſurance of your ſubmiſſion thereunto.) 4. 'Tis (upon ſuppoſition that all power is originally in the People) moſt undeniable and clear, that nothing but the conſent of each

perſon (at leaſt of a major part of the whole being convoked together) can devеſt any one, or more men of that their ſuppoſed Original right; and conſequently, that other mens ſaying that they are not Godly, and that themſelves are ſo, can never exclude them from their Birthright; By which it will infallibly be concluded, that all thoſe that have adhered to the KING all this time, or that favour'd the Votes of the two Houſes, which reſolved the KING's late Conceſſions at Newport to be a fit ground of peace (whatſoever cenſure or brand is by you ſet upon them) are as much to be conſidered to the making up the community of the People, as any others. And if ſo, Let it then be conſidered by all equal minded men, what a violation it is of thoſe Rights, which you pretend to vindicate, what an invaſion of the natural freedom of your Brethren (by you acknowledged, the inheritance of each man) to force them againſt their wills, with their very great incommodation and detriment, to revert to that liberty, which is by you ſuppoſed to belong to all naturally, but without which we of this Nation have happily lived, under the far greater advantages of Regal government. And yet ſo contrary to this principle have you now proceeded, that when you have thus thrown us back into our firſt chaos again, only that you may reduce our liberty, you then immediately by your Repreſentative ſo bind us up, that we are not permitted, upon whatſoever emergency, to caſt our ſelves into any new form, although the exchange ſhould appear never ſo advantagious, and gainful to us; which, beſides, that it is an evidence of your inward fear, that the change now deſigned will be ſoon repented of again, is certainly ſo far from being an enlarging, that it is the retrenching of our liberty, and denying us that freedom, of which the moſt barbarous and the moſt civilized People have been equally partakers, when ſubjection ſeemed better for their turns. As beſide the examples of the Servants in Exodus, which are there ſuppoſed ſometimes to prefer their ſervitude to their Maiters before the priviledge of the Sabbatick year, we find practiſed by the Campanians, who voluntarily caſt themſelves at the feet, and ſurrendred themſelves into the power of the Romans, to purchaſe thereby that right of being protected by them; and by many Barbarians in Appian, who ſent Embaſſadours to Rome on purpoſe to petition the favour of being receiv'd into the number of their ſubjects.

I have inſiſted the longer upon this, in obedience to your own invitation; which was alſo a great motive and encouragement to make this whole addreſs to you, and gives me aſſurance of your kind reception of it.

The laſt principle to be review'd is this, That there having been much blood ſpilt in this Kingdom in the late Wars, there muſt now be ſome ſacrifice offer'd to God (i. e. ſome more blood ſhed) for the expiation of that ſin of blood-guiltineſs, before God can be pacified, or reconciled to the Land. On which particular, it will firſt be worth your ſerious enquiry, how it ſhould appear that that great iſſue of blood, let out in the late Wars (which hath with great reaſon been lookt on, as the ſharpeſt of Gods plagues, and the ſaddeſt part of puniſhment of the former ſins of this Nation) is now the main, and only, ſin of the Land, with which God is not reconciled: Or 2. if it were ſuppoſed to be ſo, yet how it can be thought that a general Reformation of that ſin, an humiliation before God for it, through the whole Land, and a reſolution never to ſpill one drop more, were not a more Chriſtian probable means to pacifie God, than the proceeding in cold blood to the effuſion of more: The blood of men being never thought a fit ſacrifice for any, but the evil Spirit; and peaceable-mindedneſs, and charity, and the contrite heart being the ſpecial, if not only ſacrifices, which we find mention'd in the Goſpel. Or 3. how it can appear that if God require any ſuch ſacrifice, you, or any but thoſe whom the known Laws of the Land have placed in a Tribunal (and that legally erected for ſuch cognizances) have any right to put your ſelves into the office of Gentile Prieſts, as the only Perſons appointed to ſlay that ſacrifice. Nay 4. it will be worth your Obſerving, that Chriſt diſclaimed the office of a Judge, and thereby rendred it very unfit for any of you to put your ſelves into that office by vertue of no other title, but that of being his Diſciples. And laſtly, it is worth your ſaddeſt thoughts, whether by your preſent Counſels, and the neceſſity by you ſuppoſed of changing the former Government, it do not now appear, that the defence of the eſtabliſhed Laws was on the KING's part the occaſion of His taking Arms, and on Your parts, the deſign of altering thoſe Laws, and introducing others more ſutable to your inclinations. And if now by a civil or martial courſe, in an arbitrary way of trial, contrary to the Laws eſtabliſhed, it ſhould be by you thought fit to proceed to blood againſt thoſe whoſe engagements have been for the defence of thoſe eſtabliſht Laws, Let it be conſider'd, how impolitick this may be, and what matter of diſcouragement to all that ſhall be intruſted with the managery, or defence of future Government: Which ſingle conſideration will, I hope, abate much of your deſigned ſeverity. But if God would permit you to go on undiſturb'd to the ſhedding of more blood, as the Jews did from other lower acts to the crucifying their King, How poſſible were it, not only that this ſhould prove the provoking of God to deliver you up for ever to your own hearts luſts, but be to the whole Nation a filling up the meaſure of your iniquities, and the fore-runner of all the calamities, that can befall a People.

Having mention'd the weakneſs, and fallibleneſs of theſe few principles, I ſhall leave you to the farther conſideration of the frailneſs, and danger of thoſe ſuperſtructures, which ſhall be erected on any, or all of theſe. And if there were never a God in the world to avenge them, yet the experience now before your eyes, how eaſie it is for principles taken up for mens preſent advantages to prove within a while moſt diſadvantageous, and pernicious to them (as the weapons of a diſarmed man turn'd into his own breaſt) may infuſe into you that fear and temper, that caution and moderation, and timely wiſdom, which the Authour of this Addreſs may be otherwiſe too unskilful to impreſs on you: Who yet, if he might any way be uſeful to you, doth profeſs to be ready to contribute his utmoſt endeavour to your ſervice, if it be but thereby to demonſtrate to you, how juſt it is for him (and what a duty, and obligation of charity toward you) to intercede daily at the throne of grace, that God would mollifie your hearts toward the KING, and all His conſcientious faithful Subjects, or elſe interpoſe his hand, to reſcue his Royal Perſon out of your power; believing confidently, that, if God have any remainders of mercy for this Kingdom, or the true Proteſtant profeſſion in it, he will in his good time hear and anſwer this prayer of all true Engliſhmen, and among them of

Your Lordſhips humble Servant,

H. HAMMOND.

FINIS.

A VINDICATION OF Dr. HAMMOND'S Addreſs.

THE late Authour of the Original, and End of Civil Power, under the name of Eutactus Philodemius, hath thought fit to queſtion two things ſet down by Doctor Hammond in his Addreſs to the General, and Council of War. The firſt is this Affirmation, That the Jew under Gods own Government might wholly give up himſelf, and his Freedom to his Maſters will (the power of life being only exempted) and by having his ear bored, might of a Free-man become a Slave for ever.

§. 2. The ſecond is this Queſtion, Whether ever any man was by God or Nature inveſted with power over his own Life, i. e. to take away his own life, or to kill himſelf?

§. 3. This Affirmation, and this Queſtion, he willingly acknowledges, and is content that the Queſtion ſhall be interpreted a down-right Negation, That never any man was by God or Nature inveſted with power over his own life, or power to kill himſelf. And having thus confeſt the citation, as far as concerns him, it remains that I proceed to juſtifie both parts of it. And to that end, I ſhall think my ſelf ſufficiently fortified by two advantages, which that Author hath been pleaſed to allow me in this matter.

§. 4. Firſt, that it is not any opinion of Doctor Hammond, but the plain words of Scripture, which are, under his name, thus oppoſed by this Author in both places. The former is in terminis, Exod. 21. at the beginning. If the ſervant ſhall plainly ſay, I love my Maſter, &c. I will not go out free, Then his Maſter ſhall bring him to the Judges, &c. And his Maſter ſhall bore his ear thorow with an awle, and he ſhall ſerve him for ever. And again, Deut. 15. 16. And it ſhall be, if he, (i. e. the ſervant ſet free at the Sabbatick year) ſay unto thee, I will not go away from thee, &c. Then thou ſhalt take an awle, and thruſt it thorow his ear unto the door, and he ſhall be thy ſervant for ever; and alſo to thy hand-maid thou ſhalt do likewiſe.

§. 5. That a plain place of Scripture ſhould be thus miſtaken for an Aſſertion of Doctor Hammond, I am not permitted to ſuſpect, becauſe that Author hath to his mention of the Doctors Name added the teſtimony of Gen. 21. which, though it be a miſtake, I ſuppoſe, of the Printer, for Exod. 21. will yet be a competent teſtimony of that Authors opinion, that Doctor Hammond had Moſes on his ſide, and conſequently, that both were to be involv'd by him in the ſame condemnation.

§. 6. The ſame, I ſuppoſe, I may aſſume of the other Negation queſtioned by him, and 'tis in Doctor Hammond, but the repeating of the fixth Commandment [Thou ſhalt not kill] according to the latitude wherein all Jewiſh and Chriſtian Writers have interpreted it to the prohibition of ſelf-murther, as hath been ſhewed by him at large in another place.

Pract. Cat. l. 2. ſect. 5.

§. 7. Having mentioned this firſt advantage againſt this Author, ſufficient certainly to ſecure Doctor Hammond from his blame, and to make any Apologie for him unneceſſary, and well-nigh ſcandalous, (the Word of God being able to plead its own cauſe, without the aſſiſtance of any humane Advocate) I have yet the benefit of a ſecond kindneſs allowed me by this unknown adverſary; which, though Scripture were not of Authority with him, would encourage the Doctor not to fear the falling under his diſpleaſure. That is, the unreconcileableneſs of thoſe two opinions (the one with the other) which he is pleaſed to confront to Doctor Hammond, viz. that it ſhould be unlawful for a Jew to give up his Freedom, (and that ſervitude ſhould be, as he calls it, an unnatural ſervitude) and and yet that it ſhould be put in his power by God and Nature (for that is to affirm it lawful, and agreeable to Nature) to take away his own Life, or to kill himſelf. For it being by Job mentioned as an Aphoriſm of common Nature, that a man will for his life give all he hath; and in the accounts and practices of all men, that of Liberty being part of that all; It will conſequently be unreaſonable, and impoſſible for him that hath once affirmed the parting with ones freedom to be an unnatural ſervitude, to deny the killing of himſelf to be an unnatural murther: And therefore, having ſo fair advantages before me, not only the Scripture in terminis on my ſide, but this Adverſary, by ſo eaſie a conſequence, become my Second alſo, I am (not unwillingly) perſwaded to tender a brief reply to thoſe reaſons, which ſeem to have drawn this Author into this caſual diſpute; and to endeavour the preventing of thoſe Errours, to which, a Philodemius, or popular Diſputer may in ſuch an Age of Licentiouſneſs betray others.

§. 8. To the caſe of the Jewiſh Servant, giving up his freedom to his Maſter, (which was by the Doctor mentioned out of Moſes) the Author hath framed three Anſwers.

§. 9. The firſt, That it cannot be affirmed upon good and pregnant grounds, that from Nature the Jew had any ſuch power, but that God only permitted it to be ſo; and the Jew, by this unnatural ſervitude to his Maſter, was a fit type of that ſlavery that man ſhould be in unto Sin, to obey it in the luſts thereof; for his ſervants we are whom we obey.

§. 10. To this I anſwer, That the affirmation of Moſes in the Scripture, [That this was permitted by God to the Jews,] is to me a good and pregnant ground that the Jew had this power under Gods own Government, which is all that he affirms to be affirmed by Doctor Hammond in that place; and therefore, the putting in thoſe other words [Of the Jews not having it from Nature] ſeems to be on purpoſe deſigned to take off from the clearneſs, and the pregnancy of the probation, and ſo only to darken, but not to invalidate the argument.

§. 11. But then ſecondly, I add, that Gods permitting any thing to any man, is a pregnant argument, that from Nature that man hath that power: If by Power we mean a moral power, or power of doing it without ſin; And if by Gods permiſſion we underſtand his Approbation, as of a lawful fact. For, thus it is certain, that God never ſo permits, as to approve (or not prohibit) any thing, which by the Law of Nature may not be done without ſin. For the Law of Nature being the Law of God, as truly as any poſitive Law of his promulgating; and God in all his Laws being conſtant to himſelf, ſo far as never to prohibit, and permit the ſame thing at the ſame time to the ſame men; It is moſt certain, that what God thus permits, Nature permits alſo, i. e. leaves it lawful to be done, or poſſible without Sin.

§. 12. But if by Permiſſion this Author means no more than diſpenſation, or grant of preſent Impunity, ſuch as in the Jewiſh Common-wealth was (for the hardneſs of their hearts) allowed in the buſineſs of Divorce, or (for the multiplying of them) in Polygamie, then it will ſure reſt upon him to prove, and not only (as he ſaith) to ſuppoſe, that God thus (and thus only) permitted it to be ſo: But this I ſhall ſuppoſe impoſſible to be proved, though it cannot lie upon me to demonſtrate the Negative, nor ſhall I ſo much fear the probableneſs of his unprov'd groundleſs ſuppoſition, as to endeavour it. For indeed, what degree of likeneſs is there betwixt thoſe divorces and polygamies, (which were ſuch inordinate Liberties) and this other of diveſting himſelf of Liberty? Only the ſame that is betwixt two Contraries.

§. 13. I ſhall not need further to inſiſt on this, both for the plain words of Scripture, and becauſe it is the acknowledgment of this very Authour, pag. 18. That this may lawfully be done for the obtaining of a greater good; which being compared with Rom. 3. ver. 8. makes up a demonſtration, that a man hath this power, i. e. that he may lawfully do it. For 'tis not the intuition of the greateſt moral good, much leſs of the greateſt advantage to my ſelf or any other, that may make that lawful which in it ſelf is unlawful, or which by nature man hath not power to do.

§. 14. And therefore, when he adds, [That in this the Jew was a fit type of mans ſlavery to ſin] as 'twill be eaſily granted, that he was (as type ſignifies Image or Embleme) ſo ſure it will not prove that this ſervitude of the Jew was an unnatural ſervitude, any more than any other parts of the Judaical Law, (which either in the intention of the Law-giver, or by the wit of Man can be made an Image of any preſent ſtate or condition of men) can by that one Argument be proved to be unnatural. For, ſure all types are not by that one evidence of their being types demonſtrated to be ſinful, eſpecially when they are inſtituted or permitted by God, and by that appear to be agreeable to his will, in oppoſition to, or variation from which, all ſin or obliquity conſiſts: Or if this charge muſt fall ſingly on this Type, but not on all others, (as ſure the Paſſover, which was a type, was not yet unnatural, and ſo of the reſt) then muſt this charge be proved by ſome other medium, than by this only, that it is a Type; and till that be produced, I muſt think this way of diſcourſe (which firſt ſuppoſes this giving up of the Jews Liberty to be a Type, and then concludes it unnatural for being ſuch) to be the proving of quidlibet ex quolibet; the ſame with his, which firſt ſuppoſes a live man to be a Picture, and then ſends him a challenge for being ſuch: Certainly ſuch reaſoning is too very looſe, and light, to ſet any good Character on that cauſe that wants ſuch ſupporters.

§. 15. His ſecond anſwer is yet a little more ſtrange, and ſuch as could not yet eaſily have been foreſeen, or expected; That his having his ear bored, was a puniſhment for his contempt of that Liberty, &c. 'Tis ſufficiently known that this boring of the ear was the ceremony of receiving a Servant among the Jews; and therefore, when David ſaith of Chriſt, But mine ear haſt thou opened, 'tis acknowledg'd, that thereby was denoted his taking on him the form of a ſervaut. This boring of the ear with an awle was no very painful thing, ſure not ſo much as Circumciſion; and yet 'twould be a little ſtrange, that when a Proſelyte was received among the Jews with Circumciſion, that ſhould be deemed a puniſhment on him for his not continuing a Gentile, or that his Converſion to Judaiſm, of which this was the Ceremony, ſhould be thereupon counted an unnatural Sin: The anſwering ſuch Arguments as theſe, would require a more chearful and pleaſant humour, than the times, or occaſion of theſe debates will well permit.

§. 16. The laſt Anſwer looks a little more demurely, That his giving himſelf up to be a ſlave for ever, did refer to, and terminate in the year of Jubilee, &c. and that he did not make himſelf irrecoverably a ſlave, &c. [That this was to terminate in the year of Jubilee] is ſaid without farther proof, than only of this unteſtified affirmation in a parentheſis, That that was the year of his freedom from that ſervitude which the corruption of his own will had brought upon him: which is the proving a thing by a bare repeating of it in other words, and only throwing a little dirt upon it. For how doth it appear that it is a piece of Corruption (for a man that loves his Maſter, as the Text ſaith, and is better pleaſed with his ſervice, than with his former liberty) thus to chooſe that which he likes beſt? Or how comes the caſting off Liberty to be a corruption of the will, when caſting off yokes, and ſervitude, is made capable of ſo good a Character? Had the words of Saint Paul, ſpeaking of ſervants, [If thou canſt be free, uſe it rather] been brought to back this bare Aſſertion, there had been ſome tolerable excuſe for ſuch a begging of the queſtion as this: But thoſe words extend not to a command, that every man ſhould be obliged to be free, that can, but only to a permiſſion, that, if he will rather uſe it (i. e. prefer this Liberty) he moſt lawfully, and commendably may. But this Authour hath not thought fit to make this interpretation, or account of that place neceſſary to be given him. As for the truth of his Affirmation, that this Bondman with his ear bored, was releaſed at the year of Jubilee, 'tis that, which, as it doth not well conſiſt with the words of Moſes, [He ſhall ſerve him for ever] Exod. 21. 6. and Deut. 15. 17. ſo it is not proved by any other place, or made probable that [for ever] is not an abſolute [for ever.] One place in Leviticus, there is, Chap. 25. 41. which ſaith, that the poor Brother that is ſold to be a bond-ſervant, ſhall be free at the year of Jubilee, and proportionably the ſervant (ſpoken of by me in Exodus and Deuteronomy) is to be ſet free from that ſervitude, to which he was ſold, (i. e. the forced and conſtrain'd, not purely voluntary ſervitude) in the ſeventh, or ſabbatick year, and ſo by the ſame reaſon in the Jubilee, which is the great Sabbatick (made up of ſeven times ſeven) in the place of Leviticus.

§. 17. But this Authour muſt mark, that this perſon thus ſet free, is not the Jew of whom Doctor Hammond ſpake, but the other that hath made the voluntary ſurrender of his Liberty, he that when the Sabbatick year comes (or conſequently the year of Jubilee, which offers him the ſame releaſe) reſolves, that he will not go out free, refuſes to make uſe of the advantage of a Jubilee, and ſo hath no more releaſes behind; and conſequently by this act of his is in an irreverſible eſtate, remains a ſervant for ever. And ſo this more ſpecious anſwer appears to have as little of truth, or ſubſtance in it, as the two former.

§. 18. To which, yet I might further add, That in caſe it were granted, that the next year of Jubilee gave this man releaſe alſo, yet would not this avoid the concludency of this place for the lawfulneſs of giving up our liberty (which is the only point in hand) becauſe he that can do it for ſeven, or for fifty years, can ſurely do it: and although having done it, he ſhall have Liberty, after that number of years, to retract, if he pleaſe, yet is this no obligation that he ſhall retract, but only a priviledge that he may; which priviledge he may again as lawfully deny himſelf to make uſe of, as before he did of his firſt Liberty.

§. 19. Mean while the concluſion, or cloſe of this Authors reaſoning is a little more extraordinary yet. For having from (the σόφον φαρμακὸν of) the Jubilee, inferr'd that he did not make himſelf irrecoverably a ſlave, he proceeds. [And if ſo (i. e. ſure, if he made not himſelf a ſlave irrecoverably) where is the warrant from God, or Nature, for paſſing away his freedom, or Liberty at all? and if ſo, how without recal, and irreverſibly?] Is it poſſible this Authour could think theſe Concluſions demonſtrated ſo logically, as that he ſhould ſet them down by way of queſtion, which ſuppoſes them irrefragable at the firſt asking?

§. 20. For the firſt of them, is not the contrary moſt demonſtrable? that if he were a ſlave till the year of Jubilee, (as 'tis confeſt he was, and withal that he was ſo by Gods permiſſion) then there is warrant from God for paſſing away his Liberty in ſome degree, and for ſome ſpace, though not irrevocably. Doth not he ſerve at all, that ſerves not eternally? or is that no warrant at all, which is ſuch for a limited time only? Then ſure are we not at all permitted to be men, or warranted by God or Nature to live in this world, becauſe we have our Jubilee too, our time of manumiſſion from hence.

§. 21. And for the ſecond, what is that but a plain Circle, firſt to infer the [not at all] from the [not irrevocably] and then in the ſame breath, the [not irrevocably] from the [not at all.] How reconcileable this is with the Authours popular title of Philodemius, I diſpute not; but reſolve, it is not the particular merit which beſtowed on him that other more regular of Eutactus.

§. 22. And for the dexterity that is expreſt in the concluſion of the whole ſection, [That therefore, that abſolute and unreſerved reſignation of a mans native Liberty, &c. without any juſt condition, or adequate change, (which, ſaith he, is hereby pleaded for by the Doctor) can have no riſe or origination from God, or reaſonable nature] (impoſing on the Doctor, directly againſt his ſence, thoſe words of ſo irrational importance, [without any juſt condition, or adequate exchange]) I ſhall ſuppoſe that this was an effect of the neceſſary wants of his cauſe, and a diſcreet proviſion that his Concluſion could not ſubſiſt without ſuch ſupplies, which made him venture on ſuch indirect means.

§. 23. For Doctor Hammond is not ſuch an enemy to mankind, as to plead for ſuch irrational actings, or to become his advocate that makes imprudent, or unthrifty bargains, (though by the ſtrength of his free will to evil, he may poſſibly do ſo ſometimes, and be obliged by his own act, and juſtly ſuffer the inconveniences, and ſmarts of it) but reſolveth, that both the Campanians in their dedition, and the Barbarians in their requeſt to the Romans, that they might have leave to become their ſervants; and the Jew in Moſes's ſuppoſition, that loved his maſter, and preferr'd his ſervice before his manumiſſion, (I ſhall add my ſelf alſo, who profeſs to prefer (in my choice for my ſelf) ſubjection before abſolute Liberty, nay before Soveraignty it ſelf; and believe it a far more ſober, and conſequently rational ſpeech in Saul, 1 Sam. 9. 21. which expreſt ſome averſation to Samuels propoſal about anointing him, than that other of Abſoloms, O that I were a Judge, or King, &c.) did all part with their Liberty upon adequate exchanges, ſuch, as they (which were the fitteſt judges what themſelves ſelves thought) did conceive to be the full worth of the commodity they parted with: And ſuch a rational power of parting with abſolute Liberty for ſomewhat that I like better, (i.e. for ſubjection to Government, which is, 1. in it ſelf, far removed from ſlavery; and 2. is the only way to ſecure men from the danger of it) is all that that Addreſs had occaſion to aſſert, or plead for at that time.

§. 24. One thing more there is, which I may be allowed to add, (having thus far reply'd to all his anſwers) that the concluſion which was in the Addreſs inferr'd from that practice of the Jews, was farther confirm'd by the practice of diverſe Heathens, who can neither be excuſed by the pretence of a permiſſion, or ſpecial diſpenſation from God to do unnatural things (as he thinks may be affirmed of the Jew) nor yet were obſerved by the moſt rational Hiſtorians to have done any thing contrary to Reaſon or Nature, in changing abſolute Liberty for ſomewhat which ſeemed better, and more advantagious to them, to wit, for ſecurity, and protection, i.e. in changing a ſtate of common hoſtility, (the unhappieſt lot in nature) for that other (ſet down by the Apoſtle as the object of their Chriſtian * purſuit, and emulation, and ‖ contention) a quiet ſetled peace. The advantage of which change, he that is not inclined to acknowledge, muſt be of a temper of mind or body ſo diſtant from that which God hath given me, that I ſhall not wonder, that that which ſeems to me moſt demonſtratively aſſerted, is to him ſo far from being acknowledged ſuch. I ſhall add no more to the vindicating of the firſt propoſition, till I meet with the temptation of better, or more dangerous arguments againſt it.

* Δίκαια εἰρήνης.

§. 25. I proceed as briefly to the ſecond, which is propoſed in the Addreſs by way of queſtion, Whether ever any man was by God, or Nature, inveſted with power of his own Life, i. e. with power to take away his own Life, to kill himſelf? The vindicating of which, I muſt acknowledge a task, to which I did not expect that the Doctor ſhould be call'd; having not, till now, been ſo fully convinced of the danger, and ill conſequences of favouring the exceſſes of thoſe mens wits, who have maintained paradoxes, or of the improvidence of thoſe that have tempted others by the publiſhing of them.

§. 26. For certainly about two years ſince, before the time, that the poſthumous Βιαθάν. was ſet out, a man might in this Nation have adventur'd to have asked ſo calm a queſtion [whether a man might Lawfully kill himſelf?] and not have feared a challenge in print for this injury, or encroachment upon the liberty of our Nature. And I conceive thoſe Laws of our Land, which have look'd on this ſelf-ſlaughter as an inhumane crime, and puniſh'd it after Death, with the denial of Chriſtian burial, and a mark of reproach upon the grave, might, when time was, have been able to have come in to the aſſiſtance of ſo known a truth; had not the ſacred rites of Chriſtian burial been now ſo deſpiſed, and profaned, that the wanting them hath ceaſed to be eſteemed a puniſhment among us; had not the Cuſtom of killing other men ſo haraſs'd our conſciences, and obliterated all the remainders of written, and unwritten Laws, that we need not be wondred at, if the ſwords, which have been ſo fleſht abroad, miſtake their way ſometimes, and return on the owners breaſts. And laſtly, had not the deduction been ſo prone, and eaſie, from the General, to the particulars, from the Lawfulneſs of a Nations deſtroying it ſelf, to a ſingle perſons going and doing likewiſe, from the juſtifying of civil inteſtine ſlaughters of the publick, to that other more tolerable crime of a ſingle violence.

§. 26. As it is, I ſhall not endeavour to perſwade my ſelf (as the Pyrrhoniam in Sextus Empiricus would teach me to do) that I was in a dream, when I read D. Hammond cited, and confuted for thus affirming: I muſt rather provide for the encounter, and haſten to anſwer the arguments, which this Authour hath offered againſt this branch of the ſixth Commandment (as he met with it in the Doctors hands) or elſe 'twill be poſſible this opinion may gather Proſelytes alſo in this age, wherein nothing can be ſaid ſo incredible, which ſome men do not make a ſhift to take up, and believe very contentedly.

§. 27. His firſt argument is drawn from the Doctors conceſſion, that man hath power from God and Nature over his own body to cut and lance it, and over his own freedom to paſs it away; from whence, if he do any thing, he muſt undertake to conclude, that therefore he hath power over his life alſo; And to do that he muſt make good theſe three things:

§. 28. 1. That ſince the confutation of the former propoſition, he hath now chang'd his mind, and agrees with Doctor Hammond, that a man hath from God or Nature power over his freedom to paſs it away, (for otherwiſe, though it will be an advantage againſt Doctor Hammond, who confeſt it, yet will it not be of uſe to himſelf who profeſſeth the contrary) and again, that he hath forgotten what in his very laſt period he had affirmed, [that God doth not intruſt and allow any man to have power to deſtroy his own image, i.e. to take away mans life, but him, or them whom he makes Gods, i.e. Magiſtrates to whom he deputes his own place] for ſure it cannot be thought, that every private man in the community of Nature, is ſuch a Vicegerent of God, or Magiſtrate.

§. 29. 2. That the argument, à minori ad majus affirmativè, is valid, againſt all Logick, viz. That he that hath power over the body, or over freedom, is ſuppoſed to have power over Life alſo; and ſo that the Surgeon, that may ſacrifice the fleſh, or cut off an Arm, may therefore as Lawfully ſlaſh the throat, and cut off the head alſo; and in like manner that the Maſter, by being ſuch, is become the Judge of his Servant, and hath among Chriſtians that power of his Life, which he hath ſeldom been allowed among the worſt of Heathens.

§. 30. And 3. That God, which hath put ſomething in our power, is thereby obliged to reſerve nothing to himſelf; Or that by giving us the uſus fructus, or benefits of Life, he hath given us the abſolute dominion, and propriety of it alſo.

§. 31. But without either of theſe three more difficult undertakings, the Authour hath attempted an eaſier way, by ſuppoſing that neither cutting of fleſh, nor Parting with freedom may be endured by God or Nature, unleſs they refer to ſuch an end, whereby a far greater good is to be enjoyed, and obtained: that cutting or lancing (without this neceſſary circumſtance of a greater good) is a ſtep or degree toward ſelf-murther, &c. From whence the Concluſion, I ſuppoſe, muſt be, that by the ſame reaſon the Killing of ones ſelf may then alſo be conceiv'd allowable by God, when it is referr'd by me to ſuch an end, whereby a far greater good is to be enjoyed, and obtained, but never elſe.

§. 32. To which I ſhall make theſe clear Replies, 1. That a thing directly forbidden by God, cannot be thought approveable by him, upon the referring of it to a moral (much leſs if it be but an advantagious or profitable) good end. Their damnation is juſt, that ſay, they may do evil that good may come. And that this is not a begging of the queſtion; but that, indeed, ſelf-homicide is evil, and forbidden by God, will be clear by remembring theſe three things, 1. That the command of not killing is indefinite; and that he that kills himſelf, doth certainly kill, that he that ſheds his own blood, ſheds the blood of a Man: and 2. That the Image of God reſiding on him (which is the ground of this prohibition in Moſes, Gen. 9. 6.) is as truly ſo, when 'tis beheld in the reflexion, as when in the direct line, in my ſelf, as in any other man. 3. That the power of Life is reſerved a peculiar to God, and not communicated to the Creature, (ſave only to his Vice-gerent) which may thus appear. God as the Creator of the World, and ſole donor of life, muſt be acknowledged to have the dominion over it: This dominion conſequently is communicated to none but to thoſe to whom by God it is communicated; To the Magiſtrate this power is given by that Law of God, whereby he preſcribes the putting certain Malefactors to Death; and whereby he conſtitutes the Magiſtrate his Vice-gerent on Earth, and ſo the executioner of that Law, an avenger for wrath, Rom. 13. And whoſoever will challenge the like power, muſt ſhew the like charter and evidence; and if he cannot do that, that is ſufficient to prove that he hath it not; As 'tis ſufficient to convict any man of the injuſtice of any his claim to my eſtate, that he cannot ſhew any deed whereby it was convey'd to him from me; And there need no other Affirmative proof againſt ſuch an one, than that it was once in me, and it appears not how it parted from me to any other. And therefore, till ſome evidence be produced, (which I ſuppoſe will never be) that this power of life is made over from God to every private man, the demonſtration is abundantly clear, that that power is not in any private man any more over himſelf than others. And it is obſervable to this very purpoſe, that though the Stoicks, to teach their Diſciples apathy, or courage againſt whatſoever events, did talk of that ſure remedy againſt all temporal preſſures, the going out, or killing themſelves, (looking on it favourably as a refuge or ſanctuary from all thoſe things which might otherwiſe be phanſied unſupportable) yet when they conſidered it this other way, (as every thing, they ſaid, had two handles) i. e. in reſpect of God, who placed them here; it was generally reſolved by them, viz. by Seneca, and the wiſeſt of them, (and the more fooliſh of that Sect are ſeldom found to practiſe the contrary) that we muſt not on our own heads deſert our ſtation, but maintain that ground on which our General hath ſet us, and wait with courage and patience, till he think fit to command us off again. As for the other two, power over the fleſh, and the freedom, the cutting of one, and parting with the other, they are no degrees toward the taking away life, but on the contrary are uſed on purpoſe for the preſerving of it, in its being, or well being, the one by the rules of phyſick, the other of policy; and therefore is the power of thoſe allowed us by God and Nature, becauſe they are thus inſtrumental to that end, and ſubmitted to our diſcretion, becauſe they may be ſo. Thus are ſome things referred to the Stewards judgment, and put into his power, to diſpoſe of for the good of the Family, and yet others reſerv'd peculiar, and ſacred in the Maſters own hands. Thus are my Writings put into my Lawyers hand, for him to uſe to the preſerving of my Eſtate; yet is not my Eſtate put into his power to diſpoſe of it at his pleaſure for ſome greater end. And the argument would be very infirm, becauſe that power which the Steward or Lawyer hath intruſted to him, ought not to be uſed by him, but in order to ſome good end; that therefore, that which is not ſo entruſted to him, may be thus aſſumed alſo. Some rayes there have always been communicated from Heaven to this Earth of ours; and yet ſome Flowers of that celeſtial Crown, which have been reſerved as ſacred, and incommunicable. And ſo there will be no kind of weight or concludency in this preſent way of arguing, this ballancing of fleſh or liberty with Life, till it appear alſo from the ſame, or equal evidence, that thoſe are reſerved by God, as Life appears to be. This certainly, without any more help, is a full ſatisfaction to this argument.

§. 33. But then ſecondly, & ex abundanti, the Killing my ſelf is no way ordinable to good. 'Tis not ordinable to mine own preſent worldly advantage, as lancing, and ſubjection may be; that is clear; and that is a reaſon why God ſhould not give us this Liberty, (though if we were not able to render reaſons, the wiſdom of the Law-giver were reaſon enough.) And for future advantages to my ſelf, the being with Chriſt, which is far better, 1. that cannot be taken notice of by bare Nature, till that be Chriſtianized: and then, 2. according to the Chriſtians rules, we have all reaſon to reſolve that 'twill not be purchas'd by any other way, but by that which God hath preſcribed toward it, i. e. by lawful unprohibited courſes. It being evident, that the Crown which is held in Gods hand ſhall not be diſpenced to any, but thoſe which do νομίμως ἀθλεῖν ſtrive lawfully; and that patience of waiting till God calls, is one of the Laws that are thus preſcribed in our ἀγῶνες.

§. 34. As for advantages to others, the Publick-weal, or peace, 'tis not imaginable, how the killing my ſelf can be directly, or otherwiſe than by accident, ordinable to that; whatſoever can be conceived of it, will be as ſufficiently provided for by the Magiſtrates having power of life; and that he may have from God immediately, as well as he can be ſuppoſed to have it from any act of collation from me, if 'twere in my power.

§. 35. Laſtly, For any moral, or Chriſtian vertue, or yet farther, the illuſtrating of the Glory of our Creator, (which alone deſerve the title of good ends) 'tis not the having an unlimited power, that immediately, or directly contributes to theſe, but the making uſe of the limited powers we have, the imploying the lives which he hath given us, according to his will, and not the deſtroying them contrary to it; I ſhall not need to proſecute this. All that is in this place pretended by the Authour to this purpoſe, is only this, that a man may freely conſent, and willingly expoſe his life to death for a greater, or publicker good.

§. 36. Where by conſenting I ſhall ſuppoſe him to mean a conſent of the will to that action which immediately follows, i. e. to the expoſing his life to death, (and if by conſent he ſhould mean any thing elſe, as the conſenting that the other ſhall kill him, or the making it free and lawful to that other other to take away his Life, then hath he put two very diſtant things together, and ſo 'tis but the ordinary fallacy plurium interrogationum; and in that Notion of Conſenting I ſhall anon ſhew that man may not, i.e. hath not power ſo to Conſent.) And to the proving of this, it is, that his remaining endeavours (as far as concerns Doctor Hammond) are directed. And accordingly he ſaith, He will be ſo bold as to ſtate the Queſtion as it ought, i.e. to remove it from the words and ſence wherein Doctor Hammond propoſed it (and in which it is that his whole diſcourſe is grounded) to thoſe other words of his own, moſt extreamly diſtant in ſound and ſence; and in which I am as confident that the truth is on his ſide, (if Conſent ſignifie no more than I take it to ſignifie) as I am, that that truth doth not contradict thoſe other truths, which by Doctor Hammond are ſuperſtructed on his foundation; or that the Propoſition, as 'tis ſtated by the Doctor, is all that is neceſſary to be affirm'd for the founding of the reſt of his diſcourſe.

§. 37. For I deſire to know, whether there be no difference betwixt killing my ſelf, and expoſing my life to death? If ſo, then it muſt be not only lawful ſo to kill my ſelf, (which is all the Authour demands) but ſometimes an act of duty and neceſſity alſo: For ſo certainly, in the aſſiſting my Sovereign, or Country, to hazard and expoſe my life, when I am thereto lawfully called; and ſo again, to ſuffer Martyrdom in the confeſſion of Chriſt, or diſcharge of any Chriſtian duty, is not only lawful for me to do, but I ſin if I do it not. And yet I do not perceive that this Authour hath laid this obligation, or neceſſity on himſelf, or any man elſe in any caſe to kill (or lay violent hands upon) himſelf, and ſo I ſuppoſe he is ſtill of the Doctors mind, (though he be willing to conceal it) that there is a difference between theſe.

§. 38. And if there yet want any farther light to the clearing of this difference between this [having power of my own life ſo as to kill my ſelf] and that [having power of my life, ſo as to expoſe it, or venture it in a good Cauſe] I ſhall (for the concluding of this Paper) propoſe the plain difference between them.

§. 39. And that may be taken from the nature of the word [expoſing] for that we know ſignifies no more, than to ſubmit it to an hazard, and ſo to expoſe my Life, is to hazard my Life: In doing ſo, all that can be affirm'd of me, is no more than this, that I am willing or content (and by my actions expreſs that willingneſs) to loſe my life, if God pleaſe to permit it to be taken from me.

§. 40. When my life is thus loſt, three things muſt neceſſarily concur to it, 1. The Violence of the invader; 2. The Providence of God permitting him to invade; and 3. My not reſiſting, or my not uſing the means (which were naturally poſſible for me to uſe) to prevent, or avoid the violence of this invaſion, as when Chriſt might have uſed Angels (and another flight, and a third compliance, and caution) but chooſeth not to do ſo. Of theſe three the only efficient cauſe of the action (of killing) is the malicious violent invader; ſure neither the providence of God in permitting, nor my own meekneſs, or obedience to Chriſt in following him, though it be to the very Croſs.

§. 41. In this caſe, ſuppoſing that it be for a good End that I now expoſe my life, it is alſo ſuppoſed, that the purſuance of that end is either duty in me, a thing that I am abſolutely bound to, as the Confeſſion of Chriſt, &c. or elſe that 'tis exceſs of Charity, to which, though it be not under particular precept, yet the intuition of ſome great and glorious end doth ſo invite and incline me, that 'tis heroical Vertue in me to do it, and that which (though God doth not ſo require it of me, as that I ſin, if I do it not, yet) he hath promiſed to reward abundantly, whenſoever 'tis done for his ſake.

§. 42. In the former of theſe caſes, when the purſuance of that good end is ſtrict duty, as in caſe I am commanded to confeſs Chriſt, or to aſſiſt my Prince in protecting my Country, There, as my endeavour is required of me by that precept, ſo is my utmoſt endeavour, ſuch as I muſt not remit, whatſoever the danger be; And if that danger prove to be the utmoſt danger, even of my life it ſelf, yet the command of Conſtancy, of not fearing or fainting, and the Character of perfect love given by St. John, that it caſts out fear, and the denunciations againſt the fearful or cowardly, do all joyn to extend my Obligation to purſue this ſo neceſſary End without any receding, and if the Croſs it ſelf lie in my way toward this end, to take it up, i.e. willingly to ſubmit to Gods Providence, which hath thought fit to call me to this Trial, if it be even of reſiſting unto blood. And ſo ſtill all that I do, is the conſtant, patient, chearful ſubmiſſion to Gods Will (in his providential diſpoſing of my life, and in permitting the injurious to take it from me) and nothing elſe; an abſolute choice of Obedience, but not of Death; a ſacrificing to duty all deſire of Life, but not otherwiſe undertaking to diſpoſe of it.

§. 43. Hence is it that my venturing of my Life doth not clear, or free the Invader, from any degree of ſin, or guilt in thus taking it away from me. 'Twas but a Sarcaſm or Trope in Julians Souldiers, to ſay, they did not wrong the Chriſtians by killing them, but only haſten them to their deſired home: And the Fathers were able to anſwer the Paralogiſm by the rule in Ethicks, diſtinguiſhing betwixt a mixt, and abſolute will; and ſo concluding their ſlaughters to be Injuries, though they were willingly embraced; the Perſecutors to be Perſecutors ſtill, though the other were Martyrs.

§. 44. Which is a demonſtrative proof, that 'tis the Invader, not Sufferer, whoſe act the killing is ſuppoſed to be, and ſo that I am not in this caſe of expoſing my Life, ſuppoſed to give any Conſent that he ſhall kill me, or conſequently to deveſt my ſelf of the power of my Life, or indeed to have any ſuch power over it. For whatſoever is abſolute in my power to diſpoſe of, that I may lawfully conſent to part with; That, if I do part with it, ipſo facto, and jure * becomes his, to whom I part with it (and if there be any error in it, 'tis chargeable on the giver, who was thus profuſely liberal above the proportion:) And conſequently for him to take and uſe it, is in him no ſin; As that part of my Eſtate which is in my power, may by me be paſt over to another by gift, and being ſo, is lawfully poſſeſt and enjoy'd by the receiver.

* Data eo ipſo quo dantur, fiunt accipientis. Juriſt.

§. 45. And therefore, I ſay, if the lawfulneſs of the expoſing my Life would conclude me to have a power over it, it muſt be as perfectly lawful for the Tyrant, into whoſe hands my Life (in the confeſſing of Chriſt) is by me expoſed, to take that Life from me, as 'tis for the poor man into whoſe hands my goods are by me put (in obedience to Chriſts command of mercifulneſs) to receive and carry away thoſe goods; which being an abſurdity too groſs to be defended by any, will, I ſuppoſe, incline this Authour to diſcern the diſtance betwixt the queſtions, as the one is by him, and as the other was by Doctor Hammond propoſed.

§. 46. And in like manner alſo, when the End purſued by me, is (though not abſolutely neceſſary, yet) better and more excellent; there the Precept of being faithful unto death, and the promiſe of reward made to him that lays down, or loſes his life for Chriſts ſake, do as much oblige to conſtancy, at leaſt, as much aſſure that ſuch conſtancy ſhall be acceptable to God, (and that the more by how much greater the hazards, and terrours, and temptations are to the contrary) as when the particular matter of the action was under precept. And ſo that other accidental difference will make no variation in the main, or make it at all probable, that expoſing my life heroically was not warranted by God, when expoſing it neceſſarily was ſuppoſed to be ſo: it being as certain that God doth warrant me to do that which he commends, as what he ſtrictly commands to me: And therefore what was ſaid in the caſe of duty, doth as truly hold (and ſo needs not to be repeated again) in this caſe of [more excellent] alſo.

§. 47. Having thus far proceeded, it will now be unneceſſary for me to anſwer the Arguments which this Authour adds in this matter; becauſe the Queſtion being by him changed from that which was propoſed by Doctor Hammond (and ſtated Negatively) to another, which no man can be more ready to affirm and aſſert than that Doctor; It would be an impertinent niceneſs in him to refuſe to have his Opinion confirmed by another mans reaſons; I ſhall rather wiſh that all his proofs were demonſtrative, and effectual to conclude, what Doctor Hammond affirms with him; and only briefly ſhew, that they are ineffectual to prove what that Doctor denies, and that will ſoon be done by the moſt curſory mention of them.

§. 48. For firſt, I grant with him that God permitted his own Son to be put to death by the hands of violent and unjuſt men; but ſee no conſequence from thence, that Chriſt as a Man might lawfully have taken away his own Life: As for the phraſe of laying down the life for the ſheep, that ſure ſignifies not the killing himſelf, (for the goodneſs of the Shepherd conſiſts not in that) the cutting his own throat, when the Wolf invades the Flock; but the making uſe of his Life to the utmoſt, wherein it may be advantageous to the Sheep, and venturing and hazarding it in their defence or quarrel; yea, and contentedly ſuffering (not acting in) his own death, that he may be able to avert theirs. For this is the meaning of τιθέναι ψυχὴν, to lay down the life, (ἐπικίνδυνον εἶναι, to venture himſelf voluntarily into danger, παραβολεύεσθαι τῇ ψυχῇ, in the notion in which the Greek Gloſſaries explain the phraſe, from παράβολος, i. e. ἀποκινδυνεύων in Heſychius, and the Latine, Parabolum animæ ſuæ eſſe, i. e. all one with ἐκβάλλειν) to expoſe it, not to be ſolicitous for the defence of it, as to forgo duty, or charity, or care of the poor ſheep intruſted to him, for the preſerving of it.

§. 49. A ſecond Argument is by this Authour touched on, (though not formally urged by him) that the preſerving whole ſocieties from periſhing, is a good and a publick end; and that the impunity of offenders being the readieſt way to the diſſolution and deſtruction of ſocieties, Nature is ſuppoſed to dictate that one man ſhould rather juſtly die, than whole ſocieties unjuſtly periſh. This Concluſion, and Premiſſes, the Doctor doth, as the Authour fore-ſaw, moſt willingly acknowledge, but withal diſcerns not how it proves that a man hath power over his own life: it will be ſufficient if God by any other means (as by inſtating it in the Prince, &c.) do place that power of life in others. The utmoſt which this way of arguing can pretend to conclude, is, 1. That whatſoever any man hath in his own power, that 'tis reaſonable for him to deliver up into the Governors hand, (thus to make it eaſie or poſſible to diſcharge his truſt, and by theſe advantages to contribute to the publick quiet and weal.) Nay 2. that God that hath the power of life, and ſees how uſeful 'tis to have that veſted in Governours, ſhould conſequently be ſuppoſed ſo to veſt it, (And that he doth ſo, is the clear acknowledgment of the Addreſs.)

§. 50. But ſure it cannot extend ſo far; as to make a man give (or have) that which he hath not, nor to reſtrain God from having the ſole original power of that, which otherwiſe might be acknowledged to be veſted in him.

§. 51. As for the ſuppoſition which the Authour here adds on the back of this, [In caſe ten men in the community of Nature chuſe one to rule over them, and one of them thus ſpontaneouſly ſubjected ſhall murther one of his fellow Subjects] (whereupon he demands, whether the Ruler ſo ſet up, may not by his own conſent by vertue of that power he received from him among the reſt, put ſuch a murtherer to death.) To this I anſwer, that the Governour may in this caſe put the Murtherer to death, but this not by virtue of any power or conſent of the Murtherer, but by authority from God, who alone hath the power of Life; In relation to which it is that the Governour is ſtiled διάκονος Θεοῦ, a Miniſter of God, in this very notion, as he is ἔκδικος εἰς ὀργὴν, an avenger for wrath or puniſher of offenders.

§. 52. That which is in the Subjects power the Governour may have by the Subjects conſent, and by virtue of the power which he received from him; And therefore it is that the power of violent reſiſting invaders, the right of repelling force by force, which God and Nature hath given the ſingle man in community of Nature, is now, in caſe of ſubmiſſion to the Governour, parted with, and depoſited by him, ſo far as refers to the Governour; and though it be founded in ſelf-defence, yet he that thus violently reſiſts the powers, ſhall receive to himſelf damnation.

§. 53. But ſtill that which is not in the Subjects power, is not, nay cannot be veſted by the Subject in the Governour, but flows from an higher principle (from him that really hath the power) and comes from the Subjects conſent, only as from the cauſa ſine quâ non, or by way of reſultance; That as God communicates not this power of life to any but the Governour; ſo that mans Conſent, that he ſhould be his Governour, doth remotely (and by way of condition, or qualifying of the Subject to a capacity of receiving that power from God) concur to the veſting of that power in that perſon. Thus doth the temper of the air contribute to the qualifying the ſlime, or putrid matter to receive influences from the Sun, and then thoſe influences beget life in it, and endow it with that higher principle, which the temper of the air, that contributed all it could, (having not thus much in its power) could not be affirm'd to contribute to it.

§. 54. And

§. 54. And ſo you ſee the Doctors way of ſtating this queſtion doth as fully provide for the puniſhing of Malefactors, and preſerving of communities, as the ſuppoſing the power of life to proceed originally from the People, would be able to do; as he that affirms the Soul in every birth to be infuſed by God, makes as ſure a proviſion for Generation, and conſequently for the preſervation of the humane ſpecies, as they that ſuppoſe the Soul to be traduced from the Parents, as well as the Body.

§. 55. His laſt Argument is from Rom. 5. 7. For a good man one would dare to die, i. e. ſaith he, would with the preſence of a reſolved Spirit dye; the word [daring] ſaith he, noting a preſence of mind terrified with no dangers. To this argument again, as far as by the Authour it can be extended, i. e. to the acknowledgment, or concluding of the lawfulneſs of a valiant couragious ſuffering of death, either for a publick good, or for ſome act of eminent private charity, I am fully of the Authours mind.

§. 56. But the word [dying] in that place, ſignifying no more than ſubmiſſion of the Will, contentedneſs, or willingneſs to ſuffer death, not by his own, but by ſome other hands, an ἀντιψυχία, a taking thoſe blows (though never ſo ſharp and mortal) on his own ſhoulders, and breaſt, which were meant by the Enemy to another (to the merciful, or good man in that Text) there is no Logick can conclude from hence, that a man hath any power over his own life, to take it away from himſelf by any act of force, (as ἀυθέντης among the Attick Writers is, ſaith Phrynicus, uſed ἐπὶ τῦ ἀυτόχειρος φονέως, He that kills himſelf, takes upon him an Independent Authority over himſelf) or to give it into another mans hands, ſo that he may without any farther Authority, (without any further inveſtiture of the power of the Sword from God) lawfully take it from him. I ſhall conclude this with an obſervation of * Boethius, that the love of life is not ſeated in the will of the Creature, but in the principles of Nature; that ſo our lives may not be ventured on the uncertainties and hazards of our own paſſions, or ſatieties, which may incline the will to prefer death ſometimes, but in the inſtincts of that more conſtant immutable Rule, which always preſcribes the preſerving of thoſe treaſures, by God and Nature entruſted to us.

* Nam ne in animalibus quidem mancndo, amor ex animæ voluntatibus, verum ex naturæ principiis venit; Nam ſæpe mortem cogentibus cauſis, quam natura reformidat, voluntas amplectitur, &c. de conſol. Phil. l. 3. Proſ. 11.

§. 57. Having made this ſhort, and ſudden return to this Authours reaſonings, Doctor Hammond will leave the matter moſt willingly, where this Authour hath placed it, at the feet of all ingenuous, and unprejudiced Readers, and will endeavour (as unpaſſionately as any man) to approve himſelf a Servant of Reaſon, and embracer or friend of Truth, whereſoever he meets with it; upon which ſcore, he is content to acknowledge ſome obligations to this Authour, who hath occaſioned this further ſurvey of his former affirmations, and given all other men ſome cauſe to be more confirmed in the perſwaſion and aſſurance of the truth of them. And thus much I conceive is ſufficient to have ſaid upon this occaſion.

---

§. 58. BUT it ſeems the Readers quiet is not to be obtain'd ſo eaſily; for while that which hath been thus ſaid was under the Printers hand, Maſter John Goodwins Βελιοσμιχαι came forth, and by the mention of Doctor Hammonds Name twice in his Title-page, gave reaſon to delay this Vindication ſo long, till it might appear whether 'twould be uſeful to add any thing to it (upon this new occaſion) by way of Poſt-ſcript. And herein it hath proved a little unluckily, that this ſecond Advocate of the ſame cauſe falling upon this paſſage in the Addreſs (the Subject of our preſent diſcourſe) hath yet in his judgment upon it ſo varied from the former Authour, that as he hath yielded the queſtion hitherto debated, and confeſt that no man hath by nature the power over his own life; ſo he hath provided a new task for me, by denying the Doctors conſequence from hence, [That then this power cannot be derived to Kings by Men, or from the People.] This I confeſs is ſomewhat ſtrange, that that ſhould be imagined derivable by men, or from the people, which at the ſame time 'tis confeſt no man hath. I have lately learn'd a * Scotch Proverb from Maſter Henderſon, and find by ſearch the meaning of it to be this plain Engliſh, That nothing is derivable from any place, which was never there: and Mr. Goodwin acknowledges the ſtrength of that Conſequence to ſtand in the authority of this Maxime, Nihil dat quod non habet, Nothing gives that to another which it hath not it ſelf. And truly, I ſhall never deſire a firmer baſis for any Concluſion of mine, than ſuch an acknowledged Principle as this. Should I find any part of my poſſeſſions in Mr. Goodwins hands, and he juſtifie his Title to it, by pretending the donation or ſale from Philodemius to him, and I produce evidence that this was never in the poſſeſſion of Philodemius, would there be any more required of me, to conclude conſequently, that 'twas not derivable from Philodemius to him? would it not be a ſtrange reply, to ſay, That this conſequence depended on the Authority of a Topick Maxime? The word [Topick] I ſuppoſe to be here prefixt by him upon a deſign of diminution, as Topical is equivalent with probable, and oppos'd to demonſtrative. But I hope this is not thus a Topick Maxime. Can any demonſtration be more convincing, than that which is built upon a Principle, as acknowledg'd as any in the Mathematicks, and the contrary of which implies a contradiction [to have, and not to have?]

Pag. 23.

* That cannot be brought But, that is not the Ben.

§. 59. As for the reaſon of denying this conſequence, which Mr. Goodwin renders, becauſe [though no particular man hath by nature this power over his own Life, yet as a member of a community he hath, not ſimply a power, but a neceſſity lying upon him by way of duty, &c. to conſent with others, that his life ſhall be taken from him.] 1. 'Tis not to be imaginable, that he ſhould have a neceſſity of duty lying upon him, who hath not ſimply a power, meaning, as here he muſt, a power of doing it lawfully. And 2. For this power, or neceſſity of conſenting only (as that differs from the power of giving) this will be of no kind of force, unleſs it alſo appear that the Magiſtrate derives the power of life (which is ſuppos'd to be in him) from this conſent of theirs, or that it is this conſent of theirs and nothing nothing elſe, which gives him that power. But this is ſo far from being proved, that it is not ſo much as affirm'd by Mr. Goodwin: And on the other ſide 'tis clear, that the bare conſenting that a thing ſhall be taken out of my hands, is very diſtant from the taking upon me to give it; the latter pretends and ſuppoſeth a poſſeſſion or inveſtiture in the giver, the former doth not in the Conſenter; and ſo, though the latter would be of ſome uſe (if granted) to infer Mr. Goodwins concluſion, that the power is originally from the people; yet the former will be no way able to infer it.

§. 60. The matter will be very viſible by example in any Truſt, or Stewardſhip. The Lord intruſts to his Steward the keeping of a ſum of money, after that he aſſigns it over to ſome other man by Bill of Attorney, and legally veſts his right in that other. In this caſe the Steward formerly intruſted conſents, that that other ſhall take what is thus by the Lord aſſigned to him, and indeed a neceſſity lies upon him by way of duty ſo to do. In this caſe I ſhall ask Mr. G. from whom this money is deriv'd to this other? from the Lord, or from the Steward? I hope he will acknowledge from the Lord: The ſame again, when the King delivers a Caſtle by way of Truſt to be kept by one of his Subjects, and after aſſigns it over to his Son, and the Subject that kept it conſents that the Son ſhould have it, and ſo the Son enters upon the poſſeſſion; the caſe is clear, that 'tis not from the Subject that the Son derives this poſſeſſion, (though 'tis as true that the Subject conſents to deliver it up) but from the King only: and that act of the Subject is no expreſſion of any right in him, from him conveyable to the Son, but only of his Truſt, and ſubordination to the King. And this is generally the difference betwixt Inveſtitures and Truſts: what is veſted in me, I may give or derive to another; what is intruſted only, I cannot: the Servant cannot diſpoſe of his Maſters goods; yet that his Maſters diſpoſal may ſtand good, he may and ought to give his conſent. This is ſo groſly true, that 'tis pity any longer to inſiſt on it; and yet 'tis the very thing that the whole point in hand depends on, and was therefore, I conceive, ſo induſtriouſly involv'd, and obſcured by Mr. Goodwin.

§. 61. After this, Mr. Goodwin inſenſibly glides into another piece of artifice; The power of life, ſaith he, is eminently and virtually in the people collectively taken, though not formally. And again, A man, and a body of men, having power over their own lives Radically and Virtually, though not formally. This period of Mr. Goodwin ſeems to be a new way of Anſwer, by applying diſtinction to the Antecedent, as the former was by denying the Conſequence. The Antecedent was [That no man hath by nature the power over his own life, &c.] from whence the Addreſs concludes, that therefore [This power cannot be deriv'd from the people] To this Mr. Goodwin firſt returns his acknowledgment, That if the conſequence be right, it is a clear caſe, that Regal power is not originally in the people, but conferr'd on the Ruler immediately from God. This is an acknowledgment in him of the truth of the Antecedent, and a doubt only of the Conſequence, which accordingly he immediately proceeds to invalidate: And therefore 'tis a little ſtrange (and an argument that his firſt attempt was not very ſucceſsful to him) that he ſhould now ſo ſoon return to deny the Antecedent, at leaſt to diſtinguiſh of it, having before ſo abſolutely granted it. But to paſs over this, and allow him this liberty of recalling his bounty, let us examine the force of his diſtinction.

§. 62. The force of this diſtinction doth not, I conceive, reſpect the Subject [the People] (as if that might be taken in two notions, either ſingly, or collectively) becauſe preſently, without that diſtinction, he ſpeaks indifferently of [A man] and [A body of men] but it belongs to the Copula, or word [Is] and then it muſt be thus diſſolv'd. The power of life may be ſaid to be in a man two ways, 1. Formally, 2. Eminently, and Virtually, and Radically. The diſtinction of Formaliter, and Eminenter, hath been apply'd by Philoſophers to the Sun, and Heavenly Bodies: of which it being by them reſolv'd, that they are ſimple and free from thoſe mixtures to which our ſublunary bodies are ſubject, and yet it being apparent that they warm and heat other things, it is thereupon defined, that they have not heat, or other qualities in them Formally, (i.e. in that manner, or kind, that fire is hot, or we are hot) but Virtually and Eminently, i.e. that they have ſome other virtue or faculty in them, higher, or more eminent than that heat which is in inferiour bodies; and that that doth enable them to warm other things, though they are themſelves ſuch pure creatures, as not to have thoſe groſs qualities in them. Whether this be rightly affirm'd or only nicely conjectured by Philoſophers (for I ſuppoſe there is little known of thoſe diſtant bodies beyond conjecture) I ſhall not now enquire, but only deſire to be taught by Mr. Goodwin how this can be made appliable to the matter in hand, i.e. to the power of life and death. This power, we know, is in God firſt, and if in any eminently, and radically, and virtually, certainly in him: And in the Supreme Magiſtrate formally, being actually inherent in him, though not originally, nor in ſo eminent a degree as in God it is. But can it thus be ſaid alſo to be eminently, &c. in the people, i.e. that the people have in them ſome higher and more eminent virtue or faculty, than the power of every man over his own life; and that that ſupplies the place of that formal power, and that by it the People beget or produce the power of life in the Supreme Magiſtrate, as truly, as, if they had it formally, they could do? This is the meaning of the diſtinction in the ordinary, and only notion of it, and muſt be it, if it be rightly appliable: but Mr. Goodwin interprets his meaning of it ſo far from this, ſo far from importing or concluding the People to have ſuch an higher power or faculty (to which [Eminently] and [Virtually] in oppoſition to [formally] belongs) that 'tis indeed by him ſet down as much inferiour to that power formally inherent. For thus he interprets it: A man, and a body of Men, have power over their own lives Radically, and Virtually; in reſpect whereof, they may render themſelves to a Magiſtrate, and to Laws, which if they violate, they muſt be in hazard of their lives, &c. By this I diſcern two things: 1. That by this Eminent, Virtual, Radical power, Mr. Goodwin underſtands that (which is far enough from the meaning of thoſe words, and) which Logicians call a remote, or indirect power, (as that is oppos'd to an immediate, or direct) or rather a power, to which this effect is merely accidental; as if the Patient were ſaid to have power to cure himſelf, meaning thereby that he hath power to ſubmit himſelf to the Phyſician, who is able to cure him. And for Mr. Goodwin to aſſume the liberty of ſpeaking thus largely, was not, I ſuppoſe, his want of knowledge in propriety, but his willingneſs to receive advantage from this abuſe of words. And then 2. If this be the only meaning of the four hard words, (Eminently, Virtually, Radically, and Formally) viz. that 'tis in the power of men (or the people in community of nature) ture) to render themſelves to a Magiſtrate, and to Laws; to which rendring 'twill be conſequent, that they ſhall hazard their lives upon violating thoſe Laws; then, I ſay, are Mr. Goodwin and Doctor Hammond very well agreed; for this his explication of that diſtinction is very reconcileable with thoſe words of the Addreſs. This giving up their (i. e. the peoples) Liberties to one, or more, makes that man or men a Ruler over them, and being a Ruler, to him belongs (deriv'd from God, not from them) the power of Life, which Gods decree hath inſtated in the Supreme power or Ruler, who is therefore in that relation of avenger for wrath or puniſhment, a Miniſter of God, Rom. 13, &c. For whence is it that their rendring themſelves to a Magiſtrate, in Mr. Goodwins ſtile, brings upon them that hazard of lives, in caſe of violation of Laws, unleſs it be that he that hath power of their lives, places that power in that Magiſtrate to whom they have rendred, or ſubjected themſelves? That this is God, and not the People, I will not conclude to be Mr. Goodwins opinion, becauſe 'tis his main deſign to prove the contrary; but that thoſe words of his, and his diſtinction ſo explained will bear that ſence, I mean, that they will be true, and acknowledg'd by him, that acknowledges the power of Life to be only in the Supreme Governour, deriv'd from God, I conceive ſufficiently manifeſt; and conſequently, that though this power be ſaid to be in the People remotely, improperly, and indirectly, and ſo in Mr. Goodwins notion of eminently, &c. yet 'tis not from the People, but from God only, that the Governour hath it.

§. 63. The reply will be as ready, and eaſie alſo, to all force, or concludency of the next Argument, that which is taken from the Peoples power, to make, or conſent to the making of Capital Laws. For 1. Mr. Goodwin cannot be ignorant that it hath been ſometimes in the power of Kings to make Laws, without the addition of any conſent of the people: ſuch were the Principum placita among the Romans: and after it was thought fit by Princes to lay ſome reſtraint on themſelves, both that they might be better adviſed, and more readily obeyed; then, though the peoples conſent hath been deem'd neceſſary, yet doth this belong only to the regulating and modifying the exerciſe of this power: the Fundamental power it ſelf of life, being in the Supreme Governour, before the making theſe Laws. Now 'tis very eaſie to diſtinguiſh betwixt theſe two, the power, and the Regulating of the exerciſe of that power; the power in the groſs, and the determination of that power to this, or that particular action. The interpoſition of man in the latter of theſe, doth no way prejudge the ſole priviledge of God in the donation of the former of them: As the Grace of God is his peculiar, and proper gift; and yet man may give Directions, and Rules, how we are to act by that Principle, what uſe it will beſt become us to make of that precious talent entruſted to us. And therefore, for the great Noon-day-Truth, which Mr. Goodwin induceth from theſe, and the like conſiderations, viz. [That men by nature have ſuch a power over their lives voluntarily, &c. to expoſe them to the ſtroke of publick juſtice, in caſe they ſhall offend, &c.] This being granted, is of no force againſt Doctor Hammond, but doth with him rather ſuppoſe a Publick Juſtice able to ſtrike, i. e. a power of life already veſted in the Magiſtrate, before this conſent of the People, or abſtractedly, without reſpect unto it. And ſo ſtill it is not from this conſent of the People, that this power is deriv'd to the hand of Publick Juſtice, but from ſome other higher principle, viz. that of God, to whom ἐκδίκησις the avenging, or puniſhing of offenders, peculiarly belongs, and no other, but in ſubordination to, and ſubſtitution from him.

§. 64. And what if the King, as Mr. Goodwin next alledgeth, have no power to take away the life of his ſubjects without cauſe, or for every cauſe, but only ſuch as by Law are puniſhable with death? what if he cannot command them to be their own Executioners? Doth it follow from hence, that therefore, he hath the power of life from the People, not from God? Doth the power of God ſo conſiſt in doing cauſleſs, or irrational things, that nothing which is exercis'd moderately, or ordinately, can be imagin'd to come from him? I ſhall ſuppoſe that God himſelf hath perfect dominion over the World; and yet that he obſerves rules of all juſtice, and goodneſs in the exerciſe, and diſpenſing of that power, and hath not power of doing any thing contrary to thoſe rules of eternal juſtice, which he hath preſcribed to himſelf; which to do, by all wiſe men hath been counted an act of imbecillity, not of power. And conſequently, how natural is it that he ſhould thus determine and limit his deputies alſo? give them power of life over their Subjects, and yet command them to exerciſe that power with that juſt temperament, which either natural, or civil, or municipal Laws ſhall dictate, and preſcribe them? And therefore Mr. Goodwins arguing is very looſe, and unconcluding [That if the power which the King hath over the lives of the people, were immediately from God, then he might lawfully execute the ſame, and take away the lives of men, without any mediating direction, or warranty from any Law.] For ſure the ſame God that gives the Magiſtrate the power of life, doth command him alſo not to throw away that precious truſt cauſleſly, makes him his Miniſter for wrath to them that do evil, and contrariwiſe a rewarder to them that do well; and though he ſubject him not to any earthly ſuperiour, but reſerve him to his own ſevere tribunal, yet he ſubjects him to reaſon, and rules of Juſtice, and (when he hath undertaken to govern by that Standard) to the poſitive municipal Laws of that particular Kingdom alſo, and hath been as particular in preſcribing Laws to the Prince, to avoid Oppreſſion or acts of Height, as to Subjects to abſtain from Reſiſtance.

§. 65. As for that proof which Mr. Goodwin produceth to enforce his arguing, viz. [That the execution of no commiſſion immediately iſſued by God, ought to be ſuſpended upon, or determin'd, or regulated by any commiſſion or conſtitution of men.] It is as far from truth, as it could well have been contriv'd to be: as will appear, if it be conſidered, that the word [Commiſſion] 1. ſignifies not an abſolute or poſitive Command, but only a power or inveſtiture of Authority; or if a Command, yet that 2. only an Affirmative precept, the nature of which is, that it binds not ad ſemper, and ſo conſequently may be ſuſpended at ſome time, by the free will of him that hath the Commiſſion, much more if any weighty reaſon interpoſe to determine his will. 3. That this Commiſſion is only general and indefinite, without application to particular caſes, referring that application to the conjuncture and concurrence of circumſtances, (which ordinarily are humane and political) and conſequently to the diſcretion of Rulers judging by thoſe circumſtances: The intervenience of which circumſtances makes the particular exerciſe of that Commiſſion convenient, and ſeaſonable in one place, and at one time; and consequently, where they do not intervene, there the exercise of it may be at that time and place suspended as unseasonable. As when the shedder of blood is by God commanded to be put to death, and yet some men accidentally and involuntarily fall under that Title; it must be in the power of the Magistrate to suspend the execution of that sentence, or else the Innocent must lose the benefit of the City of refuge, and run the same fortune with the most murtherous designer.

§. 66. After this manner 'tis clear, that Christ had a commission from Heaven to work Miracles, to cure Diseases; yet 'tis particularly affirm'd of the infidelity of his Countrymen, that that suspended the exercise of his power for some time; He could not do many mighty works there because of their unbelief; yet, I hope, this will no way be thought to argue, that Christs commission issued from his Countrymen, from the belief of men, (though that were necessary, to the exercise of it) or that Christ did ill in suspending the exercise of his Commission. In like manner the people of Israel had from God not only a commission, but command to put the nations to death, Deut.20.10. And yet on those of them that were left, 1 Kings 9.20. Solomon suspended the act of that commission, and only levied a tribute of bond-service, ver.21. Once more; I shall suppose a General to receive power of Martial Law from the Soveraign in any Kingdom; this power he is not willing to exercise, but by a cognizance of each malefactors cause before a Council of War: Here 'tis plain that that Council of War suspends that exercise of the Generals power upon a particular man; but sure it will no way follow from thence, that that Commission, which was suppos'd to issue to the General from the Soveraign, doth now issue not from the Soveraign, but that Council of War; and then no more will the possibility of suspending the exercise of the Kings Commission by Law, &c. conclude that Commission to issue from the People, and not from God. And therefore in the case which Mr. Goodwin hath been confident to refer to Doctor Hammond to Arbitrate, [Whether the King hath any Regular or just power over the lives of men, other than that which is proportion'd, &c. by the Laws of the State] I suppose the Doctor may agree with Mr. Goodwin, and yet never be enforc'd, or concluded by that concession, to question the Original of the power from God, the difference being discernible between the Power it self, and every particular exercise of that power; and the suspension of the latter, far from including of the evacuation, or cancelling of the former.

§. 67. The same answer will clear Master Goodwins succeeding Plea, pag. 26. That if the power of Kings over the lives of men, were by immediate derivation from God, then must this power be uniform, &c. in all Kingdoms whatsoever.] This consequence is far from all appearance of truth; Because the power may be from God, and yet that God that gives the power, may leave it in the particular exercises of it, to be determined either by the arbitration, and free will, and prudence of the Governor, where there are no Laws, or by the Regulation of Laws, where there are such; The Dimensum, or proportion of power over the lives of the Subjects, which a Governor claims, consists not in indivisibili, in any certain, or definite point, but is that which may enable him to discharge his office of Ruler, i. e. to protect his people, and restrain their inordinacies. And as far as Reason, and (which are supposed to be a branch of that) particular Laws, (subordinate to Gods Word) see it fit to extend the exercise of that power, so far may that Ruler regularly extend it; And whatsoever proportion it be, that he is intrusted with by God, 'tis not reasonable that he should irrationally extend the exercise of it. And this regulation of indefinite power by such prudent limits as these, (i.e. by the Universal law of Reason and Justice, or by the particular conclusions, which the wisdom of Law-givers hath thought fit to deduce from thence) cannot justly be quarrell'd, as a retrenchment of power, any more, than the infinite goodness of God which permits him not to be able to do any thing which is contrary to that attribute, is a manacling, or restraining his Omnipotence; but is only a cultivating and dressing of it, a paring off the excesses, and exorbitances of it, and leaving it a form'd channel, instead of a vast or unbridled Ocean.

§. 68. And thus I suppose the nature of Angels or men, which have bounds of Vertue and Conscience, and Laws prescribed them, within which they are to move, and not to range unlimited in the desart of their own uncertain proposals, cannot thereby be said to have lost the liberty of their Species, or to have received no powers from God in their creation, though some regulations (it must be acknowledged) they are under, and consequently, determinations and suspensions for the exercise of their powers. And what inconvenience the affirming of this will bring upon the Doctor, what hazard of blaspheming of God, &c. I must profess my self so tame, as not to fore-see, or imagine, howsoever Master Goodwins ἀμετρία ἀνδολχῆς hath helpt him to phansie such invisible Mormo's, and Anakims in our passage.

§. 69. Next, it is but affirm'd, and not at all made probable by Mr. Goodwin, That the Affirming the Kings power over the lives of the people to be by immediate derivation from God, is to smite them with blindness, &c. and not to discover to them the Dan and Bersheba (I suppose he means by this trope, the due bounds and limits) of such their power] I am sorry Master Goodwin should think it fit that such popular harangues should be admitted to supply the place of reason, and shall briefly reply, That they that affirm the power of the Sword to be from God derived to Magistrates, do at the same time define, and affirm, that those Magistrates are to remain rational creatures, and to continue under the Soveraignty of Reason, and all the branches of that, as far as their particulars are concerned in it, i. e. to be ruled by the Universal Laws of Justice and Equity, by the Civil Sanctions which tend to preserving of the Societies, and consequently by the particular Local, or municipal Laws of any Country, which are supposed to have a peculiar propriety toward the preserving, and regulating of that People.

§. 70. 'Twill now be to little purpose to prove that these two affirmations are reconcileable, the one deriving the power of life to the Ruler from God, the other acknowledging the regulation of this power by these bounds; For there is no kind of repugnance, or contradiction, nothing but accord and amity between them: The very Hand of God that confers this power, gives this very direction and Law for the exercise of it, that they that rule other men should themselves be guided by Reason in all their actions: And what that reason is in each particular emergent, they are not always, always, or only, the Judicials of Moſes, which are fit to direct us, but the wiſdom ſometimes of Particular Laws, and Law-makers. And ſo there is ſmall danger either of enſnaring Kings, or diſturbing States (as he ſeems willing to fear) by this Doctrine; which though it define the Original of this power to be from Heaven, can yet allow the regulation of this power for the Exerciſe of it to be of an inferiour, Humane, Political Origination.

§. 71. One Argument more Maſter Goodwin is pleaſed to take in to diſprove the immediate derivation of this power of life from God. Becauſe, ſaith he, that derivation which is immediate from God, can by no ways be aſſiſted, furthered, or promoted by any creature, or ſecond means: but this derivation of that power of life is at leaſt furthered by the act of the people in electing, &c. Ergo. I ſhall not examine the force of his enſuing probations, which have frailties enough in them, but ſhall be content to ſuppoſe the moſt he can wiſh, or imagine, viz. That the people do elect or chooſe their King; In this caſe, ſaith the Doctor, The people give not the power of their lives to that King, but by giving up their Liberties, &c. to him, nominate him to that office of ſupreme power, which, whereſoever it is, God ſuperinveſts with the power of life. This is the Doctors ſtating of the queſtion in his Addreſs, and thereby the ſeparation is evident between the Act of the People in Electing the perſon of the Ruler, and the Act of God in conferring this power of life. All that can be ſaid of the former of theſe is, that that Act of the People is the means of determining the General decree of God (that Rulers ſhall (as his Deputies) have the power of life) to this particular perſon, not that it is an aſſiſtent, or ſocial cauſe in conveying this power to the Ruler, much leſs that it ſhall undertake to wreſt this power out of Gods hands, and aſſume it into their own; but, I ſay, as a cauſa ſine qua non, or a previous preparation of the ſubject, by their choice qualifying the perſon to be thus inveſted, and impower'd by God. And ſo, though the People in this caſe are ſuppoſed to do ſomewhat, i. e. to Elect, and that election to determine this power of Gods to this perſon, yet is this power derived ſolely from God, as the Addreſs hath ſufficiently explain'd, and not from any Act of the People: And therefore the word [Furthering] in Maſter Goodwins argument, may be taken (as an equivocal word) in a double ſence, either to denote actual aſſiſtance, or contribution of force, or efficacy, toward the production of the effect, viz. of the power of life in the Ruler: And in that ſence it is not true, that the Act of the People in Electing, doth further this power, it being the ſole Act of Gods decree to give that power, and nothing elſe. Or elſe the word [Furthering] may be taken to ſignifie no more than preparing or qualifying the Subject to a capacity of receiving this power from God, (as John Baptiſt prepared mens hearts for the receiving of Chriſt, when he came, but had nothing to do in the miſſion of him, which was the ſole work of God) and thus indeed, the Election of the people may further the derivation of this power from God, to ſuch a particular Ruler; and there is nothing more ordinary than for Gods works to be thus furthered by ſecond cauſes or means, even his work of Grace, which he owns moſt peculiarly. The reſemblance made uſe of in the Addreſs, is very commodious to clear this whole matter. In the Generation of a child, the Parents are acknowledged to contribute much, to be not only furtherers, but even efficients in the production, Yet is it commonly agreed, that God creates, infuſes, and inſpires the Soul immediately. I need not examine, or atteſt the truth of the ordinary opinion, that the Soul comes from Heaven, not from the Parents; becauſe I now uſe it as a reſemblance only, and that it may be allowed to be, though it ſhould not be true; and thus far at leaſt it will be argumentative, that the electing of the perſon of the Ruler by the people, doth no more conclude that the power of life is not ſuper-infuſed and derived to the Ruler (ſo choſen) from Heaven, than the Parents begetting of the child is an argument, that the Soul is not ſuper-infuſed from God. Our Phænomena may be all very happily ſolved by this way of ſetting it; and M. G. exceptions ſuperſeded, and the concluſion cleared, which was the only one, which the Addreſs deſired to infer by this conſideration, viz. That whatſoever were ſuppoſed of the peoples electing their Ruler, yet the Supreme power neither is nor can be in the community of the people by force meerly of their Original, or natural Liberty, upon this firm ground (not yet ſhaken by M. G. or Philodemius) that the power of life, which is part of the Supreme Power, is not part of the natural Liberty, nor conſequently either inherent in the Community of men, nor by them communicable to any Repreſentative. ὅπερ ἔδει δεῖξαι, The only thing, which this Rejoinder (as the former diſcourſe) was deſigned to demonſtrate moſt irrefragably.

§. 72. And having proceeded thus far to make return to Maſter Goodwins offers of reaſon, I ſhall not endeavour to make payment to his Scoffs, pag. 28. or vindicate Doctor Hammond from his charge of overweeningneſs, &c. Though 'tis not at all intelligible to me, how thoſe words in the Addreſs [For it is poſſible that I may put you in mind of an evident Truth, which perhaps you have not taken notice of] ſhould be chargeable with this εἰρωνεία, or interpretable to any further ſence, than only this, That this truth ſo evident in Doctor Hammonds opinion, was not by him conceived to be ſufficiently taken notice of, or laid to heart by them, to whom he then made his Addreſs. And if that Doctor were therein miſtaken, or if he be juſtly charged in his next page (together with the reſt of his perſwaſion under the title of the whole Legion of the Royal Faction) as the firſt-born of that evil Generation of Flatterers, for producing plain Arguments of Reaſon and Scripture, to avert that which appear'd to him a heavy Sin, and Judgment, from a Nation; I muſt then betake my ſelf to my Prayers, that God will forgive me my more diſcernible ſins, (when innocencies and good offices to mankind are become ſo culpable) and get out of his company as ſoon as I can, who can ſo readily ſhift the diſcourſe from reaſoning to defaming, and ſupply with reproaches what was wanting in Arguments.

§. 73. I am now come to an end of this debate concerning the Power of life, but cannot be ſo prudent, or thrifty of my pains, as to diſſemble the other exceptions, which (in this book) M. Goodwin hath made to ſome other parts of the Addreſs; I ſhall give you as brief an account of them as is poſſible.

§. 74. The firſt, is his diſlike of that Critick annotation, as he ſtiles it, of the Royal Doctor, taking notice [that the Supreme Power, or Ruler, is ſtiled by the Apoſtle, Rom. 13. the Miniſter of God, and not of the people.] How this comes to be ſtiled a Critick annotation, (which ſuppoſes it a Vi. Moſcho-pul. Gram. Gr. Grammatical one, (as τεχνικὴ, ἐξηγητικὴ, κριτικὴ, are the parts diviſive of γραμματικὴ) where there is no uſe made of Grammar to deduce it, nor indeed of any thing but of the plain words, as they lie in the Text) I have not the skill, or ſagacity to divine. All that Doctor Hammond affirms is this, that the Supreme power, Rom. 13. is ſtiled by the Apoſtle, the Miniſter of God, and not of the people. And is not this manifeſt to any that looks on Rom. 13. 4. where he is twice ſtiled διάκονος Θεοῦ, the Miniſter of God, and is neither there, nor any where elſe ſtiled the Miniſter of the People?

§. 75. But, ſaith Maſter Goodwin, This no way infringes the credit of his concluſion, that Kings are the Servants and Miniſters of the People. The Apoſtles were the Miniſters of God, and yet they preach themſelves alſo the ſervants of Men, 2 Cor. 4. 5. and Miniſters of the Saints, Rom. 15. 25, &c. To this I anſwer, that the phraſe διάκονος Θεοῦ, Miniſter of God, ſignifies a Miniſter of Gods Ordination, and Inſtitution, and though it may ſignifie ſomewhat elſe, yet this is the only notion wherein Doctor Hammond takes it in his Addreſs, according to Rom. 13. of which he ſpeaks, where the powers are ſaid to be ordained by God, and to be his Ordinance. Now he that is thus a Miniſter of God, cannot be alſo of the People, becauſe theſe two Ordinations being incompatible, he that holds by one, muſt needs diſclaim holding by the other. Another notion there may be of the phraſe, as it ſignifies performing of ſervice to God; and ſo indeed the ſame Apoſtle that ſerves God, may be a ſervant of Men alſo; and to that, all Maſter Goodwins probations are directed: and though Saint Pauls διακονεῖν ἁγίοις, his carrying of alms, and contributions to the poor Saints, be no very proper inſtance to this purpoſe; yet thus 'tis acknowledged, that Saint Paul may be a ſervant of Men, and perform Offices of Humility to them, (though by the way this Servant of theirs behaves himſelf ſometimes very like a Maſter, and comes with a Rod when he ſees it convenient.)

§. 76. But this is nothing to the purpoſe to infer the King to be διάκονος ἀνθρώπων, a Miniſter of the People in the former notion, i.e. a Miniſter of the peoples Inſtitution; and therefore all that Maſter Goodwin adds of the Reaſons why the Ruler, Rom. 13. is not called the Miniſter of the people, is very extrinſecal to that purpoſe. The utmoſt that he can enforce from that place is, that the King attends on the publick good. But ſure that will avail as little to prove that he is not a Miniſter of Gods inſtituting, or one that hath the power from him, as the Shepherds waiting over the Flock, is a proof that he is ordained, or inſtituted by his Sheep.

§. 77. The next undertaking of Maſter Goodwin againſt Doctor Hammond, is to prove that the Civil Magiſtrate is by Saint Peter call'd ἀνθρωπίνη κτίσις; which he renders the Ordinance or creature of Man, becauſe they receive their very being from the people as Kings, and as Magiſtrates. Doctor Hammond hath, I conceive, ſufficiently vindicated that Text of Saint Peter from this interpretation, and 'twere eaſie to ſhew, that the phraſe ἀνθρωπίνη κτίσις muſt by all Analogy be rendred Humane creature; not Ordinance, or creature of Man; by humane creature, meaning any part of mankind; by creature of man, a thing of mans creating. The phraſe to expreſs the latter of theſe would be, κτίσμα ἀνθρώπου, taking Creature for production, or work, and Man for the artificer, or workman of it; what is ſaid in the Addreſs, is ſufficient to direct any ſober man to a right underſtanding of that place. And Maſter Goodwins exceptions are very far from perſwading the contrary. As 1. [That the King is there called Supreme, not in reſpect of the community of the people, as, ſaith he, the Doctor ſuppoſeth, but as compar'd with ſubordinate Rulers.] But this is of no force againſt the Doctor in that place, where all that he infers from their title of Supreme, is, that they are the very perſons that are enſtiled the Ordinance of God, Rom. 13. and that is the ſignal character which he mentions in that Text, without taking notice of any other aſpect of the word Supreme, or drawing any nice concluſion from it.

§. 78. His ſecond exception is againſt the concludence of a Negative Argument. Which I acknowledge an exception ſo far as to keep that Argument from being demonſtrative, in caſe all the force of it were fetcht from the Negative; But that Argument from the Negative (or from the governours not being ſaid to be ſent by the people) is but præluſory and preparative to another more forcible branch of the Argument, viz. that (on the contrary) Supremacy is affixt to the King, and Subjection for the Lords ſake, commanded to be paid him, (as miſſion from him is affirmed of all other Magiſtrates) And both thoſe put together, the Kings being Supreme, (i.e. inferiour to none but God) and Subjection being affirmed to be due to him for the Lords ſake, (i.e. becauſe of the relation which he ſtands in to God, by whom he is ſaid to be ordained, Rom. 13.) may well enough paſs for a character of ſome remark upon the King, and keep the pretended rendring of ἀνθρωπίνη κτίσις, from being the neceſſary importance of that Text, or the Supreme power from being concluded to be originally in the People.

§. 79. As for the [groaning of the creation or creature] Rom. 8. which Doctor Hammond renders [the hope of the Heathen World] 'tis not all Maſter Goodwins συναμαχία that will render it an improbable interpretation. That the Heathen World (though without hope, i. e. in a deſperate condition in reſpect of ſalvation, as long as they remained in their idolatries) were yet ſo capable of receiving benefit of Chriſts coming into the World, that Chriſt is called Deſiderium omnium Gentium, the deſire of all Nations, in Haggai, and προσδοκία ἐθνων, the expectation of the Gentiles, in the Septuagints rendring of Jacobs Prophecie; that they ſeeing their own impure condition, deſired the means of reſtoring their loſt treaſure, and conſequently are ſaid to deſire Chriſt, without explicit foreknowing any thing of him, (becauſe that which they deſired was no otherwiſe compaſſable, but by him) is no nicety of the Doctors invention, but largely inſiſted on by Saint Auguſtine in his Books De Civ. Dei; and this one Conſideration is Reply ſufficient to all the inconveniencies which Mr. Goodwin hath ſprung in this interpretation.

§. 80. As for the other difficulties which to him ſeem to preſs and reſiſt the interpreting of the following words to this ſence, they are not ſo ſolemnly mentioned by Maſter Goodwin as to own my impertinence, if I ſhould enlarge on them; though I can aſſure him that Doctor Hammond hath long ſince conſidered the whole Context, and is ready to give an account of the agreeableneſs of it to this preſent notion, whenſoever it ſhall be ſeaſonable. Only in favour to the Reader, he doth not unneceſſarily obtrude it on him at this time, meaning to expect a fairer opportunity for that, and other the like diſſertations.

§. 81. But

§. 81. But Maſter Goodwin upon the granting of this notion of πᾶσα κτίσις, for the heathen World, hath faln upon a ſpecial κρησφύγετον, that however, It ſignifies the world under the conſideration of being the Creature or creation of God. And then he wonders why ἀνθρωπίνη κτίσις ſhould not ſignifie the Magiſtrate to be the creation of Man, and how by this interpretation that concluſion of the Kings being the creature of the people, is avoided. To this I anſwer punctually, that Maſter Goodwin being the affirmer of this Doctrine, [That the King is the creature of the people] and his proof of it being thoſe words of Saint Peter, where obedience is commanded to be paid πάσῃ ἀνθρωπίνῃ κτίσει, as 'tis by him rendred, to every creation, or ordinance, or creature of man, It is certainly ſufficient for Doctor Hammond (to diſprove this concluſion ſo inferred from that place of St. Peter) if he ſhall be able to mention another probable interpretation of thoſe words, from whence that Concluſion will not be inferred; eſpecially if by other places of Scripture he make it manifeſt, that that interpretation is moſt agreeable to the analogie of that and other Scriptures. Now this hath Doctor Hammond done, by ſhewing that πᾶσα ἀνθρωπίνη κτίσις is a phraſe which needs not ſignifie any more than every man, or humane creature, not only Chriſtian, but Gentile, or Heathen alſo. Which if it be the entire notation of the phraſe (as at this time Maſter Goodwin is content to grant) then ſure is there no ground for him from thence to conclude, that the King is ἀνθρωπίνη κτίσις in that other ſo diſtant ſence, an ordinance or creature of the people. As long as Maſter Goodwins concluſion depends upon that one only notion of the phraſe, ſo long, unleſs that be acknowledged the genuine ſence of it, (as certainly 'tis not, when another ſo diſtant from that, is ſuppoſed poſſible to be it) there is no ſtability to be expected to that concluſion, whoſe premiſſes are thus forfeited by his own conceſſion.

§. 82. As for the Doctors Anſwer to the ſuppoſed Objection, (where by the parallel command of honouring all, verſe 17. he infers the limitation of the Subject, All to whom honour belongeth there, (i. e. ſuperiours, not inferiours) and ſo here, every humane creature, (i. e. every ſuch, that is in place of Magiſtracy) certainly M. G. hath failed much in his attempt to invalidate it, by affirming that that Apoſtle, in his command to honour all, ſuppoſeth a debt of honour due from every man to every man, according to that of Rom. 12. 10. In honour preferring one another. For to this I anſwer, that the meaning of 1 Pet. 2. 17. cannot ſure ſo properly be fetcht from Rom. 12. 10. as it may from the circumſtances of the Text and Verſes on each ſide of it in the place of Saint Peter. In the former verſes, 13, and 14. the words clearly refer to the doctrine of obedience to Superiours, and ſo verſe 15. the mention of Gods Will [that by well-doing we ſhould put to ſilence the ignorance of fooliſh men] (i. e. that by obeying of our Superiours we ſhould take off the Scandal that lay on Chriſtianity, as if it made men ill Subjects, verſe 16.) doth plenarily belong alſo to the ſame matter. So again, honouring the King in the end of the 17. ver. and ſervants obeying their Maſters, verſe 18. are very forward to concur with this notation; And the precept of loving the brotherhood, i. e. their fellow-Chriſtians, and of fearing God, (from which fear the honour divolves upon his Vice-gerent) will no way prejudice this notion of the honour there ſpoken of, that it belongs only to the debt of inferiours to ſuperiours; and ſo that the [All] are only thoſe all that are thus capable of it.

§. 83. As for the honouring of Widows (by M. G. mention'd from Saint Paul to Timothy) that ſure is not appliable to this matter, ſince the honour there, is the relieving, or feeding of them, giving them that honour of ſupply, which is acknowledged to be another notion of the word, not that which in the fifth Commandment, and thoſe other places, is the principal importance of it.

§. 84. As little reaſon hath Maſter Goodwin to conclude that the precept of being Subject one to another, 1 Pet. 5. 5. ſhould not be a precept of obedience to Superiours, when the words immediately precedent are, Likewiſe ye younger ſubmit your ſelves to the Elders, and thoſe Elders, verſe 2. the ποιμαίνοντες & ἐπισκοποῦντες, the Paſtors and Biſhops of the Church. 'Tis poſſible indeed that the [one another] may be, Others beſide Superiours, but ſure 'tis not ſo probably ſo, when that which immediately precedes, is Submiſſion to Elders, to which the ſubjection here added, is not a phraſe of diminution, but of addition rather, and when Gods reſiſting the proud, that immediately follows, is, ſ ith Saint Auguſtine, (as in the Poet, debellare ſuperbos) the direct contrary to Subjectis parcere, the giving pardon, or grace to the obedient Subjects. And thus I conceive the parallel words of Saint Paul, Epheſ. 2. 21. Submitting your ſelves one to another] are moſt probably to be interpreted, to thoſe among you who are in any relation of ſuperiority, for ſo it follows immediately, verſe 22. Wives ſubmit your ſelves to your own Husbands, &c. Whereas, when he returns to the Husbands duty toward the Wife, it is not ſubmiſſion but love only, v. 25. Other places I might eaſily mention, where the word (ἀλλήλους) may very well ſignifie no more than others. So the ἐξομολογεῖσθε ἀλλήλοις τὰ παραπτώματα, confeſs your faults one to another, Jam. 5. 16. cannot farther be extended than to a direction to the ſick to make confeſſion of his ſins, whether to others ſimply, or to thoſe others whom he hath injur'd, but obligeth not them that are in health to confeſs their ſins reciprocally or back again to the ſick; and ſo in the next words [and pray ὑπὲρ ἀλλήλων, for one another] that is, that the brethren in health ſhould pray for them that are ſick, and not reciprocally that the ſick ſhould pray for them in health, the end of the prayer there mentioned being ἵνα ἰαθῆτε, that ye may be healed; which end, and cloſe doth, I conceive, confine the diſcourſe to the ſick firſt to confeſs, and to the healthy after to pray for the ſick, and no more. And ſo φιλόξενοι εἰς ἀλλήλους, 1 Pet. 4. 9. notes hoſpitality to the ſtrangers that wanted, and not mutual, reciprocal entertainments, one of the other: For though it is poſſible that it might note the Inhabitants civility to the traveller firſt, and then that travellers repayment of the like, when he comes to be a fixt Inhabitant, yet the word ξένοι, ſtrangers, being ordinarily taken as a ſpecies of men in want (as beſides ſome places of Scripture, I remember in Juſt. Mart. ſecond Apolog. ſpeaking of the offertory, he ſaith that by that means the Præfect became the guardian of ſtrangers, &c. and of all that were in want) I conceive φιλόξενοι is no more than kind to that ſort of poor ſtrangers, and that without any expectation of being entertain'd by them again, for that the Alms-giver ſhould expect that return from the poor or ſtranger, is both unreaſonable and unchriſtian alſo. So Luke 12. 1. καταπατεῖν ἀλλήλους cannot be taken reciprocally, that they which trod on others were alſo trod upon by them, but that one trod upon another, agreeable to our preſent ſence: So Acts 7. 26. ἵνα τί ἀδικεῖτε ἀλλήλους; not that the perſon injur'd was injurious alſo, but only that one injur'd the other.

And

And yet more plainly, Rom. 2. 15. their thoughts excuſing or accuſing, μεταξυ ἀλλήλων, where it cannot be imagined that the thoughts mutually or reciprocally accuſe or excuſe, the accuſation belonging to the conſcience, which accuſeth the erroneous will, but not in like manner to the will, that that ſhould accuſe the Conſcience. Theſe places are added ex abundanti; That of Epheſ. 5. will be able alone to ſerve the turn, if theſe others ſhould not be thought to be demonſtrative. I have thus briefly reply'd to theſe other exceptions of Maſter Goodwin as far as concerns that place in Saint Peter, and I ſuppoſe have vindicated it from being the foundation of Maſter Goodwins beloved dogma (which I ſhall deſire him to ſhew to be the affirmation of any one ancient Father or Commentator on that place, or of any one place of Scripture beſides, which might help to countenance it) that Kings are the creatures of the people.

§. 85. There are yet ſome old reckonings which Maſter Goodwin is willing to make even with the Doctor, and I muſt beg a very little patience from the Reader to obſerve what account he hath given of them.

§. 86. He begins with fair words of Doctor Hammond, and acknowledgments, that having frequently heard of him, he never heard any thing but well and worthy of a man, his judgment in the grand State-queſtion of the times only excepted. That the diſcharge of his Conſcience in obedience to the fifth Commandment ſhould be thus made an exception againſt the Doctor, he hath ſure learnt μὴ ξενίζεσθαι neither to think ſtrange, nor take it ill at Maſter Goodwins hands, remembring that ſome of the Chriſtians which were anciently in the World, in the abſence of other viſible crimes, were thought worthy of all reproaches for their common profeſſion, or being Chriſtians. One thing only I ſhall ſuppoſe, I have the Doctors leave to aſſure Maſter Goodwin, that it was no ſpecial deſire to engage Mr. G. which cauſed the particular mentions, and refutations of ſome paſſages in his books, but only the opinion which he had, that they might probably prove matter of ſeduction to the Reader (and that ſeduction of a dangerous conſequence) if ſuch neceſſary antidotes were not provided to avert, or prevent the danger. Doctor Hammond, I ſuppoſe, is not over-fond of ſuch Diſputes, or debates as theſe, and is never more in conſtraint, than when he lies under ſuch engagements.

§. 87. Some paſſages in M. G. Butchers bleſſing were a firſt great temptation to him, which though reſiſted by the love of quiet, prepared him to receive more violent impreſſions from ſome remarkable Sections in the Anticavalieriſm. And at laſt the fire kindled, and his Pen gave teſtimony of it.

§. 88. The particulars he then took notice of in M. G. were 1. His dexterities in evacuating the force of Tertullians teſtimonies concerning the patience, and non-reſiſtance of the Primitive Chriſtians, and theſe are at large refuted in the tract of Reſiſting, &c. page 58. to page 63. Secondly, his ſtrange affirmation of Gods hiding from the firſt Chriſtians this liberty of reſiſting Superiours, as part of his counſel to bring Antichriſt into the world, and his manifeſting it to us now, as a means of caſting Antichriſt out. The latter of theſe two D. H. conceived as ſtrange, and as dangerous a Doctrine, as he ever met with, and therefore examined it to the bottom, Reſiſt. page 63. to 66. Theſe two main matters of difference Dr. Hammond acknowledges to have managed againſt Mr. Goodwin, but I conceive without any thing of aſperity, or exceſs in any kind, which ſhould look like a particular deſire of engaging M. G. And M. G. hath thought fit for many years to let theſe reckonings ſleep without ever giving the leaſt reply to either of them. And now that [of Gods hiding of truths from the Ancient Chriſtians, and the helping Antichriſt to his throne] hath not the fortune to be taken notice of at all. And for the other of Tertullian, though that be now mentioned, yet is it a little ſtrange that no other return would be made to all the Doctors anſwers, ſave only the tranſcribing of two or three pages from M. Rutterford, and M. Pryn, as from a pair of Royaliſts, in their two tracts of Lex Rex, and Soveraign power of Parliaments, which ſure he could not believe will be of any Authority with the Doctor, though he is ſo pleaſant as to mention the friendlineſs of their judgments and the Doctors in caſe of the late King: beſides this tranſcription, there is but one paſſage in thoſe diſſertations of the Doctors, to which he thinks fit to make reply; and that is a Grammatical σφάλμα, taken notice of παρέργως by the Doctor, viz. Maſter Goodwins attributing to Montaniſt, that he call'd himſelf the Holy Ghoſt. This Doctor Hammond did conceive to be haſtily written by Maſter Goodwin, and not agreeably to the rules of the Grammar, unleſs as in Smectymnuus, Areopagi are ſet for the Areopagites, ſo è contra, Montaniſt were ſet by Maſter Goodwin for Montanus. In this caſual incidental charge Mr. Goodwin thinks himſelf very nearly concern'd, more it ſeems, than in giving account either of his Cenſure of Tertullians teſtimony of the Chriſtians patience, or of Gods hiding of Truths and aſſiſting Antichriſt. For to juſtifie the Grammaticalneſs of theſe words, [Montaniſt who called himſelf the Holy Ghoſt] a great deal of pains is taken, and three whole pages ſpent on that affair. 'Tis not poſſible I ſhould think fit to exerciſe my Reader by continuing ſuch a Debate as this any longer, but ſhall think it abundantly ſufficient to aſſure Maſter Goodwin that the Engliſh remains ſtill unjuſtified, upon this ground, that the word Montaniſt is no poſſeſſive, and if he ſtill have inclinations to diſpute it, I ſhall propoſe him this parallel: Maſter Goodwin is a Chriſtian, who died for the ſins of the World; and ask him, Whether it be Grammatical ſence to have ſaid this. As for the deep recrimination againſt Doctor Hammond for uſing the word [Reſolve] for concluding, or being ſatisfied within himſelf, &c. If this be any matter of eaſe or refreſhment to Maſter Goodwin, 'twere pity he ſhould be denied the liberty to make uſe of it.

§. 89. There now remains but one particular, the Doctors accuſing Maſter Goodwin of flattery in the Elogies beſtowed upon that action of the Army, (collected in the Addreſs, page 95.) Whether they were thus guilty, I ſhall no farther diſpute, but leave it to the Reader to determine; having no other deſign in this whole Reply, than that Maſter Goodwin may reſume the conſideration of his actions, and of his arguments, and remember that the matters of theſe Debates are of ſuch an importance toward the publick peace, that men of our profeſſion owe an account to God for them. And for other paſſages of this Authour, wherein the London-Miniſters are concern'd, I leave them to anſwer for themſelves, and ſo conclude this Paper.

A PROCLAMATION

Commanding the Uſe of the BOOK of COMMON-PRAYER according to Law, notwithſtanding the pretended Ordinances for the New Directory.

WHEREAS by a Printed Paper, dated the third of January laſt paſt, intituled, An Ordinance of Parliament for taking away the Book of Common-Prayer, and for eſtabliſhing and putting in execution of the Directory for the publique worſhip of God, It is ſaid to be ordained amongſt other things, That the Book of Common-Prayer ſhould not remain, or be from thenceforth uſed in any Church, Chappel, or place of Publique Worſhip within the Kingdom of England, or Dominion of Wales; And that the Directory for Publique Worſhip in that Printed Paper ſet forth, ſhould be from thenceforth uſed, purſued, and obſerved in all Exerciſes of Publique Worſhip of God in every Congregation, Church, Chappel, and place of Publique Worſhip. And by another Printed Paper, dated the 23 day of Auguſt laſt paſt, intituled, An Ordinance of the Lords and Commons aſſembled in Parliament, for the more effectual putting in execution the Directory for Publique Worſhip, &c. particular Directions are ſet down for the diſperſing, publiſhing, and uſe of the ſaid Directory, in all Pariſhes, Chappelries, and Donatives, and for the calling in and ſuppreſſing of all Books of Common-Prayer, under ſeveral forfeitures and penalties to be levyed and impoſed upon Conviction before Juſtices of Aſſiſe, or of Oyer and Terminer, and of the Peace, as by the ſaid two Printed Papers may appear. And taking into Our Conſideration, that the Book of Common-Prayer, which is endeavoured thus to be aboliſhed, was Compiled in the times of Reformation by the moſt Learned and Pious Men of that Age, and defended and confirmed with the Martyrdom of many; and was firſt eſtabliſhed by Act of Parliament in the time of King Edward the ſixth, and never repealed or laid aſide, ſave only in that ſhort time of Queen Maries Reign, upon the Return of Popery and Superſtition; and in the firſt year of Queen Elizabeth, it was again revived and eſtabliſhed by Act of Parliament, and the repeal of it then declared by the whole Parliament, to have been to the great decay of the due honour of God, and diſcomfort to the profeſſors of the Truth of Chriſts Religion: and ever ſince it hath been uſed and obſerved for above fourſcore years together, in the beſt times of Peace and Plenty that ever this Kingdom enjoyed; and that it contains in it an excellent Form of Worſhip and Service of God, grounded upon the Holy Scriptures, and is a ſingular means and help to Devotion in all Congregations, and that, or ſome other of the like Form, ſimply neceſſary in thoſe many Congregations which cannot be otherwiſe ſupplied by learned and able Men; and keeps up an uniformity in the Church of England; And that the Directory, which is ſought to be introduced, is a means to open the way, and give the liberty to all ignorant, Factious, or evil Men, to broach their own fancies and conceits, be they never ſo wicked or erroneous; and to miſlead People into ſin and Rebellion, and to utter thoſe things, even in that which they make for their Prayer in their Congregations as in Gods preſence, which no Conſcientious man can aſſent or ſay Amen to. And be the Miniſter never ſo Pious and Religious, yet it will break that uniformity which hitherto hath been held in Gods Service, and be a means to raiſe Factions and Diviſions in the Church. And thoſe many Congregations in this Kingdom, where able and Religious Miniſters cannot be maintained, muſt be left deſtitute of all help or means for their Publique Worſhip and Service of God. And obſerving likewiſe, that no reaſon is given for this alteration, but only inconvenience alledged in the General (and whether Pride and Avarice be not the ground, whether Rebellion and deſtruction of Monarchy be not the Intention of ſome, and Sacrilege and the Churches poſſeſſions the aims and hopes of others, and theſe new Directories, the means to prepare and draw the People in for all, We leave to him who ſearches and knows the hearts of Men.) And taking into Our further Conſideration, that this alteration is introduced by colour of Ordinances of Parliament made without and againſt Our Conſent, and againſt an Expreſs Act of Parliament ſtill in force, and the ſame Ordinances made as perpetual binding Laws, inflicting penalties and puniſhments, which was never, before theſe times, ſo much as pretended to have been the uſe or power of Ordinances of Parliament, without an Expreſs Act of Parliament, to which We are to be Parties. Now leſt Our ſilence ſhould be interpreted by ſome, as a Connivance or indifference in Us, in a matter so highly concerning the Worship and Service of God, the Peace and Unity of the Church and State, and the establish'd Laws of the Kingdom, We have therefore thought fit to Publish this Our Proclamation; And We do hereby Require and Command all and singular Ministers in all Cathedral and Parish-Churches, and other Places of Publique Worship within Our Kingdom of England or Dominion of Wales; and all other to whom it shall appertain, That the said Book of Common-Prayer be kept and used in all Churches, Chappels, and places of Publique Worship, according to the said Statute made in that behalf in the said first Year of the said late Queen Elizabeth; And that the said Directory be in no sort admitted, received, or used, the said pretended Ordinances, or any thing in them contained to the contrary, notwithstanding. And We do hereby let them know, that whensoever it shall please God to restore Us to Peace, and the Laws to their due Course, (wherein We doubt not of his assistance in his good time) We shall require a strict Account and prosecution against the breakers of the said Law, according to the force thereof; and in the mean time, in such places where We shall come, and find the Book of Common-Prayer suppress and laid aside, and the Directory introduced, We shall account all those that shall be Ayders, Actors, or Conceivers therein, to be Persons disaffected to the Religion and Laws establish'd; and this they must expect, besides that greater loss which they shall sustain by suffering themselves thus to be deprived of the use and comfort of the said Book. Given at our Court at Oxford, this Thirteenth day of November, in the One and Twentieth Year of our Reign, 1645.

God save the King.

A PREFACE TO THE ENSUING DISCOURSE.

THAT the Liturgy of the Church of England, which was at firſt as it were writ- Sect. 1.
ten in blood, at the leaſt ſealed, and delivered down to us by the Martyrdom of moſt of the compilers of it, ſhould ever ſince be daily ſolicited, and call'd to the ſame ſtage and Theatre, to fill up what was behind of the ſufferings of thoſe Fathers, is no ſtrange or new piece of œconomy in the Church of God. This Propoſition I ſhall take liberty briefly to prove by way of Introduction to the enſuing Diſcourſe, and ſhall hope that you will acknowledge it with me, if you but conſider theſe ſeverals.

1. That there is not a ſurer evidence and κριτήριον, by which to diſcern the great excellency Sect. 2.
of moderation in that book, and ſo the apportionateneſs of it to the end to which it was deſigned, than the experience of theſe ſo contrary fates, which it hath conſtantly undergone, betwixt the perſecutors on both extream parts, the aſſertors of the Papacy on the one ſide, and the Conſiſtory on the other; the one accuſing it of Schiſm, the other of Complyance; the one of departure from the Church of Rome, the other of remaining with it, like the poor Greek Church our fellow-martyr, devoured by the Turk for too much Chriſtian profeſſion, and damn'd by the Pope for too little, it being the dictate of natural Reaſon in Ariſtotle, (whoſe rules have ſeldom failed in that kind, ſince he obſerved them) that the middle vertue is moſt infallibly known by this, that it is accuſed by either extream as guilty of the other extream: that the true liberality of mind is by this beſt exemplified, that it is defamed by the prodigal for parſimony, and by the niggard for prodigality, by which (by the way) that great block of offence, which hath ſcandalized ſo many, will be in part removed, and the reproaches ſo continually heaped upon this book, will to every diſcerning Judge of things, paſs for as weak an unconcluding argument of guilt in it, as the ſcars of the Military man doth of his cowardice, or the πᾶν πονηρὸν ῥῆμα, the every Topick of rayling Rhetorick, Mal. 5. of the unchriſtianneſs of the perſon on whom they are poured out.

2. That ever ſince the reproaches of men have taken confidence to vent themſelves againſt Sect. 3.
this book, there hath nothing but air and vapour been vomited out againſt it, objections of little force to conclude any thing but only the reſolute contumacious, either ignorance, or malice of the objectors, which might at large be proved, both by the view of all the charges that former Pamphlets have produced, all gathered together and vindicated by Maſter Hooker, and that no one charge of any crime, either againſt the whole or any part of it, which this Directory hath offered; which as it might in reaſon, make ſuch an act of malice more ſtrange, ſo will it to him that compares this matter with other practices of theſe times, (whoſe great engine hath been the calumniari fortiter, the gaining credit by the violence of the cry, when it could not be had by the validity of the proofs, moſt men being more willing to believe a calumny, than to examine it) make it but unreaſonable to wonder at it; It being an experiment of daily obſervation, that thoſe which have no crime of which they are accuſable, are therefore not the leſs, but the more vehemently accuſed, proſecuted, and dragg'd to execution, that the puniſhment may prove them guilty, which nothing elſe could, it being more probable in the judgment of the multitude, (who eſpecially are conſidered now a-days, as the inſtruments to act our great deſigns) that a nocent perſon ſhould plead not guilty, than an innocent be condemned; which prejudice, as it might be pardon'd from the charity wherein 'tis grounded, that they who are appointed to puniſh vileneſſes, will not be ſo likely to commit them, ſo being applied to uſurping judges, (whoſe very judging is one crime, and that no way avowable, but by making uſe of more injuſtices) will prove but a piece of Turciſme, which concludes all things honeſt, that prove ſucceſsful, or of the modern Divinity in the point of Scandal, which makes it a ſufficient exception againſt any indifferent uſage, that it is by ſome excepted againſt, a competent cauſe of anger, that men are angry at it though never ſo without a cauſe.

Sect. 4. 3. That it hath been constantly the portion, and prerogative of the best things (as of the best men) to be under the cross, to have their good things of this world μετὰ διωγμῶν, with persecutions, Mar. 10. 30. and so no strange thing that that which is always a dealing with the cross, should be sometimes a panting, and gasping under it; There was never any surer evidence of the cleanness of a creature amongst the Jews, than that it was permitted to be sacrificed; the Lamb, and the Turtle emblemes of innocence, and charity, and the other christian vertues, were daily slaughter'd and devour'd, while the Swine; the θηριάλωτα, and all the uncleaner creatures, were denied that favour, placed under a kind of Anathema, or Excommunication sentence, of such it was not lawful, no not to eat; and so it must be expected in the anti-type, that all the heat of the Satanical impression, all the fire of zeal, the sentence to be sacrificed, and devoted, should fall as now it doth, on this Lamb-like, Dove-like creature, of a making not apt to provoke any man to rage, or quarrel, or any thing, but love of communion, and thanksgiving to God for such an inestimable donative.

Sect. 5. 4. That a Liturgy being found by the experience of all antient times, as a necessary hedge, and mound to preserve any profession of Religion, and worship of God in a National Church, it was to be expected that the enemy and his instruments, which can call destruction mercy, embroyling of our old Church the founding of a new (we know who hath told one of the Houses of this Parliament so, that they have laid a foundation of a Church among us, which if it signifie any thing, imports that there was no Church in this Kingdom before that Session) should also think the destroying of all Liturgy, the only way of security to Gods worship, the no-form being as fitly accommodated to a no-Church, as the no-hedge, no-wall to the Common, or desart, the no-inclosure to the no-plantation.

Sect. 6. 5. That the eradication of Episcopacy, first Voted, then Acted, by the Ordination of Presbyters, by Presbyters without any Bishop, which began to be practised in this Kingdom, about the end of the last year, was in any reason to be accounted proœmial and preparatory to some farther degree of ἀταξία, or disorder, and to be attended by the abolition of the Liturgy in the beginning of this new Year, (Episcopacy and Liturgy being like the συναποθνήσκοντες, among the Ægyptians, this Daughter to attend that Mother, as among the Barbarians when their Prince died, some of the noblest were constantly to bear him company out of the World, not to mourn for, but to dye with him.) A thing that the People of this Kingdom could never have been imagined low and servile enough to bear or endure, (I am sure within few Years they that sate at the stern of action conceived so, and therefore were fain by Declaration, to disavow all such intention of violence) till by such other assays and practices and experiments, they were found to be satis ad servitutem parati, sufficiently prepared for any thing that was servile, almost uncapable of the benefit or relief of a Jubilee, like the slave in Exodus, that would not go out free, but required to be bored thorow the Ear by his Master, to be a slave for ever.

Sect. 7. 6. That it is one profest act of Gods secret Wisdom, to make such tryals as this, of mens fidelity, and sense, and acknowledgment of his so long indulged favours, to see who will sincerely mourn for the departing of the glory from Israel, whether there be not some that (with the Captive Trojan Women in Homer, who wept so passionately at the fall of Patroclus, but made that publick loss the season to pour out their private griefs) are sensible of those sufferings of the Church only, wherein their interests are involved, and more nearly concerned; whether not some that count the invasion of the Revenues of the Church a Sacriledge, a Calamity, a sin unparallel'd, but think the abolition of the Liturgy unconsiderable, a venial sin and misery; whether that, wherein Gods glory is not joyned with any secular interest of our own, that which makes the separation betwixt Christ and Mammon, may be allowed any expression of our passion or zeal, i. e. in effect, whether we pour out one drop for Christ in all this deluge of tears, or whether like uncompounded self-lovers, whose only centre and principle of motion is our selves, we have passion to no spectacle but what the Looking-glass presents to us; with a Πάτροκλον πρόφασιν, making God the pretence, and apology, for that kindness which is paid and poured out unto another shrine. For of this there is no doubt, that of all the changes of late designed and offered to authority, there is none for which flesh and blood, passions and interests of men can allow so free a suffrage, so regretless a consent, as this of the abolition of Liturgy, (The sluggishness of ungisted men; the only thing that is affirmed to be concerned in, or to gain by it, is perfectly mistaken, as shall anon appear) and were there not a God in Heaven, the care of whose honour obliged us to endeavour the preservation of it, were not a future growth of Atheism and Prophaneness the feared consequent of such abolition, and notorious experience ready to avow the justness of this fear, I have reason to be confident that no Advocate would offer Libel, no Disputer put in exception, against this present Directory; I am privy to my own sence, that I should not, I have rather reason to impute it to my self, that the want of any such carnal motive to stir me up to this defence, might be the cause that I so long deferr'd to undertake it, and perhaps should have done so longer, if any man elſe had appear'd in that argument. And therefore unleſs it be ſtrange for men, when there be ſo many tempters abroad, to be permitted to temptations, ſure Gods yielding to this act of the importunity of Satan (who hath deſired in this new way to explore many) will not be ſtrange neither.

A VIEW OF THE New Directory; AND A VINDICATION of the Antient LITURGY of the CHURCH of ENGLAND.

CHAP. I.

Sect. 1. IN the Ordinance prefixt to the Directory (being almoſt wholly made up of forms of Repeal) there are only two things worthy of any ſtay or conſideration.

1. The motives upon which the Houſes of Parliament have been inclined to think it neceſſary to aboliſh the Book of Common-Prayer, and eſtabliſh the Directory, and thoſe are ſpecified to be three. Firſt the conſideration of the manifold inconveniences, that have riſen by the Book in this Kingdom. 2dly, The reſolution according to their Covenant, to reform Religion according to the Word of God, and the beſt reformed Churches. 3ly, Their having conſulted with the Learned, and Pious, and Reverend Divines to that purpoſe; From whence they conclude it neceſſary to aboliſh the Book.

Sect. 2. To this concluſion infer'd upon theſe premiſes, I ſhall confidently make this return, 1. That the concluſion is as illogical, as any that an Aſſembly of wiſe men have ever acknowledged themſelves to be guilty of, no one of the three Motives being ſeverally of ſtrength to bear ſuch a ſuperſtructure, and therefore all together being as unſufficient; for if the concluſion were only of the prudence, or expedience, of taking it away, ſomewhat might be pretended for that inference from the premiſes, ſuppoſing them true; But when 'tis of neceſſity (and that twice repeated, and ſo not caſually fallen from them) there muſt then be ſomewhat of precept divine in the premiſes to induce that neceſſity, or elſe it will never be induced: for I ſhall ſuppoſe it granted by them with whom I now diſpute, that nothing is neceſſary in the worſhip of God, but what God hath preſcribed, the neceſſity of precept being the only one that can have place in this matter, and the neceſſitas medii, being moſt improper to be here pleaded. But that there is no ſuch direct precept, ſo much as pretended to by thoſe three motives, it is clear, and as clear that all together do not amount to an interpretative precept. For that a lawful thing though preſt with manifold inconveniences ſhould be removed, is no where commanded the lawful Magiſtrate, but left to his prudence to judge whether there be not conveniences on the other ſide, which may counterballance thoſe inconveniences, much leſs is it commanded the inferiour Courts in deſpight of King and ſtanding Law; for what-ever of expedience, and ſo of prudence might be ſuppoſed to interpoſe, that may be ſufficient to incline a Wiſe Magiſtrate to make a Law, but not any elſe, either to uſurp the power of a Law-maker, or to do any thing contrary to eſtabliſh'd Laws; there being nothing that can juſtifie the leaſt diſobedience of Subjects to their Prince, or the Laws of the Kingdom, but that obligation to that one ſuperiour Law of that higher Prince, our Father which is in heaven, which being ſuppoſed, 'tis not all the reſolutions and Covenants in the World that can make it lawful for any ſo to diſobey, much leſs neceſſary, any more, than the ſaying Corban in the Goſpel, i. e. pretending a Vow will free the Child from the obligation of honouring or relieving his Father, or than Herods vow made it lawful to cut off the Head of John the Baptiſt: and then how far the conſultation with thoſe Divines may induce that neceſſity, will upon the ſame ground alſo be manifeſt, to any, eſpecially that ſhall remember, with what caution that Aſſembly was by the Houſes admitted to conſult, and with what reſtraints on them, and profeſſions, that they were call'd only to be adviſers, when they were required, but not to conclude any thing, either by a general concurrence, or by that of a Major part, and farther than the reaſons which they ſhould offer them, might prevail with them; to which purpoſe it was ſo ordered, that if any one man diſſented from the reſt of their Divines, his opinion and reaſons were as much to be repreſented to the Houſes, as that other of the reſt of the Aſſembly.

Sect. 3. By this I conceive it appears, that I have not quarrell'd cauſleſly with the Logick of this concluſion, the premiſes pretending at moſt but motives of expedience, and ſo as unable to infer a neceſſity, as a Topical argument is to demonſtrate, or a particular to induce an univerſal. That which I would in charity gueſs of this matter, as the cauſe of this miſtake, is my not groundleſs ſuſpicion, that when the Presbyterians had prepared the premiſes, the Independents framed the concluſion, the former of theſe joyning at laſt with the other in a reſolution of taking away the Book, but only on Prudential conſiderations, not out of Conſcience of the unlawfulneſs, and proportionably ſetting down thoſe reaſons but prudential reaſons, and the latter though reſtrained from putting conſcience into the premiſes, yet ſtealing it ſecretly into the concluſion, and ſo each deceiving and being deceived by each other. I am not ſure that my conjecture is right in this particular, yet have I reaſon to inſert it. 1. Becauſe I find in many places of the Directory certain foot-ſteps of this kind of compoſition and compliance, and mixture of thoſe ſo diſtant ſorts of Reformers. 2. Becauſe the Presbyterians which have formerly appeared both in other and in this Kingdom (whoſe copy theſe preſent reformers of that party have tranſcribed) have conſtantly avowed the lawfulneſs of Liturgy, and ſo cannot affirm any neceſſity of aboliſhing; witneſs Calvin himſelf (whom we ſhall anon have occaſion to produce) and the practice of his Church of Geneva, and nearer to our ſelves, witneſs thoſe four claſſes, which in Queen Elizabeths days, had ſet themſelves up in this Kingdom. Theſe had made complaint to the Lord Burleigh againſt our Liturgy, and entertained hopes of obtaining his favour in that buſineſs about the year 1585. he demanded of them, whether they deſired the taking away of all Liturgy, they anſwered, no; he then required them to make a better, ſuch as they ſhould deſire to have ſetled in the ſtead of this. The firſt Claſſis did accordingly frame a new one, ſomewhat according to the Geneva form. But this the ſecond Claſſis diſliked, and altered in 600. particulars; that again had the fate to be quarrel'd by the third Claſſis, and what the third reſolved on, by the fourth; and the diſſenting of thoſe Brethren, as the Diviſion of tongues at Babel, was a fair means to keep that Tower then from advancing any higher. Nay, even for our neighbours of Scotland themſelves, what ever ſome of them of late have thought fit to do, ſince they became Covenanters, (in animoſity perhaps and oppoſition to that terrible mormo, the Liturgy ſent to them from hence) we know that they were Presbyterians formerly, without ſeeing any neceſſity of aboliſhing Liturgy.

Sect. 4. 'Tis no news to tell you that Mr. Knox wrote a Liturgy, wherein there is frequent mention of the days of Common-Prayer, and among many other particulars, theſe enſuing, worthy your remark. 1. Plain undiſguiſed confeſſions of ſuch faults, which this age, though as notoriouſly guilty of as they, will not put into publick forms, or leave upon record againſt themſelves, as, That for the pleaſure and defence of the French they had violated their Faith, oft breaking the leagues of unity and concord, which their Kings and Governours had contracted with their Neighbours, and again, that for the maintenance of their friendſhip, they have not feared to break their ſolemned oaths made unto others. To which I might add, from another Confeſſion, that Whoredom and adultery, are but paſtimes of the fleſh, crafty dealing, deceit and oppreſſion is counted good conqueſt, &c. but that it would look too like a Satyre againſt ſome part of that Nation at this time thus to ſpecifie. Secondly, Their great ſenſe and acknowledgment of obligations from this Kingdom of England, and not only prayers for continuance of peace between England and Scotland, but even execrations on all (and ſo ſure on thoſe their ſucceſſors of this age) which ſhould continue or contribute ought toward the breaking of it, the words are theſe. Seeing when we by our power were altogether unable, &c. thou didſt move the hearts of our neighbours (of whom we had deſerved no ſuch favour) to take upon them the common burthen with us, and for our deliverance, not only to ſpend the lives of many, but alſo to hazard the eſtate and tranquillity of their Realm, Grant unto us that with ſuch reverence we may remember thy benefits received, that after this in our default, we never enter into hoſtility againſt the Nation of England, ſuffer us never to fall into that ingratitude and deteſtable unthankfulneß, that we ſhould ſeek the deſtruction and death of thoſe whom thou haſt made inſtruments to deliver us from the tyranny of mercileß ſtrangers, [the French.] Diſſipate thou the counſels of ſuch as deceitfully travail to ſtir the hearts of either Realm againſt the other, let their malicious practices be their own confuſion, and grant thou of thy mercy, that love, and concord, and tranquillity may continue, and encreaſe among the Inhabitants of this Iſland, even to the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. 3. That ſome of their forms of words are directly all one with ours, others with ſome ſmall additions retaining our forms, as in the Prayer for the King, and the Exhortation before the Sacrament, and the adjuration of the parties to be married will appear. 4. That on their day of Faſt (though that be with great care provided and ordered to be the Sunday twice together, quite contrary to the Canons and Cuſtom of the Primitive Church, yet) 'tis then appointed that the Miniſter with the People ſhall proſtrate themſelves, &c. a poſture of moſt humble bodily adoration, made to reproach thoſe who will not ſo much as recommend or direct any one kind of corporal worſhip or geſture of humiliation in all their Directory. The inlarging to this mention of particulars I acknowledge to be a digreſſion. But the preſenting to your knowledge or remembrance this Scottiſh Liturgy is not; By which ſuperadded to the former, and by much more which might from other Churches be added to that, it briefly appears what is or hath been the uniform judgment of the Presbyterians in this matter, directly contrary to the concluded neceſſity of aboliſhing.

Pag. 102. Ib. Pag. 163. Pag. 106.

Sect. 5. Which neceſſity on the other ſide the Independents have ſtill aſſerted, and for that and other ſuch differences have avowed their reſolutions to be the like ſcourges to them as they have been to us, profeſſing (and ad homines, unanſwerably proving the reaſonableneſs of it) to reform the Geneva reformation (as a firſt rude and ſo imperfect draught juſt creeping out of Popery there, and therefore not ſuppoſeable to be compleat at the firſt eſſay) as the Presbyterians upon the ſame pretences have deſign'd and practiſed on our Engliſh Reformation.

Sect. 6. All this I have ſaid againſt the concluded neceſſity in caſe, or on ſuppoſition that the premiſſes were true, but now I muſt add the falſeneſs of thoſe alſo, and then if the neceſſity will ſtill remain, I muſt pronounce it a piece of Stoical fatality, an inſuperable unruly neceſſity indeed, that will acknowledge no Laws, or bounds, or limits to confine it.

And

Sect. 7. And first for the manifold inconveniencies, if that phrase denote those severals which in the Preface to the Directory are suggested, I shall in due place make it appear,

1. That there are not such inconveniencies:

2. That greater than those may easily, and hereafter shall be produced against their Directory; and consequently, that, although true inconveniencies were supposed sufficient to infer a necessity of abolition, yet such only pretended names of inconveniency, such Chimæra's and Mormo's (especially over-ballanced with real ones in the other scale) would be abundantly insufficient to do it. But if the manifold inconveniencies have a larger prospect to refer to, we shall conclude it very uncharitable not to mention those, which might possibly have had the same effect with us as with them, convinced us also to be their Proselytes, and in the mean time very unjust to put so uncertain an equivocal phrase into a Law, which we have no Criterion, or nomenclature to interpret; but beyond all, very imprudent to mention and lay weight on such slight and such no inconveniencies afterward specified, when others might have been produced better able to bear the envy of the accusation.

Sect. 8. As for your resolution, if it went no higher than the Covenant, and that but to reform Religion, according to the Word of God, and example of the best reformed Churches, I am sure it cannot oblige, or so much as incline you to take away that Book, there being nothing in it, 1. Contrary to design of reformation, 2. Contrary to the Word of God, or, 3. Contrary to the example of the best reformed Churches.

Not 1. To Reformation, for Reformation is as contrary to abolition of what should be reformed, as cure to killing; and if it be replyed, that the abolition of Liturgy, as unlawful, may be necessary to the reforming of Religion, I shall yield to that reply on that supposition, but then withal add, that Liturgy must first be proved unlawful, and that testified from divine infallible principles; which because it is not thorow this whole Book so much as pretended, both that and the second suggestion from the word of God must necessarily be disclaimed, and then the example of the best Reformed Churches will soon follow, not only because all other Reformed Churches ordinarily known by that Title, have some kind of Liturgy, and that is as contrary to abolition, as the continuing of ours without any change, but because no reformation is to be preferr'd before that which cuts off no more than is necessary to be cut off, and which produces the Scripture Rule, the sword of the Spirit, for all such amputations; and therefore the Church of England, as it stands established by Law is avowable against all the Calumniators in the World, to be the best and most exemplary reformed; so far, that if I did not guess at the sence of the Covenant more by the temper than words of the Covenanters, I should think all men, that have Covenanted to reform after the example of the best reformed Churches, indispensably obliged to conform to the King-Edward, or Queen-Elizabeth-English Reformation, the most regular perfect pattern that Europe yieldeth.

Sect. 9. As for the truth of the last affirmation that they have consulted with the Divines called together to that purpose; although I have no reason to doubt of it, yet this I know, that very many of the learned'st there present, were, immediately before their imbarking in that imployment, otherwise minded, and that therefore so suddain an universal change of minds savours either of some strong charm, or strange inconstancy, and I shall make bold to ask this Question of that whole number of Divines, whether I should do them wrong in affirming, that there yet are not ten Divines in that number that think all Liturgy unlawful, and consequently that it was necessary (not to reform, but) to abolish our Book, which is the stile of the Ordinance. If this challenge of mine may not be answer'd with a plain punctual subscription of so many to the condemnation of all Liturgy as unlawful, I am sure this is an Argument ad homines, unanswerable. And the ground of my challenge, and of my specifying that number, is the relation we have oft had of the but seven dissenting Brethren, i. e. the but so many of the Independent Party among them, which upon my former ground I now suppose the only mortal enemies to all Liturgy. But if I am mistaken, and this be the common sence of those Assemblers, then have I reason to add to my former complaints this other of their so over cautious expressions, which through this whole Book hath not once intimated either the whole or any part to be unlawful, but only quarrel'd the inconveniencies, which suppose it otherwise to be lawful.

Sect. 10. And thus much might suffice of the first observable in the Ordinance, the concluding this abolition to be necessary. But because I would foresee and prevent all possible rejoynder, and because I would here interpose some considerations which would otherwise take up a larger place, I shall suppose the Presbyterians may have another notion of the word Necessary, of a lower importance than this under which we have hitherto proceeded against them (though still the Independents, whose judgment is not wont to be despised in the framing of Ordinances, cannot be imagined to take it in any other) and that is, that it shall signifie only a Political necessity, or that which is necessary if not to the being, yet to the well-being, i. e. to the Peace and prosperity of this Kingdom. Now because there be two parts of every Christian Kingdom, a State and a Church, and so two branches of Policy, Civil and Ecclesiastical, I shall not undertake to be so far Master of their sence, as to pitch upon either as that wherein they affirm this abolition necessary, but say somewhat to both, and to shew that it is not necessary in either sence of Political necessity.

Sect. 11. And first that the abolition of Liturgy cannot have so much as a benign influence on the State, much less be necessary to the prosperity of it, I shall infer only by this vulgar aphorism, that any notable or * grand mutation, if from some higher principle it appear not necessary to be made, will be necessary not to be made, at least not to be made συμφυῶς ἅπαν, altogether, but only by degrees and prudent dispensings. I shall not any farther enlarge on so plain a theme, than to mention one proportion or resemblance of this truth in the natural body observed by the Physicians in the cure of an hydropical patient, who, when the body lies covered with such a deluge of water, that it proves necessary to make some fluce to let out the burthenous superfluity, do not yet proceed by any loose way of letting out all at once, because the violent effluvium, or pouring out of Spirits constantly consequent to that, would certainly destroy the Patient, and endanger him on dry ground, as much or more, than in the midst of those waters; but the method is a παρακέντησις, the making so small a hole hole in the skin, that ſhall drain the body by inſenſible degrees by drawing out a little at once, and never above a pint at a time, though many gallons are deſigned to paſs by this way of evacuation. I ſhall add no more to this reſemblance, but what * Apollonius Tyaneus is obſerved to have ſaid, χαλεπὸν μεταβαλεῖν δημὸν εἰς τὸ ἀθρόως σῶφρον, 'tis dangerous to work upon the people too ſuddain and violent reformations, let them be wrought by degrees, and they may proſper; and, to our point in hand, that the total violent illegal abolition of Liturgy in a ſetled Church, is certainly of this nature, and being ſuperadded to the change of the Government into a Form quite contrary to that which for 1600. years hath prevailed in the univerſal Church of Chriſt, there ſetled by the Apoſtles, may be allow'd the ſtile of inſignis mutatio, a mutation of ſome conſiderable importance to a Chriſtian ſtate, which being admitted altogether without any preparative alleviating ſteps, will (by the rapid ſuddain motion at leaſt, if there were nothing elſe) have a dangerous influence upon the whole body, of which the cunningeſt diviner cannot at this diſtance foreſee the effects, or prevent the emergent miſchiefs which ſucceeding time may diſcover. If it be ſaid, that this abolition is now neceſſary to conclude the preſent War, and that be affirmed to be the Politick neceſſity here meant, I anſwer, that if it were able to do that, I ſhould acknowledge it the ſtrongeſt argument that could be thought on to prove it Politically neceſſary, this War being ſo unneceſſarily deſtructive, and any thing that could rid us of that, ſo ſtrongly convenient, that if Conſcience would permit the uſe of it, I ſhould allow it the title of neceſſary. But to make ſhort of this, no man can believe that theſe Armies were raiſed or continued to ſubdue the Common-Prayer-Book, for, beſides that there was a time when 'twas found neceſſary for the Houſes to declare, that they had no deſign to take away that Book, for fear the People ſhould be diſobliged by it, and another when the Earl of Eſſex his Army expreſt ſome kindneſs to it; 'Tis now confeſt by the pretenders of both perſwaſions, Presbyterians and Independents, one that they do not, the other that they muſt not take up Arms for Religion, and ſo that kind of political neceſſity of aboliſhing the Book is, and by themſelves muſt be diſclaimed alſo.

* σμικρῶν ἔνεκα παρεγχειρήσεων ὁλοκλήρως καταδάλλεσθαι τὰ εἰωθότα γράμματα, ὅμοιον τῷ τὰ ὑπὸ τῶν Ἀθηναίων βυλομένῳ μετακινεῖν ἤδη τὸ θεμέλιον, ὅπου τὰ δεσμὰ τῆς κιβωτοῦ ἔκειτο σμικρὰν ποιήσειν. Themist. Παραφ. τῶν ὑς. Ἀναλυτ. l. 1.

* Philoſtr. l. 5. c. 13. p. 149.

Now for the ſecond branch of this neceſſity, that which is in order to Eccleſiaſtical or Church-policy, we ſhall take liberty in this place to conſider this matter at large, becauſe it may perhaps ſave us from pains hereafter, and becauſe their pretending of this neceſſity of doing what they do, is a tentation, if not a challenge to us to do ſo, and then we ſhall leave it to the Reader to judge what grounds may hence be fetcht for this pretended neceſſity. And this muſt be done by laying together the ſeveral things that are in our Liturgy, and are purpoſely left out in the Directory, and ſo are as it were the Characteriſtical note by which the Directory is by the Aſſemblers deſigned to differ from our Liturgy, as ſo much food from poiſon, Chriſtian from Antichriſtian (if Neceſſity be properly taken) or (if improperly for that which is neceſſary only to the well-being) as a more perfect and more profitable, from that which, if it be ſo at all, is not either (in their opinion) in ſo high a degree. Sect. 12.

Now the ſeverals of our Liturgie which are purpoſely avoided in this Directory, I have obſerv'd to be principally theſe: Of thoſe that are more extrinſecal, ſix. Sect. 13.

1. The preſcribing of Forms, or Liturgy it ſelf.
2. Outward or bodily worſhip.
3. Uniformity in performing God's ſervice.
4. The Peoples bearing ſome part in the ſervice.
5. The dividing the Prayers into ſeveral Collects, and not putting them all into one continued Prayer.
6. The ceremonies of kneeling in the Communion, of Croſs in Baptiſm, of Ring in Marriage, &c.

Then of thoſe that are intrinſecal, and parts of the Service.

1. The Abſolution, in the beginning of the Service next after the Confeſſion, and before the Communion, and in the Viſitation of the ſick.
2. The Hymns, the Introite, the Te Deum, &c.
3. The uſe of the Doxology, or giving glory to God.
4. The Confeſſion of Faith in the Creeds.
5. The frequent repeating of the Lords Prayer, and the Prayers for the King.
6. The obſervation of divers Feaſts commemorative, not only of Chriſt, but of Saints departed, and aſſigning Services, Leſſons, Epiſtles, and Goſpels, and Collects to them.
7. The reading the Commandments, and the Prayers belonging to that Service.
8. The Order of the Offertory.
9. Private Baptiſm.
10. A preſcript form of Catechiſm.
11. Confirmation.
12. The ſolemnities of burying the Dead.
13. Thanksgiving after Child-birth.
14. Communion of the ſick.
15. The Service containing the Commination.
16. The obſervation of Lent and the Rogation, and I would add alſo of the Ember-weeks.

This may ſeem too looſe a task, to enlarge on each of theſe, and yet we are in juſtice to this Book, and for an anſwer to the pretended Neceſſity of aboliſhing it, obliged to do ſo, as briefly as it may, only ſo far as may ſerve to give the Reader a view of the lawfulneſs at leaſt, and withal of the uſefulneſs of each of theſe, and conſequently of the no-appearance of reaſon why it ſhould be thought neceſſary to aboliſh any one of them, much leſs of all the reſt for that ones ſake.

And firſt for the preſcribing of Forms of Prayer, or Liturgy it ſelf, we ſhall refer it to judgment whether it be neceſſary in Eccleſiaſtical Policy, i. e. ſtrongly conducing to the benefit and edification of a Church to interdict or baniſh it out of the Kingdom, when we have propoſed theſe few things concerning it. 1. The example of God himſelf and holy men in the Old Teſtament, preſcribing ſet Forms of bleſſing the People, to be uſed daily by Aaron and his Sons, Numb. 6. 23. The Lord bleſs thee and keep thee, &c. ſet Forms for the People to uſe themſelves, Deut. 26. 3, 5. Thou ſhalt ſay be- Sect. 14.

fore the Lord, A Syrian, &c. as alſo at the going out of their Armies, Deut. 20. 3. and of Thankſgiving, Exod. 15. 1. made by Moſes, and it ſeems learnt by heart by all the people; and in the ſame words uſed again by Miriam, verſe 21. and ſo it appears, Iſa. 38. 20. that Hezekiah did not only form a ſet Thankſgiving, but uſed it all the days of his life, and the ſame Hezekiah, 2 Chron. 29. 30. in his thankſgiving commanded the Levites alſo to ſing praiſes to God with the words of David and Aſaph, i. e. Forms already prepared to his hand by thoſe ſacred Pen-men. So Jer. 33. 11. the Form of praiſing God is mentioned out of the Pſalm, [For the Lord is gracious, and his mercy endureth for ever:] and that thoſe very words taken out of Pſalm 136. were ſung by the Jews at their returning from captivity, appears Ezr. 3. 11.

Sect. 15. 2. The practice of the Jews ſince Ezra's time conſtantly uſing ſet Forms of Prayer by way of Liturgy; For this I ſhall produce no other proof than the teſtimony of a learned Member of their Aſſembly, Mr. Selden in his notes on Eutychius, vouching all his affirmations out of the antient Records of the cuſtoms of the Jewiſh Nation, from whom, that they may be of authority with you, I ſhall tranſcribe theſe ſeverals, That certain forms of praying which were to be uſed by every one daily by Law or received cuſtome, were inſtituted by Ezra and his houſe, i.e. his conſiſtory. That the Jews about the end of the Babyloniſh Captivity had their antient manners as well as language ſo depraved, that without a Maſter they either were not able to pray as they ought, or had not confidence to do ſo. And therefore that for the future, they might not recede either in the matter of their Prayers (through corruption) or expreſſion (through ignorance) from that form of Piety commanded them by God, this remedy was applyed by the men of the great Synagogue, Ezra and his 120 Collegues, (where by the way is obſervable one ſpecial uſe and benefit of ſet Forms, not only to provide for the ignorant, but to be an hedge to the true Religion, to keep out all mixtures or corruptions out of a Church; To which purpoſe alſo the Councils in the Chriſtian Church have deſigned ſeveral parts which we ſtill retain in our Liturgy, a real and a valuable benefit, if it were conſidered.) That of this kind there were 18 Prayers or Benedictions, call'd in the Gemara compoſed or appointed Prayers. That the three firſt of theſe, and the three laſt reſpected the glory of God, the twelve other intermediate, were ſpent on thoſe prime things that were neceſſary either to the whole People, or every particular man; (Proportionable to which perhaps it is, that our Saviour who accommodated moſt inſtitutions of his, Baptiſm and his laſt Supper, &c. to the cuſtoms of the Church, did alſo deſign his Prayer, as it is ſet down in Matthew, though not according to the number of the Jewiſh prayers, yet to the general matter and form of them, the three firſt branches of it, and the concluſion, which may paſs for three branches more, referring to the glory of God, and the other intermediate to our private and publick wants.) That theſe Prayers were to be learnt by every man, that the Prayers of the unskilful might be as perfect as of the moſt eloquent. That every act of Praying was begun with Pſal. 51. 15. O Lord open thou our lips, and our mouth ſhall ſhew forth thy praiſe (the very form of words ſtill retain'd in Saint James his Liturgy, and in ours before the Introite) and concluded with Pſalm 31. 6. Into thy hands, &c. That of theſe 18 Prayers no one was to be omitted, that if any other were added, they were counted of like free-will-offerings, as the other were anſwerable to the preſcribed, and were called by that name. That the additions might be made only in thoſe Prayers which concern their own wants, becauſe thoſe were capable of variation, but not to thoſe that concern'd God. That on Sabbath and Feaſt-days no man might uſe a voluntary Prayer; That about the time of the Jews deſtruction, Gamaliel and his Sanhedrin added a nineteenth Prayer, and after him others, ſo that at length the daily ſervice grew to an hundred Prayers. That it is likely that the Pagans came to uſe their ſet Forms in their Sacrifices alſo, (and perhaps the Mahumedans too) by the example of the Jewiſh Church, for which he there refers the Reader to many Books of the Learned. I conceive the authority of this Gentleman hath not been deſpiſed by the Houſe of Commons, and the Aſſemblers (when it hath chanced to agree with their deſigns or intereſts) and therefore I have thus far, as an Argument ad homines, inſiſted on it. And becauſe the opinion of Proteſtants of other Churches is acknowledged to be of ſome authority with theſe Aſſemblers, I ſhall to this head of the Jewiſh Liturgies make uſe of one teſtimony more, hoping that it may by that means be received into deeper conſideration, than if I ſpake only from my own obſervations. 'Tis the obſervation of a Noble and learned French Proteſtant, that the Apoſtles were ſent, not to deſtroy, but eſtabliſh that pure worſhip or ſervice of God, which was in the Synagogues of the Jews, which they therefore retained (after Chriſts example) as far as did not contradict the œconomy or diſpenſation of things under Chriſt: and therefore though they changed the Sacrifices, and the Sabbath (Chriſt being the ſubſtance adumbrated by one, and the Lords day being appointed to take the place of the other) yet the ſervice it ſelf in other particulars they did continue. The grounds of this obſervation you have in the Scripture: Chriſt himſelf goes into their Synagogues, and the Apoſtles ordinarily at the Hours of Prayer, and certainly joyned with them in their ſervice, as far as agreed with the preſent ſtate. And by this means ſome ſympathy hath been obſervable between the Jewiſh and Chriſtian ſervices. This is clear by the Jewiſh forms: for ſome of which, and for the rites of uſing them, we are beholden to a moſt excellent man (a Proteſtant alſo) P. Fagius, and to ſome others ſince, who have made uſe of his collections. The firſt part of their ſervice was a Confeſſion of the ſins of their people (which was always ſolemnly uſed in their ſacrifices) a rule for which we have in the Sacred Writers, and in the Jewiſh Books the very verba concepta, the ſet conſtant forms mentioned by that Worthy on the Targum, Lev. 16. This they called confeſſio הרברים, or verbalis. After that followed ſome Pſalms of David, &c. which were ſung the whole Pſalms together, as alſo ſome תורות Hymns or givings of thanks, which, ſay the Jews, were inſtituted by Eſdras, who after the Babyloniſh Captivity reſtored the ſervice of God. After that they had their Leſſons out of the Law, which were divided into 54. Sedarim, or Paraſchoth, i. e. Sections, as alſo the Leſſons of the Prophets, diſtributed into as many haphtaroth, or Aperturæ, or, as ſome render it, Dimiſſiones, ſo divided that there may be one for every Sabbath in an Intercalary year. Then again was the whole action concluded with Prayer, viz. a general Prayer for the neceſſities of the Church and State, publick and private, and in that many particulars. After theſe Prayers the Archiſynagogus bleſſed the People, and diſmiſſed them. Save only that on any great feſtival ſolemnity, the Paſſeover, &c. there followed Benedictions particular to the occaſion, which on the Paſſeover were pronounced by the mouth of the Maſter of the Family; a form of which Miſerere Domine, &c. we have in P. Fagius on the Targum, Deut. 8.

Some veſtigia of this practice of theirs, in each part, we have in the New Teſtament: Firſt, of their confeſſion (ſaith that Noble learned man) Matth. 3. 6. Mark 1. 5. Acts 13. 38. Secondly, of their leſſons, Acts 5. 21. Acts 13. 14. Luke 4. 18. Thirdly, of their Pſalmodies and Hymns, Eph. 5. Col. 3. where 'tis obſervable that the three words of Greek uſed by the Apoſtle are the very ſame which are uſed by the Septuagint to render the three Hebrew words uſed in the Old Teſtament, and ſo refer particularly to the practice of the Jews. Fourthly, of their prayer for neceſſaries (ſaith he) in the Lords Prayer, Matth. 6. which, with him, ſome other very learned men conceive to have had ſpecial reference to the formula ſolennes then among the Jews: And that it may not be thought ſtrange, I ſhall give you ſome account of it out of their ancient Hebrew Euchologues. In Seder Tephilloth Luſitan. we have theſe words, Pater noſter qui es in cœlis fac nobis gratiam, Our Father which art in Heaven------In Muſar. 49. 1. theſe, Deus noſter qui in cœlo unicus es, ſtabiliatur nomen tuum ſemper, regnum tuum regnet ſuper nos, in ſæculum & æternum, ſanctificetur autem nomen tuum ſuper opera noſtra. Our God who art the only one in heaven, thy name be always eſtabliſhed, thy kingdom reign over us for ever and ever, thy name be ſanctified over our works. Again in Seder Tephill. Luſitan. p. 115. Nomen tuum Domine Deus noſter ſanctificetur, & memoria tua glorificetur in cœlo deſuper, & ſuper terram inferné. Thy name O Lord our God be hallowed, and thy memorial glorified in heaven above, and upon the earth beneath. In the Comment on Pirke Aboth f. 24. theſe, Pii priores dicebant, Remitte & condona omnibus iis qui vexant me, The pious men of old ſaid, Remit and pardon all them who vex me. Again in Seder Tephill. Ne inducas me in tentationem,------& remove à me * figmentum malum, Lead me not into temptation,------and remove from me every evil machination. Again in Muſar. 9. 12. Ne inducas nos in manus peccati, neque in manus tentationis, ſed libera nos ab occurſu malo, Lead us not into the hands of ſin, nor into the hands of temptation, but deliver us from all evil that may meet us. And laſtly in Seder Tephill, p. 222. Quia tuum eſt regnum, & in ſæcula ſæculorum regnabis gloriosè, For thine is the Kingdom, and thou ſhalt reign glorioufly for ever and ever. Almoſt every Petition, together with the exordium and concluſion of that Prayer. Fifthly, of their Prayer for the Common-wealth, and all that were in place of power over them, you have an acknowledgment, 1 Tim. 2. 1. which words there in Saint Paul ('twas Saint Auguſtines affirmation) were nominatim intelligenda de ſolennibus Eccleſiaſtici officii precibus, &c.

* Qu.

For the practice of the firſt * Chriſtians, how agreeable it was to this practice of the Jews, will be eaſily diſcerned. Saint Baſil in the deſcription of a Clergyman officiating, ad Cler. Cæſar. Ep. 63. They go, ſaith he, to the houſe of Prayer, and after the confeſſion, they prepare for the ψαλμῳδία, ſinging of Pſalms, (ſpeaking of the firſt Apoſtolical times; for now, ſaith he, we ſing the Pſalms in parts, or by turns: It ſeems they had not done ſo before, but all together) and by the intermixing of prayers, and interchanges or variety of Pſalms and Hymns, they overcome or ſpend a great part of the Night (ſpeaking of the antelucani conventus) and as ſoon as the Day breaks, they offer to God the Pſalm of Confeſſion, and ſo diſmiſs the Aſſembly. Beſides the Leſſons out of the Old Teſtament, the Chriſtians (you will believe) added alſo others out of the New; and (ſaith Morney) ejus particulam aliquam Antiſtes interpretari ſolitus. After Sermon they proceeded to the celebration of the Euchariſt (parallel to their cuſtoms on the great feſtivities of the Paſſeover, &c.) In it 1. the words of the Inſtitution were recited, with a thankſgiving or bleſſing, (as in Juſtin Martyr 'tis deſcribed;) then the Bread and Wine (before received by the offertory of the people) was diſtributed to the people; after which a Pſalm was ſung, &c. Before the Sacrament (ſaith Saint Ambroſe) was the Prayer for Kings, Et hæc Regula Eccleſiaſtica tradita à Magiſtro Gentilium, ſaith he, De Sacra. l. 4. c. 4. and of the uſe of that alſo Tertul. is expreſs, Apol. c. 39. After the Lords Supper the τρισάγιον or Doxology was taken up in imitation of Chriſt, who after Supper ſung an Hymn with his Diſciples, not diſdaining to make uſe of the antient Jewiſh Cuſtom. One teſtimony more I ſhall only add out of Saint Cyprian, de Orat. Dom. Ser. 8. Publica nobis eſt & communis Oratio----[Publick Common-Prayer] pro toto populo oramus, for all the people, (as among the Jews for all Iſrael; and we for the whole Church, eſpecially for Kings.) And that men may mind nothing but that their preſent employment; Ideo ſacerdos præfatione parat fratrum mentes, dicendo, Surſum corda, ut dum reſpondet plebs, Habemus ad Dominum, moneatur nil ſe niſi Dominum cogitare debere. I ſhall trouble the Reader no longer than to deſire that the Liturgy lately uſed in this Church may be compared with the ſeverals here mentioned, from the Jews firſt; and after, the Apoſtolical Chriſtians: and as you will find the general form exactly continued in Confeſſion, Pſalms, Leſſons, Hymns, Prayers for all the Church, eſpecially for Kings, &c. (and no reaſon to doubt but that ſometimes the very words were continued alſo; aſſuredly ſet Forms then, as now, as appears by the Surſum Corda, and Habemus ad Dominum; Lift up your hearts, We lift them up unto the Lord.) So it will be acknowledged not without reaſon, that I have thought fit to draw one argument of many from the practice of the Jews; to which the other two of the Mahometans and Heathens come in ex naturali ſequela, but as rivulets and derivations from the Fountain.

* Primi Chriſtiani huic officio ſe accomodarunt. Morn de Miſſ. l. 1. c. 4.

3. The not only practice, but precept of Chriſt in the New Teſtament, who did not only uſe himſelf a ſet form of words in Prayer, three times together uſing the ſame words, Matth. 26. 44. and after Supper ſung a ſet cuſtomary Hymn (for otherwiſe how could the Diſciples have joined with him ὑμνήσαντες) and that, ſay the Learned, the ſame that the Jews ſolemnly uſed to ſing after eating the Lamb, from the hundred and thirteenth to the hundred and eighteenth Pſalm, which was called הלל the hymn, and ברכת שיר a metrical ſong of benediction; and upon the Croſs in the ſame manner, praying in the Pſalmiſts words, only changed to the Syriack dialect, which was then the vulgar: but alſo commanded the uſe of thoſe very words of his perfect form, which it ſeems he meant not only as a pattern, but a form it ſelf (as the Standard weight is not only the meaſure of all weights, but may it ſelf be uſed) Luc. 11. 2. When you pray, ſay, Our Father, &c. And for the ſame form ſet down Matt. 6. with a Preface of ὕτως οὖν προσεύχεσθε, After this manner therefore pray ye: that the word ὕτως Sect. 16.

there (which we render after this manner) doth not excuſe us from the uſe of that very prayer, will appear by the parallel phraſe in another Author, (which though Apocryphal, will be ſufficient to prove the ſignification of a word) the Prayer of the three Children annext in the Greek to Dan. 3. and beginning thus, καὶ ηὐξατο Ἀζαρίας προσεύξατο οὕτως, and Azarias prayed thus, which certainly ſignifies the mind of the Author to be, that that form which he there ſets down was uſed by Azarias: and then by analogie, if οὕτως προσεύξατο, he prayed thus, or, after this manner] ſignifie, he uſed this form of words, as truly as afterwards, ver. 27. ἐδόξαζον λέγοντες, they praiſed ſaying] doth ſignifie, that they uſed that very form of praiſe; then οὕτως προσεύχεσθε in the Imperative, pray thus, in St. Matt. will be a command to uſe this form immediately adjoyned, as much as in St. Luke, ὅταν προσεύχησθε, λέγετε, When you pray, ſay, which precept no man can with a good conſcience ever obey, that holds all ſet forms neceſſary to be caſt out of the Church.

Sect. 17. 4. The practice, not only of St. John the Baptiſt, who taught his Diſciples to pray, Luke 11.1. (which occaſioned Chriſts Diſciples to demand, and him to give them a form of prayer) but eſpecially of the Apoſtles, of which we find intimations, 1 Cor. 14.26. When you come together, every one of you hath a Pſalm, which ſure refers to ſome of the Pſalms of David or Aſaph, uſed then ordinarily in their Devotions, (and that, as even now I ſaid, authorized by the example of Chriſt himſelf upon the Croſs, who it is thought, repeated the whole 22. Pſalm, it is certain, the firſt Verſe of it, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me?) and ſo certainly a ſet form, and that of Prayer too (of which Thankſgivings and Praiſes are a part.) But becauſe every one had his ſeveral Pſalm, it is therefore reprehended by the Apoſtle as tending to confuſion; and by that conſequence, St. Pauls judgment is thence deducible for the joyning of all in the ſame form, as being the only courſe tending to Edification, in the end of that verſe: and then ſure 'twould be hard, that that which the Apoſtle conceived the only courſe for Edifying, ſhould now be neceſſary to be turned out of the Church, as contrary to edification. Farther yet, 'tis clear by Text, that the Apoſtles when they met together to holy duties (ſuch are Faſting, Prayer, receiving the Sacrament) continued very long time, ſometimes a whole day together. Now it being ſufficiently known that thoſe Apoſtles, and all that were by the Holy Ghoſt ſet apart for the planting of the Church, had the gift of Miracles, not every one all, but one one, another another; It is St. Chryſoſtoms obſervation that among theſe gifts there was in thoſe firſt times χάρισμα εὐχῆς, the gift of Prayer, (that gift a Miracle, as the gift of Healing, Propheſying, &c.) that this was beſtowed εἰς ἕνα τινα, upon ſome one, who did pray for the reſt, and ask thoſe things which were uſeful for them, and teach others how to pray. Some of theſe ſpecial prayers thus conceived and moſt frequently uſed by them, which were fit for the common perpetual uſes of all Chriſtians, were, no queſtion, received, and kept by thoſe whom they thus taught, and are they which the Antients mean by the Liturgie of St. James, which is ſtill uſed (or ſome other in the * diſguiſe of them) by the Greek Church on ſolemn days. Theſe alſo being of the longeſt for every days uſe, St. Baſil is ſaid to have ſhortned, and his again St. Chryſoſtome: how certain theſe reports are, I ſhall not take upon me to affirm; but only add, 1. that the Greek Church, who are moſt likely to know the truth of it by their records, do retain all theſe three Liturgies, and would loudly laugh at any man that ſhould make doubt whether St. James, St. Baſil and St. Chryſoſtome were not the Authors of them. 2. That the judgment of that Church (if they are deceived alſo, and may not be thought worthy to be heeded by our Aſſemblers) is yet an argument of great authority to any prudent man, if not that theſe Liturgies were purely the ſame with thoſe which were written by that Apoſtle, and thoſe holy men, yet that there were ſuch things as Liturgies of their Penning. The like might be added of that ſhort form of St. Peters, which alone they ſay was uſed in the Roman Church for a great while, till after by ſome Popes it was augmented; and the ſame of St. Marks Liturgie. For when thoſe extraordinary χαρίσματα ceaſed, it is clear, there was need of ſomewhat elſe to ſupply that place, and that would not be in any reaſon to let every man pray as he would (for that was the thing for the preventing of which, and the unhappineſſes conſequent to it, the χάρισμα εὐχῆς ſpecial gift of Prayer had before been given, which, but in that reſpect, had not before been uſeful) but ſet prepared forms for the daily conſtant wants, and thoſe provided by the Governours of the Church, Apoſtolical men, which had ſo benefited under the prayers of thoſe that had the χάρισμα, or perhaps remembred ſome forms of theirs, at leaſt the method and manner uſed by them, that their forms might well deſerve to be heeded by, and ſo continue in the Church; at leaſt, were ſure to be fitter for the turn than the unpremeditated effuſions of thoſe, which now had not the extraordinary χάρισμα, and of all whom it cannot be preſumed that they have the ordinary wiſdom to pray always as they ought. To deſcend more particularly in the retail, It is moſt clear that the Dominus vobiſcum, The Lord be with you] is a moſt ancient form, uſed both in the Greek and Latine Liturgies, taken out of 2 Theſ. 3. 16. and uſed by Chriſtians inſtead of the bleſſing of the Prieſt, Num. 6. 22. And I am ſure St. Auguſtine ſpeaking of ſome forms retained in the Church, and ſtill to be found in our Liturgie, particularly that of Surſum corda, Lift up your hearts,---ſaith, that they are verba ab ipſis Apoſtolorum temporibus petita, words fetcht from the times of the Apoſtles, which ſuppoſes that they did uſe ſuch forms; and for the whole form of Conſecration, ſuch as it was in St. Baſils days, it was, ſaith he, Apoſtolica traditionis, delivered down from the Apoſtles, l. de Sp. Sancto. And for that former particular mentioned by St. Auguſtine, it is agreeable to the conſtitutions of the Apoſtles, l. 8. c. 16. (which collection if it be not ſo ancient as it pretends, doth yet imitate Apoſtolical antiquity) and ſo in St. James, and St. Baſils, and Chryſoſtomes Liturgie in the ſame words with our Book as far as to the word [bounden] And for that which follows, Therefore with Angels----there is little queſtion but it is the very form which is called by the Greeks χερουβικὸς, by the Latines, Præparatio, by Amalarius, Hymnus refertus gratiarum actione & laudibus Angelorum, by Walafridus Strabo, Præfatio actionis, viz. of the Sacrament, as 'tis ſtill in our Church, by Iſidore, hymnatio præcedens confirmationem Sacramenti, by Cyril of Jeruſalem, ὑμνῳδία, ἀινολογία, δοξολογία ἐκ τῶν Σεραφὶμ (which as it was there placed after the εὐχαριστία, i. e. the giving of thanks (not the Sacrament) as it is with us after the [Let us give thanks---] ſo is it before the Prayer of Conſecration, as with us alſo) by the Author under the title of Dionyſ. Ar. ὑμνολογία and καθολικὴ ὑμνῳδία, and by Juſtin Mart. that αἴνος and δόξα, which, ſaith he, precede the Euchariſt or Conſecration. And 'tis obſervable that Cyril mentioning it, ſaith, it was παραδοθεῖσαν ὑμῖν, deliver'd to us, which words being taken in the ſence of the antients, note it to be delivered from the Apoſtles or Apoſtolical men, (not as ſome perhaps may miſtake the words in the Greek, παραδοθῆσαν ἡμῖν ἐκ τῶν Σεραφὶμ ἀπολογίαν ταύτην λέγομεν, as if 'twere delivered us by the Seraphim, for that were more than an Apoſtolical, an Angelical tradition, but an hymn taking in the Angels to joyn in lauds with us, as I told you out of Amalarius, hymnus refertus laudibus Angelorum, and this hymn delivered down to us by our Anceſtors at leaſt, of which number Cyril being ſo antient himſelf could mean little leſs than the Apoſtles, or Apoſtolical men. And that this is the very form now uſed by us, is probable by the words that follow in Cyril, ὅταν κοινωνοὶ τῆς ὑμνῳδίας ταύτης ὑπερκοσμίους γινώμεθα στρατιάς that we may joyn with the heavenly Hoſt in our ſinging of hymns, (as we [with all the company of heaven, we praiſe---] ἵνα ἁγιάσαντες ἑαυτοὺς διὰ τῶν πνευματικῶν τύπων ὕμνων παρακαλῶμεν τὸν φιλάνθρωπον θεὸν τὸ ἅγιον πνεῦμα ἐξαποστεῖλαι ἐπὶ τὰ προκείμενα, ἵνα ποιήσῃ τὸν μὲν ἄρτον σῶμα χριστοῦ, τὸν δὲ οἶνον αἷμα Χριστοῦ, that having ſanctified our ſelves by theſe ſpiritual hymns, we may beſeech our merciful God to ſend out his holy Spirit upon what is ſet before us, that he may conſecrate the bread to be the body of Chriſt, (i. e. ſanctifie it to that ſacramental uſe, as ποιεῖν, and conficere corpus Domini ſignifies) and the wine to be his bloud. To which purpoſe 'tis obſervable, that when the Heathen ſcoffer Lucian lets fall in his φιλοπατρ. (in the perſon of Triephon who repreſents the Chriſtian) τὴν ἀρχὴν ἀπὸ πατρὸς ἀρξάμενος, καὶ πολυώνυμον ὠδὴν εἰς τέλος ἐπιθείς, beginning his form of prayer from the Father, and adding at the end the famous Ode or Song; by theſe two Rigaltius a learned Critick on Tertullian conceives the Lords prayer and the χερουβικὰς or this [Therefore with Angels---] to be underſtood. But I muſt confeſs my opinion rather to be, that as the former noted by [beginning from the Father] is queſtionleſs the Pater Noſter, with which both now and anciently the Communion Service was begun; ſo by the ſecond is meant that hymn of ours, Glory be to God on high---we praiſe thee, we bleſs thee---] with which that ſervice ends (having none but the benediction after it) which being ſo powerful an importunate repetition of O Lord God, heavenly King--- and O Lord God, Lamb of God---] is moſt properly called πολυώνυμος ὠδὴ in the notion that it was uſed in among the Heathen writers. But this by the way. So alſo for the Prayer after the Hymn, called ἐπίκλησις, wherein they prayed for the ἐπιφοίτησιν or ἐπίλευσις πνεύματος ἐπὶ τὰ προκείμενα, the coming of the Spirit upon the Bread and Wine, &c. which were ſet before them, and therefore by Cyril is called ἐπίκλησις τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος, the calling down the Holy Ghoſt, after which οὐκ ἔτι ἄρτος λιτὸς, ἀλλὰ χριστοῦ---it is no longer ſimple (or common) Bread, but the Body of Chriſt, (in the Sacramental ſence.) An antient form of this we have in St. Baſils Liturgie, Σὲ δεόμεθα---We pray thee--ἐλθεῖν τὸ πνεῦμά σου ἅγιον ἐφ' ἡμᾶς καὶ ἐπὶ τὰ προκείμενα δῶρα ταῦτα καὶ εὐλογῆσαι ἁγιάσαι--- that thy holy Spirit may come upon us and upon theſe gifts (or offerings) ſet before us, and may bleſs them and ſanctifie them---And the ſame S. Baſil the Great, among traditions conſtantly received in the perpetual practice of the Church, reckons the form of Prayer with which the Sacrament was conſecrated, and was from thence call'd the Euchariſt. 'Tis true indeed 'twas antiently the cuſtome at that time to pray alſo for ſuch perſons and things, as the preſent neceſſities of the Church, and occaſion of celebrating the Euchariſt did require, and this (it ſeems by the Epiſtle of Epiphanius to John of Jeruſalem, tranſlated by St. Jerom) was anciently left to the diſcretion of him that miniſtred, and the fruit of it was, that private men uſing ſuch prayers for the dead, and mentioning ſuch occaſions of celebrating the Euchariſt, as their ſeveral conceits, not guided or limited by the Church, indited or ſuggeſted to them, the opinion of Purgatory, and the doctrine of private Maſſes, hath by that means gotten ſo great a footing in the Church, as it hath at this day. Beſide theſe thus mentioned, many other ſuch particular Forms uſed by us, we find in Cyril of Jeruſalems Catechiſm, one of the antienteſt Authors we have; And then that it ſhould be neceſſary for the Church to turn out what the Apoſtles had thus brought into it, will not eaſily be made good by our Aſſemblers.

5. The practice of the univerſal Church from that time to this, which is ſo notorious to any that is converſant in the Writings of the ancient Fathers, and of which ſo many teſtimonies are gathered together for any mans ſatisfaction by Caſſander, and other writers of the Liturgica, that 'twere a reproach to the Reader to detain or importune him with teſtimonies of that nature. To omit the teſtimony of Plinie concerning them as early as Trajans time, near upon the death of St. John, mentioning that carmen quod ſoliti ſunt Chriſtiani ſtato die ante diluculum Chriſto quaſi Deo dicere ſecum invicem, that Hymn (or other form to be ſaid or ſung, which he calls a verſe) which the Chriſtians upon a ſet day before light were wont one among another to ſay to Chriſt as to God (which may probably refer to the πολυώνυμος ὠδὴ even now mentioned, where Chriſt the Lamb of God, Son of the Father is invoked as Lord God,---). And not to inſiſt more largely on the practice of * Conſtantine, who preſcribed a form for his Souldiers (a Copy of which we have in Euſeb. de vit. Conſt. l.4. c.20.) I ſhall only mention two grand teſtimonies for ſet Forms, one in the 23. Canon of the third Council of Carthage, Quaſcunque ſibi preces aliquis deſcribet non iis utatur niſi priùs eas cum inſtructioribus fratribus contulerit. No man may uſe any Prayers which he hath made, unleſs he firſt conſult with other learneder Chriſtians about them, and the other more punctual, Concil. Milev. c.12. Placuit ut preces quæ probatæ fuerint in concilio ab omnibus celebrentur. Nec aliæ omninò dicantur in Eccleſiâ niſi quæ à prudentioribus tractantur vel comprobatæ in Synodo fuerint, ne fortè aliquid contra fidem aut per ignorantiam, aut per minus ſtudium ſit compoſitum. It was reſolved on, that the Prayers that were approv'd in the Council ſhould be uſed by all, and that no other ſhould be ſaid in the Church but thoſe that had been weighed by the more prudent, or approv'd in a Synod, leſt any thing, either through ignorance or negligence ſhould be done againſt the Faith. Inſtead of ſuch Citations (and becauſe whatſoever argument is brought from that Topick of Eccleſiaſtical tradition, is now preſently defamed with title of Popiſh and Antichriſtian, becauſe forſooth Antichriſt was a working early in the Apoſtles time, and every thing that we have not a mind to in antiquity, muſt needs be one of thoſe works) I ſhall rather chooſe to mention another, as a more convincing argument ad homines, and that is,

Sect. 18.

* The ſame Conſtantine in his Palace imitating the Orders of the Church among other things, ἐυχὰς ἐκθέσεως ἀπέδωκε, gave them ſet Prayers, Euſeb. de vit. Conſt. l.4. c.17. And ſo it is ſaid of the Nobles about him, that they uſed ἐυχαὶ βασιλικαὶ. Prayers that the Emperor liked, and were all brought by him, ταυτὸν πράττειν, &c. to pray the ſame prayers all of them, even in private, c.18.

6. The

Sect. 19. 6. The judgment and practice of the Reformed in other Kingdoms, even Calvin himself in several ample testimonies, one in his Notes upon Psal. 20. 1. another in his Epistle to the Protector. I shall not give my self license to transcribe these, or multiply more such testimonies, only for the honor not only of Liturgy in general, but particularly of our Liturgy, 'twill be worth remembring that Gilbertus a German, many years since, in a book of his, propounds our Book of Prayer for a sample of the Forms of the ancient Church; And for the purity of it, and thorough Reformation, that Cranmer procured the King Edwards Common-Prayer-Book to be translated into Latine, and sent it to Bucer, and required his judgment of it, who answer'd, that there was nothing in it, but what was taken out of the Word of God, or which was not against it, commodè acceptum, being taken in a good sence, somethings indeed, saith he, quæ nisi quis, &c. unless they be interpreted with Candor, may seem not so agreeable to the Word of God, and which unquiet men may wrest unto matter of contention. As may be seen at large in Bucers Scripta Anglicana. Upon this occasion that Book of King Edwards was again survey'd, and in those particulars, that were subject to such Cavils, corrected. After which time the quarrels about that Book were generally with the Papists (not so much with the opposite extream) and therefore John Ould in Queen Maries days wrote against them in defence of it, and of the King Edwards Reformation. And Cranmer made a challenge, that if he might be permitted by the Queen to take to him P. Martyr, and four or five more, they would enter the lists with any Papists living, and defend the Common-Prayer-Book to be perfectly agreeable to the Word of God, and the same in effect which had been for 1500. years in the Church of Christ. This for the reputation of the Book. Then for the fruit and benefit that by the use of it redounded to Christians, take an essay by Mr. John Hullier, Fellow of Kings Colledge in Cambridge, who was Martyr'd in Queen Maries days, An. 1557. and being at the stake among many other Books that were thrown into the fire to him, it happened that a Common-Prayer-Book fell between his hands, which he joyfully receiving opened, and read till the flame and smoke suffered him not to see any more, and then he fell to prayer, holding his hands up to Heaven, and the Book betwixt his arms next his heart, thanking God for that mercy in sending him it, the relation is Mr. Foxes, and from thence the plea authentick, that the tree that bare wholsom fruit, should not be cut down by the Law, Deut. 10. 20. even when War was to be made on a City, and as Maimon. adds l. de Idol. though it were worshipt for an Idol; and if that which was then of so dear esteem be now so necessary to be cast out, it is an ill indication of the times into which we are faln.

Sect. 20. 7. The reasons on which the very Heathens themselves took up the same practice, which was universal (it seems) through all the World, more Catholick than the Church it self. To this purpose beside those Authors which Mr. Selden refers to, I shall only add these three testimonies, one of Plato l. 7. de leg. where he commands, that whatever Prayers or Hymns the Poets composed to the Gods, they should first shew them to the Priests (as if they were in a manner leprous till then) before they publisht them, lest they should ask evil things instead of good. (an infirmity that these days are very subject unto.) The second in Thucyd. l. 6. p. 434. ἐυχὰς νομιζομένας πρὸ τ ἀναγωγῆς ἐ κατὰ ναῦν ἑκάστυ, σύμπασίς δὲ ἀπὸ κήρυκ& ἐποιοῦντο. Set forms for several occasions, and a common joynt sending them up to Heaven. The third in Alexander ab Alex. l. 4. c. 17. that the Gentiles read their Prayers out of a Book before their Sacrifices, Ne quid præposterè dicatur, aliquis ex scripto præire & ad verbum referre solitus est, That the work might not be done preposterously. (To which purpose also the Reader may see what Plutarch περὶ παιδ. ἀγ. hath said of the rudeness and indecencies of extemporary Orations; which sure if they were liable to that censure, when they were spoken but to men, will not be more excusable for our having chosen to use that confidence to God.) Which two reasons of theirs, the one lest they should stray in the matter of their Prayers, the other lest offend in the manner, may pass for Christian reasons, as seasonable with us, as they were among them. And no necessity that those reasons should be despised by us neither.

Sect. 21. 8. The irrational concludings, or shortness of discourse of those which are against set Forms, especially in two things, the first observed by Dr. Preston (whose memory is, I hope, not lost among these Assemblers) and made use of in a Printed work of his to the confuting of them: That while they in opposition to set Forms require the Minister to conceive a Prayer for the Congregation, they observe not, that the whole Congregation is by that means as much stinted, and bound to a set Form, to wit, of those words which the Minister conceives, as if he read them out of a Book. 2. That the persons with whom we have now to deal, though they will not prescribe any Form of Prayer, yet venture to prescribe the matter of it in these words, pag. 14. the Minister is to call upon the Lord to this effect. Now why the prescription of the matter is not the stinting of the Spirit as well as the form of words (unless the Spirit, like the Heathen * Mercury be the God of Eloquence, and be thought to deal in the words only,) or why the promise of dabitur in illâ horâ, it shall be given you in that hour, should not be as full a promise for matter, as for expressions: especially when that Text forbids care or provision πῶς, ἢ τί, not only how, but what they should speak, and the promise is peculiarly for the τί, it shall be given you what you shall speak, and this is it, that is attributed to the Spirit, v. 20. (from whence if I should conclude, that the Holy Ghost taught the Disciples only the matter of their answer; and they themselves were left to put it in Form of words, there is nothing in that Text against that assertion; and that it was so in their penning of the New Testament, many probable Arguments might be produced if it were now seasonable) and consequently, why the prescribing of one should not be unreasonable in them, that condemn all prescribing of the other, I confess is one of those things, which my charity hath made me willing to impute to an infirmity in them which in others would be stiled shortness of discourse, because I am unwilling to lay any heavier charge upon it.

* ἡγεμὼν& τῆ λόγῳ, Act. 14. 12. Matt. 10. 19.

Sect. 22. 9. The strangeness (I shall add, prodigiousness) of that argument which by an especial opposer of all set forms is made the prime (and in the last resolution, the only engine to destroy them, or turn them out of the Church; I mean that of him which will needs suppose the use of them to be a breach of the second Commandment, a worshipping of God in or by an Image or Idol, and by this one hold hath so fortified himself, that whatever contrary argument, or advantage be produced to prove the lawfulness, lawfulneſs, or uſefulneſs of ſet Forms, he is content to acknowledge the concludency thereof ſo far, as that it ſhould be of force, were it not for this, that it is a piece of Idolatry to make uſe of them. How ſlightly that foundation (which is appointed to bear ſo great a weight) is laid, or indeed how impoſſible it is by any ſort of Topicks to make it credible, that all kind of Liturgie is an Idol, or that all ſet Forms are ſuch, when the very ſame, if they were poured out extempore, were acknowledged not to be ſuch, as if the care of forming, or the precept of uſing it, (and not the worſhipping it ſelf) were the only things that make an Idol to be an Idol, I had rather leave the Reader to conſider, than dilate any longer on ſo wild a theme.

From all which conſidered, and a great deal more which might be added, from the uſefulneſs of known Forms to thoſe, whoſe underſtandings are not quick enough to go along with unknown, and if they have no other, are fain oft-times to return without performing any part of that ſo neceſſary duty of prayer in the Church, from the experience of the effects of the contrary doctrine, the many ſcandalous paſſages that have fallen from Miniſters in their extemporary prayers (of which meer pity and humanity, civility and mercy to Enemies, reſtrains us from inſerting a large Catalogue) and the no manner of advantage above that which ſet Forms may alſo afford, but only of ſatisfaction to the itching ear, exerciſe and pleaſure to the licentious tongue, and the vanity of the reputation of being able to perform that office ſo fluently (which yet is no more than the Rabbins allow Achitophel, that he had every day three new forms of prayer) or of having a plentiful meaſure of the Spirit, which is believed to infuſe ſuch Eloquence, I ſhall now conclude it impoſſible that any humane eye ſhould diſcern a Neceſſity, in reſpect of Eccleſiaſtical policy, or edifying the Church, why all Liturgy ſhould be deſtroyed, not waſht, or purg'd with Sope, ſuch any Reformation would be, but torn and conſumed with nitre, for ſuch is abolition, why it ſhould ſuffer this Oſtraciſm, (unleſs as Ariſtides did for being too vertuous) be thus vehemently firſt declaimed, and then baniſht out of the Church. Sect. 23.

Secondly, for outward bodily worſhip 'tis particularly prohibited by the Directory at one time, at the taking of our ſeats or places when we enter the Aſſembly (directly contrary to that of Iſidor, ſi quis veniat cum lectio celebratur, adoret tantum Deum, if any come in when Leſſon is a reading, let him only perform adoration to God, and hearken to what is read) and never ſo much as recommended at any time, nor one would think, permitted in any part of their publick ſervice, like the Perſians in Strabo, l. 15. that never offer'd any part of the fleſh to the Gods in their ſacrifices, kept all that to themſelves, τοῖς θεοῖς ἥδιστον ἀποτίμαντες μέρος, ſuppoſing the Gods would be content with the ſouls, which in the blood were poured out and ſacrificed to their honour, τῆς γὰρ ψυχῆς φασι τῷ ἱερείῳ δῦναι τὸ θεῖον, ἀλλὰ δ' ἥδιστος, they ſay that the Gods wanted and deſired the ſouls for a ſacrifice, but not any thing elſe; of which people Herodotus, l. 1. hath obſerved that they had neither Temples nor Altar, and laugh'd at them which built either, but went to the top of ſome Hill or other, and there ſacrificed, preferring ſuch natural Altars before any other. The former of theſe is the avowed Divinity of theſe men (and might perhaps have been attended with the latter too, were it not that there be ſo many Churches already built conveniently to their hands.) Inſtead of which our Liturgy hath thought fit not only to recommend but preſcribe bodily worſhip, firſt by directing in the Rubrick what part of ſervice ſhall be performed kneeling, then by reading the Venite, where all incourage and call up one the others to worſhip, and fall down, and kneel, &c. to worſhip, i.e. adore, which peculiarly notes bodily worſhip, and ſo ſurely the falling down, and kneeling before the Lord. And of this I ſhall ſay that it is, 1. an act of obedience to that precept of glorifying God in our bodies as well as ſouls; 2. a tranſcribing of Chriſts copy, who kneeled, and even proſtrated himſelf in prayer, of many holy men in Scripture, who are affirmed to have done ſo (and that affirmation written for our example) and even of the Publican, who though ſtanding, yet by ſtanding afar off, by not looking up, by ſtriking his breaſt, did clearly joyn bodily worſhip to his prayer, of [Lord be merciful to me a ſinner] uſed at his coming into the Temple, and in that poſture thrived better than the Phariſee in his loftier garb, went away more juſtified, ſaith our Saviour, as a veſſel at the foot of a hill, will (ſay the Artiſts) receive and contain more water, than the ſame or a like veſſel on the top of it would be able to do; And he that ſhall do the like, that ſhall joyn adoration of God, and nothing but God, to the uſe of that or the like fervent ejaculation at his entrance into Gods houſe, will ſure have Chriſts approbation of the Publicans behaviour, to juſtifie him from any charge of Superſtition in ſo doing. Nay there is little doubt, but upon this example, this cuſtom of bowing at the coming into the Church was antiently to be met with among all the religious perſons, the μονάζοντες and ἀσκηταί, which profeſt the ſtate of penitents, and among them was called μετάνοια, and becauſe it was uſed to be performed three times, μετάνοιαι τρεῖς, and ſo to bow in that lowly manner μετάνοιαν ποιεῖν or μετάνοιαν βάλλειν. Of this, ſay the antient writers of the ceremonies of the Greek Church, there were two ſorts, the greater called μετάνοιαι μεγάλαι and σφοδραί, differing little from proſtration, and the leſſer called μικραί. In each of theſe outward bodily adorations it was the manner to uſe προγραφῆσαν εὐχήν, a ſhort form of prayer, which we may ſee in the Greek Liturgies, in the Προλόγιον. At the firſt time the words were Κύριε καὶ δέσποτα τῆς ζωῆς μου, πνεῦμα ἀργίας, περιεργίας, φιλαρχίας καὶ ἀργολογίας μὴ μοι δῷς. O Lord and owner of my life, give me not the Spirit of ſloth, of idle medling with other folks matters, of ambition, of falſe, or idle ſpeaking. At the ſecond time, Πνεῦμα δὲ ταπεινοφροσύνης καὶ σωφροσύνης καὶ ὑπομονῆς καὶ ἀγάπης χάρισαί μοι τῷ σῷ δούλῳ. But give to me thy ſervant the ſpirit of humility and ſobriety and patience and charity. At the third time, Ναὶ Κύριε βασιλεῦ, δώρησαί μοι ἵνα τὰ ἐμὰ πλαίσματα, καὶ μὴ κατακρίνειν τὸν ἀδελφόν μου, ὅτι εὐλογητὸς εἶ εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων. Yea Lord and King, give me grace to ſee my ſins, and not to condemn my brother; for thou art to be praiſed for ever and ever. Theſe forms thus ſeverally and diſtinctly were to be uſed by all of any learning in thoſe religious houſes: But for the ἰδιῶται the more ſimple and illiterate, this only form was preſcribed. ἱλάσθητί μοι κύριε ὁ ἁμαρτωλῷ, Lord be merciful to me a ſinner. Theſe are in St. Chryſoſtoms Liturgy called προσκυνήματα τρία καθ' ἑκάστην, three adorations towards the Eaſt, and the form there ſolemnly uſed in each, Lord be merciful--- as being deſigned for all (not only the perſons of extraordinary knowledge and piety, but alſo) for the ἰδιῶται, to whom you ſee that form was allowed in the Ὡράιον.

Ὠφέλιμον. The third thing that I ſhould affirm of this ceremony of outward worſhip is, that it is the moſt agreeable humble geſture, and ſo beſt becoming, and * evidencing, and helping the inward performance of that moſt lowly duty of Prayer, and conſequently that it may be charg'd with blaſphemy, as well and as properly, as with ſuperſtition, and probably would be ſo, if the latter were not the more odious of the two: and indeed why kneeling or bowing ſhould be more liable to that cenſure, than either mental or oral prayer, there is no reaſon imaginable, it being as poſſible that one may be directed to a falſe object (and ſo become Idolatrous, or ſuperſtitious in the true notion of thoſe words (as they denote the worſhip of Idols or dead men, δαίμονες, or ſuperſtites) as the other; and (for the improper notion of Superſtition) the one again as much capable of being an exceſs in Religion (the mind or tongue being as likely to enlarge and exceed as the body) or of uſing a piece of falſe Religion, as the other, the bodily worſhip duly performed to God, being the payment of a debt to God (and no doubt acceptable, when 'tis paid with a true heart) and no way an argument of want, but a probable evidence of the preſence and cooperation of inward devotion, as I remember Nazianzen ſaith of his Father, Or. 8. πολὺ τὸ φαινόμενον, πλουσιώτερον δὲ τὸ κρυπτόμενον, he ſhewed a great deal in the outſide, but kept the greater treaſure within in the inviſible part. And on the other ſide, the ſtiffneſs of the knee, an argument of ſome eminent defect, if not of true piety, yet of ſomewhat elſe, and Chriſts prediction, Joh. 4. that the time ſhould come that the worſhippers ſhould worſhip God in ſpirit and truth, (being not ſet in oppoſition to bodily worſhip, but to the appropriating it to ſome ſingular places, Jeruſalem, or that Mountain) not producible as any apology or excuſe for ſuch omiſſion. To theſe brief intimations I ſhall need add no more, when the concluſion that I am to infer is ſo moderate, being only this, that it is not neceſſary to turn all bowing, or kneeling, or bodily worſhip out of the Church, (were there any ſuperſtition in any one or more geſtures, this were too great a ſeverity, to mulct the Church of all, above the proportion of the moſt unlimited arbitrary court, whoſe amerciaments muſt always be within the compaſs of ſalvo contenemento, which this will not be, if there be no competency of bodily worſhip left behind) and that the Liturgy doth better to preſcribe it at fit times, than the Directory to omit all mention of it at all times, unleſs by way of diſlike and prohibition. Which concluſion will be the more eaſily evinced againſt them, by asking them whether in their Family-Parlour-Prayers, or in their private Cloſet-Prayers, they do not approve and practiſe that geſture; which as I believe in charity they do, ſo I muſt from thence infer, that by them the houſe of God is the only place thought fit to be deſpiſed. And if it be replyed, that the Directory forbids not kneeling, but only commends it not, leaving it free to uſe or not to uſe, I anſwer 1. That the effect of this liberty is very remarkable among them, and equal to that of a prohibition, no man almoſt of their perſwaſion, ever kneeling in their Churches. 2. That the never ſo much as recommending it, is very near a forbidding of it. 3. That bowing or adoration is directly forbidden once (which by the way is as much the defining of a Ceremony, viz. that of ſtanding or going upright, and ſo as contrary to the Independents perſwaſions, and to the great clamorous complaint for Liberty in Ceremonies, as any preſcription of kneeling or bowing can be.) 4. That kneeling alſo is at the receiving of the Sacrament forbidden, by neceſſity of conſequence, ſitting being preſcribed, and therefore that that reply or excuſe is falſe alſo. And ſo now what ſpecial advantage this is like to bring in to this Church of ours, to have the bodies of negligent, or profane, or factious men left (without any ſo much as an admonition) to their own inclinations, and ſo what depth of Eccleſiaſtical policy there was which made this change ſo neceſſary, I deſire may now be judged.

* Cum bi motus corporis fieri niſi motu animi præcedente non poſſint, eiſdem rurſus exterius viſibiliter factis ille interior inviſibilis augetur. Aug. l. de curâ pro mort. 3.

Sect. 25. Thirdly, for uniformity in that Service; (which our Liturgy labours to ſet up, by preſcribing the manner of it, but the Directory hath taken away by leaving all to the chance of mens wills, which can no more be thought likely to concur in one form, than Democritus's Atomes to have met together into a world of beautiful Creatures, without any hand of providence to diſpoſe them) it hath certainly the approbation of all wiſe men, and command of St. Paul, 1 Cor. 14. 40. in that grand place, Let all things be done decently and in order. Of which I conceive the clear importance to be, that all be done in the Church according to cuſtom and appointment. The former implyed in εὐσχημόνως, (cuſtom being the only rule of decency, and therefore the indecency of wearing long hair, is proved by being againſt nature, i. e. ſaith Suidas, in the Scripture phraſe, χρονίαν συνήθειαν, a cuſtom of ſome continuance in that place, and thereupon St. Paul thinks it enough againſt an Eccleſiaſtical uſage, and that which might ſuperſede all ſtrife about it, 1 Cor. 11. 16. [we have no ſuch cuſtoms, &c.]) and the latter in plain words κατὰ τάξιν, according to order or appointment (for ſo the words literally import) and then upon theſe two grounds is uniformity built, and neceſſarily reſults, where all that is done in the Church, is ruled by one of theſe, by cuſtom, or by Law, which being here commanded by St. Paul, is a proof of the more than lawfulneſs of τάξις, preſcription of Ceremonies in a Church, and of uniformity therein. And then what neceſſity there is or can be that St. Pauls command ſhall be ſo neglected, all care of uniformity ſo diſclaimed, all τάξις, conſtitution or ordinance, for any Eccleſiaſtical matter (unleſs their ordinance againſt all ſuch conſtitutions) ſo ſolemnly diſavowed, it will be hard to imagine, or gheſs, unleſs it be on purpoſe to obſerve Mr. Prinns rule of Conforming the Church to the State, to fill one as full of diſorder and ἀταξία, and confuſion, as the other. I remember a ſaying of Socrates which Plato and Cicero record from him, Mutatâ Muſicâ mutantur & mores, that the change of the kind of Muſick, had a great influence on mens minds, and had a general change of manners conſequent to it. I conceive uniformity in Gods ſervice to be parallel to Muſick, being it ſelf an outward concord or harmony of the moſt different affections; and that that ſhould be not only changed, but loſt, I cannot underſtand any neceſſity, unleſs it be that ſome ſuch like effects may be wrought in Religion alſo.

Sect. 26. For the Fourth, the Peoples bearing ſome part in the ſervice, that is, 1. by way of reſponſe in the Prayers, and Hymns, or 2. by reading every other verſe in the Pſalm. And this is mentioned in Theodorets ſtory l. 2. c. 24. where ſpeaking of Flavianus and Diodorus he ſaith of them, οὗτοι πρῶτοι διχῆ διελόντες τὸν τῶν ψαλλόντων χορὸν ἐκ διαδοχῆς Δαυϊτικὴν ἐδίδαξαν μελῳδίαν, &c. they divided the Quire of Singers into two parts, and appointed them to ſing the Pſalms ſucceſſively, which cuſtom being begun begun by them (who, saith he, were admirable men, and labour'd extreamly to stir up all men to Piety, and to that end invented this) * διέδραμε πάντας καὶ κατέλαβε τῆς ἐκκλησίας τέρματα, prevail'd over the whole world: But yet higher than this original, this custom of singing or reciting the praises of God (in Hymns or Psalms) by way of ἀντίφωνα or alternatim, one answering another, is by Socrates l. 6. c. 8. of his Eccles. story attributed to Ignatius that Apostolical Bishop of Antioch shortly after St. Peter: and that, saith he, from a vision of Angels διὰ τῆς ἀντιφώνων ὕμνων τὴν ἁγίαν τριάδα ὑμνοῦντων, singing Psalms to the holy Trinity in this manner. And so Photius also, Ἀρχὴν δέ φασι τῆς ἀντιφώνων ᾠδῆς Ἰγνάτιον γενέσθαι ἐπὶ θεοφόρον. An example of this Philo mentions also among the Esseni of the Jews, l. de Vit. contempl. γίνονται χόροι ἐξ ἀμφοῖν, μίμημα τῆς πάλαι σύστασις κατὰ τὴν ἐρυθρὰν θάλασσαν, this way of alternate singing was used amongst them in imitation of that which was instituted on the shore of the Red sea. And these Esseni being the first converted to Christianity in Alexandria might from thence continue it there. But however the antiquity of it in the Church is sufficiently testified by Basil ad Neocæsar. Cler. Διχῆ διαιρεθέντες ἀντιψάλλουσιν ἀλλήλοις, ἔπειτα πάλιν ἐπιτρέψαντες ἐπὶ κατάρχειν τῷ μέλους οἱ λοιποὶ ὑπηχοῦσιν. They divide themselves into two parts and sing alternately, and sometimes one begins the song and the rest answer him. And from these St. Ambrose brought it into the Latin Church, and inserted it into their service. So saith Sigebert in Ann. 387. Ambrosius Episcopus ritum Antiphonas in Ecclesia canendi primus ad Latinos transtulit à Græcis, apud quos hic ritus jamdudum inoleverat ex instituto Ignatii Antiocheni Episcopi & Apostolorum discipuli, qui vir visionem, &c. Bishop Ambrose was the first that brought this custom of singing Antiphonas to the Latins from the Greeks, among whom that custom had of old been used from the institution of Ignatius Bishop of Antioch and Disciple of the Apostles, who received a vision to that purpose. Beside these 'tis used by us, 3. by way of mutual charity, the people returning a Prayer for the Priest, who began one peculiarly for them; which Innocentius refers to, in his letter to Aurelius and Augustine, calling them communes & alternas preces, to which he there attributes more force, quàm privatis, than to private; and 4. by way of following the Presbyter in Confession of sins, both at the beginning of the Service, and before the Communion; 5. in Profession of Faith in the Creeds, wherein every the meanest Christian is to have his part: And in every of these it is certainly designed by the Church, from the example of pure antiquity, to very gainful uses, to quicken devotion, which the length of continued hearing may have leave to dull and slacken, and to recal those thoughts which may upon the like temptation have diverted to other objects; in a word, to engage every one to be made no idle or unprofitable Spectator of the Service: and as long as there is still need of that help to these so necessary ends, and not the least shew or pretence of objection against it, how necessary it can be to reject it wholly, and lay all the task upon the Priest, and not require so much as an Amen (which it seems was in fashion in St. Pauls time) of the ἰδιώτης, or Lay person, I leave to the most prejudicate Reader to give sentence for me.

As for the Litany, wherein the People are more exercised than in any other part of the Service, 'tis certainly designed to make it more proportionable to the title bestowed on it by the Antients of ἐκτενὴς ἰκεσία, earnest or intense Prayer, and in Methodius, ἐκτενεῖς δεήσεις, earnest Petitions, (and in the Greek Liturgy simply ἐκτενὲς, intense or earnest) from Act. 12. 5. Luc. 22. 44. This continual joyning of the people in every passage of it, tending very much to both the improving and evidencing that fervor and intension, which can never be more necessary than throughout that Service, of which I shall in passing say these three things, and justifie them against any gain-sayer, that there is not extant any where, 1. a more particular excellent enumeration of all the Christians either private or common wants, as far as is likely to come to the cognisance of a Congregation; nor 2. a more innocent blameless Form, against which there lies no just objection, and most of the unjust ones that have been made, are reproachful to Scripture it self, from whence the passages excepted against are fetcht, as that particularly of Praying for Gods mercy upon all men, from 1 Tim. 2. 1. and 3. a more artificial composure for the raising that zeal, and keeping it up throughout, than this so defamed part of our Liturgy, for which and other excellencies undoubtedly it is, (and not for any Conjuring or Swearing in it) that the Devil hath taken care that it should drink deepest of that bitter cup of Calumny and Reviling, which it can no way have provoked, but only as Christ did the reproach of the diseased man, What have I to do with thee? &c. when he came to exorcise and cast out the Devil that possest him. And for this to be thrown out of the Church, sure there is no other necessity, than there was that there should be Scandals and Heresies in it, only because the Devil and his Factors would have it so. Sect. 27.

5. For the dividing of Prayers into divers Collects or Portions, and not putting all our Petitions into one continued Prayer, these advantages it hath to give it authority, 1. the practice of the Jews, whose Liturgy was dispensed into Lessons, &c. and 18 Collects, or short Prayers: 2. the example of Christ prescribing a short Form, and in that, saith St. Chrysostome, διδάξας ὑμᾶς μέτρον εὐχῆς, teaching us the measure or length due to each Prayer of ours, Hom. de Annâ. f. 965. and setting a mark of Heathenism, Mat. 6. and of Pharisaism, Mat. 23. 14. on their long Prayers: 3. the advice of the Antients, who tell us St. Peters Form, used for a great while in the Roman Church, was a short one, and that Christ and St. Paul commanded us to make our Prayers, βραχείας καὶ πυκνὰς, καὶ ἐξ ὀλίγων διαλειμμάτων, short and frequent, and with little distances between. And so Epiphanius ἐν τῷ τομ. orat. c. 24. directs to offer our Petitions, μετὰ πάσης πυκνότητος, with all frequency; and Cassian, de instit. mon. l. 2. c. 10. from the universal consent of them, Utilius censent breves orationes sed creberrimas fieri, The way that is resolved to be most profitable, is to have short Prayers, but very thick or frequent. And he adds a consideration which prompted them to this resolution, Ut Diaboli insidiantis jacula succinctâ brevitate vitemus, That by that means, the Devils darts which he is wont to find and steal his times to shoot into our breasts, may by the brevity of our Prayers be prevented. To these many more might be added, but that the no-advantage on the other side above this (save only the reputation of the labour and patience of speaking or hearing so much in a continued course, in one breath as it were) will save us the pains of using more motives to perswade any, that sure it is not necessary to exchange this pleasant easie course of our Liturgy, for the tedious toilsom less profitable course in the Directory. Sect. 28.

* And so in Suidas, in the word χέρ. Χὲρ δὲ τὸ σύστημα τῶν ἐν ἐκκλησίαις ἀδόντων. Σημαίνειν δὲ τοὺς χόρους εἰς δύο μέρη διῃρῆσθαι. Κωνσταντῖνος τοῦ μὲν μεγάλου Κωνσταντίου καὶ Φλαβίαν αὐτὸν ἐπισκώπτει Ἀντιοχείας ἀρχῆς τῶν Δαβιδικῶν ἀδόντας ὅπερ ἐν Ἀνδιοχείᾳ πρῶτον ἀρξάμενον εἰς πάντα πεπλῆσθαι τῆς οἰκουμένης τὰ πέρατα.

Chrysost. Ib.

Sect. 29. 6. For the Ceremonies used in the several Services, much might be said, as particularly for that of standing up and giving glory to God at the reading of the Gospel, according to the expres's words of Chrysostome, or whosoever that Author was οἷς τὸ ἀποδυόμενον. t. 6. p. 975. τῶ διακόνῳ ἀνοίγειν μέλλοντι τὸ τῶ εὐαγγελίῳ τετράδυπον (so it should be, not τετράδυρον, as appears p. 974. l. 20. where τὸ τῶν εὐαγγελίων τετράδυπον ἄρμα) πάντες αὐτῷ ἀτενίζομεν ἡσυχίαν παρίχοντες, καὶ ὑπνίνα τῶ δρόμῳ τῆς ἀναγνώσεως ἄρξεται, οὐθέις διανίσταται ὑμῶν, ἀπιφωνῆσαι, Ἀλλὰ δόξα σοὶ κύριε, of kneeling (in opposition to sitting at the Lords Supper designed in the Directory) 1. that it is agreeable to the practice of all Antiquity, who though they kneeled not, because the Canon of the Council of Nice obliged all to stand in the Church, between Easter and Whitsuntide, or on the Lords day all the year long, (which by the way, absolutely excludes sitting, as also doth that saying of Optatus, l. 4. That the People may not sit in the Church, and of Tertullian, l. de Orat. c. 12. That 'twas an Heathen custom to sit in the Church, and therefore ought to be reprehended;) yet used the Prayer-gesture at receiving, i.e. bowing their bodies and heads, which the Fathers call adoration; kissing of the hand, is the propriety of the Latin word, but the ordinary denotation of it, bowing the body, the προσκύνησις, which is more than the former, the cultus major, among the Learned; For as Herodotus observes of the Eastern Nations, that the manner of Equals was to kiss one another at meeting, of inferiours to kiss the hand of the Superiour, but of the Suppliants or Petitioners, that would express the greatest humility to bow themselves before him, so was this last of the three continued among the Primitive Christians in their Services of the greatest Piety and humility, Climacus, p. 298. Τὸ δῶρον δεξάμενος προσκυνῶ, when I receive I worship, or adore, agreeable to which the great men in the French Churches, who receive it passing or going (a meer Ægyptian-Passeover custom) do first make a lowly cringe or curtesie before they take it in their hands. 2. That Christs Table-gesture at the delivering it, is no Argument for sitting, both because it is not manifest by the Text that he used that, save only at the Passeover, from which this Supper of the Lord was distinct, and was celebrated by blessing, and breaking, and giving the bread, &c. to which some other gesture might be more proper, and more commodious, and because Christs gesture in that is no more obligingly exemplary to us, than his doing it after Supper was to the Apostles, who yet did it Fasting, Acts 13. 2. and generally took it before the agapæ, and as by Plinies Epistle it appears, so early in the morning, that the Congregation departed and met again, ad capiendum cibum promiscuum, to take their meals together. As also 3. that the contrary gesture of sitting, as it was, not many years since, by a full Synod of Protestants in Poland forbidden, if not condemned, because they found it used by the Arrians, as complying with their opinion, who hold our Saviour to be a meer Creature, so is it now profest by some of our late Reformers Writings to be a badge and cognizance of their believing in the infallibility of Christs promise of coming to reign on this Earth again, and take them into a familiar and (a kind of) equal conversation with him, the Doctrine of the Millenaries, once in some credit, but after condemn'd by the Church, and though favour'd by some Learned men, both anciently and of late, is not yet sure clear enough to come into our Creed or Liturgy; or to be profest and proclaim'd by that gesture, when ever we receive the Sacrament: The evidence or proof of it being primarily that in the Revelation, which in all probability signifies no such matter. But I shall not enlarge on this, nor the other Ceremonies mention'd, but refer the Reader to the Learned Satisfactory unanswer'd labour of Mr. Hooker, on these Subjects; and then ask him when he hath read him, 1. whether he repent him of that pains, 2. whether in his Conscience he can think it necessary, or tending to edification, to cast all these causelessly out of this Church, or the whole Liturgy for their sakes.

Populus in Ecclesia sedendi potestatem non habet. Ideo reprehendi meretur, quia apud Idola celebratur.

Sect. 30. Now for those things that are more intrinsecal to the Liturgy, and parts of the Service; as

1. For the pronouncing of Absolution, which Christ so solemnly instated on the Priest in his Disciples (by three several acts, 1. unto Peter as the mouth of the Apostles, Matth. 16. 19. then by way of promise to them all together, Cap. 18. 18. then by way of actual instating it on them, breathing that power and the Holy Ghost on them together, John 20. 23.) and which is so distinctly named by Saint James, c. 5. 15. in the case of sickness, ἀφεθήσεται αὐτῷ, (not as we render they shall be forgiven him, as if it were ἀφεθήσονται, and belonged only to Gods act of pardoning, but) impersonally Absolution shall be given him; and so constantly preserved and exercised in the universal Church in publick and private, and approv'd (as far as our Liturgy uses it) ever by those who affirm that power in the Minister to be only declarative, that any man conversant either in the Gospel, or writings of the Fathers, or modern Authors, or that hath but seen Knoxes Scotch Liturgy, and observ'd that part of it, about the receiving of Penitents, would be amazed to see a Directory for the Publick worship of God (which is a large phrase and contains the whole Office of the Priest) and in it a Title for the Visitation of the Sick, and yet find never a word about Absolution, no not in case of scruple, doubt or temptation, pag. 67. or the death-bed it self. This exercise of those Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, i.e. of the Church, this pronouncing of Gods pardon, and actually giving the Pardon and Peace of the Church to all her Penitent Children, especially that more particular act before the Communion, and on the Bed of sickness, is, besides the obedience to Christ, so necessary an expression of Christian charity in every Church to its poor members, and the denying of it, where it is due, so barbarous an inhumanity (which yet I hope no man shall be the worse for, but those that do deny it) that as the turning of Publick Censures out of this Church, is a rare example of despight unto Christs Command, (there being no National Church from Christs time to this to be found without it, till this of ours for these last three years) so the sending of Absolution after it, and the affirming it to be necessary to be done, and appointing all foot-steps of it, to be turn'd out of the Service, is a piece of disorder, as contrary to Charity as to Piety, to Reason as Religion, this being so far from the blame of an exuberancy in our Service, that there is more reason to wish that there were more of this nature, than that that, which we have already, were omitted.

Sect. 31. 2. For the Hymns of the Church, it will not be amiss perhaps to give you first the true notion of the word; there being among the Hebrews three sorts of Songs, 1. Mizmor, a concise or short verse, verſe, 2. Tehillah, Praiſe, celebrating or depredicating of God, and 3. Schir. a Canticle, as the word is uſed in the title of that Song of Songs. And anſwerable to theſe three, we have Col. 3. 17. ψαλμὸι, ὕμνοι, and ᾠδαὶ, Pſalms and Hymns, and Songs, where the word Hymn is anſwerable to the ſecond of theſe, a praiſing and magnifying of God in and for ſome of his moſt remarkable acts of mercy and power. Thus was it the dictate, even of Nature it ſelf among the Heathens, to imploy a great part of their Poetry, i.e. their Piety (for ſo Orpheus the firſt and moſt famous Writer of Hymns, was called Theologus Poeta, a Poet that was a Divine alſo) in framing of Hymns to their Gods, though thoſe of Muſæus and Linus, the other two Theologi Poetæ, are not now to be met with. The like we have ſtill of Homer alſo, and I remember Galen the famous Phyſician, in one of his Books De uſu partium, deſcribing the compoſure of the Foot, breaks out of a ſuddain into an excellent acknowledgment which he calls, ὕμνον ἀληθινὸν τῷ δημιουργήσαντι ἡμᾶς, a true Hymn in laud of that God which made theſe curious bodies of men. This duty of natural Piety, Chriſtianity certainly hath not obſtructed, but elevated it to a far higher pitch by ſuperadding that greateſt obligation taken from the Redemption of mankind, to that old one of the Creation. And thus in all Ages of the Church ſome Hymns have been conſtantly retained to be ſaid or ſung in the Churches, I mean not only the daily Lections of the Pſalms of David (which yet this Directory doth not mention, but only commands a more frequent reading of that Book, than of ſome other parts of Scripture) not the ſinging of ſome of thoſe Pſalms in Meter, (which yet this Directory doth not preſcribe neither, ſave only on days of Thankſgiving, or after the Sermon, if with conveniency it may be done, making it very indifferent, it ſeems, whether it be kept at all in the Church or no, unleſs on thoſe ſpecial occaſions) But the alternate reading of the Pſalms both by Prieſt and people, (Pſalmi ab omnibus celebrentur, Let the Pſalms be ſaid by all, in the Milevit. Counc. Can. 12.) the conſtant uſe of ſome ſpecial Pſalms, as the Introite, and of other more purely Chriſtian Hymns, either framed by Holy men in the Scripture in reference to Chriſts Incarnation, or by the Church ſince on purpoſe to bleſs and praiſe God for his mercies in Chriſt, which ſure deſerve a daily celebration from every Chriſtian, as well and as richly as any Victory over Enemies, though it be one of theirs over the King himſelf, can deſerve of them upon any ſuch day of Thankſgiving. Of this kind is the Te Deum, a moſt divine and admirable Form, called by Saint Baſil, ἐπινίκιος, a triumphant Song, generally thought to be compoſed by Saint Auguſtine, and Saint Ambroſe, on the day that Saint Ambroſe baptized Saint Auguſtine, and fitted to that purpoſe with an acknowledgment of the Trinity, in reference to Saint Auguſtines converſion from Manicheiſm; If this be true, then ſure it is one of thoſe, the repeating of which moved Saint Auguſtine to ſo much paſſion, that he ſaith in his Confeſſions, l. 9. Quantum flevi in hymnis & Canticis Eccleſiæ tuæ, that and the like Hymns of the Church fetcht many tears from him. Of which I ſhall only ſay, that to any man that hath but an humble, faithful, thankful, fervent heart to go along with it, it is as Chriſtian a piece of praiſe and prayer, as any humane pen could contribute toward the publick worſhip of God, which he that hath had the uſe of in the Church, and now thinks fit to baniſh out of it, ſhews his own former coldneſs and non-proficiency under that means of Grace, and that he never joyned in it with any zeal or earneſt, or elſe his wretchleſs ingratitude to the Church which hath allow'd him the benefit of it.

Tiſman in Baſil. T. 1. p. 795.

Sect. 32. The like might be added of thoſe two other in the adminiſtration of the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, the former before the Sacrament beginning with lift up your hearts, and ending with the Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Hoſts, &c. a form to be found with little variation, both in St. James's, Saint Baſil's, and Saint Chryſoſtom's Liturgy, the other, after the Sacrament, Glory be to God on high, &c. called antiently hymnus Angelicus, the angelical hymn, from the firſt part of it which was ſung by Angels, and both theſe ſuch antient, pure, excellent compoſures in themſelves, and ſo fitly accommodated to the preſent buſineſs, and all that I have named ſo far from any appearance of evil, ſo free from any the leaſt objection of any the moſt petulant malicious calumniator (as far as I yet ever heard) ſo well-becoming a congregation of Saints, who by praiſing God in the Church, ſhould practiſe before-hand, and fit themſelves for the ſinging of Hallelujahs perpetually in Heaven, and in the mean time bear the Angels company here (who * Saint Chryſoſtom tells us, ſing all the Hymns with us) that 'tis little better than fury, (ſavouring much of the temper of that evil ſpirit on Saul, that was exorciſed with David's Muſick, and therefore may be allowed to have malice to that and the like ever ſince) to think it neceſſary to throw this piece of heaven out of the Church.

* μετ' ἀγγέλων ᾄδομεν, μετ' ἀγγέλων ὑμνοῦμεν. t. 4. p. 753. l. 40. edit. Savil.

purpoſe there is a Prayer in Saint Baſils Liturgy (Δέσποτα κύριε ὁ θεὸς ἡμῶν ὁ καταξιώσας ἐν ὑπερβάτῳ πλούτῳ καὶ ἀνεκδιηγήτῳ φιλανθρωπίᾳ ἀρχαγγέλους καὶ ἀγγέλους εἰς λειτουργίαν τῆς σῆς δόξης, πέμψον σὺν τῇ εἰσόδῳ ἡμῶν εἴσοδον ἁγίων ἀγγέλων γενέσθαι συλλειτουργούντων ἡμῖν καὶ συνδοξολογούντων τῷ σῷ ἀγαθότητι) that God would ſend his holy Angels to bear them company in their ſervices and praiſes of God and his goodneſs.

Sect. 33. 3. For the Doxology ſo conſtantly annexed to many parts of our ſervice, in theſe words, (wherein the people either are to begin or anſwer) Glory be to the Father, &c. It is an antient piece of very great conſideration, the former verſicle of it being, as 'tis affirmed by good authorities, compoſed by the firſt Council of Nice, and appointed by them to be uſed in the Church, as a leſſer Creed, or confeſſion of the Trinity, and ὁμοουσία, conſubſtantiality of the Son and Holy Ghoſt, with the Father (at which it hath therefore antiently been the cuſtom to ſtand up, confeſſion of God, being a praiſing of him (as the word in other Languages imports) to which therefore that poſture is moſt due) which may well paſs for no fable, becauſe 'tis clear, that ſoon after that time, Flavianus ſang it aloud in the Church of Antioch, as appears by * Sozomen, and ‖ Theodoret, (and if we may believe * Nicephorus, St. Chryſoſtom joyn'd with him in it;) Of this Philoſtorgius the Arrian Hiſtoriographer tells us, An. 348. Flavianus having gotten a Congregation of Monks together, πρῶτος ἀνέβοησε, was the firſt that began that form of Doxology, others uſing that other form of δόξα πατρὶ διὰ υἱοῦ ἐν ἁγίῳ πνεύματι, Glory to the Father, by the Son in the Holy Ghoſt, making the Son inferiour to the Father, and the Holy Ghoſt to the Son, as Eunomius and Eudoxius did, when it ſeems Philoſtorgius himſelf moſt approv'd of, (ταύτην μᾶλλον τὴν ἀκφώνησιν ἐπιπολάζειν, ſaith his Epitomator of him) others (not as Gotofred mends mends his Copy, and reads it, δόξα πατρὶ καὶ υἱῷ ᾧ ἁγίῳ πνεύματι, but as the Oxford Manuscript) δόξα πατρὶ ᾧ υἱῷ ἐν ἁγίῳ πνεύματι, Glory to the Father, and the Son in the Holy Ghost. These two several Forms, and some say a third [in the Son and the Holy Ghost] were it seems proposed against Athanasius in the Council of Antioch, An. Dom. 341. and by men of several perswasions used in the Church of Antioch, as a Character, by which τὴν ἰδιαίαν προαίρεσιν ἐπιδείκνυον, they expresst their several opinions, saith Sozomen. l. 3. c. 19. & l. 4. 27. and by so doing, πρὸς τὴν ἰδιαίαν δόξαν μεθάρμοζον τὸ ψαλλόμενον, every one applyed the Psalm or Hymn (to the end of which, as now with us, it was, it seems, then annext) to his opinion. In which narration of Philostorgius, we have no reason to suspect any thing, but the πρῶτος ἀπεδόυσε, that Flavianus was the first that sang it, wherein his favour to the Arrians might make him partial, or the truth might be, he was the first that sang it at Antioch, for there Athanasius was in a Council condemn'd, and so still the Form might in other places be used more antiently. This first verse being on this occasion brought into the Church as a testimony, and Pillar of the Catholick verity against the Arrians, and annext by ancient custom to the end of the Psalms in the Liturgy, St. Jerom, or some body before him, being moved by the noise of the Macedonians (who excepted against that part of it concerning the Holy Ghost, affirming that that Doctrine of the Divinity of the Holy Ghost was novel) is said to have been the Author of adding the other verse or line to the former, in opposition to them, As it was in the beginning, &c to signifie this to be the antient Catholick, no new private doctrine or opinion; and yet that it was very near, if not as antient as the former may be gheſt by what Theodoret, *l.*2. c. 24. saith of Leontius Bishop of Antioch, that he was wont to say to himself the Arrian Doxology so softly, that no word could be heard by him that stood next, but εἰς τὰς ἀιῶνας τῶν αἰώνων, for ever and ever, (the close of the second line) and this saith he, while Flavianus, who opposed him, was a Lay-man. And if this be a time wherein such Forms as these, (which besides giving glory to God, do secure and defend the Catholick Doctrine of the Trinity, against all antient and modern Arrians and Macedonians) are necessarily to be cast out, as hindrances to growth and edification, sure the design is only to plant Heresies in the Church (to which alone that may prove impediment) but nothing else.

* l. 18. c. 51.

Nay a mention we have of them in Concil. Vasens under Pope Julius in the reign of Constantius, though it were not delivered to the Latin Church till after the Council of Nice.

Sect. 34. Having said this, 'twill not be needful to add concerning the fourth head, more than only the acknowledgment of my wonder and astonishment, why the same calamity and tempest that carried away this lesser Creed, should also be able to raise so fierce a Torrent, as to drive and hurry with it the three larger Creeds also, especially that not only of the Nicene Fathers, but of the Apostles themselves; Against the matter of which I have not heard, that the Presbyterians have any objection, and sure the Beadsmans Divinity, that turns the Creed into a Prayer, hath not concluded the use of it to be a stinting of the Spirit. What the effect of this part of Reformation is likely to be, will not be hard to divine, even Barbarism and Atheism within a while, the turning God and Christ, and all the Articles of the Creed out of mens brains also, and not (as yet it is) only out of their hearts; what is the necessity of doing it, will not so easily be resolved even by him that hath imbibed the Assemblers principles, unless it be to gratifie the Separatists, who are profest denyers of one Article, that of the Holy Catholick Church, resolving the end and the effect of the Holy Ghosts descent to have been only to constitute particular Congregations, and none else. As for the great pattern of the Presbyterians, the practice of Geneva or Scotland, that appears by Knox's Common Prayer-Book, to have allowed a set Form of Confession of Faith, and designed it for the publick use as the first thing in that Book of Prayers, though the truth is, the Apostles, or other ancient Creeds being set aside, one of the Geneva forming is fain to supply the place of them, which yet by the setting the several parts of the Apostles Creed in the margent, both there and in the order of Baptism, appears rather to be an interpretation of it, and so still the Separatists must be the only men in the Church fit to be considered, or else apparently there is no such Political necessity of this neither.

Sect. 35. For the fifth thing, the so frequent repetition of the Lords Prayer, and Prayer for the King in our Service, this account may be briefly given of it. For the former, that in our Common Prayer-Book, there be several services for several occasions, of the Sacraments, &c. for several days, as the Litany; for several times in the day, not only Morning and Evening, but one part to be said earlier in the morning, and then toward noon a return to another part, (as the antient Primitives had three Services in a forenoon, 1. that for the Catechumeni, consisting of Prayers, Psalms, and Readings; then a 2. for the Penitents, such as our Litany; and a 3. for the Fideles, the Faithful, our Communion Service;) and even that which is assigned to one time so discontinued by Psalms and Hymns and Lessons, that it becomes in a manner two Services, clearly two times of Prayer. Now our Saviour commanding, when you pray, say, Our Father, we have accordingly so assigned it, to be once repeated in every such part of Service; and I remember to have heard one of the gravest and most reverend men of the Assembly, being asked his opinion about the use of the Lords Prayer, to have answer'd to this purpose, God forbid that I should ever be upon my knees in Prayer, and rise up without adding Christs form to my imperfect petitions. And whereas this Directory is so bountiful, as to recommend this Prayer to be used in the Prayers of the Church, and yet so wary as but to recommend it, it is thereby confest that it is lawful to retain a set Form, (for that is surely so and then the often using of a lawful thing will not make it unlawful) but withal that Christs Command in point of his Service shall no more oblige to obedience, than the commands of men, for if it did, this would be more than recommended. And now why that which may, say they, commendably (must say we necessarily in obedience to Christ) be used in the Prayers of the Church, and being repeated oftner than once, shall be useful to him who was not come at the first saying, or may be said more attentively by him who had before been too negligent, should be necessary to be used but once, when all mens zeal or understanding of so divine a Form, or perhaps presence at that part of the Service, shall not necessarily go along with it, I leave to more subtle Diviners to instruct us. This I am sure of, that God hath made a peculiar promise to importunity in Prayer, to a coming often to him on the same errand, and Luke 18. 5. by a phrase in the Parable seems to say, that he that comes oft to God in this manner, will at length force him to shame, if he do not grant his Petition; for that is the meaning of ὑπωπιάζειν. And from thence the Fathers use a bold phrase in their Liturgies, σὲ ὑποτάσσω τὸν μόνον ἀγαθὸν, I put thee to ſhame, i. e. importune thee, Baſil in Liturg. and in the Pſaltery of the Greek Church, which hath many Prayers mixt with it, οἶδα γὰρ κύριε εἰ μὴ ὑποπτῆ σὲ ἡ τῆς ἰδίας ἀγαθότητος, unleſs thy own goodneſs put thee to ſhame, &c. Now that this will not be ſubject to the cenſure of vain repetitions, Mat. 6. 7. which is the only exception made againſt it, (if the example of David, Pſalm 136. be not ſufficient to authorize the repeating any Form often, which is as faultleſs as that was) might largely be evidenced, 1. by the nature of the word βαττολογία, there uſed, which both Heſychius and Suidas apply to another matter, and explain it by πολυλογία, and ἀργολογία, and ἀκυρολογία, long, idle, unſeaſonable forms, ſuch as Battus uſed in his μακροὶ καὶ πολύστιχοι ὕμνοι ταυτολογίας ἔχοντες, his long-winded Hymns ſo full of Tautologies, which Munſter therefore rendreth לא תרבו את דבריכם do not multiply words, unprofitably or unſeaſonably: 2. by the cuſtoms of the Heathens which Chriſt there refers to [μὴ βαττολογήσητε ὥσπερ οἱ ἐθνικοὶ uſe not, &c. as the Heathens] and which are evident in their Writers, eſpecially their Tragedians; where 'tis plain, that their manner was to ſound, or chant for many hours together, ſome few empty words to the honour of their Gods, ſuch the Ἔνα βάκχε, in their Bacchanals, from the noiſe of which they were call'd Evantes; ſuch in Sophocles, Ἰὼ Ἰὼ, Παὶν, Παὶν, ὦ Παὶν, Παὶν, &c. and eſpecially in the Virgins Chorus of Æſchylus's Tragedy, call'd ἕπτα ἐπὶ Θήβαις. Where there are near a 100. Verſes, made up of meer tautologies, Ἰὼ, Ἰὼ, Ἰὼ, Ἰὼ, θεοὶ θεαίτε, and an enumeration of the ſeveral names of the Gods with unſignificant noiſes added to them, σύ, Ἄρη, ῥεῦ, ῥεῦ, Ἄρτεμι, φίλα ἕ ἕ ἕ, and within two Verſes the ſame again, and much more of the ſame ſtile. Two notable examples of this Heatheniſh cuſtom the Scripture affords us, one, 1 King. 18.26. where the Prophets of Baal from morning till noon, cry O Baal, hear us, and it follows, they cryed with a loud voice, and cut themſelves, במישפטם according to their cuſtom or rites (that loud crying the ſame words ſo long together, was as much a Heatheniſh rite, as the cutting of themſelves.) The other of the Epheſians, Acts 19. 34. who are affirm'd to have cryed with one voyce for two hours ſpace, Μεγάλη ἡ Ἄρτεμις Ἐφεσίων, Great is Diana of the Epheſians, and thirdly, by the deſigned ends that Chriſt obſerves of that Heathen cuſtom, 1. that they may be heard by that long noiſe, for which Elias ſcoffs them, 1 King. 18. 27. Cry aloud, perhaps your God is a talking, or a purſuing, &c. 2. that their Petitions may be more intelligible to their Gods, to which Chriſt oppoſes, your Heavenly Father knoweth what you have need of, and ſo needs not your Tautologies to explain them to him. Much more might be ſaid for the explaining of that miſtaken place, but that it would ſeem unneceſſary to this matter, the exception being ſo cauſleſs, that the Vindication would paſs for an extravagance.

Sect. 36. Of the Prayers for the King, the account will not be much unlike; Saint Paul commands that prayers, and ſupplications, and interceſſions, and thanksgivings be made for Kings, &c. 1 Tim. 2. 1,2. where though the mention of thoſe ſeveral ſorts of prayers, ſignified by thoſe four words, might be matter of apology, for the making ſeveral addreſſes to God for Kings in one ſervice, ſuppoſing them proportion'd to thoſe ſorts in that Text, yet have we diſtributed the frequent prayers for him into the ſeveral ſervices, one ſolemn prayer for him in the ordinary daily ſervice, (and only a verſicle before as it were proœmial to it) another in the Litany, another after the Commandments (of which though our Book have two forms together, yet both the Rubrick and Cuſtom, gives us authority to interpret, it was not meant that both ſhould be ſaid at once, but either of the two choſen by the Miniſter,) another before the Communion, where the neceſſity of the matter, being deſigned for the Church militant, makes it more than ſeaſonable to deſcend to our particular Church, and the King the ſupream of it; juſt as Herodotus relates the cuſtom of the Perſians, l. 1. p. 52. πάσι τοῖς περσῶσι κατευχεσθαι ἐν γίνεσθαι καὶ τῷ βασιλεῖ, they pray for all the Perſians, particularly for the King. To this practice of ours ſo grounded in the Apoſtle, we ſhall add, 1. the reward promiſed (by the Apoſtle's intimation) to ſuch Prayers (if not, as I conceive, by thoſe words, that we may live a peaceable and quiet life, &c. that peaceable and quiet life, of all bleſſings the greateſt, ſeeming to be a benefit or donative promiſed to the faithful diſcharge of that duty, of praying, and ſupplicating, and interceding, and giving thanks for Kings, yet certainly ſomewhat elſe) in that high Declaration made concerning it in the next words, for this is good and acceptable before God our Saviour, whoſe acceptation is reward ſufficient to any action, and yet who never accepts but rewards alſo. 2. The practice of the antient Chriſtians, ſet down by Tertull. Sacrificamus pro ſalute Imperatoris purâ prece, our prayers are ſent up a pure ſacrifice for the proſperity of the Emperour, and that quoties conveniebant, in another place, at every meeting or ſervice of the Church, & precantes ſemper pro omnibus Imperatoribus, vitam prolixam, Imperium ſecurum, domum tutam, exercitus fortes, Senatum fidelem, populum probum, Orbem quietum, quæcunque hominis & Cæſaris vota ſunt, praying always for the Emperours, and begging of God for them, long life, ſecure reign, the ſafety of his houſe, couragious Armies, a faithful Senate, a good people, a quiet World, all thoſe ſeverals, (which would make up more prayers than our Book hath aſſigned) all that either as Man or King they can ſtand in need of; according to that of the Greek Church who having a form of Prayer called στεφῶσαι ὁ θεὸς τοὺς βασιλεῖς, that God would eſtabliſh Kings, do ſay of themſelves when they uſe it, στεφῶμεν τοὺς βασιλεῖς, we do confirm the Kings, i. e. this prayer of ours tends to the confirming of Kings and Kingdoms. See Jac. à Godr. not. in Euchолog. p. 33. and ſo Athenagoras and others to the ſame purpoſe, eſpecially when they have occaſion to juſtifie the fidelity of Chriſtians to their unchriſtian Emperours, having no ſurer evidence to give of that, than the frequency of their prayers for them, which they which think neceſſary to abridge, or ſuperſede, muſt give us leave by that indication to judge of ſomewhat elſe, by occaſion of, that topick to obſerve their other demonſtrations of diſloyalty to thoſe that are ſet over them by God; And to any that are not guilty of that crime, nor yet of another, of thinking all length of the publick ſervice unſupportable, I ſhall refer it to be judged, whether it be neceſſary, that the King be prayed for in the Church, no oftner than there is a Sermon there.

Sect. 37. 6. The Communion of Saints, (which if it were no Article in our Creed, ought yet to be laid up, as one of the Chriſtians tasks or duties) conſiſts in that mutual exchange of charity and all ſeaſonable effects of it, between all parts of the Church, that triumphant in Heaven, Chriſt and the Saints there, and this on earth militant; which he that diſclaims, by that one act of inſolence, caſts off one of the nobleſt priviledges of which this earth is capable, to be a fellow Citizen with the Saints, and a fellow member with Chriſt himſelf. The effects of this charity on their parts is, in Chriſts interceſſion, and in the Saints ſuffrages, and daily prayers to God for us, but on our part thankſgivings and commemorations; which were firſt uſed in the Temple and Synagogue, and are oft mentioned by Syracides, under the title of ὑμνολογίαι Κυρίου, *c.*47. 6. and μνημόσυνον ἐν ὑμνολογίαις, *c.*46. 11. 49. 10 (and εἰς ὑμνολογίαν, 1 Mac. 3. 7.) a form of which we have in the 44. c. of that Book, which in the Greek was antiently inſcribed Πατέρων ὕμνος, the Hymn, or praiſe of the Fathers, and begins with Αἰνέσωμεν ἄνδρας ὑμνήσεως καὶ πατέρας—— And the ſame 'tis apparent the Primitive Chriſtians uſed very early, ſolemnizing the day of Chriſts reſurrection, &c. and rehearſing the names of the Saints out of their Dypticks, in time of the offertory before the Sacrament; beſides this ſo ſolemn a Chriſtian duty, another act of charity there is, which the Church owes to her living Sons, the educating them in the preſence of good examples, and ſetting a remark of honour on all which have lived Chriſtianly, eſpecially have died in teſtimony of the truth of that profeſſion; and again, a great part of the New Teſtament, being ſtory of the lives of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, (and the reſt but doctrine agreeable to what thoſe lives expreſſed) it muſt needs be an excellent compendium of that Book, and a moſt uſeful way of infuſing it into the underſtanding, and preſerving it in the memory of the People, to aſſign proper portions of Scripture in Leſſons, Epiſtles, and Goſpels to every day, every Sunday, every Feſtival in the Year (which are none in our Church, but for the remembrance of Chriſt and the Scripture-Saints) to infuſe by thoſe degrees all neceſſary Chriſtian knowledge, and duties into us, the uſe of which to the ignorant is ſo great, that it may well be fear'd, that when the Feſtivals, and ſolemnities for the birth of Chriſt, and his other famous paſſages of life and death, and reſurrection and aſcenſion, and miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, and the Leſſons, Goſpels (and Collects) and Sermons upon them, be turn'd out of the Church, together with the Creeds alſo, 'twill not be in the power of weekly Sermons on ſome head of Religion, to keep up the knowledge of Chriſt in mens hearts, a thing it ſeems obſerv'd by the Caſuiſts, who uſe to make the number of thoſe things that are neceſſariò credenda, neceſſary to be believed, no more, than the Feſtivals of Chriſt make known to men, and ſure by the antient Fathers, whoſe Preaching was generally on the Goſpels for the day; as appears by their Sermons de tempore, and their poſtils. To all theſe ends, are all theſe Feſtivals, and theſe Services deſigned by the Church, (and to no other, that is capable of any the leaſt brand of novel or ſuperſtitious) and till all this antidote ſhall be demonſtrated to be turn'd poyſon, all theſe wholeſom deſigns, to be perfectly noxious, till ill or no examples, uncharitableneſs, ſchiſmatical cutting our ſelves off from being fellow-members with the Saints, and even with Chriſt our Head, till ingratitude, ignorance, and Atheiſm it ſelf, be canonized for Chriſtian and Saint-like, and the only things tending to edification in a Church, there will hardly appear any ſo much as politick neceſſity to turn theſe out of it.

Sect. 38. 7. For the reading of the Commandments, and prayer before, and the reſponſes after each of them, though it be not antiently to be found in the Church, as a part of the Service, (but only retain'd in the Catechiſm) till King Edwards ſecond Liturgy, (and therefore ſure no charge of Popery to be affixt on it) yet ſeemeth it to me a very profitable part of devotion, being made uſe of as it ought. The Prieſt after a premiſed prayer for grace to love and keep Gods Commandments, is appointed to ſtand and read every of the Commandments diſtinctly to the People, as a kind of Moſes, bringing them from God to them; Theſe are they to receive in the humbleſt affection of heart, and poſture of body, as means to try and examine themſelves, to humble themſelves in a ſenſe of their ſeveral failings, and thereupon implore (every one for himſelf, and for others, even for the whole Kingdom) firſt Gods mercy for pardon for all that hath been committed againſt the letter of each Commandment, or what-ever Chriſt and the Goſpel hath ſet down under any, or reducible to any of thoſe heads, 2. Grace to perform for the time to come, what ever may be acceptable to Chriſt in that particular. This being thus diſtinctly and leiſurely done to each particular precept, the heart enlarging to every particular under that, proves an excellent form of confeſſion of ſins, and of reſolution (and prayer for ſtrength) to forſake them. And let me tell you, were Gods pardon thus fervently and often called for by each humble ſoul in a Kingdom, for every mans perſonal, and the whole Kingdoms National ſins, the Atheiſm ſpeculative and practical, the impiety, infidelity, want of love and fear, and worſhip of God, &c. in the firſt Commandment, and ſo throughout all the reſt, and the grace of God, to work all the contrary graces in every heart, in the heart of the whole Kingdom, as humbly and heartily invoked, the benefit would certainly be ſo great, and ſo illuſtrious, that none but Satan, who is to be dethroned, and part with his Kingdom by that means, would ever deem it neceſſary to caſt out this part of Service, and have nothing at all in change for it.

Sect. 39. 8. For the order of the Offertory, it muſt firſt be obſerved, that in the Primitive Apoſtolick Church, the Offertory was a conſiderable part of the action, in the adminiſtring and receiving the Sacrament; the manner of it was thus. At their meetings for divine Service, every man as he was able brought ſomething along with him, bread or wine, the fruits of the Seaſon, &c. of this, part was uſed for the Sacrament, the reſt kept to furniſh a common Table for all the brethren (and therefore in Ignatius, δοχὴν ἐπιτελεῖν, to celebrate the Feaſt, is to adminiſter that Sacrament being joyn'd there with the mention of Baptiſm) Rich and Poor to eat together, no one taking precedence of other, or challenging a greater part to himſelf, by reaſon of his bringing more; this is diſcernible in Saint Pauls words, chiding the Corinthians for their defaults in this matter, 2 Cor. 11. 21. every man, ſaith he, takes and eats before another his own ſupper, (i.e.) the Rich that brought more, eats that which he brought, ὡς ἴδιον δεῖπνον, as if he were at home eating his own private meals, without reſpect to the nature of thoſe ἀγάπαι, which were a common meal for all, and ſo while one is filled to the full, ſome others have little or nothing to eat, which is the meaning of that which follows, one is hungry and another is drunken; after the ἀγάπαι ceaſed, and the bringing of the fruits of the ſeaſon, which were as a kind of firſt-fruit offering, was out-dated, whether by Canon of the Church, or by contrary cuſtom, this manner was ſtill continued, that every receiver brought ſomewhat with him to offer, particularly bread, and wine mixt with water. Juſtin Mart. Apol. 2. p. 97. ſets down the manner manner of it clearly in his time, προσφέρεται τῷ προεστῶτι τῶν ἀδελφῶν ἄρτος, &c. the bread and the wine of the Brethren, i. e. Communicants is brought to the Prieſt or Prefect, (not as the Latine interpreter reads Prafecto fratrum) as if ἀδελφῶν, were to be joyn'd with προεστῶτι, which belongs to ἄρτος) and he receiving it, gives laud and praiſe unto God, in the name of the Son and the Holy Ghoſt, and all the people joyn in the Amen, then do the Deacons diſtribute that ἄρτον εὐχαριστηθέντα, the bread, over which he hath thus given thanks, and then ſaith he, over and above, the richer ſort, and every one as he ſhall think good, contributes, and that which is ſo raiſed, is left with the Prieſt, who out of that ſtock ſuccours the Orphan and Widow, and becomes a common provider for all that are in want. This clearly diſtinguiſheth two parts of the Offertory, one deſigned for the uſe of all the Faithful in the Sacrament, another reſerved for the uſe of the poor, the former called προσφοραὶ, Oblations, in the Council of Laodicea, the other παπροφορίαι, in that of Gangra, and proportionably, the repoſitory for the firſt called Sacrarium in the fourth Council of Carthage, Can. 93. (and by Poſſidonius in the life of Saint Auguſtine, Secretarium unde altari neceſſaria inferuntur, where thoſe things are laid, and from whence fetcht which are neceſſary to the Altar) the other Gazophylacium or treaſury, the firſt Saint Cyprian calls Sacrificia ſacrifices, the ſecond Eleemoſyna Almes, l. de op. & Eleem. parallel to thoſe which we find both together mentioned, Acts 24. 17. I came to bring almes to my Nation and offerings. This ſaith Juſtin Martyr is our Chriſtian Sacrifice, which will more appear to him that conſiders that the feaſting of the People, their partaking of the Sacrifice, having their τόμας and μερίδας, was always annexed to ſacrifices, both among Jews and Heathens, which the Apoſtle calls partaking of the Altar, and conſequently that the Sacrifice, and the feaſt together, the ſacrifice in the offertory, the feaſt in the eating and drinking there, do compleat and make up the whole buſineſs of this Sacrament, as far as the people are concerned in it; and all this bleſt by the Prieſt, and God bleſt and praiſed by Prieſt and People, and ſo the title of Euchariſt belongs to it. Thus, after Juſtin, Irenaus. The offertory of the Chriſtians is accounted a pure ſacrifice with God, as when Saint Paul, ſaith he, mentions the acts of the Philippians liberality, he calls them θυσίαν δεκτὴν, an acceptable ſervice (and ſo Heb. 3. 16. to do good and to Communicate forget not, ſuch acts of liberality to thoſe that want, for with ſuch ſacrifices God is well pleaſed,) and preſently defines what this Sacrifice was, primitia earum quæ ſunt ejus creaturarum, the firſt-fruits of Gods creatures. So Tertullian, modicam unuſquiſque ſtipem menſtruâ die adponit, every one brings ſomewhat every Month, juſt parallel to our Offertory at Monthly Communions; Much more might be ſaid of this out of antient Conſtitutions and Canons, if 'twere not for my deſire of brevity. Effectually St. Cyprian, Locuples & dives es, & dominicam celebrare te credis, & corbonam non reſpicis, qui in dominicum ſine ſacrificio venis, qui partem de ſacrificio quod pauper obtulit, ſumis? Art thou rich, and thinkeſt thou receiveſt as thou oughteſt, and reſpecteſt not the Corban, feedeſt on the poor mens Sacrifice, and bringeſt none thy ſelf? And Saint Auguſtine to the ſame purpoſe; And 'tis worth obſerving that many Authorities, which the Papiſts produce for the external Sacrifice of the body of Chriſt in the Maſſe, are but the detorſion and diſguiſing of thoſe places which belong to the Offertory of the People, and in the Canon of the Maſſe, that prayer which is uſed for the offering up of Chriſt, (larded with ſo many croſſes) plainly betrays it ſelf to have been firſt inſtituted in relation to theſe gifts and oblations, as appears by the mention of Abels ſacrifice, and Melchiſedecks offering (that of Abels the firſtlings of the flock, Melchizedecks a preſent only of Bread and Wine to Abraham) and the per quem hæc omnia ſemper bona creas (by whom thou createſt all theſe good things) which belongs evidently to the firſtlings of the flock, thoſe living creatures ſacrificed by Abel, but is by them now moſt ridiculouſly applyed to the body of Chriſt. I have been thus large in ſhewing the original of the Offertory, becauſe it hath in all ages been counted a ſpecial part of divine worſhip, the third part of the Chriſtian Holocauſt, ſaith Aquinas, 2a. 2æ. q. 85. art. 3. ad 2. the obſervation of which is yet alive in our Liturgie (I would it had a more chearful univerſal reception in our practice) eſpecially if that be true which Honorius ſaith, that inſtead of the antient oblation of Bread and Wine, the offering of money was by conſent receiv'd into the Church in memory of the pence in Judas's ſale. Now that this offering of Chriſtians to God for pious and charitable uſes, deſigned to them who are his Proxies and Deputy receivers, may be the more liberally and withal more ſolemnly performed, many portions of Scripture are by the Liturgie deſigned to be read to ſtir up and quicken this bounty, and thoſe of three ſorts, ſome belonging to good works in general, others to almes-deeds, others to oblations, and when it is received and brought to the Prieſt, he humbly prays God to accept thoſe almes, and this is it which I call the ſervice of the Offertory, ſo valued and eſteemed among all Antients, but wholly omitted in this Directory (only a caſual naming of a Collection for the Poor by way of a ſage caution, that it be ſo order'd, that no part of the publick worſhip be thereby hindred) upon what grounds of policy or pretence of neceſſity, I know not, unleſs out of that great fear, leſt works of charity (which the Apoſtle calls an acceptable ſacrifice, and with which God is well pleaſed) ſhould paſs for any part of the ſervice or worſhip of God, which after praying to him is an act that hath the greateſt remark, and higheſt character ſet upon it, and when it is thus in the Offertory, is accounted pars cultûs, a part of worſhip, ſay the School-men. And beſide, where it is uſed, as it ought, proves of excellent benefit (when prudent faithful Officers have the diſpenſing of it) toward the ſupplying and preventing the wants of all, μᾶλλον δὲ χρεία ἐστὶ χειμῶνι γίνεται, the Miniſter is thereby enabled to be the guardian of all that are in want, ſaith Juſtine M. Apol. 2. and ſure neceſſity hath little or no law or reaſon in it, when the rejecting of ſuch cuſtoms as theſe proves the only neceſſary.

9. For private Baptiſm, that which our Liturgy preſcribes is, that all poſſible care be taken, that all Children that are to be Baptized be brought to Church, and not without great cauſe and neceſſity Baptized at home in their houſes. And yet when great need ſhall compel them ſo to do, then an order of adminiſtring it is preſcribed, ſuch as in caſe the Child dye, it may not be deprived of the Sacrament, and in caſe it live, it may as publickly be preſented, and with Prayer received into the Church, and pronounced to be baptized already, which is equivalent, as if it had been baptized in the publick. The clear confeſt ground of this practice is the deſire of the Church not to be wanting to any the meaneſt creature, in allowing it that which Chriſt hath given it right to, and to encourage and ſatisfie the charitable deſires of Parents, which in danger of inſtant death require it for them. ſeems clearly to be acknowledg'd by the Compilers of this Directory, pag. 41. where 'tis affirmed, that the poſterity of the Faithful born within the Church, have by their birth (not by their living to the next Lords day, or till they can be brought to Church) intereſt in the Covenant and right to the ſeal of it, (which ſure is Baptiſm) and then what neceſſity there is, that they that are acknowledg'd to have right to that ſeal, ſhould yet not be permitted to have it, (as in caſe private Baptiſm be excluded, ſome of them infallibly ſhall not) I profeſs my underſtanding too ſhort to reach. And as ignorant I muſt confeſs to be alſo, why, when they come to the Congregation, it ſhould be utterly unlawful for them to be Baptized in the place where Fonts have hitherto been placed, i. e. near the door of the Church, as the Directory appoints; A new ſcandalous piece it ſeems of Popery and Superſtition, (which is as dangerous as private Baptiſm, and therefore with it together forbidden) and yet very antient, and far from any ſuperſtitious intent; Baptiſm being at firſt in any convenient Pond or River, as the Goſpel, and after that Juſt. Martyr tells us, and is noted by the word βαπτίζω, which is literally, to dope over head in the water, and by the word κολυμβήθρα, a ſwimming or diving place, by which the Fathers expreſs the Font. But when Churches were built, then there was an erection alſo of Baptiſteria, at firſt without, but after within the Churches, and thoſe placed near the πρόναος, or Porch of the Church, on no other deſign undoubtedly, than to ſignifie the Sacrament there celebrated to be a rite of initiation, or entrance into the Church, (as the Chancel or upper part of the Chuch was aſſigned unto the other Sacrament to ſignifie it to belong to thoſe only that were come to ſome perfection) againſt which 'tis not poſſible any thing ſhould be objected of unfitneß, but that the Miniſters voice will not in ſome Churches ſo eaſily be heard by the whole Congregation, which if it may not be helpt, by raiſing his voice at that time, will not yet infuſe any Popery or Superſtition into it, the charge that is here ſo heavily laid on it, (as well as that of unfitneß) of which if it be guilty, Superſtition is become a ſtrange ubiquitary, ready to flye and affix it ſelf to any thing they will have it, and ſhall as juſtly be faſten'd by me on their negative, or prohibition of Baptiſm in that place [it is not to be adminiſtred in the places where Fonts, &c.] as upon our poſitive appointing it. For ſure if a ſignificant rite or deſignation of place, &c. without any other guilt, than that it is ſo, be ſuperſtitious, an unſignificant interdiction of it will be as much, and if the poſitive ſuperſtition be to be condemned, the negative muſt be ſo alſo.

Apol. 2. in fine.

Sect. 40. 10. For the preſcript form of Catechiſm, it is placed by our Church in our Liturgy, and as fit to be placed there as any directions for Preaching can be in theirs, (which takes up ſo great a part in their Religion, and conſequently in their Directory) the previous inſtruction of youth being ſo much more neceſſary than that, as a foundation is than any part of the ſuperſtructure, that being neceſſary to the end only, but this over and above neceſſary to make capable of the other neceſſary. Of this particular Catechiſm I might ſay ſomewhat, which would be worthy to be obſerved in theſe times, how much Chriſtian prudence the Church hath ſhewed in it, in ſetting down for all to learn, only thoſe few things which are neceſſary to the plaineſt and meaneſt, for the direction of Chriſtian faith and practice; and if we would all keep our ſelves within that moderation, and propoſe no larger Catalogue of credenda to be believ'd by all than the Apoſtles Creed, as 'tis explain'd in our Catechiſm, doth propoſe, and lay the greater weight upon conſideration and performance of the vow of Baptiſm, and all the commands of God as they are explained (and ſo the obligation to obedience inlarged) by Chriſt, and then only add the explication of the nature and uſe of the Sacraments, in thoſe moſt commodious and intelligible expreſſions (and none other) which are there ſet down, I ſhould be confident there would be leſs hating and damning one another (which is moſt ordinarily for opinions) more piety and charity, and ſo true Chriſtianity among Chriſtians and Proteſtants, than hitherto hath been met with. But ſeeing, though this be fit to be ſaid, yet 'tis unneceſſary in this place, this Catechiſm being not put in balance with any other way of inſtructing youth in the Directory, but only ſold or caſt away for nought and no money, nothing taken or offered in exchange for it, I am ſuperſeded from this, and only left to wonder why Catechizing of Children in the faith and knowledge of their vowed duty, (which I hope is no ſtinting of their Spirits) ſhould be one of thoſe burthens which 'tis ſo neceſſary ſhould be thrown off, and not ſo much as conſider'd in this Directory.

Sect. 41. 11. For Confirmation, which (being a thing wherein the Biſhop is a party, will, I muſt expect, be matter of ſome envy and odium but to name it, and) being ſo long and ſo ſcandalouſly neglected in this Kingdom (though the rule have alſo been ſevere and careful in requiring it) will now not ſo eaſily be digeſted, having thoſe vulgar prejudices againſt it, yet muſt I moſt ſolemnly profeſs my opinion of it, That it is a moſt antient Chriſtian cuſtom, tending very much to edification. Which I ſhall make good by giving you this view of the manner of it. It is this, that every Rector of any Pariſh, or Curate of charge, ſhould by a familiar way of Catechizing inſtruct the youth of both ſexes within his Cure in the principles of Religion, ſo far, that every one of them before the uſual time of coming to the Lords Supper, ſhould be able to underſtand the particulars of the vow made in Baptiſm for the credenda and facienda, yea and fugienda alſo, what muſt be believed, what done, and what forſaken; and be able to give an intelligent account of every one of theſe, which being done, every ſuch Child ſo prepared, ought to be brought to the Biſhop for Confirmation. Wherein the intent is, that every ſuch Child attain'd to years of underſtanding ſhall ſingly and ſolemnly before God, the Biſhop and the whole Congregation, with his own mouth, and his own conſent, take upon himſelf, the obligation to that, which his Godfathers and Godmothers in Baptiſm promiſed in his name, and before all thoſe reverend witneſſes, make a firm publick renew'd promiſe, that by Gods help he will faithfully endeavour to diſcharge that obligation in every point of it, and perſevere in it all the days of his life. Which reſolution and promiſe ſo heightned with all thoſe ſolemnities, will in any reaſon have a mighty impreſſion on the Child, and an influence on his actions for ever after. And this being thus performed by him, the Biſhop ſhall ſeverally impoſe his hands upon every ſuch Child (a Ceremony uſed to this purpoſe by Chriſt himſelf,) and bleß, and pray for him, that now that the temptations of ſin begin more ſtrongly, in reſpect of his age, to aſſault him, he may receive grace and ſtrength againſt all ſuch temptations or aſſaults, by way of prevention and eſpecial aſſiſtance, without which obtained by prayer from God, he will never be able to do it. This is the ſum of Confirmation, and were irrightly observed (and no man admitted to the Lords Supper, that had not thus taken the Baptism-bond from his sureties into his own name, and no man after that suffered to continue in the Church, which brake it wilfully, but turn'd out of those sacred Courts, by the power of the keys in excommunication) it would certainly prove, by the blessing of God, there begged, a most effectual means to keep men, at least within some terms of Christian civility, from falling into open enormous sins; and that the defaming and casting out of this so blameless gainful Order should be necessary or useful to any policy, save only to defend the Devil from so great a blow, and to sustain and uphold his Kingdom. I never had yet any temptation or motive to suspect or imagine. Instead of considering any objections of the adversary, against this piece, whether of Apostolical or Ecclesiastical discipline (which I never heard with any colour produced) I shall rather express my most passionate wish unto my Friends, those who sincerely wish the good of this National Church, that they will endeavour their utmost to revive these means of regaining the purity and exemplary lives of all its members, when God by restoring our Peace shall open a door for it.

12. For the Solemnities of Burial, as they are certainly useless to them who are dead, so are they not designed by us but to the benefit of the living in Lessons and Prayers upon those occasions, as also for the freeing us from the imputation of rudeness and uncivility (which Christianity teaches no body) to those bodies which shall have their parts in the resurrection, and to their memories, which the obligation of Kindred and friendship, at least the common band of Christianity, makes precious to us; and that it should be necessary, and tend to edification, not to pray such seasonable Prayers, hear, and impress upon our hearts such seasonable Lessons, (at a time when they are exemplified before our eyes, and our hearts being softned with mourning, are become more malleable) to perform such laudable Christian Civilities, only for fear we should (not pray but) be thought to pray to or for them, over whom, or near whose Hearse, or by or toward whom we thus pray, (which that we do not, our Prayers that then we use, are ready to testifie) is another unreasonable, able to evidence the power of prejudice and faction to any that is not sufficiently convinced of it.

13. For that of thanksgiving after Child-birth, as it may be acknowledged to be taken up in proportion to, or imitation of Purification among the Jews, so is it not thereby lyable to any charge of evil; For herein is a marvelous mistake among men, to think that because the continuing of circumcision was so forbidden by Saint Paul, Gal. 5. 2. therefore it should be unlawful for any Christian Church, to institute any usage which had ever been commanded the Jews. For the reasons which made the retaining of circumcision so dangerous, will not be of any force against other customes of the Jews, as 1. That it was prest by the Judaizing Christians, as necessary to justification, Gal. 5. 4. which is in effect the disclaiming of Christ or of any profit, Ver. 2. or effect, Ver. 4. by him, a falling from Grace, and renouncing the Gospel. 2. That it was contrary to that liberty or manumission from the Judaical Law which Christ had purchased, ver. 13. to have circumcision imposed as a Law of God's still obligatory, when Christ by his death hath cancell'd it. 3. That some carnal professors, which thought by this means to escape the opposition, and persecution, which then followed the doctrine of Christ, and profession of Christianity, did much boast that they put themselves and their Disciples in a course to avoid the Cross, Chap. 6. 12. which is the meaning of that, ver. 13. that they may glory in your flesh, i. e. in your being circumcised, as that is by Saint Paul opposed to glorying in the Cross, ver. 14. i. e. the persecution that followed profession of the Gospel, as chap. 5. 11. he mentions it as the only reason of his being persecuted, that he would not Preach Circumcision: agreeable to which is that of Ignatius in Ep. ad Magnes. Εἰ μέχρι νῦν κατὰ νόμον Ἰουδαϊκὸν, &c. If we till now live according to the Law of the Jews and circumcision of the flesh, we deny that we have received grace, for the divinest Prophets lived according to Jesus Christ, and διὰ τοῦτο, for doing so were persecuted, which they that desired to avoid, and therefore would be circumcised, or Preach circumcision, those are the men Saint Paul so quarrels with, as those that would not suffer for Christs sake, that were not much in love with that Cross of his. To which a fourth reason may also be added, that many of the Ceremonies of the Law did presignifie the future Messias, and the teaching the necessity of such observances as not yet abolisht, is the professing Christ not to be the Messias. All which notwithstanding, it still remains very possible, that a rite formerly commanded the Jews not as significative of the future Messias, but as decent in the worship of God, without any depending on it for justification, without any opinion that the Jewish law obliges us, and without any fear of being persecuted by the Jews, or consequent compliance with them, may now be prescribed by the Christian Church, meerly as a humane institution, judging that decent or useful now which was so then, and in this case if nothing else can be objected against it, save only that God once thought fit to prescribe it to his own People, there will be little fear of danger in, or fault to be found with any such usage. For it is an ordinary observation which Paulus Fagius in his Notes on the Targum (a most learned Protestant) first suggested to me, that many of the Jewish Ceremonies were imitated by Christ himself under the Gospel. I might shew it you in the Apostles, who were answerable to the שלוחים the missi or messengers among the Jews, and were by Christ our High-Priest sent abroad to all Nations to bring in (that peculium, which of all others he counted most his due, having paid so dear for it,) sinners to their Saviour, as they were among the Jews sent by the High-Priest to fetch in the dues to the Temple. So also the imposition of hands, a form of benediction among the Jews, as antient as Jacob himself, Gen. 48. 14. in blessing Josephs Sons, and is often used by Christ to that same purpose. And even the two Sacraments are of this nature, Baptism related to the βαπτισμοὶ, washings used by them at the initiating or admitting of Proselytes, and Christs taking bread, and giving Thanks, &c. after Supper (wherein the other Sacrament was first instituted) was directly the postcœnium among the Jews, not a peculiar part of the Passeover-Feast, but a Ceremony after all Feasts, very usual among them. So the word ἐκκλησία, from the Assemblies civil or sacred among the Jews, is made use of to signifie the Christian Church, which Christ was to gather together. So the Lords day one day in seven, proportionable to their Sabbath. So πρεσβύτεροι, Elders among the Jews are brought by the Apostles to signifie an Order in the Church, and πρεσβυτέρια Colledges of many of them together, called by Ignatius, συνήματα ἱερὰ, sacred societies, συμβουλοὶ καὶ συνεδρευταὶ τῆ ἐπισκόπῃ, counsellers and assistants of the Bishop, and his συνέδριον, in Ep. ad Trall. are parallel to the Sanhedrim, or Council of Elders that were joyned to Moses in his government to facilitate the burthen to him. The same may be said of the Deacons which were an imitation of the גזבר the Treasurer or Steward among them, and consequently the place, where the goods which they were to distribute were kept, is (parallel to their חזאנה) γαζοφυλάκιον, the treasury, and so the Bishop also, saith Grotius, is a transcript of the ראש הקהל the head of the Congregation. And the Patriarchs among Christians are taken from the heads of the Tribes among them, called ordinarily by the 72. ἀρχοντες πατριῶν, and in the New Testament πατριαρχαί. Add unto these the Christian Censure of Excommunication answerable to their ἀποσυναγωγία (whether it were from sacred or only from civil Assemblies among them, it matters little, for the civil among them may be accommodated to Ecclesiastical among Christians, as in some of the foremention'd is acknowledged, and as the word συναγωγὴ, which signifies primarily any kind of Assembly, and is so taken, Mat. 6. 5. is appropriated to a place of divine worship in other places) and in the several degrees of it in the Christian Church, answerable to their Nidui, Cherem, and Schammatha; And so for Absolution also. All this I have said, and might add much more to make the demand appear no unreasonable one, that it may be lawful for the Church to use a custome, which hath some resemblance of some Ceremony in force antiently among the Jews, viz. that of the Purification of Women in our Churching. Which objection being removed, there will remain no other, and then that it should be simply unlawful or unedifying, to take notice of the deliverance of each Woman, or to pay acknowledgments to God for it, and necessary to set up such Schools of ingratitude in the Church, is more than ingenuous nature will suffer any Christian to believe upon the bare authority of these Assemblers.

Sect. 44. 14. The Communion of the sick, if it be Superstition and Popery also, (as sure is implyed by the no mention of it at the visitation of the sick in the Directory) 'tis sure of a very long standing in the Church. The Canons of the Councils about the Lapsi and Excommunicate, that generally take care that they should have the Peace of the Church in extremis (answerable to our Absolution at that time) and if with expressions of penitent hearts they desire it, the Sacrament also, are evidences so clear of this custome, that I shall not need produce any testimonies; those that are moved with the practice of Antiquity being sufficiently furnisht with them; If any man be unsatisfied in this, let him read the famous story of the dying Serapion in Eusebius, l. 6. c. 36. And that it should be necessary to the edification of the Church, that the viaticum, (as the Fathers call'd it) should be denied every hungring and thirsting Traveller at that time when it might yield him most comfort, and our charity most inclines us to allow it him, nay that the Church should be thought to suffer by that in any eminent manner (if it were ill) which is done privately, only to some particular, (and order taken that all publickly should be warned to receive the Communion frequently in the Church, and so not want it on the bed, or trouble the Minister then for it) and consequently the Church perhaps never hear of it, this is again a new kind of necessity, to be fetcht from some under-ground Fundamental Laws of I know not whose laying, that the Christian Church never heard of till these times.

Sect. 45. 15. As for the Service of the Commination, fitted for the first day in Lent, which by denuntiations against particular sins under the Law, (appointed to be read to, and attested by the People with an Amen of acknowledgment, that every such offender is by the Law cursed, not of prayer that he may be so dealt with in Gods justice) is designed to bring men to humiliation and contrition for sin, the special duty of that day and the ensuing season, and closeth with most affectionate prayers for such penitents; it is matter of some panick senceless fears to some ignorant men (which are very tender and passionate friends to their beloved sins, and dare not subscribe to the condemnation of them) but very useful to awake even those and all others out of this security, as a Feaver to cure the Lethargick, to kindle a fire about mens ears, that they may see their danger, and make out to the use of all Christian means of repentance and devotion, and laying hold on Christ to avert it; and if such a bug-bear as that of being thought to curse our selves and friends in the saying Amen to the threatnings (which will be true to all impenitents whether we say Amen or no) be sufficient to exorcise such an exorcist, to cast out of the Church such a powerful means of bringing sinners to repentance, or if bare prejudice of the Assemblers without either hearing or objecting against it, be enough to make it necessary to be left out of our service, the Devil will never be in danger from his enemies, as long as he may have but the spell of the Directory to put them thus to flight for him.

Sect. 46. Lastly, for the observation of Lent, &c. if they be consider'd in general as Fasts, there will sure be no necessity to renounce them, the Jews had their Fasts as well as Feasts (and those set publick, not only voluntary private Fasts) and not only that great day of Expiation appointed by God himself, but occasional ones appointed by men, and yet, when appointed, as constantly observ'd as that other, the Fast of the fourth month, of the fifth, of the seventh, and of the tenth month, Zach. 8. 19. and under Christianity, though in the time of Christs presence with the Disciples, they fasted not, yet the fasting of Johns Disciples, nay the twice a week of the Pharisees themselves, is not (though mention'd, yet) reprehended, but implicitly approv'd by Christ, and of his own, saith he, they should not have that immunity long, the days shall come when the Bridegroom should be taken away (and that is ever since Christs ascension) and then shall they fast in those days. 'Twere easie to justifie this through the writings, and by the practice of the whole Church of God, till these days of θυμὸς and ἐπιθυμία let loose, till these days of animosities and Epicurisme have made the usage of Fasts by Papists, a command to us not to use them, and to conclude the abating any thing of our gluttony to be an intrenchment on our Christian Liberty, and both those deceits together quarrell'd all Christian times of fasting out of our practice first, then out of our Kalendar. This being said in general of fasting, the application of this to these fasts of the Church, will be indisputably satisfactory to any, that shall

but consider the occasions of each of them, of the Lenten-fast, the known forty days example of abstinence in Christ, whereupon saith St. Jerom, unam quadragesimam sec. traditionem Apostolorum, &c. jejunamus, We fast the Lent according to the tradition of the Apostles, and Epiphanius joyns with him to make the Lent-fast an Apostolical tradition, and others of the Antients concurring for the practice of it; if not so punctual for the tradition; St. Basil may speak for all in hom. 2. of Fasting, that there was no age nor place, but knew it and observed it. And then I know no necessity of despising Christs pattern, and Apostolical practice, unless it be the same which obliges to the destroying of Episcopacy (which as it is an imparity opposite to the equality of Presbyters, is clearly deducible from both those Authorities, to which it seems this year is resolv'd to prove fatal;) that so there may be at length as little imitation of Christ among us, as reverence to Apostles. Then for Rogation week, though the original or occasion of that cannot be deduced so high, but is by Historians referred to * Claud. Mamertus Bishop of Vienne in France, for the averting of some Judgments, which on the observation of many inauspicious accidents and prodigies were sadly feared to be approaching, yet was the observation of it more universal, pene per * orbem totum, saith, Alcimus then, and then sure will it not be Necessary to turn the Fasts, or the Litanies, or the Services assigned to it out of the Church, as long as dangers are either present, impendent, or possible, or indeed as long as there be sins enough among us to abode us ill, or provoke any wrath of Heaven, any judgments on us; And when all those occasions cease, I am content those Services may be laid aside also, i.e. when we meet all together in Heaven. Next, the Ember weeks are of great Antiquity in the Church called the quatuor tempora in the Latin Fathers, the four seasons of the year, (each called by the old Saxons ymbryn i.e. περιόδους, from emb circum, and ryn run, Cursus, viz. the return of the Sun to the same point, from whence rather than from the Greek ἡμέραι, I conceive is the English Ember) and (beside the first institution of them for quarterly seasons of devotion proportion'd to each part of the year, as the first-fruits of every season, that the whole and each division of it might be blest by it; and again, beside their answerableness to those four times of solemn Fast mention'd among the Jews, that we Christians may not be inferiour unto them in that duty) an admirable use is assign'd to them in the Church, in imitation of the Apostles, Act. 13. 3. by Fasting and Prayer to prepare for the ordination of Ministers immediately consequent to every such week, that God would send, and furnish worthy Instruments of his glory to serve him in that glorious Office, and till Ministers are acknowledg'd to be generally so good, that either they cannot or need not be better, till those are also grown immortal (as the framers of this Ordinance) and so no use of care for succession, I shall suppose it not over necessary to precipitate these out of the Church of Christ, but rather wish that there were in our Liturgy some Service appointed of Lessons and Prayers for this purpose, to be used constantly on the dayes of Fast through those weeks.

* Epist. 54 ad Marcellin.

* See the beginning and description of it in Alcimus Avitus his Hom. de Rogation.

* See Greg Turon. l. 2. Hist. c. 34. Conc. Aurel. 1 Can. 27. ab omnibus Ecclesiis placuit celebrari, and Concil Lugd. 2. can. 6.

Thus have I, as briefly as I could, examined all the pretended exuberances of our Liturgy, which have required it thus to be more than lanced even to a deliquium animæ, to many fainting fits along while, and at last to its fatal period, if our Assemblers may be allowed of the Jury, and this Ordinance have leave to be the executioner; And as yet to the utmost of our impartial thoughts can we not discern the least degree of Necessity, of any the most moderate signification of the word, to own so tragical an Exit. The leaves which have been spent in this search, as it may seem unnecessarily, might perhaps have been better employed; Yet will it not be unreasonable to expect a favourable reception of them, when 'tis considered, that by this means a farther labour is spared, there needing no farther answer to the whole body of the Directory, or any part of it, when it shall thus appear, that there was no necessity for the change, nay (which I conceive hath all along been concluded) that the continuance of the Liturgy, unless some better offer or bargain were proposed to us, is still in all policy, in all secular or Christian Prudence most necessary. And therefore when we have considered the second particular in the Ordinance, and to that annext a view of some severals in the Preface, the Readers task will be at an end, and his patience freed from the tentation of our importunity.

Sect. 47.

The second thing then in the Ordinance is, that all the severals which this Ordinance is set to confront, are Statutes of Edward the sixth, and of Queen Elizabeth, all which are without more ado repealed by this Ordinance; which I mention not as new acts of boldness, which now we cannot be at leisure to declame or wonder at, but to justifie the calumniated Sons of this Church, who were for a long time offered up malitiously to the Peoples hatred and fury, first as illegal usurpers, and adders to Law, then as Popishly affected, and the pattern of Queen Elizabeths time vouchsafed to the confirming of this their Charge, and the Erection of her very Picture in some Churches, and solemnization of a day for her annual remembrance, (by those who will not now allow any Saint, or even Christ himself the like favour) design'd to upbraid those ways and reprove those thoughts. It seemeth now 'tis a season for these men to traverse the scene to put off disguises, and profess openly and confidently, what till now they have been careful to conceal, that their garnishing the Sepulchre of Queen Elizabeth was no argument that they were cordially of her Religion, or meant kindness sincerely to the Queen Elizabeth Reformation. Some Seeds we know there were of the present practices transmitted hither from our Neighbour Disciplinarians in the days of Queen Elizabeth, and some high attempts of private zeal in Hacket, and Coppinger, and Arthington, at one time, which when God suffered not to prosper, it was the wisdom of others to call phrensie and madness in those undertakers. And generally that is the difference of fate between wickedness prospering and miscarrying, the one passeth for Piety, the other for fury. I shall now not affirm, (or judge my Brethren) but meekly ask this Question and leave every mans own Conscience to answer (not me, but) himself in it sincerely, and without partiality, Whether if he had lived in the days of Queen Elizabeth, and had had his present perswasions about him, and the same encouragements and grounds of hope, the he might prosper and go through with his designs, he would not then in the matter of Religion have done just the same, which now he hath given his Vote, and taken up Arms to do? If he say, out of the uprightness of his heart, he would not, I shall then only ask why it is done now, what ill planet hath made that poyson now which was then wholesome food, why Queen Elizabeth Statutes should be now repealed, which were then ſo laudable? If any intervenient provocation, or any thing elſe extrinſecal to the matter it ſelf have made this change now neceſſary, this will be great injuſtice in the Actors. Or if the examples of ſeverity in her days, (the hanging of Coppin and Thacker, An. 1583. at St. Edmundsbury, for publiſhing Browns book, (ſaith Camden) which, (ſaith Stow,) p. 1174. was written againſt the Common-Prayer Book) might then reſtrain thoſe that were contrary-minded, I know no reaſon why the Laws by which that was done, ſhould not ſtill continue to reſtrain; or at leaſt why Conſcience ſhould not be as powerful as Fear. From all this I ſhall now take Confidence to conclude, that were there not many earlier teſtimonies to confirm it, this one Ordinance would convince the moſt ſeducible miſtaker of theſe two ſad truths.

Sect. 49. 1. That the preſervation of Laws, ſo long and ſo ſpeciouſly inſiſted on, was but an artifice of deſign to gain ſo much either of authority to their Perſons, or of power and force into their hands, as might enable them to ſubvert and aboliſh the moſt wholſom Laws of the Kingdom, and in the mean time to accuſe others falſly of that, which it was not their innocence, but their diſcretion, not their want of will, but of opportunity, that they were not really, and truly, and perfectly guilty of themſelves, that ſo they may moſt compleatly own and obſerve the principles by which they move, and tranſcribe that practice, which hath been conſtantly uſed by the Presbyterians, (whereſoever they have appear'd) to pretend their care and zeal to liberty, that by that means they may get into power (like Abſalom a paſſionate friend to juſtice, when he had an itch to be King; or like Deioces in Herodotus, μισάρχην ἀρχὴν ἰδὼν καὶ δίκαιον ἄν, his ambition of Magiſtracy made him content to be juſt) which as ſoon as they attain, they incloſe, and tyrannically make uſe of to the enthralling and enſlaving all other; Even Laws themſelves, the only Bounds and Bulwarks of Liberty, which alone can ſecure it from ſervitude on one ſide, and licentiouſneſs on the other (which very licentiouſneſs is the ſureſt way to ſervitude, the licentiouſneſs of one implying the oppreſſion and captivity of ſome other, and being it ſelf in a juſt weighing of things the greateſt * ſlavery, as much as the mans own unruly paſſions are greater Tyrants than Laws, or lawful Princes) are to be levell'd in their John march, to be accuſed and found at laſt the only guilty things, and the ſame calamity deſigned to involve the pretended Enemies of Laws and the Laws themſelves.

* μὴ αἱρέτωσαν ἀπὸ τοῦ κοινοῦ ἐλευθερίας, ἵνα μὴ δοῦλοι εὑρεθῶσιν ἐπιθυμίας. Epiſt. ad Polycarp. Ignatio adſcripta.

The ſecond truth that this unhappy Ordinance hath taught us, is that which a while ago had been a Revelation of a Myſtery indeed, which would without any other auxiliary have infallibly quencht this flame (which now like another Ætna and Veſuvius is gotten into the bowels of this Kingdom, and is there likely to rage for ever, if it be not aſſwaged from Heaven, or determined through want of matter, by having devoured all that is combuſtible) but now is a petty vulgar obſervation, that hath no influence or impreſſion on any man, and therefore I ſcarce now think it worthy the repeating; and yet to conclude this period fairly, I ſhall; 'tis only this, That the framers of this Ordinance, that have ſo long fought for the defence of the eſtabliſht Proteſtant Religion, will not now have Peace, unleſs they may be allowed liberty to caſt off and repeal every of thoſe Statutes, that of the ſecond and third of Edward the ſixth, that of the fifth and ſixth of the ſame King, that of the firſt of Queen Elizabeth, that of the fifth, and that of the eight of the ſame Queen, (though not all at once, yet as far as concerns the matter in hand, by which you may be aſſured, that the fragments of thoſe Statutes which remain yet unaboliſhed, are but reſerved for ſome other opportunity, as ready for a ſecond and third ſacrifice, as thus much of them was for this) by which the Proteſtant Religion ſtands eſtabliſhed in this Kingdom, and in which the whole work of Reformation is conſummate. And all this upon no higher pretence of Reaſon, than only a Reſolution to do ſo, & not being adviſed by their Divines to the contrary, and (to countenance the weakneſs of thoſe two motives) a prooffleſs ſcandalous mention, or bare naming of manifold inconveniences, which might as reaſonably be made the Excuſe of Robbing and Murthering and Damning (as far as an Ordinance would reach) all men but themſelves, as of abiliſhing this Liturgy. Lord lay not this ſin to their charge.

Sect. 50.

CHAP. II.

Sect. 1. THE Preface to the Directory, being the Orator to perſwade all men to be content with this grand and ſuddain change, to lay down with patience and æquanimity all their right which they had in the venerable Liturgy of the Church of England, and account themſelves richly rewarded, for doing ſo, by this new framed Directory, begins ſpeciouſly enough, by

P. 1. ſeeming to lay down the only reaſons, why our Anceſtors a hundred years ago, at the firſt Reformation of Religion, were not only content, but rejoiced alſo in the Book of Common-Prayer, at that time ſet forth; But theſe reaſons are ſet down with ſome partiality, there being ſome other more weighty grounds of the Reformers framing, and others rejoycing in that Book, than thoſe negative ones which that preface mentions, viz. the perfect reformation wrought upon the former Liturgy, the perfect conformity of it with, and compoſure out of the Word of God, the excellent orders preſcribed, and benefit to be reaped from the uſe of that Book, and the no manner of real objection, or exception of any weight againſt it; All which if they had been mentioned, as in all juſtice they ought, (eſpecially when you report not your own judgments of it, but the judgments of thoſe rejoycers of that age, who have left upon record theſe reaſons or their rejoycing) this Preface had ſoon been ended, or elſe proved in that firſt part, an anſwer or confutation of all that follows. But 'tis the manner of men now adaies, to conceal all that may not tend to their advantage to be taken notice of, (a practice reproached by by honest Cicero, in his books of offices of life, in the story of the Alexandrian Ship-man that went to relieve Rhodes, and out-going the rest of his fellows, sold his Corn at so much more gain, by that infamous artifice, though not of lying, yet of concealing the mention of the Fleet that was coming after) and to cut off the locks of that Samson whom they mean to bind, pare and circumcise the claws of that creature, they are to combate with; I mean to set out that cause, and those arguments at the weakest, to which they are to give satisfaction. And yet by the way, I must confess, that even these weak arguments which they have named, are to me of some moment, as first, The redress of many things, which were vain, erroneous, superstitious and Idolatrous, which argues that all is not now involv'd under any of those titles, nor consequently to be abolisht, but further reform'd only. 2. That they which did this, were wise and pious, which they that were, would never take pains to purge that which was all dross, their wisdom would have helpt them to discern that was so, and their piety obliged them to reject it altogether, and not to save one beast, when all was due to the common slaughter. 3. That many godly and learned men rejoyced much in the Liturgy, which argues that all was not to be detested, unless either these men now be somewhat higher than Godly or Learned, of that middle sort of rationals, that Jamblicus out of Aristotle speaks of, betwixt God and Man, the τὸν Πυθαγόραν, or unless it be confest, that many Godly and Learned men may be mistaken in a matter of this moment, and then these may be also so mistaken at this time.

Having therefore made use of that artifice, mention'd some general slight grounds of mens approving and rejoycing in the new formed Liturgy, the Composers of that preface mean speedily to weigh them down, with a heap of contrary sad matter, and then leave it to the Readers judgment, whether they are not his friends, thus to disabuse him, and his silly good natur'd ancestors that were thus slightly flatter'd into a good opinion of an inconvenient, if not mischievous Liturgy. Great haste is therefore made, and some arts and preparations used, to work upon the affection more than judgment of the Reader, and this is done by that Rhetorical pathetick stroke [Howbeit, long and sad experience hath made it manifest] Words of some consideration and efficacy, but that they have one weak part in them, an infirmity that this age is very subject to, that of causeless and groundless calumny. For how long soever, and to murmurers, and passionate lovers of news and change, how irksom and tedious soever, the experience of this Liturgy hath been, 'tis notoriously certain that it hath not been sad, save only again to those evil eyes; but on the other side, a continual flood and tide of joy to all true English-men, to see and observe the prosperity and flourishing of this Church, in a perpetual swelling and growth, ever since the establishing of that Protestant Liturgy and Religion together among us, till at last (about the time when this vast calamity brake in upon us) it was grown to such an height, as was certainly never heard of (or by Enemies themselves affirmed at any other time to have been) in this Kingdom, or (were it not a little like boasting, to which yet you have constrain'd us, I should add) in any other part of Europe also for these many hundred years. Sect. 2. P. 2.

But what is it that this so falsly supposed sad experience hath made manifest) Why, that the Liturgie used in the Church of England (notwithstanding the pains and Religious intentions of the Compilers of it) hath prov'd an offence, not only to many of the Godly at home, but also to the Reformed Churches abroad. Sect. 3.

In which words we shall not take advantage of the Confession of the Religious intentions of the Compilers of our Liturgy, which signifies the offence here spoken of in their notion of it to be acceptum non datum, taken when it was not given; nor 2. Oppose those religious intentions to the irreligious mistakes of others, and accusations of those things which were so religiously intended; nor 3. Compare the reputations of those Persons which compiled that Liturgy, whether in King Edwards (Cranmer, Ridley, P. Martyr) or in Queen Elizabeths days (Parker, Grindal, Horne, Whitehead, &c.) with the Members of this Assembly, much less the intentions of them, which in the mouth of Enemies is acknowledged Religious, with the intentions of these, which if we may measure by their more visible enterprizes, and the Covenant in which they have associated contrary to all Laws of God and men, we shall have temptation to suspect not guilty of over much Religion, or good purpose to the government of this Kingdom; nor 4 confront the number of those that here are confest to be pleased and benefited, against those others that are said to be offended, which were argument enough for that which is established, that considering the danger of change, it ought in all reason rather to stand to please one sort, and benefit them still, than to be pull'd down to comply with the other. But we shall confine our selves to that which the Objectors principally designed as a first reason for which our Liturgy must be destroyed, because, forsooth, say they, it hath prov'd an offence, &c. For the thorow examining of which reason, it will be necessary to enquire into these three things: 1. What they mean by offence, 2. What truth there is in the assertion, that the Liturgy hath prov'd so to the Godly at home, and to the Reformed Churches abroad, 3. How far that might be a reason of destroying that which proves an offence.

For the first, the word Offence is an equivocal mistaken word, and by that means is many times a title of a charge or accusation, when there is no real crime under it; For sometimes, in our English language especially, it is taken for that which any body is displeased or angry at, and then if the thing be not ill in it self, that anger is a causeless anger, which he that is guilty of, must know to be a sin, and humble himself before God for it, and fall into it no more, and then there need no more be said of such offences, but that he that is or hath been angry at the Liturgy, must prove the Liturgy to be really ill, (which if it could be done here, the matter of Offence would never have been charged on it, for that is set to supply the place of a greater accusation) or else confess himself, or those others so offended, to have sinned by such anger. But then 2. If we may ghess of the meaning of the word by the reason which is brought to prove the charge [For not to speak, &c.] it is set here to signifie, 1. The burthen of reading all the Prayers, 2. The many unprofitable burthensome Ceremonies, which hath occasion'd mischief by disquieting the Consciences of those that could not yield to them, and by depriving them of the Ordinances of God which they might not enjoy without conforming or subscribing Sect. 4.

ſcribing to thoſe Ceremonies. To proceed then to the ſecond thing, what truth there is in this Aſſertion, and view it in the ſeverals of the proof.

Sect. 5. For the firſt of theſe, the burthen of reading the Prayers; if that were enough to prove the Liturgy offenſive, all Chriſtian vertues would be involv'd in that charge, becauſe they have all ſome burthen and difficulty in them; and for this particular, ſeeing we ſpeak to Chriſtians, we might hope that the Service would not paſs for a burthen to the Godly (who are here named) i. e. to minds truly devout, if it were longer than it is, and that it may not do ſo, I am ſure it is very prudently framed with as much variety, and as moderate length of each part, as could be imagined, and ſure he that ſhall compare the practices, will find the burthen and length both to the Miniſter and People to be as great, by obſerving the preſcriptions in the Directory, in the ſhorteſt manner, as this that our Liturgy hath deſign'd. 2. For the many unprofitable burthenſome Ceremonies. Every of thoſe Epithets is a calumny; for 1. They are not many, To the People I am ſure, For kneeling and ſtanding, which are the only Ceremonies in the daily Service, will not make up that number (and for the reſt, there is but a ſuperaddition of ſome one in each Service.) As for ſitting bare, if reaſon it ſelf will not preſcribe that civility to be paid to God in the Houſe of God or place of his preſence, (where without any poſitive precept, Moſes, Exod. 3. 5. put off his ſhoes from his feet) neither doth our Liturgy preſcribe it. 2. They are not unprofitable, but each of them tending to advance the buſineſs to which they are annext, kneeling to encreaſe our humility, and joyn the body with the ſoul in that duty of adoration, ſtanding to elevate and again to joyn with the ſoul in Confeſſion of God and Thankſgiving, and the reſt proportion'd to the buſineſs in hand; and 3. If not many nor unprofitable, then not burthenſome alſo. As for the diſquieting the Conſciences of many godly Miniſters and People, who could not yield to the Ceremonies; I anſwer, that by what hath formerly been ſaid, and the no objection in this Directory againſt any ſuch, it appears that there is no Ceremony appointed in our Liturgy which is improper or impertinent to the action to which it is annext, much leſs in it ſelf unlawful. And then for mens Conſciences to be diſquieted, it argues that they have not, in that manner as they ought, deſired information; as for Miniſters, we know that all that have been received into that Order, have voluntarily ſubſcribed to them, and conſequently have receded from their own ſubſcription, if they have after refuſed to conform. And we deſire to know what tender reſpect will be had to the Conſciences of thoſe, who ſhall ſubmit to your Directory, and afterward refuſe to conform unto it. I am ſure the denunciations which we have heard of againſt the diſſenting Brethren, about the matter of Juriſdiction and Cenſures (and now lately concerning the depravers of your Directory) have been none of the mildeſt, although thoſe are your own fellow Members, and have aſſiſted you as affectionately in the grand Cauſe as any, and never made themſelves liable to your ſeverity, by having once conformed to you in thoſe particulars. And ſo 3. For depriving them of the Ordinances of God, &c. if that were the puniſhment appointed for the obſtinate and refractory, 'tis no more than the Laws of the Land appointed for their Portion, and in that ſure not without an example in Scripture and Apoſtolical practice, who appointed ſuch perverſe perſons to be avoided, which is a cenſure as high as any hath been here on ſuch inflicted. What Ordinances they were of which ſuch men were deprived, I conceive is ſpecified by the next words, that ſundry good Chriſtians have been by means thereof kept from the Lords Table, which muſt needs refer to thoſe that would not kneel there, and why that ſhould be ſo unreaſonable, when the very Directory lays the matter ſo, that none ſhall receive with them who do not ſit, there will be little ground, unleſs it be that no poſture in the Service of God can be offenſive, but only that of kneeling, which indeed hath had the very ill luck of Socinus, in his Tract De cœnâ Domini, to be turn'd out of the Church as Idololatrical (with whom to affirm the ſame, will be as great a complyance, as kneeling can be with the Papiſts.) And by theſe as ſuperſtitious at leaſt, I know not for what guilt, except that of too much humility, as being in Maſter Archer's Divinity, as before I intimated, a betraying of one of the greateſt comforts in the Sacrament, the ſitting fellow Kings with Chriſt in his earthy Kingdom, confeſſing thereby that ſome mens hearts are ſo ſet on that earthy Kingdom, that the hope of an Heavenly Kingdom will not yield them comfort, unleſs they may have that other in the way to it; and withal telling us, that he and his Compeers are thoſe men.

Sect. 6. Having ſurvey'd theſe ſeverals, and ſhewed how unjuſtly the charge of Offence is laid on the Liturgy, and how little 'tis prov'd by theſe Reaſons, I ſhall only add, that the Propoſition pretended to be thus proved by theſe particulars, is much larger than the proofs can be imagined to extend. For part of the Propoſition was, that the Liturgy was offence to the Reformed Churches abroad; To which the [For] is immediately annext, as if it introduced ſome proof of that alſo. But 'tis apparent that the proofs ſpecified infer not that, for neither the burthen of reading is Offence to them, nor are their Conſciences diſquieted, nor they deprived of Gods Ordinances by that means. In which reſpect 'tis neceſſary for us to conclude, that the word Offence, as applyed to them, is taken in that other notion, that they are diſpleaſed and angry at it. To which we then muſt anſwer, that although there is no guilt inferred from the undergoing this fate of being diſliked by ſome, but rather that it is to be deemed an ill indication to be ſpoken well of by all, yet have we never heard of any Foreign Church which hath expreſt any ſuch offence; the utmoſt that can be ſaid, is (and yet not ſo much as that is here ſuggeſted) that ſome particular men have expreſt ſuch diſlike, to whom we could eaſily oppoſe the judgment of others more eminent among them, who have largely expreſt their approbation of it. And 'tis obſervable that Calvin himſelf when from Frankfort he had received an odious malitious account of many particulars in our Liturgy (as any will acknowledge that ſhall compare the report then made, with what he finds) though he were ſo far tranſported as to call them ineptias, follies, yet adds the Epithet of tolerabiles, that though ſuch, they were yet tolerable. And therefore

Vid. Troubl. of Frank. p. 30. &c.

Sect. 7. In the third place, I may now conclude, that if all that is thus affirm'd to prove the Offence in the Liturgy, uſed in the Church of England, were (after all this evidence of the contrary) ſuppoſed true, yet is it no argument to infer the juſtice of the preſent deſign which is not reforming, but aboliſhing both of that and all other Liturgy. Were there Offence in the length of the Service, that length might be reform'd, and yet Liturgy remain; were there offence in the Ceremonies, or miſ-

chief

chief in the punishing them that have not conformed, those Ceremonies might be left free, that Conformity be not thus prest, and still Liturgy be preserved inviolate. As for the Foreign Churches, 1. I shall demand, whether only some are thus offended, or all. Not all, for some of the wisest in these Churches have commended it; and if some only, then it seems others are not offended, and why must we be so partial, as to offend and displease some, that we may escape the offending others? not sure because we more esteem the judgments of the latter, for by the Apostles rule the weaker men are, the more care must be taken that they be not offended. 2. I shall suppose that their Liturgy, or their having none at all, may possibly offend us, and then demand why they shall not be as much obliged to change for the satisfying of us, as we of them? I am ashamed to press this illogical discourse too far, which sure never foresaw such examination, being meant only to give the People a formal specious shew for what is done, a heap of popular Arguments, which have of late gotten away all the custom from Demonstrations, and then, Si populus vult decipi, decipiatur, if the tame Creature will thus be taken, any fallacy, or Topick doth as well for the turn, as if Euclid had demonstrated it.

In pursuit of this popular Argument it follows, that by this means, i. e. of the Liturgy, divers able and faithful Ministers were debarred from the exercise of their Ministry, and despoiled of their livelihood to the undoing of them and their Families. To which I answer 1. That if this be true, it is very strange that so few of this present Assembly were of that number. For of them I may surely say many, very many in proportion, were not debarred of the exercise of their Ministery, were not despoiled of their livelihood, &c. And if any one was, which I profess I know not, I believe it will be found, that the standing of Liturgy brought not those inflictions upon him. The conclusion from hence will be, that either these present Assemblers concurred not in judgment with those many able and faithful Ministers, (and then why do they now bring their Arguments from them, whose judgment they did not approve and follow?) or else that they were not so valiant, as to appear when sufferings expected them, or else that they had a very happy Rain-bow hanging over their heads to avert from them that common storm. But then 2. It might be considered, whether those mention'd penalties have not been legally, and by act of Parliament, inflicted on those who suffer'd under them, and then whether that will be ground sufficient to abolish a Law, because by force thereof some men that offended against it have been punished? 3. Whether some men did not chuse nonconformity as the more instrumental to the exercise of their Ministery, changing one Parish for the whole Diocess, and preaching oftener in private Families, than any other did in the Church, and withal, whether this had not the encouragement of being the more gainful trade, of bringing in larger Pensions, than formerly they had receiv'd Tithes. 4. Whether the punishments inflicted on such have not generally been inferiour to the rigour of the Statute, and not executed on any who have not been very unpeaceable, and then whether unpeaceable Persons would not go near to fall under some mulcts, what ever the Form of Government, what ever the Church-Service were, none having the promise of inheriting τὴν γῆν, the Land of Canaan, an happy prosperous life in this World, but they whose meekness and obedience to laws have given them a claim to that priviledge? 5. Whether the number of those, who by Ordinances have lately been so debarred of the exercise of their Ministry, and spoiled of their livelihood, have not been far greater than all those together, that ever the Liturgy thus offended since the Reformation? 6. Whether this Directory, should it be establisht, would not be so imposed, that they which obey it not, shall be subject to these or the like penalties? Sect. 8. P. 3.

'Tis added in the next place to raise the cry, and encrease the Odium, and to involve the Prelates and Liturgy in the same calamity, (for otherwise what hath the Prelates labouring, &c. to do with the Liturgy) That the Prelates and their Faction have laboured to raise the estimation of the Liturgy to such an height, as if there were no other worship, or way of worship of God among us, but only the Service-book, to the great hinderance of the Preaching the Word. To which I answer 1. That this or any other action of the Prelates, if supposed never so true, and never so extravagant, is wholly extrinsecal and impertinent to the business of the Liturgy, and the more impertinent, by how much the more extravagant, such actions being easily coerced, and reduced by and according to the rule, and such unreasonable enhansements separable, without any wound or violence to the Liturgy. Give the Liturgy its due, not its usurped estimation, and we are all agreed. 2. 'Tis here acknowledged that this was but laboured, not affirmed that it was effected, and then this sure is too heavy a doom on the Liturgy, for that their labouring; we do not find that Saint Paul was struck dead, like Herod, because the Lycaonians meant and laboured to do sacrifice unto him, Acts 14. 18. But then 3. he that shall consider who they are which make this objection, will sure never be moved by it. For certainly they that have formerly set the prime of their wits and endeavours to vilifie and defame the Liturgy; and, now that they think they have power, have absolutely abolisht it, will go near to be partial when they are to judge of the due estimation of it; they that declaim at Bishops for advancing it, will they be just and take notice of their own contempts, which enforced the Bishops thus to rescue and vindicate it? I shall not expect it from them, nor, till then, that they will deliver any more than popular shews of truth in this matter. For 4. the Prelates have not raised the book to an higher estimation than the Law hath raised it, that is, that it may be observed so as may most tend to edification, nor do we now desire any greater height of value for it, than you for the Directory, I shall add, not so great neither, for we do not exclude all other as unlawful as you have done, and then I am confident God will not lay that charge on us, which you do on the Prelates, nor any man that shall consider how different our Titles are, though our claims not proportioned to them. A piece of modesty and moderation which we challenge you to transcribe from us. 5. All this all this while is a meer Calumny, if by the Service-Book is meant the use of the Prayers in the Liturgy, for no Prelate ever affirm'd, or is known to have thought, that there is no other way of worship of God, but that among us. But then 6. We add that this way of publick Prayer by set Form, the only one establisht by Law, (and so sure to be esteem'd by us before any other) is also in many respects the most convenient for Publick worship, of which affirmation we shall offer you no other proof or testimony, than what Master Calvin, whom before we named, hath given us in his Epistle to the Protector, in these words, Quod ad formulam, &c. As for Forms of Prayers, and Ecclesiastical Rites, I Sect. 9. P. 3.

very much approve, that it be set or certain, From which it may not be lawful for the Pastors in their Function to depart, that so there may be provision made for the simplicity and unskilfulneß of some, and that the consent of all the Churches among themselves may more certainly appear; and lastly also, that the extravagant levity of some, who affect novelties, may be prevented. So probable was my conjecture, that at first I interposed, that the men that had here imposed upon their fellows so far, as to conclude the abolition of Liturgy necessary, were those that undertook to reform Geneva as well as England, to chastise Calvins estimation of it, as well as that of our Prelates.

Sect. 10. P. 3. As for that pompous close, that this hath been to the great hinderance of the Preaching of the Word, and to the justling it out as unnecessary, or at best inferiour to the reading of the Common-Prayer. I answer, 1. That the Liturgy, or the just estimation of it, is perfectly uncapable of this charge, it being so far from hindring, that it requires the Preaching of the Word, assigns the place where the Sermon shall come in, hath Prayers for a blessing upon it. 2. That if any where Sermons have been neglected, it hath not been through any default either of the length or estimation of the Liturgy, for these two, if Faction and Schism did not set them at odds, would very friendly and peaceably dwell together, and each tend much to the proficiency and gain which might arise from either; Prayers would prepare us to hear as we ought, i. e. to practice also, and Sermons might incite and stir up the languishing devotion, and enliven and animate it with zeal and fervency in Prayer. And constantly the more we esteemed the Ordinance, and set our selves to the discharge of the duty of Prayer, the more should we profit by Sermons which were thus received into an honest heart, thus fitted, and made capable of impression by Prayer. These two may therefore live like Abraham and Lot, and why should there be any wrangling or controversie betwixt thy Herds-men and my Herds-men? But seeing it is made a season of complaining, I answer 3. That it is on the other side most notorious that in many places the Sermon hath justled out the Common-Prayers, and upon such a provocation, (and only to prevent the like partiality or oppression) it may be just so far now to add, that as long as the Liturgy continues in its legal possession in this Church, there is no other legal way (as that signifies, commanded by law) of the publick worship of God among us, and although that voluntary Prayer of the Minister before Sermon, when it is used, is a part of the worship of God, (as all Prayer is) yet is it not prescribed by the Law, nor consequently can it without usurpation cut short or take away any part of that time which is by that assigned to the Liturgy; the free-will offerings, though permitted must not supplant the daily prescribed oblations, the Corban must not excuse the not honouring of Parents, the customes which are tolerated, must not evacuate or supersede the precepts of the Church. As for Sermons, which in this period seem the only thing that is here opposed to Liturgy, I hope they do not undertake to be as eminent a part of the worship of God among us as Prayer. If they do, I must less blame the poor ignorant People, that when they have heard a Sermon or two think they have served God for all that day or week; nor the generality of those seduced ones, who place so great a part of Piety in hearing, and think so much the more comfortably of themselves from the number of the hours spent in that Exercise, which hath of late been the only business of the Church (which was by God instil'd the house of Prayer) and the Liturgy at most used but as Musick to entertain the Auditors till the Actors be attired, and the Seats be full, and it be time for the Scene to enter. This if it were true, would avow and justifie that Plea in the Gospel, [Lord open unto us, for thou hast taught in our streets] i. e. we have heard thee Preach among us. Which sure Christ would not so have defamed with an [I will say unto them, Go you cursed, &c.] if it had been the prime part of his worship to be such hearers; the consideration of that place will give us a right notion of this business, and 'tis this, that hearing of Sermons, or what else appointed by the Church for our instruction, is a duty of every Christian prescribed in order to practice or good life, to which knowledge is necessarily preparative, and so, like many others, actus imperatus, an act commanded by Religion; but so far from being it self an immediate or elicite act of worship precisely or abstractly, as it is hearing, that unless that proportionable practice attend it, 'tis but an aggravation and accumulation of our guilts, the blessedneß not belonging to the hearing, but the [and keeping the Word of God] and the go you Cursed, to none more than to those, that hear and say, but do not: and for the title of worship of God, whether outward or inward outwardly expresst, oral Prayer certainly and adoration of God is the thing to which that most specially belongs, as may appear, Psalm 95.6. where that of worshipping is attended, with falling down and kneeling before the Lord our Maker. And even your Directory, though it speak extream high of Preaching the Word, yet doth not it stile it any part of Gods worship, as it doth the reading the Word of God in the Congregation, pag. 12. because indeed our manner of Preaching is but an humane thing; and the word of man. This I should not here have said, because I would be sure not to discourage any in the attending of any Christian duty (and such I acknowledge hearing to be, and heartily exhort all my Fellow Labourers in their several Charges, to take heed to Doctrine, to reproof, to Exhortation, to be as frequent and diligent in it, as the wants of their Charges require of them; and my fellow-Christians also, that they give heed to sound Doctrine, that they require the law at the Priests mouth, as of a messenger of the Lord of Hosts, and again to take heed how they hear) but the ἀνωμαλία, or impropriety of speech, that I say no more, that is in this matter discernible in the words of the Directory, and the consequent dangers which experience hath forced us to observe in them, who place the worship of God especially in hearing, have extorted thus much from us, which may be useful to give us a due valuation of Sermon and Prayer, the former as a duty of a Christian, the latter a duty too, and an elicite act, a prime special part of worship also.

Sect. 11. P. 4. And whereas 'tis added, that the Liturgy by many is made no better than an Idol. 1. That is a speech of great cunning, but withal of great uncharitableneß: cunning, in setting the words so cautiously thus, not an Idol, but [no better than] (as they, that will rail, but would not pay for it, whose fear doth moderate the petulancy of their spleen, and covetousneß keep them from letting any thing fall that the Law may take hold of, are wont to do) and yet withal signifying as odiously as if it had been made an idol indeed. Whereas the plain literal sence of the words if it be taken, will be this, that an Idol is not worse than our Common-Prayer Book is to many, or that it is used by

by many as ill as an Idol is wont to be used, which is then the most bitter piece of uncharitableness, if not grounded on certain knowledge, and that impossible to be had by others, as could be imagined. The truth is, this Directory hath now proved that there is a true sence of these words, the Compilers of which have demonstrated themselves to be those many that have made our Liturgy no better than an Idol, have dealt with it as the good Kings did with the abominations of the Heathens, brake it in pieces, ground it to powder, and thrown the dust of it into the Brook; for abolition is the plain sence for which that is the Metaphor. But then 2. 'Tis possible, the calm meaning of those odious words is no more than this, that many have given this an estimation higher than it deserves. If any such there be, I desire not to be their advocate, having to my task only the vindication of its just esteem; but yet cannot resist the temptation which prompts me to return to you, that some men as near the golden mean as the Assemblers, have said the like of Preaching, though not expresst it in so large a Declamatory figure; and I shall ask, whether you have not possibly given them some occasion to do so (as great perhaps as hath been given you to pass this sentence on them) at least now confirmed them in so doing, by applying or appropriating to the Preaching of the Word (in the Modern notion of it, and as in your Directory it is distinguish'd from reading of the Scriptures) the title which Saint Paul gives to the Gospel of Christ, saying, that it is the Power of God unto Salvation and one of the greatest and most excellent works of the Ministery of the Gospel, pag. 27. which former clause of power of God, &c. though it be most truly affirmed by Saint Paul of their Preaching the Gospel, and also truly applyed or accommodated to that Preaching or interpreting of Scripture, which is the ἐφαρμογὴ, the due application of the Scripture rule to particular cases, yet is it not true in universum, of all that is now adays call'd Preaching, much of that kind being ὄσμη θανάτου, of a mortiferous poysonous savour, not to them that perish, but to the most Christian auditory it meets with; and that the railing of every Pulpit-Rabshekeh, the speaking evil of Dignities, &c. should be stiled the power of God to Salvation, I have little temptation to believe. And whether the latter clause be true also, I refer you to Saint Augustine Ep. 180. ad Honorat. where speaking of damages that come to the people by the absence of the Minister, and consequently of the necessaria Ministeria the special useful necessary acts of the Ministry, he names the Sacraments and receiving of Penitents, and giving of comfort to them, but mentions neither Praying nor Preaching in that place. I shall add no more, but that some have on these, and the like grounds, been tempted to say, that you Idolize Preaching, because you attribute so much to any the worst kind of that, above what others have conceived to be its due proportion. And yet we hope you think not fit to abolish Preaching on that suggestion, and consequently, that it will be as unjust to abolish Liturgy on the like, though it should be proved a true one, this being clearly the fault of Men, and not of Liturgy, as that even now of the Lycaonians and not of Paul, especially when the many, which are affirmed to have thus offended by Idolizing the Liturgy, are said to be ignorant and superstitious, whose faults, and errours, and imprudencies, if they may prove matter sufficient for such a sentence, may also rob us of all the treasures we have, of our Bibles and Souls also. For thus hath the Gospel been used as a περίαμμα, or charm, and that is but little better than an Idol, and so have some persons been had in admiration, and believed as if they were infallible, and so in a manner Idoliz'd also, and that this should be a capital crime in them, that were thus admired, would be a new piece of severity, that few of Draco's Laws could parallel.

The next charge (which is as an appendent proof of this) is that the People pleasing themselves in their presence at that Service, and their Lip-labour, in bearing a part in it, have thereby hardned themselves in their ignorance, and carelesness of saving knowledge and true piety. To this I answer, 1. That 'tis no fault to be so pleased with presence at that service (the Congregation of many Saints is to any a pleasing company) and therefore if it were immediate to, and inseparable from the Liturgy, would not be a charge against it, nor in any probability hinder, but advance the desire, and acquisition of saving knowledge and true piety, which is there proposed, to all that are present at the Liturgy. But if the phrase signifie being pleased with the bare presence, or the being present, and doing nothing of that they come for, as the Lip-labour seems to denote the bare labour of the lip, and not joyning any zeal or intention of the heart, it is then but an uncharitable censure again, if it be not upon certain knowledge, and if it be, 'tis as incident to that order of the Directories proposing, as to our Liturgy. One may please himself with a bare presence at Sermon, and either sleep it out, or think on some worldly matter; one may say all or most of the Ministers Prayer after him, and sigh and groan at every period, and satisfie himself that this is a gallant work of Piety, but truly I would be unwilling to be he that should pass this censure on any, whose heart I did not know (for sure it is not necessary that any man should leave his heart at home, when his body is present, or employ it on something else, when his lips are busied either in our Liturgy or that Directory prayer) nor, if I did so, should I think the Directories order for worship should be rejected for this fault of others, if there were nothing else to be said against it. As for the Peoples bearing a part in the Service, which seems to refer to the responses, this hath had an account given of it already. Sect. 12. P. 4.

Only in the whole period put together, this seems to be insinuated, that the saving knowledge, and true piety, is no where to be had, but in those Sermons, which are not ushered in with the Liturgy, which we shall not wonder at them for affirming, who have a long time thus perswaded the people, that all saving knowledge is to be had from them, and their complices, and blasted all others for carnal men, of which many discriminative Characters were formerly given, as kneeling or praying at the time of entrance into pue or pulpit, but now it seems the use of the Liturgy supplies the place of all, as being incompatible with saving knowledge and true piety. If this be true, that will be a very popular plausible argument I confess, and therefore I shall oppose unto it, that which I hope will not pass for boast either with God or Angels, that of the Sermons which have been preacht since the Reformation in this Kingdom, and commended to the Press and publick view, very few were preacht by those that excluded the Liturgy out of the Churches, and that since this Directory came into use, and so made a visible discrimination among men, there hath been as much saving knowledge, i. e. Orthodox Sect. 13.

doctrine, and exhortation to repentance, Prayer, Faith, Hope; and Love of God, Self-denyal, and readineſs to take up the Croſs, (duties toward God) and to Allegiance, Juſtice, Mercy, Peaceableneſs, Meekneſs, Charity even to Enemies, (and the reſt of the duties toward man) to be heard in the Sermons of thoſe that retain the Liturgy, and as much obdience to thoſe obſervable in the lives of thoſe that frequent it, as is to be met with in the eſpouſers of the Directory. If it be not thus, I confeſs I ſhall have little hope, that God will ſuffer ſuch a Jewel as the Liturgy is, to continue any longer among us ſo unprofitably, and yet if men were guilty of this fault alſo, and the Liturgy of the unhappineſs of having none but ſuch Clients, yet would not this be ſufficient authority for any men to aboliſh it, any more than it will be juſt to hang him who hath been unfortunate, or to make any mans infelicity his guilt. I beſeech God to inflame all our hearts with that zeal, attention, fervency, which is due to that action of Prayer in our Liturgy, and that chearful obedience to all that is taught us out of his Word, and then I am ſure that this argument or objection againſt our Liturgy will be anſwered, if as yet it be not.

Sect. 14. P. 4. The next Objection is the Papiſts boaſt, that our Book is a compliance with them in a great part of their Service, and ſo that they were not a little confirm'd in their Superſtition and Idolatry, &c. Where I ſhall 1. demand, is there any Superſtition or Idolatry in that part of the Service wherein we thus comply with them? if ſo, 'tis more than a compliance with Papiſts, 'tis in it ſelf a down-right damning ſin; and if there be not, but all that is Idolatrous or Superſtitious in their Service is reform'd in ours, then ſure this will be far from confirming them in either of thoſe, if they depend any thing upon our judgments, or our complyance. 2. 'Tis a little unreaſonable, that they who will not believe the Papiſts in any thing elſe, ſhould believe their boaſt againſt us, and think it an accuſation ſufficiently proved, becauſe they ſay it; whereas this affirmation of the Papiſts, if it be theirs, (and not the Aſſemblers rather impoſed upon them) is as groſs, though perhaps not as dangerous a falſity, as any one which the Aſſemblers have condemned in them. For 3. The truth is notorious, that our Reformers retained not any part of Popiſh Service, reformed their Breviary and Proceſſional, and Maß-Book; as they did their Doctrine, retained nothing but what the Papiſts had received from purer Antiquity, and was as clear from the true charge of Popery, as any period in either Prayer or Sermon in the Directory; which argues our complyance with the antient Church, and not with them; the very thing that Iſaac Caſaubon ſo admired in this Church of ours, the care of antiquity and purity, proclaiming every where in his Epiſtles to all his friends, that there was not any where elſe in the world the like to be found, nor ever hoped he to ſee it till he came into this Kingdom. And ſure there is no Soleciſm in this, that we being a Reformed Church, ſhould deſire to have Reformed Liturgy, which hath always had ſuch a conſent and ſympathy with the Church, that it will not be a cauſeleſs fear, leſt the abolition of Liturgy, as far as God in judgment permits it to extend, (the juſt puniſhment of them that have rejected it) be attended with the abolition of the Church in time, and even of Chriſtianity alſo.

As for the confirming of Papiſts in their Superſtition by this means, I deſire it to be conſidered whether it be a probable accuſation, viz. 1. Whether the rejecting that which the Papiſts have from antiquity, as well as what they have obtruded on, or ſuperadded to it, be a more likely means to win them to hear us or reform themſelves, than our retaining with them what they retain from Antiquity, i.e. whether a Servant (much more whether a Brother) that is reprehended as much for his diligence as for his neglects, for his good and faithful, as for his ill and falſe ſervices, be more likely thereby to be enclined to mend his faults, than he that is ſeaſonably and meekly reprov'd for his miſcarriages only? It was good advice in that antient Epiſtle to Polycarpus, aſcribed to Saint Ignatius, Τὰς λοιμοτέρας ἐν πραότητι ὑπότασσε, meekneß is the beſt means to bring down the moſt peſtilent adverſary, and the reſemblance by which he expreſſes it as ſeaſonable, Τὰς παροξυσμὰς ἐμβροχαῖς παῦε, Fomentations are moſt proper to allay any exaſperation of humours. And 'tis Hippocrates's advice, that the Phyſician ſhould never go abroad without ſome μαλάγματα, lenitives or mollifying applications about him. It ſeems there was nothing of ſo daily approved uſe as thoſe. And that will avow this method of complying with adverſaries, as far as we may, to be a probable and a wiſe, as well as a Chriſtian courſe, to bring them from their Superſtition, and not to confirm them in it. And another uſe there is wherein the Papiſts themſelves confeſs this complyance was Politick, to take all ſcruple out of the heads and hearts of the People of England, concerning the lawfulneß of this Reformation, (This is the opinion of the Papiſts, expreſt in a book call'd Babel and Jeruſalem, or Monarchomachia Proteſtantium, ſubſcribed by P. D. M. but conceived to be Patiſons, pag. 314.) that they might conceive, that the Service and Religion ſtill continued the ſame, but was tranſlated into Engliſh only, for their better edification, and ſo, ſaith he, it was indeed very politickly handled. 2. Whether that which drives away all Papiſts from all kind of communion or converſation with us, from all hearing of our Preaching or Doctrine, be more likely to work them over to our ſide, than that which permits them to come to our Churches with us? For this is notoriouſly known, that as our Liturgy now is, and was framed in Queen Elizabeths days, the Papiſts did for ten years together, at the beginning of her Raign, come to Church with us, and ſo continued, till the Popes excommunicating the Qu. and our Nation, made it ſo appear unlawful for them. And perhaps but appear too, for an account might be given of this buſineſs, that it is no way unlawful (by his own principles) to a Papiſt, remaining thus, to come to our Churches, and be preſent at our Liturgy, and (if that be thought an objection or reproach againſt us, I ſhall then add) not only to ours, but to that Service which is performed according to the Directory alſo, the only difference being, that if both by them were conceiv'd lawful (as by miſtake, I believe, in them neither now is) our Liturgy would be more likely to attract them, than the Directory; And this we conceive not ſuch a fault as to offer any excuſe for it, (for if St. Paul by being a Jew to the Jew, could hope to gain the Jew, why ſhould not we without being Papiſts to the Papiſts, but only Chriſtians to thoſe things wherein they are ſo too) expect to gain the Papiſt alſo) For ſuppoſing this to be, as you call it, a compliance with them, ſure 'twere a more probable gaining way, than to denounce enmity to all, whom they ever converſt with; I mean to the primitive Liturgies for no other crime, but becauſe they made uſe of them. Who are beſt Diviners in this matter, they, or we, experience may perhaps hereafter hereafter prove. In the mean time, I cannot imagine, but Liturgy, and moderation, and charity, may be able to bring in as fair a ſhole of Proſelytes, to convert as many Papiſts to us, or at leaſt to confirm Proteſtants, as an Ordinance for Sequeſtration of all their Goods, an Halter, and a Directory will be able to do, yea with an Ordinance for the Ordination of Miniſters, by meer Preſbyters too, call'd in to aſſiſt them.

And whereas 'tis added in that ſame Section, that the Papiſts were very much encouraged in that expectation, when upon the pretended warrantableneſs of impoſing of the former Ceremonies, new ones were daily obtruded upon the Church, 1. I demand on occaſion of that phraſe [pretended warrantableneſs of impoſing of Ceremonies.] May any Ceremonies be impoſed or no? if they may, then an act of Parliament may certainly do it, and ſuch was that which confirm'd our Liturgy, and ſo the warrantableneſs not pretended; if not, why then do you impoſe entring the Aſſembly not irreverently, pag. 10. and taking their places without bowing? For that general, and that negative is notation of ſome Ceremony, if it have any ſence in it. The phraſe [not irreverently] preſcribes ſome reverence, there being no middle between thoſe two, and conſequently the forbidding of the one being a preſcription of the other. For I ſhall ask, Is keeping on the hat irreverence at that time? If it be, then pulling it off, or not keeping of it on is a Reverence then required; And if this be avoided by ſaying, that this is only there directed not commanded, I reply, that an Ordinance prefixt for the eſtabliſhing that direction, requiring that what is there directed, ſhall be uſed, amounts to a preſcription. The ſame may be ſaid of cauſing the Man to take the Woman by the right hand in Marriage, in the Directory, which is the preſcribing of a Ceremony, as much as if the Ring had been appointed to be uſed there alſo. 2. I anſwer that we know not of any Ceremonies which have been obtruded or forced on any which the Law hath not commanded, (or if there had, this had been nothing to the Liturgy, nor conſequently to be fetcht in as a part of a charge againſt it;) That of bowing at the entrance into the Church, is the moſt likely to be the Ceremony here ſpoken of, and yet that is neither a new one (never by any Law or Canon turn'd out at the Reformation, but only not then impoſed under any Command, and ſince diſuſed in ſome places) nor yet was it lately impoſed or obtruded on the Church, but on the other ſide in the Canon of the laſt ſo hated Convocation, (which alone could be ſaid to deal with the Church in this matter) it was only recommended, and explained and vindicated from all miſtake, and then the practice of uſing of it left to every man's liberty, with that caution of the Apoſtle, that they that uſe it ſhould not condemn them that uſe it not, nor they that uſe it not, judge them that uſe it. 3. That the warrantableneſs of impoſing the former Ceremonies was no means or occaſion of obtruding new daily, but rather an hedge to keep off ſuch obtruſion; for when it is reſolved by Law, that ſuch Ceremonies ſhall be uſed, 'tis the implicite intimation of that Law, that all other uncommanded are left free, and that, without authority (as the word [daily] ſuppoſes the diſcourſe here to mean) no other can be obtruded. For ſure 'tis not the quality of Law to ſteal in illegal preſſures, but to keep them out rather, to define and limit our liberty, not to enthral us, to ſet us bounds and rules of life, not to remove all ſuch. But then 4. That it may appear of how many truths this period is compoſed (every one of them with the help of one ſyllable a [not] ſet before the principal Verb, able to become ſuch) I ſhall add that the very obtruſion of ſuch Ceremonies, if they had been obtruded, would never have encouraged a rational Papiſt to expect our return to them, but only have ſignified that we meant by complying with them, as far as it was lawful, to leave them without excuſe, if they did not do ſo too, comply with us in what they might, and reſtore the Peace and Union of Chriſtendom by that means. This with any moderate Papiſt would moſt probably work ſome good, and for the more fiery Jeſuited, I am confident none were ever more mortally hated by them, than thoſe who were favourers of the Ceremonies now mentioned, and for the truth of what I ſay, you are obliged to believe that paſſage in Romes Maſter-piece, which you appointed to be ſet out, wherein the King, and the late Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, were by the Popiſh contrivers deſigned to ſlaughter as Perſons whom they deſpaired to gain to them: but that any of the now Aſſemblers were ſo hated, or ſo feared, or thought ſo neceſſary to be taken out of the way, we have not yet heard, but are rather confident that if a penſion from Rome, or a Cardinals Cap will keep them longer together to do more ſuch work as this, ſo reproachful to the Proteſtant Religion, they ſhould be ſo hired, rather than diſſolve too ſpeedily. I ſhall conclude this with the ſaying of * Hippolitus the old Martyr, fit to be confronted againſt this laſt ſort of exceptions againſt Liturgy, that in the times of Antichriſt, Eccleſiarum ædes ſacræ tuguriis inſtar erunt, pretioſum corpus & ſanguis Chriſti non extabit, Liturgia extinguetur, pſalmodiæ decantatio ceſſabit, Scripturarum recitatio non audietur, The Churches ſhall be like ſties, the precious body and blood of Chriſt ſhall not be to be had, Liturgy ſhall be extinguiſht, the ſinging of the Pſalmody ſhall ceaſe, the reciting of the Scriptures ſhall not be heard: whether by that be meant the ſolemn uſe of ſome Scriptures in their Liturgies, as of the Magnificat, which may then be ſaid recitari, to be recited, when they are uſed in the Church ſervice; or whether the bare Leſſons of Scriptures ſuperſeded by Sermons or the like. To which purpoſe the antient Paraphraſt on Daniel, de fine mundi, hath alſo expreſt himſelf, making the Prophecy of Dan. 8. 11. of taking away the daily Sacrifice, &c. to have a double completion, one in Antiochus, the other in Antichriſt, which it ſeems by Saint Jerome, moſt of the Antients agreed in; Hunc locum, ſaith he, plerique noſtrorum ad Antichriſtum referunt, & quod ſub Antiocho in typo factum eſt, ſub illo in veritate dicunt eſſe complendum, Moſt of our Writers refer this verſe 11. to Antichriſt, and that which was done in the type under Antiochus, they ſay was to be performed in the truth under him. And then let it be judged, whether a reformed Liturgy, or none at all, have more of Popery or Antichriſt in it.

* l. de Antichr.

In the next place, 'tis found out by experience, that the Liturgy hath been a great means to make and increaſe an idle and unedifying Miniſtery, which contented it ſelf with ſet forms made to their hands by others, without putting forth themſelves to exerciſe the gift of Prayer. To this I anſwer, that thoſe Miniſters are not preſently proved to be idle and unedifying which have been content to uſe the Liturgy. I hope there may be other ways of Labour, beſide that of extemporary prayer (which can be no longer a labour than while it is a ſpeaking.) For 1. I had thought that theſe men might have acknowledged Preaching and Catechiſing, the former at leaſt, to have been the work of a Miniſter, and that a edifying work, and that ſure thoſe men have been exerciſed in, who have retain'd the Liturgy alſo. 2. Study of all kind of Divine learning, of which the haters of Liturgy have not gotten the incloſure, may paſs with ſober men for a labour alſo, and that which may tend to edification, if it have charity joyn'd with it, and that may be had too, without hating the Liturgy. But then 3. I conceive this Directory is no neceſſary proviſion againſt this reproached idleneſs, or unedifyingneſs in any that were formerly guilty of them in the days of Liturgy. For ſure the labour will not be much encreaſed to the Miniſter, that ſhall obſerve the Directory, becauſe either he may pray extempore, which will be no pains, but of his lungs and ſides in the delivery, or elſe a form being compoſed by any, according to the Directory (which is in effect a Form it ſelf,) he may thenceforth continue as idle as he who uſeth our form of Liturgy, and he which hath a mind to be idle, may make that uſe of it, and that you acknowledge, when you interpoſe that caution p. 8. [that the Miniſters become not hereby ſlothful and negligent] which were wholly an unneceſſary caution, if this Directory made idleneſs impoſſible; and if a caution will ſerve turn, the like may be added to our Liturgy alſo, without abrogating of it. And for the edifying, I deſire it may be conſidered, whether the extravagancies and impertinencies, which our experience (as well grounded as that which taught theſe men this myſtery of the idle unedifying Miniſtry) bids us expect from thoſe who neglect ſet forms, do more tend to the edifying of any, than the uſe of thoſe Prayers which are by the piety and judgment of our Reformers compoſed, and with which the Auditory being acquainted, may with uninterrupted devotion go along and ſay, Amen.

Sect. 17. P. 5.

Sect. 18. P. 5. And whereas 'tis added in this place, that our Lord Chriſt pleaſeth to furniſh all his Servants whom he calls to that office with the gift of Prayer. I deſire 1. That it may be ſhewed what evidence we have from any promiſe of Chriſt in his Word, that any ſuch gift ſhall be perpetually annext by him to the Miniſtery. I believe the places which will be brought to enforce it, will conclude for gifts of healing, making of Pſalms, and other the like alſo, which Miniſters do not now adays pretend to. 2. I would know alſo why Chriſt, if he do ſo furniſh them, may not alſo be thought to help them to the matter of their Prayers (in which yet here the Directory is fain to aſſiſt them, and pag. 8. ſuppoſes the Miniſter may have need of ſuch help and furniture,) as well as the form of words, in which the Liturgy makes the ſupply. 3. I ſhall not doubt to affirm, that if the gift of Prayer ſignifie an ability of Praying in publick without any premeditation, diſcreetly and reverently, and ſo as never to offend againſt either of thoſe neceſſaries, every Miniſter is not furniſht with this gift, ſome men of very excellent abilities wanting that ſuddain promptneſs of elocution, and choice of words for all their conceptions; others being naturally modeſt and baſhful, and not endued with this chariſma of boldneſs, which is a great part, a ſpecial ingredient of that which is here called the gift of Prayer. And even for thoſe which have the former of theſe, and are not ſo happy as to want the latter, that yet they are not ſufficiently gifted for Prayer in publick, experience hath taught us by the very creditable relations of ſome, who have fallen into ſo many indiſcretions, that we ſay no worſe, in that performance. 'Tis true that God enableth men ſufficiently in private to expreſs their neceſſities to him, being able to underſtand ſighs and groans, when words are wanting, and as well content with ſuch Rhetorick in the Cloſet as any, but this is not peculiar to Miniſters, and for any ſuch ability in publick, there will not be the like ſecurity, unleſs the language of ſighs and groans, without other expreſſions, be there current alſo, which appears by ſome, who are forced to pay that debt to God in that coyn, having through unthriftineſs provided no other; and yet 'twere well alſo if that were the worſt of it, but the truth is, blaſphemy is ſomewhat worſe than ſaying nothing.

Sect. 19. P. 5. The laſt Objection is, That the continuance of the Liturgy would be a matter of endleſs ſtrife and contention in the Church, and a ſnare to many Godly Miniſters, &c. to the end of that page. Where 1. Is obſervable the temper and reſolution of theſe men, of whom ſuch ſpecial care is taken, which makes it ſo neceſſary for them, not only to ſtrive and contend, 1. againſt eſtabliſht Law, 2. about Forms of Prayer, (which ſure is none of the prime Articles of the Creed) but alſo to ſtrive for ever; which being obſerved, it ſeems 2. That they have a very charitable opinion of all us who are aſſertors of Liturgy, that we will never ſtrive or contend for it, for otherwiſe the ſtrife may be as endleſs upon its taking away. And ſure in ordinary judging (if they be not ſure that none are contentious, but their favourites) we ſee no reaſon, why the introduction of a new way of worſhip, ſhould not be more matter of ſtrife, and ſo alſo a ſnare to more (if any can be enſnared or ſcandalized but they) than the continuance of the old eſtabliſht Liturgy. Where, by the way, the ſnare they ſpeak of ſeems to ſignifie that which catches and entraps their Eſtates and not their Souls, cauſeth them to be perſecuted, &c. which is a notable paralogiſm and fallacy put upon the Scripture uſe of that phraſe, if we took pleaſure in making ſuch diſcoveries. But then 3. We deſire experience may be judge, and upon the ſentence which that ſhall give, that it may be conſidered, whether upon the ballancing of the Kingdom, it will not be found that a far greater number are now at this time offended at the Directory, and thereby enſnared in their Eſtates, if they lie within your power, than formerly at any time, (I ſhall add in all times ſince the Reformation, put together) ever were by the Liturgy.

Sect. 20. As for the paſſage which is added in the cloſe of this Section, that in theſe latter times, God vouchſafeth to his People, more and better means for the diſcovery of errour and Superſtition.] Though this ſounds ſomewhat like to his Divinity who makes the power of reſiſting Kings, to be a truth which God pleas'd to reveal in theſe latter times, for the turning of Antichriſt out of the World, but hid in the primitive times, that Antichriſt might come in, yet I ſhall not now quarrel with it (becauſe 'tis poſſible it may have another ſence, and I would not deny any thing but what is apparently and inexcuſably falſe) but from thence aſſume, 1. That I hope God vouchſafeth theſe means to them, that uſe the Liturgy alſo; For if it muſt be ſuppoſed a ſin to continue the uſe of it, 'tis not, I hope, ſuch a waſting ſin, as to deprive men of all grace, even of the Chariſmata, which unſanctified men may be capable of, and of means of knowledge, which is but a common grace, and therefore I muſt hope that the phraſe [his people] is not here meant in a diſcriminative ſence ſence (like the Montaniſts form of nos ſpirituales, in oppoſition to all others, as animales & pſychici) to ſignifie only thoſe that are for the Directory, for then let them be aſſured, Gods gifts are not ſo incloſed, but that Oxford is vouchſafed as plentiful means for the diſcovery of errour and ſuperſtition, as London, and have, among other acts of knowledge, diſcovered this one by Gods bleſſing (which again I ſhall mention) that there may be as much errour and Superſtition, in rejecting of all Liturgy, as in retaining of any, in oppoſing Ceremonies, as in aſſerting them, a negative (as I ſaid) touch not, taſt not, kneel not, bow not, as well as a poſitive ſuperſtition; as alſo that there be errours in practice, as well as doctrine & infidelities againſt the Commandments, and Sermon of Chriſt in the Mount, as well as againſt the Creed it ſelf, and that impoſing of Laws on the King and Kingdom by the Sword, aboliſhing Liturgy, ſetting up Directories by that ſtern way of argument, thoſe carnal weapons of militia or warfare, when they are not only practiſed, but aſſerted for lawful, are errours, damnable errours alſo, and ſuch as are very near the otdinary notion of Superſtition, the teaching for doctrines the Commandments of men, I would I might not ſay of------alſo. But then 2. all this being ſuppoſed of Gods granting better means of knowledge now, than formerly, I ſhall yet interpoſe, that ſure this is not a truth of an unlimited extent, for there have been Apoſtles, which had better means than we, and they that were neareſt them, (and knew their doctrines, and practices, better than it is poſſible we ſhould) had ſo alſo, nay Univerſal Councils meeting in the Holy Ghoſt, and piouſly and judiciouſly debating, had by the priviledge of Prayer, more right to that promiſe of Chriſts being in the midſt of them, and leading them into all truth, than an illegally congregated Aſſembly; and all theſe have been greater favourers of Liturgy than any of equal authority with them have been of your Directory: And 3. if all were ſuppoſed and granted which you claim, yet ſtill the means of knowledge now vouchſafed, do not make you infallible, lay not any moral or phyſical neceſſity on you to be faultleſs or errourleſs, and therefore ſtill this may be errour in you as probably, as Liturgy ſhould be Superſtition in us. And for gifts of Preaching and Prayer. I anſwer, if they are and have been truly gifts, others of former times may by the Spirit have had as liberal a portion of them, as we. For ſure thoſe days wherein the Spirit was promiſed to be poured out on all fleſh, are not theſe days of ours, or of this age, excluſively to all others; Of this I am confident, that ſome other ages have had them in ſuch a meaſure, as was moſt agreeable to the propagating of the Goſpel, and if that were then by forming or uſing of Liturgies, why may it not be ſo at this time alſo?

Having given you my opinion of theſe paſſages, and yielded to them for quietneſs ſake, a limited truth, I muſt now add, that if they be argumentative, and ſo meant as a proof that theſe Aſſemblers are likely to be in the right, while they deſtroy Liturgy, although all the Chriſtian World before them have aſſerted it, this will be a groſs piece of inſolency and untruth together; a taking upon them to be the only People of God of theſe latter times, nay to have greater judgment, knowledge, gifts, than all the whole Chriſtian World, for all Ages together, including the Apoſtles and Chriſt himſelf, have had. For all theſe have been produced together with the ſuffrage of Jews, Heathens, Mahometans alſo, to maintain ſet Forms; and though it be true, that ſome of late have found out many Superſtitions, that never were diſcover'd before, one or other almoſt in every poſture or motion in Gods Service, yet this ſure is by the help of an injuſtice in applying without all reaſon that title to thoſe actions, and not by a greater ſagacity in diſcerning, making many acts of indifferent performance, nay of Piety it ſelf, go defamed and mourning under the reproach of Superſtition, and not bringing any true light into the World, that before was wanting. This one Odium faſtened on all Orthodox Miniſters in this Kingdom at this time, of being ſuperſtitious, and the miſtake of the true notion of the word which hath to that end been infuſed into many, (but is by a Tract lately Printed ſomewhat diſcovered) hath brought in a ſhole of Sequeſtrations of Livings, which have been very neceſſary and inſtrumental, to the maintaining of theſe preſent diſtempers. And now at length it proves in more reſpects than one, that whatever unſatiate hydropical appetites are tempted to take away, is preſently involved under that title, a name that hath an univerſal malignity in it, makes any thing lawful prize that is in the company. God will in time diſplay this deceit alſo. Sect. 21.

Having mentioned theſe ſo many reaſons of their aboliſhing our Liturgie, i. e. their ſo many ſlanders againſt our Church and Church-men, all which if they were true, hang ſo looſe and ſo ſeparable from Liturgie, that they cannot juſtifie the abolition of it; At length they ſhut up their ſuggeſtions with [Upon theſe and many the like weighty conſiderations, and becauſe of divers particulars contained in the Book, they have reſolved to lay aſide the Book] where if the many conſiderations unmentioned be of no more truth or validity than theſe, and ſo be like weighty conſiderations, I acknowledge their prudence in not naming them, and think that no part of the World is like to prove the worſe for this their reſervedneſs, only by the way a general charge is nothing in Law, and in generalibus latet dolus, is a legal exception againſt any thing, of this nature. But if they have any other which they conceive to be of any weight, they are very unjuſt and very uncharitable to us, thus to enſnare our Eſtates (the fault even now laid upon the Prelates) by requiring our approbation of their Directory, and conformity of our practice to it, and yet not vouchſafe us that conviction, which they are able, to ſatisfie us of the reaſons of their proceedings. But the truth is, we ſhall not charge this on them neither, being made confident by the weakneſs of the motives produced, that they have not any more effectual in ſtore. And for the particulars contained in the Book, if there were any infirm parts in it, any thing unjuſtifiable, (which we conceive their Conſcience tells them there is not, having not in this whole Book produced one, and yet their charity to it not ſo great, as to cover or conceal any ſtore of ſins) yet would not this infer any more than only farther Reformation of the Book, which is not the deſign againſt which we now argue. Sect. 22. P. 6. P. 7.

And having proceeded to ſo bloudy a ſentence upon ſuch (μαρτυρίας ἐκ δύο, in the Goſpel phraſe) teſtimonies and accuſations ſo unſufficient and unproportionable to ſuch a condemnation, they could not but foreſee the opinion that would be had of the action, and the ill and odious conſequents that would attend it, which therefore to keep off, is the next endeavour, by profeſſing that what is done, is not from any love of Novelty. And truly 'tis well you tell us ſo, for otherwiſe the ſemblance of Sect. 23.

that love in this and other actions, might have perſwaded us mortals, who ſee but the out-ſides, ſo to judge. And ſtill notwithſtanding the affirmation, (which is not of much value in your own cauſe, unleſs we had more teſtimonies of the Authors infallibility, than this Preface hath afforded us) the conſideration of the matter and terms of the change from what and to what, of the no manner of advantage or acquiſition by it to recompence all the diſadvantages, the great temerity, if not impiety to boot, in ſeparating from this national, and in ſcorning and defying the practice of the Univerſal Church, and the great illegality, that I ſay no worſe, of your action and the preparatory ſteps of motion to it, may tempt us to affirm, that it muſt needs be a love of novelty, even a Platonick love, as the phraſe is now adays, a love of novelty, as novelty, without any other hoped for reward, without any other avowed deſign in ſeeking it, for if there be any other which may be own'd, I am confident it hath already appeared by what hath been ſaid, that this is not the way to it. But then 2. Such a profeſſion as this will not ſure ſignifie much, to innovate, and yet to ſay we love not innovation, to act with a proud high hand in deſpight of ſo much at leaſt of God, as is imprinted in the Laws of man, and our lawful Superiors, and then to excuſe it by ſaying we love not to do ſo, will but little alleviate the matter before any equal Judge. 'Tis certain there is ſomething unlovely in the reproachful name of ſin, how glibly ſoever the pleaſures of it go down, yea and even in the ſin it ſelf, it hath the δολας κρητῆρας, the two Cups in Homer more truly than that to which he applies it, its bitter and hateful, as well as its ſweeter lovelier parts, extemplo quodcunque malum committitur, ipſi Diſplicet, and if men may have leave and excuſe to commit adultery ſo long, till they fall in love not only with the pleaſure of it, but the very ſinfulneſs of it, and the name and reproach alſo, we ſhall give them a good large ſpace of Repentance: the ſhort is, the mention of Novelty is an evidence that the Compoſers Conſcience tells them, that what they now do is ſuch, and 'tis not their not loving it (perhaps only thinking, perhaps only ſaying they do not love it) which will much leſſen the fault, but rather define it to be an act againſt Conſcience, to be and continue guilty of ſo huge a novelty, when they profeſs they love it not.

Sect. 24. The next envy that they labour to avoid, is the having an intention to diſparage the Reformers, of whom they are perſwaded that were they now alive they would joyn with them in this work. This is another σοφὸν φαρμακὸν, to blanch your actions with contrary intentions, to do that which is moſt reproachful to the Reformers, to obliterate, or which is worſe, to defame their memory (whom yet at the beginning you called wiſe and pious) and then ſay you intended them no diſparagement, nay to make them repent and retract after their death (i.e. to put them in a kind of Purgatory) to undertake for them that they have changed their minds, and not only that they are now content to part with that finally out of the Church, the ſhort temporary loſs of which, one of them (Arch-Biſhop Cranmer in one of his Letters publiſht by Miles Coverdale) laments, as the ſevereſt part of the Perſecutors tyranny toward him, viz. that they would not permit him the uſe of the Common-Prayer-Book in the Priſon; but withal that they are grown Zelots too, are content to act moſt illegally and ſeditiouſly to caſt it out. The judgment of this matter we leave to any ordinary arbitration, 1. Whether it be likely that they would joyn, againſt Law to take that away, which they compiled, or make all preſcribed Forms unlawful, who did not think any fit in publick, but thoſe which were preſcribed. 2. Whether any man can have ground of ſuch perſwaſion, when they dyed in the conſtant exerciſe of it, and have ſent them no meſſage from the dead of their change of mind. 3. Whether it be not ſtrongly improbable, that they of the firſt Reformation who in Queen Maries days, flying and living in Franckfurt, and there meeting with the objections that have been produced by our new Reformers, maintain'd the Book againſt them all, would now if they were return'd to us from a longer exile, diſclaim all that they had thus maintain'd. 4. Whether it be not an argument of a ſtrong confidence and aſſurance, (which is the moſt dangerous Mother of Schiſm and Hereſie imaginable) of ſtrong paſſions and weak judgment, to think that all men would be of their ſide (as Hacket thought verily that all London would riſe with him, as ſoon as he appear'd in Cheapſide) upon no other ground of that perſwaſion mentioned, but only that they are of it, which is but in effect as the ſame Hacket did, ſhewing no evidence of his being a Prophet, but only his confidence, which produced all kind of direful Oaths that he was, and hideous imprecations on himſelf, if he were not ſo. That which is added by way of honour to thoſe Martyrs, that they were excellent Inſtruments to begin the purging and building of his houſe, may be but an artifice of raiſing their own reputation, who have perfected thoſe rude beginnings, or if it be meant in earneſt, as kindneſs to them, 'tis but an unſignificant civility, to aboliſh all the records of their Reformation, and then pay them a little praiſe in exchange for them, Martyr their aſhes (as the Papiſts did Fagius and Bucer) and then lay them down into the earth again, with a dirge or anthem, defame the Reformation, and commend the Reformers; but ſtill to intimate how much wiſer or godlier you are, than all thoſe Martyrs were.

Sect. 25. Thus far they have proceeded ad amoliendam invidiam; Now to the poſitive motives, of ſetting upon this great work of innovation, and thoſe are, 1. To anſwer in ſome meaſure the gracious providence of God, which at this time calleth upon them for farther Reformation: What they ſhould mean by the gracious Providence of God in this place; I confeſs, I cannot gueſs, (if it be not a meer name to add ſome credit to the cauſe) unleſs it be the proſperity and good ſucceſs of their Arms; which if throughout this War they had reaſon to bragg or take notice of (as ſure they have not, but of God's hand many times viſibly ſhewed againſt them, in raiſing the low eſtate of the King, without viſible means, and bringing down their mighty ſtrength, as the Septuagint makes God promiſe to fight againſt Amaleck ἐν κρυφαίᾳ χειρὶ, by ſecret hand, by inviſible,) yet ſure would not that juſtifie the taking up of thoſe Arms, much leſs be able to conſecrate all other ſins, that thoſe Arms may enable any to be guilty of. 'Tis the Turks Divinity, as before I intimated, to paſs ſentence on the action by the proſperity of the man, to make one killing of a Father villany and ſacriledge, becauſe the deſign it aim'd at miſcarried, and another of the ſame making, an heroick act, that God was pleaſed with, becauſe it brought the deſigner to the Kingdom. And therefore, I beſeech you, look no longer on the cauſe through the deceivable and deceitful glaſſes of your conceited victories, but through that one true glaſs the word of Chriſt in the New Teſtament; and if that call you to this farther reformation, go on in Busbequii Epiſt.

Gods

Gods name; But if it be any thing elſe that calleth you, (as ſure ſomewhat elſe it is you mean, for if it were Gods word, you would ere now have ſhew'd it us, and here have call'd it Gods word, which is plain and intelligible, not Gods providence, which is of an ambiguous ſignification) if any extraordinary revelation however convey'd to you; this you will never be able to approve to any that ſhould doubt your call, and therefore I ſhall meekly deſire you, and in the bowels of Chriſtian compaſſion to your ſelves, if not to your bleeding Country, once more to examine ſeriouſly, what ground you have in Gods word, to ſatisfie conſcience of the lawfulneſs of ſuch attempts, which you have uſed, to gain ſtrength to work your Reformation, and this we the rather deſire to be ſhew'd by you, becauſe you add, that having conſulted with Gods holy word, you reſolve to lay aſide the former Liturgy, which cannot ſignifie that upon command of Gods word particularly ſpeaking to this matter, you have done it, for then all this while, you would ſure have ſhewed us that word, but that the word of God hath lead you to the whole work in general, which you have taken in hand, and therefore that is it, which as a Light ſhining in ſo dark a place, we require you in the name of God to hold out to us.

After this there is a 2*d.* motive, the ſatisfaction of your own conſciences. This I cannot ſpeak to, Sect. 26. becauſe I neither know them, nor the grounds of them, ſave only by what is here mentioned, which I am ſure is not ſufficient to ſatisfie conſcience; (phanſie perhaps it may) only this I ſhall interpoſe, that it is poſſible your own conſciences may be erroneous, and we are confident they are ſo, and then you are not bound to ſatisfie them, ſave only by ſeeking better information, which one would think might be as feaſible a task as aboliſhing of Liturgy.

Next a 3*d.* motive is mentioned, that you may ſatisfie the expectation of other Reformed Churches; Sect. 27. To this firſt I ſay, that this is not the rule for the reforming of a National Church ἐντοπίαν, and independent. And ſuch I conceive, the laſt Canon of the Council of Epheſus, will by conſequence conclude this of England to be; and its being ſo, is a ſufficient plea, 1. To clear us from all ſhew of Schiſm in Separating from the Roman Church (to which we were not, according to the Epheſine rule, ſubjected as a part) though we reformed our ſelves, when the Pope vehemently required the contrary, and would not himſelf be reformed, and from the Church univerſal, of which we ſtill remain a member undivided. 2. To anſwer this motive of our Aſſemblers, by telling them that in the reforming ſuch a Church (as this of ours, if not by others, yet by them is acknowledged to be) the care muſt be, to do what the head and members of the Church, ſhall in the fear of God reſolve to be fitteſt, and not what other Churches expect; for if that were the rule, it would be a very fallacious and very puzling one, the expectations of ſeveral Churches being as ſeveral, and the choice of ſome difficulty, which of them were fitteſt to be anſwer'd. But then ſecondly, what the expectations of other Churches have been in this point, or what the reaſons of them, we do not punctually know, only this we do, that after your ſoliciting of many (which is another thing, ſomewhat diſtant from their expecting) we hear not of any, that have declared their concurrence in opinion with you in this: But on the contrary, that in anſwer to your Letter, directed to the Church of Zeland, the Wallachrian Claſſis made this return to you, that they did approve ſet and preſcribed forms of publique Prayer, as profitable and tending to edification, (quite contrary to what you before objected of the Offence to the Proteſtant Churches abroad, and now of their expectation, &c.) and give reaſons for that approbation, both from Texts of Scripture, and the general practice of the Reformed Church, avouching particularly the forementioned place of Calvin, and conclude it to be a preciſe ſingularity in thoſe men who do reject them. And now, I beſeech you, ſpeak your knowledge, and inſtance in the particular, if any Church have in any addreſs made to you, or anſwer to your invitation, ſignified their expectation that you ſhould aboliſh Liturgy, or their approbation of your fact, able to counterballance this cenſure from the Pen of thoſe your friends thus unexpectedly faln upon you. Some ingenuity either of making good your aſſertion of the Churches, or elſe of Confeſſion that you cannot, will be in common equity expected from you.

The deſires of many of the Godly among your ſelves (which you mention as a 4*th. motive* for abo- Sect. 28. lition) will ſignifie little, becauſe how many ſuffrages ſoever might be brought for the upholding of Liturgy, thoſe who are againſt it ſhall by you be called, the godly, and that number what ever it is, go for a multitude. But then again, Godly they may be, but not wiſe, (piety gives no infallibility of doctrine to the poſſeſſor) at leaſt in this point, unleſs you can firſt prove the Liturgy to be ungodly; nay they that rejoyced in it, were, as you ſay, godly and learned, and they that made it, wiſe and pious, and therefore ſure ſome reſpect was due to the wiſe as well as godly in the abrogation. And yet it may be added farther, that the way of expreſſing of the deſires of thoſe whom you mean by the godly, hath been ordinarily by way of Petitions, and thoſe it cannot be diſſembled have been oft framed and put into their hands (I ſay not by whom) even in ſet preſcribed Forms, not thinking it enough to give them a Directory for matter, without ſtinting their Spirits, by appointing the words alſo. This ſhews that the deſires of thoſe many of the Godly, are not of any huge conſideration in this buſineſs, and yet I have not heard to my remembrance of any Petition, yet ever ſo inſolent, as to demand what you have done (in anſwer it ſeems to ſome inarticulate groans or ſighs) the abolition of all Liturgy.

The laſt motive is, That you may give ſome publique teſtimony of your endeavours for uniformity in Sect. 29. divine worſhip promiſed in your Solemn League and Covenant. To this the anſwer will be ſhort, becauſe it hath for the main already been conſidered. 1. That the Covenant it ſelf is unlawful, which therefore obliges to nothing but Repentance, and reſtitution of a ſtray Subject to his Allegiance to God and the King again. 2*ly*, That there is one ſpecial thing conſiderable of this Covenant which will keep it either from obliging or from being any kind of excuſe or extenuation of the crimes that this action is guilty of, and that is the voluntary taking of that Covenant on purpoſe, thus to enſnare your ſelves in this obligation, to do what ſhould not otherwiſe be done; We before told you, that Herods oath would not juſtifie the beheading of John; and ſhall now add, that if ſome precedaneous hatred to John, made Herod lay this deſign before-hand, that Herodias's Daughter ſhould dance, that upon her dancing he would be vehemently pleaſed, that upon her pleaſing of him he would ſwear to give her any thing she should ask, even to half his Kingdom, and the same compact appoint her to make this Petition, to take John Baptists head for her reward, (as 'tis not unlikely but that as Herodias was of counsel with her Daughter, so Herod might be with Herodias) if the train I say, lay thus, sure Herods oath would take off but little from the Crimson dye of his murther, but rather superadd that sin of deep hypocrisie, of making piety, and the Religion of oaths, a servant and instrument to his incest and murthering of a Prophet. And then I shall no farther apply, than by asking this question, did you not take this Covenant on purpose to lay this obligation upon you, and now pretend that for your Covenants sake, you must needs do it? If you cannot deny this, O then remember Herod. But if you took the Covenant without any such design, but now find your selves thus ensnared by it, then rather remember betimes to get out of that snare, and not to engage your selves faster in it. 3*ly*, I answer, that if by uniformity be meant that among our selves in this Kingdom, the taking away of our Liturgy by Ordinance, while it remains establisht by valid Law, is no over-fit means to that end, nothing but a new Act, and an assurance that all would be obedient to that Act, can be proper for that purpose; and I am sure there are some men in the World, whom if such an Act displeased, the obedience would not be very uniform; what ever it may seem to be when better Subjects are supposed to be concluded by it. But if it be uniformity with the best Reformed Churches (as your Covenant mentions) then 1. That uniformity in matters of Form or Ceremony is no way necessary, (Communion betwixt Churches may be preserv'd without it) nor near so useful as that other among our selves, and therefore the bargain will be none of the most thriving, when that acquisition is paid so dear for, uniformity with strangers, purchased with confusion at home; as bad a market, as unequal a barter, as if we should enter upon a Civil War, for no other gain, than to make up a Peace with some Neighbour Prince; which none but a mad Statesman would ever counsel. But then 4*ly*, The Covenant for such uniformity, obliges not to make this Directory, which I shall prove, 1. By the verdict of those themselves which have taken the Covenant, of whom many I am confident, never conceived themselves thereby obliged to abolish Liturgy, there being no such intelligible sence contained in any branch of the Covenant, any such intention of the imposers avowed at the giving of it. 2. Because we conceive we have made it manifest, that that part of the Covenant which mentions uniformity with other best Reformed Churches, doth not oblige to abolish Liturgy, not only because the general matter of the Covenant refers it to the Government, and not to the Liturgy, but because the best Reformed Churches retain set Forms of Prayer; And because this of England, as it now stands establisht by Law, is the best Reformed, both according to that rule of Scripture, and standard of the purest ancient Church; For which we have also the testimony of learned Protestants of other Countries, preferring it before their own, and shall be ready to justifie the boast by any test or κριτήρια, that shall be resolved on fit to decide this doubt or competition between this of ours, and any that you shall Vote or name to be the best.

Sect. 30. The like challenge we shall also make in return to a tacit intimation of yours more than once faln from you in this Preface, and in the body of the Directory, p. 40. and 73. viz. that the Church of England hath hitherto been guilty of Superstition in her Liturgy. To which we first reply by desiring, that you mention any one particular wherein that accusation may appear to be true, (and we hereby undertake to maintain the contrary against any the learnedst in that Assembly) which if you will not undertake to specifie and prove, you must acknowledge to be guilty of great uncharitableneß in affirming. I shall not be so uncharitable as to wish that the judgment of the Civil Law may be your doom, and the sentence that belongs to Superstition be the reward of your defamation, I shall not say so much as the Lord reprove, by way of imprecation, but once more repeat, Lord lay it not to your charge.

Sect. 31. Upon these grounds you proceed, that [having not consulted with flesh and blood, &c.] This sure in Saint Pauls phrase, Gal. 1. 16. signifies not consulting with men, though Apostolical; as consulting with them is opposed to immediate revelation from Heaven; and then sure your Assembly was very spiritual and very heavenly, for with them you confess to have consulted; but if you mean by the phrase, in a larger sence, earthy or humane interests, I shall only ask, whether all the actions which have proceeded from you are so visibly divine and unmixt with earth, so apparently uninterested, that your own testimony should be sufficient to give credit to this affirmation?

Sect. 32. Having said this, you proceed to the conclusion, that you resolved to set up the Directory, and in it to hold forth such things as are of divine Institution in every Ordinance, and other things to set forth according to the rules of Christian Prudence, agreeable to the general rules of the Word of God. And now 'tis a little strange, (but yet that which my temper obliges me to desire may still be my fate, when I fall upon a Controversie with any) that we which have been at such distance all this while, should just now meet at parting, that such contradictory premises, should beget the same conclusion. For there is not a better Rule in the World, nor any which I would rather chuse to be judged by in this matter, than that which is here proposed by you; Only I desire a little importunately to be advertised, where it is that the Compilers of our Liturgy have swerved from it. Where you have swerved, we have instanced in many particulars in our Answer to the Ordinance, and shall now once for all demand, what rules of Prudence oblige you to turn those many severals there mentioned out of the Service of the Church, every one of them tending to edification directly, over and above the agreeableness of each to the general rules of Scripture; in particular whether it be agreeable to Christian Prudence to abolish a Liturgy, which hath been so piously and discreetly framed, by those who have seal'd our Reformation with their blood, and instead of it to bring in a voluntary way of serving God in a National Church, where there be many thousand Parishes, and no such promise of divine inspiration or enthusiasm, but that there may be still some number of those Ministers, who will not be able to speak constantly in the Congregation, so as in the presence of Angels they ought to speak. The experiments that have given us reason thus to fear, and desire prevention of the like, we are again tempted to add unto this Paper, but we delight not to demonstrate them guilty of Blasphemies, who have accused us of Superstition. We desire this fault may be cured by some milder recipe.

As for that which in passing you say, that by your Directory Ministers may be directed to keep like soundness of Doctrine, this indeed is a prerogative of the Liturgy, (which hath always been used as an hedg to keep out errors, and to retain a common profession of Catholick verities) but cannot belong to your Directory, which hath neither Creed nor Catechism, nor one Article of Religion, or Doctrine asserted in it, but leaves that wholly to the Preacher whose doctrine that it should be sound at all, or agree with the doctrine of all other Preachers, and so be like sound, here is no provision made. Sect. 33.

We have thus call'd your Preface also to some tryal, and found it of such a composure and temper, 1. So many variations from truth (which one that desires to be civil, must be unjust if he do not call them so) that we cannot with any pleasure give an accompt of our judgment of them. 2. So many unconcluding premises, Affirmations which if they were all supposed true, would never come home to abolition, and among all the heap, so no one truth which is of importance or weight toward that conclusion, that now we conceive we have discharged the task, given the Reader such a view of the inward parts of this specious fabrick, that he will not wonder, that we are not so passionately taken with the beauty, as to receive at a venture whatsoever is contain'd in it; For supposing there were never an unseasonable Direction in all the Book following, yet the reception of that, being founded in the abolition both of ours, and of all Liturgy, the Christian prudence agreeable to the word of God, which is here commended to us, obliges us to stop our ears to such slight temptations, and never to yield consent, to the but laying aside that form of Service, which we have by establisht Law so long enjoyed, to the great content and benefit of this Nation; though God knows some have not made so holy, others so thankful a use of it, as it deserved of us, some neglecting it, others slandring, and so many bringing worldly hearts along with them, which though they are great evils, under which this divine Liturgy hath suffered, yet being the infelicities, not the crimes, the cross which hath made it like unto our Saviour, in being spit on, revil'd, and crown'd with thorns (for such he calls the cares of this World, the most contumelious part of the suffering) and not at all the guilt (being wholly accidental and extrinsecal to it) must never be exchanged, for the certain evils, natural and intrinsecal to the no-Liturgy, and with all the greater mischiefs which may probably follow this alteration; for all which patience and submission, we have not the least kind of invitation, save only that of the noyse, and importunity of some enemies, which should it be yielded to, would, I doubt not, be resisted and prest again, with the Petitions of many thousands more, for importuning the return and restitution of the Liturgy again; unless by this means the Devil should gain an absolute and total manumission, cast off all his trashes, and presently get rid of both his enemies, Religion and Liturgy together. Sect. 34.

A Postscript, by way of Appendix to the two former Chapters.

THE truth of all which we have hitherto spoken, if we have not sufficiently evidenced it already, will abundantly appear by one farther testimony, which is authentick and undeniable to them, against whom we speak. And it is, (what the providence of God, and the power of truth hath extorted from them) their own confession, in a Book just now come to my hands, called, a Supply of Prayer for the Ships that want Ministers to pray with them, agreeable to the Directory establisht by Parliament, published by authority. From which these things will be worth observing, 1. That the very body of it is a set form of Prayer, and so no Superstition in set forms. 2. That their publishing it by authority is the prescribing of that form, and so 'tis lawful to prescribe such forms. 3. That the title, [of Supply of Prayer] proveth that some there are, to whom such supplies are necessary, and so a Directory not sufficient for all. And 4. that [its being agreeable to the Directory] Or as it is word for word form'd out of it, (the Directory turn'd into a Prayer) sheweth, that out of the Directory, a Prayer may easily first be made, and then constantly used, and so the Minister ever after continue as idle without exercising that gift, as under our Liturgy is pretended, and so here under pretence of supplying the ships, all such idle Mariners in the ship of the Church are supplied also, which it seems was foreseen at the writing that preface to the Directory, where they say, the Minister may, if need be, have from them some help and furniture. 5. That the Preface to this new Work entitled, A reason of this work, containeth many other things, which tend as much to the retracting their former work, as Judas's throwing back the mony did to his repentance. Sect. 1. P. 8.

As 1. that there are thousands of ships belonging to this Kingdom, which have not Ministers with them, to guide them in Prayer, and therefore either use the Common-prayer, or no Prayer at all. This shews the nature of that fact of those which without any objection mention'd against any Prayer in that Book, which was the only help for the devotion of many thousands, left them for some Months, to perfect irreligion and Atheism, and not praying at all. And besides these ships (which they here confess) how many Land-Companies be there in the same condition, how many thousand Families which have no Minister in them, (of which number the House of Commons was always wont to be one, and the House of Lords, since the Bishops were removed from thence) and to deal plainly, how many Ministers will there always be, in England and Wales (for sure your care for the Universities is not so great as to be likely to work Miracles) which will not have skill, or Power, or gift (which you please) of conceiving Prayers as they ought to do, and therefore let me impart to you the thoughts of many prudent men (since the news of your Directory, & abolition of our Liturgy) that it would prove a most expedite way Sect. 2.

to bring in Atheiſm; and this it ſeems, you do already diſcern and confeſs in the next words, that the no Prayer at all, which ſucceeded the aboliſhing of the Liturgy, is likely to make them rather Heathens than Chriſtians, and hath left the Lords day without any mark of piety or devotion: (a ſad and moſt conſiderable truth, which ſome perſons ought to lament with a wounded bleeding conſcience, the longeſt day of their life) and therefore we are apt to believe your charity to be more extenſive, than the title of that Book enlarges it, and that it hath deſigned this ſupply, not only to thoſe ſhips but to all other in the like want of our Liturgy. Your only blame in this particular hath been, that you would not be ſo ingenuous, as Judas and ſome others, that have ſoon retracted their precipitous action, and confeſt they did ſo, and made reſtitution preſently, while you, rather than you will (to reſcue men from heatheniſm cauſed by your abolition) reſtore the Book again, and confeſs you have ſinned in condemning an innocent Liturgy, will appoint ſome Aſſembler, to compile a poor, ſorry, piteous form of his own, of which I will appeal to your greateſt flatterer, if it be not ſo low that it cannot come into any terms of compariſon, or competition, with thoſe forms already preſcribed in our Book; and ſo ſtill you juſtifie your error, even while you confeſs it.

Sect. 3. 2ly, That 'tis now hoped that 'twill be no grief of heart to full Chriſtians, if the thirſty drink out of Ciſterns, when themſelves drink out of Fountains, &c. which is the ſpecial part of that ground, on which we have firſt formed, and now labour'd to preſerve our Liturgy, on purpoſe that weaker Chriſtians may have this conſtant ſupply for their infirmities, that weak Miniſters may not be forced to betray their weakneſs, that they that have not the gift of Prayer (as even in the Apoſtles times there were diverſe gifts, and all Miniſters had not promiſe to ſucceed in all, but one in one, another in another gift by the ſame ſpirit) may have the help of theſe common gifts, and ſtanding treaſures of Prayer in the Church; and (becauſe there be ſo many of theſe kinds to be lookt for in a Church) that thoſe which are able to pray as they ought, without a form, may yet in publick ſubmit to be thus reſtrained, to the uſe of ſo excellent a form thus ſet before them, rather than others ſhould be thus adventur'd to their own temerity, or incur the reproach of being thought not able; and then this providing for the weak, both Miniſter and People, will not now, I hope, be charged on the Liturgy, by thoſe, who hope their ſupply of Prayer will be no grief to others.

Sect. 4. 3ly, That theſe Prayers being enlivened, and ſent up by the ſpirit in him that prayeth, may be lively prayers and acceptable to him, who is a ſpirit, and accepts of ſervice in ſpirit and truth. Where 1. It appears by that confeſſion, that as the place that ſpeaks of worſhipping in ſpirit and truth, is not of any force againſt ſet prayers, ſo neither is that other of the Spirits helping our infirmities, belonging, as it is here confeſt moſt truly, to the zeal and fervour and intenſeneſs of devotion infuſed by the Spirit, (and not to the words wherein the addreſs is made) which if the Spirit may not infuſe alſo, in the uſe of our Liturgy, and aſſiſt a Miniſter and Congregation in the Church, as well and as effectually as a company of Mariners in a ſhip, I ſhall then confeſs that the Directory firſt, and then this Supply, may be allow'd to turn it out of the Church.

Sect. 5. Laſtly, that in truth though Prayers come never ſo new, even from the Spirit, in one that is a guide in Prayer, if the ſpirit do not quicken and enliven that Prayer in the hearer that follows him, it is to him but a dead form, and a very carcaſe of Prayer, which words being really what they ſay, a truth, a perfect truth, and more ſoberly ſpoken, than all or any other period in the Preface to the Directory, I ſhall oppoſe againſt the whole act of abolition, as a ground of confutation of the principal part of it, and ſhall only add my deſire, that it be conſidered what Prayers are moſt likely to be thus quickned and enlivened by the ſpirit in the hearer, thoſe that he is maſter of, and underſtands and knows he may joyn in, or thoſe which depend wholly on the will of the Speaker, which perhaps he underſtandeth not, and never knows what they are, till they are delivered, nor whether they be fit for him to joyn in; or in plainer words, whether a man be likely to pray, and ask moſt fervently he knows not what, or that which he knows, and comes on purpoſe to pray. For ſure the quickning and enlivening of the Spirit, is not ſo perfectly miracle, as to exclude all uſe of reaſon or underſtanding, to prepare for a capacity of it; for then there had been no need to have turn'd the Latine ſervice out of the Church, the ſpirit would have quickned thoſe Prayers alſo.

CHAP. III.

HAving thus paſt through the Ordinance and the Preface, and in the view of the Ordinance ſtated and ſetled aright the compariſon betwixt the Liturgy and the Directory, and demonſtrated the no-neceſſity, but plain unreaſonableneſs of the change, and ſo by the way inſiſted on moſt of the defects of the Directory, which are the ſpecial matter of accuſation we profeſs to find in it, I ſhall account it a Superfluous Importunity to proceed to a review of the whole body of it, which makes up the bulk of that Book, but inſtead of inſiſting on the faults and infirm parts of it (ſuch are, the prohibition of adoration toward any place, p. 10. that is of all adoration, while we have bodies about us, for that muſt be toward ſome place; the interdicting of all parts of the Apocryphal Books, p. 12. which yet the Antient Church avowed to be read for the directing of manners, though not as rule of Faith: the ſo frequent mention of the Covenant in the directions for Prayer, once as a ſpecial mercy of God, p. 17. which is the greateſt curſe could befal this Kingdom, and a great occaſion, if not Author of all the reſt, which are now upon it; then, as a means of a ſtrict and Religious Union, p. 21. which is rather an engagement of an irreligious War; Then, as a precious band that men muſt pray that it never be broken, p. 21. which is in effect to pray, that that they may never repent, but continue in Rebellion for ever; Then as a mercy again, p. 37. as if this Covenant were the greateſt treaſure we ever enjoyed: Then the praying for the Armies by Land and Sea, p. 38. with that addition [for the defence of the King and Parliament and Kingdom] as reſolving now to put that cheat upon God himſelf, which they have uſed to their fellow Subjects, that of fighting againſt the King for the defence of him, (Beloved be not deceived, God is not mocked.) Then affirming that the Fonts were ſuperſtitiouſly placed in time of Popery, and therefore the Child muſt now be baptized in ſome other place, p. 40. while yet they ſhew not any ground of that accuſation, nor ever will be able to do. Then that the cuſtoms of kneeling and praying by, and towards the dead, is ſuperſtitious, p. 73. which literally it were, (Superſtitum cultus) if it were praying to them, but now is far enough from that guilt. And laſtly, that the Lords day is commanded in the Scripture to be kept holy, p. 85. the ſanctification of which we acknowledge to be grounded in the Scripture, and inſtituted by the Apoſtles, but not commanded in the Scripture by any revealed precept. (The firſt that we meet with to this purpoſe, is that of Ignatius Epiſt. ad Magneſ. Μηκέτι σαββατίζωμεν, ἀλλὰ κατὰ κυριακὴν ζωὴν ἀγωμεν, Let us therefore Sabbatize no longer; Let every Chriſtian celebrate the Lords day, which ſaying of an Apoſtolick Writer being added to the mention of the Lords day in the New Teſtament is a great argument of the Apoſtolick inſtitution of that day, which the univerſal practice of the Church ever ſince doth ſufficiently confirm unto us, and we are content and ſatisfied with that authority, although it doth not offer to ſhew us any command in the Scripture for it. And then you may pleaſe to obſerve, that the ſame Ignatius, within a page before that place, fore-cited for the obſerving of the Lords day, hath a command for Common Prayer, and I conceive, for ſome ſet Forms; I ſhall give you the words, Πάντες ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ ἐν τῇ προσευχῇ ἅμα συνέρχεσθε, μία δέησις ἔστω κοινὴ, ὁ νοῦς, Let all meet together to the ſame, whether action or place in Prayer, Let there be one Common Prayer, one mind, &c. and Clem. Alex. to the ſame purpoſe, the Altar which we have here on Earth, is the company of thoſe that dedicate themſelves to Prayers, as having φωνὴν τὴν κοινὴν ἐν μίαν γνώμην, a common voice, and one mind, which cannot well be, unleſs there be ſome common Form, by all agreed on.) Inſtead I ſay of preſſing theſe or the like frailties upon this work, which will argue the Compoſers of it to be men and fallible, I ſhall rather deſire to expreſs and evidence my charity (and my endeavour to read it without any prejudice) by adding my opinion, that there be ſome things ſaid in it (by way of direction for the matter of Prayer, and courſe of Preaching) which agree with wholſome doctrine, and may tend to edification, and I ſhall not rob thoſe of that approbation which is due to them, nor conceive our Cauſe to need ſuch peeviſh means to ſuſtain it; Being not thereby obliged to quarrel at the Directory abſolutely as a Book, but only as it ſupplants the Liturgie (which, if it had a thouſand more excellencies in it than it hath, it would not be fit to do.) And being willing to give others an example of peaceableneſs, and of a reſolution to make no more quarrels than are neceſſary, and therefore contributing my part of the endeavour to conclude this one aſſoon as is poſſible. And the rather becauſe it is in a matter, which (if without detriment to the Church, and the Souls of men, the Book might be univerſally received, and ſo the experiment could be made) would I am confident within very few years aſſoon as the pleaſure of the change and the novelty were over, prove its own largeſt confutation, confeſs its own wants and faults; and ſo all but mad men ſee the error, and require the reſtitution of Liturgie again. This I ſpeak upon a ſerious obſervation and pondering of the tempers of men, and the ſo mutable habits of their minds, which as they are εὐμετάβολοι, eaſily changed from good to evil, ſo are they (which is the difference of men from lapſt Angels) παλίμβολοι, eaſily reduced alſo to their former ſtate again, when reaſon comes to them in the cool of the day, when the heat of the kindneſs is paſt, and a ſatiety haſtning in its ſtead, or if it prove not ſo well, yet falling from one change to another, and never coming to ſtability. How poſſible this may prove in this particular, I ſhall now evidence no farther, than by the parallel vehement diſlikes, that the Presbyterial Government hath already met with among other of our reforming Spirits, very liberally expreſt in many Pamphlets which we have lately receiv'd from London, but in none more fully than in the Epiſtle to the Book entituled, John Baptiſt, firſt charging the Presbyterians (who formerly exclaimed againſt Epiſcopacy for ſtinting the Spirit) that they began to take upon them to eſtabliſh a Dagon in his Throne, in ſtinting the whole worſhip of the God of Heaven, &c. and in plain words without mincing or diſſembling, that they had rather the French King, nay the great Turk ſhould rule over them, than theſe. The only uſe which I would now make of theſe experiments is this, to admire that bleſſed excellent Chriſtian grace of obedience, (and contentment with our preſent lot, whatſoever it be, that brings not any neceſſity of ſinning on us.) I mean, to commend to all, in matters of indifference, (or where Scripture hath not given any immediate rule, but left us to obey thoſe who are ſet over us) that happy choice of ſubmitting, rather than letting looſe our appetites, of obeying, than preſcribing; A duty, which beſides the very great eaſe it brings with it, hath much of vertue in it, and will be abundant reward to it ſelf here on Earth, and yet have a mighty arrear remaining to be paid to it in Heaven hereafter; which when it is heartily conſidered, it will be a thing of ſome difficulty to invent or feign a heavier affliction to the meek and quiet ſpirit, a more enſnaring piece of treachery to the Chriſtian Soul, (I am ſure to his Eſtate and temporal proſperity) than that of contrary irreconcileable commands, which is now the caſe, and muſt always be, when Ordinances undertake to ſuperſede Laws, when the inferiour, but ore-ſwaying power, adventures to check the Superiour. Of which ſubject I have temptation to annex a full tyde of thoughts, would it not prove too much a παρεργὸν, and be moſt ſure to be ſo eſteemed by them to whom this addreſs is now tendred. The good Lord of Heaven and Earth incline our hearts to keep that Law of his, ἥτις ἐστὶν ἐντολὴ πρώτη ἐν ἐπαγγελίᾳ, Eph. 6. 2. which is a prime Commandment, and that with a promiſe of ſecular Peace and abundance annext (if not confined) to it.

Strom. l. 7.

To conclude therefore, and ſum up all in a word; We have diſcover'd by this brief ſurvey, the reaſonableneſs of this act of Gods Providence, in permitting our Liturgy to be thus defamed, though in all reaſon the Liturgy it ſelf deſerve not that fate, the no-inconveniences ſo much as pretended to ariſe from our Liturgy, to which the Directory is not much more liable, the no-objection from the word of God against the whole or any part of it produced, or offered by you, the no manner of the least or loosest kind of necessity to abolish it, the perfect justifiableness, and withal usefulness of set forms above extemporary effusions, the very many particulars of eminent benefit to the Church, and of authority in it, preserved in our Liturgy, but in the Directory totally omitted, and that in despight of all Statutes both of King Edward and Queen Elizabeth, by which the Reformation of this Church is established among us, and I trust shall still continue, notwithstanding the opposition of those who pretended kindness, but now run riot against this reformation; we have shewed you also the true grounds of our ancestors rejoycing in our Liturgy, instead of the partial imperfect account given of that business by your Preface; the wonderful prosperity of this Church under it, contrary to the pretended sad experience, &c. and withal we have made it clear, that all the exceptions here proposed against the Liturgy, are perfectly vain and causless; as that it hath prov'd an offence, &c. the ordinary crime charg'd on those actions that are lyable to no other, and so that offence without a cause; that this offence hath been by the length of the service, which will only offend the prophane, and withal, is as observable in your Service; by the many unprofitable burthensome Ceremonies, which have been shewed, neither to be many, nor unprofitable, nor burthensome; by the disquieting of Consciences, i.e. only of the unquiet; by depriving them of the Ordinance, i.e. those who would rather lose the Sacrament than receive it kneeling, or reverently; that the offence was extended to the Reformed Churches abroad also, and yet for that no one proof offered, nor Church named that was so offended: and if there were, yet still this supposed offensiveness, no just plea for any thing but Reformation. So also that by means of the Liturgy, many were debarred of the exercise of their Ministry, the suggestion for the most part a meer calumny, and that which was true in it, ready to be retorted upon these Reformers; that the Prelates have labour'd to raise the estimation of the Liturgy too high, yet that no higher than you would the value of your Directory, to have it the rule for the manner of publick worship, or if they did; that is the fault of those Prelates not of the Liturgy; who yet were said but to have labour'd it neither, not to have effected it, and even that labour or desire of theirs, to have amounted no higher, than Calvins Letter to the Protector would avow; that this hath been to the justling out of Preaching, which is rather a special help to it, and prescribes it, and allows it its proper place, but hath oft the ill luck to be turn'd out by Preaching; that it hath been made no better than an Idol, which if it be a fault in the Liturgy, is far more chargeable on the hearing of Sermons; that the people please themselves in their presence, and lip-labour in that service; an uncharitable judging of mens hearts, and a crime to which your Directory makes men as lyable as the Liturgy; that our Liturgy is a compliance with Papists, and so a means to confirm them in their Idolatry, &c. whereas it complies with them in nothing that is Idolatrous, &c. and by complying with them, where they do with antiquity and truth, it is more apt to convince them of their errors, and by charity to invite, than by defiance; that it makes an idle Ministry; which sure the Directory will not unmake, being as fit for that turn, either by forming and conning the Prayer there delineated, or by depending on present conceptions, as the Liturgy can be; that it hinders the gift of Prayer, which if it signifie the elocution, or conception of words in Prayer, is not peculiar to the Minister, and for any thing else, hindring it no more than the Directory doth; that the continuance of it would be matter of endless strife, &c. which sure 'tis more reasonable to think of an introduction of a new way of Service, than the retaining of the old; that there be many other weighty considerations, and many particulars in the book, on which this condemnation is grounded, and yet not one of these mention'd, but kept to boyl in their own breasts, if there be any, or which is more likely, falsly here pretended to inflame the reckoning; that they are not mov'd to this by any love of novelty, and yet do that which is most novel; that they intend not to disparage the Reformers, and yet do that which is most to their disparagement; that they do this to answer Gods providence, which never call'd them to this work; to satisfie their own conscience, which if Erroneous, must not thus be satisfied; to satisfie the expectation of other Churches, which expect it not, or if they did, might rather conform to and satisfy us; and the desires of many of the Godly at home, whose piety is no assurance that their desires are reasonable, and yet are not known to have expresst any such desires; that they may give testimony of their endeavours for uniformity, whereas with other Churches, there is no such necessity of conforming in such matters, and within our selves, nothing is so contrary to uniformity, as this endeavour. And Lastly, we have learnt from them a rule by which they pretend to form their Directory, the agreeableness to the Word of God and Christian prudence, and are more confident to justify our Liturgy by that rule, against all disputers in the World; And having now over and above all this, a plain confession under their own hands, in their Supply of Prayer, to justify all that we pretend to, and so being saved the pains of any farther superfluous confutation, we shall now leave it to the judgment of any rational Lay-man in the New Assembly, to judge betwixt us and his fellow-members; whose pretensions are most moderate in this matter, whose most like Christian, those that are to rescue and preserve, or those which to destroy. Thus in the Council of Nice, holden before Constantine and Helena, in a controversy of great importance, Craton and Zenosimus, not only Lay-men but Heathens were appointed Judges or Arbitrators, only on this ground, because Craton a Philosopher would not possess any worldly goods, and Zenosimus in time of his Consulship, never received present from any, saith Jacobotius: thus also Eutropius a Pagan Philosopher, was chosen umpire between Origen and the Marcionites, it being supposed, that such an one was as fit to understand their several claims, and judge according to Allegations and proofs as any; And if we fall or miscarry before such an Aristarchus, I shall then resolve, that a Covenant may wast a soul, even drive the man into the field with Nebuchadnezzar) deprive it of those κοιναὶ ἔννοιαι, common principles of discourse, (by which, 'till it be debauched, it is ἀληθείας κριτικὴ, able, in some measure, to judge of truth, proposed and debated before it) and then I shall hope for more candor in the business from an intelligent heathen, than from him. My only appeal in that case shall be to Heaven, that the Host of Angels, may by the Lord of that Host be appointed, to guard and assist that cause, and those Armies whose pretensions in this, and all other particulars, are most righteous, and most acceptable in his sight.

Al. Aphrod. in Top.

Do not err my beloved Brethren.

Now the Lord of all mercies, and God of love and peace, grant us to be like minded in all things, that we may joyn with one heart, and tongue, to praise him, and worship him, to bless him, and to magnifie him for ever.

CONSIDERATIONS

OF

Present use, concerning the danger resulting from the change of our Church-Government.

TO him that being satisfied in judgment of the lawfulness of Episcopal Government, doth yet conceive that the parting with it is no change of Religion, and consequently, that the standing for it at this time, when it is opposed, is but the preferring the interests of some considerable men before the convenience and common wishes of all, I earnestly desire (in the bowels of compassion to my bleeding Country, and from a sincere passionate wish that the cure of this dangerous wound may not be a palliate imperfect cure) to present some few sad considerations, which I shall cast under two heads (proportionable to the two parts of the former ungrounded suggestion;) the one, That parting with the present Government is no change of Religion; the other, That standing for it at this time, is the preferring the interest of some before the common wish of all, the peace of this Nation.

Concerning the former, I offer to consideration, First, whether the Government of the Church be not a considerable part of Religion? That it is so, I shall make appear by these reasons. 1. That Government is as necessary to the preservation of the Church, as Preaching the Gospel was to the plantation of it, and that therefore it was always the Apostles practice, assoon as ever they had converted a City or Province, or any considerable number of men in it, to leave it in the hands of some faithful persons, to dress, and tend, and water, what they had thus planted; and therefore though it be possible for a Christian to be deprived of this benefit, and yet to remain Christian (as to want some limbs, or to abound to monstrosity in others, is yet reconcileable with life and being of a man) to retain the doctrine of Christianity without any Government, to be a Christian in the Wall or in the Wilderness, a Stylita or Anachorite Christian (in which case there is no doubt the use of the very Sacraments, instituted by Christ himself, would not be necessary to Christianity) yet would it be little less than fury for any to design or hope the prosperity or duration of a Church, or visible society of such Christians, without this grand necessary (though not of single being, yet) of mutual preservation, this principle, not of essence but of continuance, without which (it is the learned Breerewoods observation from Saint Augustine) that the preservation of a Church was once by experience found to be an impossible thing, no other engine being able to repair the want, or supply the place of that.

A second reason may be drawn from the concurring pleas of all the most distant pretenders for the several forms of Government in the Church, as well those that have espoused the Papal, the Presbyterial, the Independent, as those which are for the present English Form by the King and his Bishops, &c. all vehemently contending for the necessity of that Government, which they affect in the Church, and none so calm or modest in their claims, as the Assertors of the English Prelacy: which moderation or want of heat, is sure one reason that so many Sons of this Church are now tempted to think Government so inconsiderable a thing, and so extrinsecal to Christianity; though this thought thus grounded, be a double injustice. 1. In suspecting that truth, for want of asserting, which is therefore not so vehemently asserted, because it is supposed truth. 2. Incouraging heat and violence of disputers (the greatest plague in a Church) by shewing them that the Eagerest pretenders shall be most heeded, and that meekness shall not inherit the earth, though both David and Christ promised it should.

A third argument may be had from the judgment of our State, which hath thought fit to make the Government of the Church, matter of one of the Articles of our Religion, and so to join in honour the care of it with the care of the Doctrine, and to require as strict a subscription to the establish'd Government, as to the rest of the 39. heads of Doctrine, by which you may evidently see, that to change the Government is to change the Doctrine, and where Doctrine and Government both are changed, can we possibly think the Religion to be the same? I shall add no more proofs of this, because I conceive them unnecessary; the contrary misapprehension being, as I suppose, not grounded by Arguments, but of its own accord arising from an ἀπειρία, an experiment, which many men, especially persons of quality, think they have made, that in their whole lives they never reaped any benefit from Government, never received any accession or increase to their spiritual weal from that, as from the Doctrine and Liturgy of the Church, they acknowledge to have done. To this ground of misprision, as being perhaps the τὸ ἄτοπον τῆς ἀγνοίας, the cause of the whole mistake, it will not be amiss to make some answer.

1. That

1. That many benefits we receive from Government, which we do not viſibly diſcern, and that therefore when we diſcern our ſelves to have received ſome growth, and cannot but know that it was wrought by means, we ſhould rather confeſs our want of ſenſe or gratitude to the true means, than imagine thoſe not to have been the means, only becauſe we have not that ſenſe of them.

2. That thoſe means which have been more viſible to us, the diſpenſation of the Word and Sacraments, have been reacht out to us by the hand of Government, to which therefore we owe our acknowledgments in the ſecond place for our preſervation and growth, as to the hand of ſupreme providence for our being or life ſpiritual.

3. That if the benefits of Government have not been really very diſcernible and notable to all, that is not yet in any juſtice to be imputed to any defect that way in Government it ſelf, to any barrenneſs in the nature or particular temper of it, but to ſome default (which will deſerve obſerving and reforming) in the Perſons, either of the Rulers, or of thoſe which are under rule, or of a third ſort whoſe duty it is to be the Rulers Perſpectives and Otacouſticks, to preſent to their knowledge, the wants of Inferiours, which till they are known, are not likely to be repaired. The defaults in each of theſe ſeverals are, or may be, ſo many, and ſo obvious to common obſervation, that it will be much more reaſonable for each to reſolve to amend his part for the future, and ſo to make it a buſineſs of Reformation, than to charge the defaults of perſons to the deſaming of Government, and ſo to undervalue and ſcorn what our ſins firſt, then our phanſies have defamed.

The comfort is, that it hath been the clemency, as well as the ſloth or cowardiſe of Governours, which have deprived men of the great fruits of Government; and if it may be agreed that it is very expedient, and will be taken in good part, that Governours hereafter be more ſevere, as well as more diligent, more couragious, as well as more laborious, in uſing the Weapons of their warfare, to cut off or to cure, without any reſpect of perſons, whereſoever there is need of them; I ſhall hope this Objection will then be throughly anſwered, if as yet it be not.

A ſecond conſideration apportioned to the former head will be this, whether (ſuppoſing Government of the Church to be a conſiderable part of Religion) the change of it from eſtabliſhed Epiſcopacy to any other (namely to that of Presbyterie by many, without any Superiour over them, or as that is oppoſite to Epiſcopacy) be not a ſin againſt Religion? That it is, or will be ſo, I ſhall endeavour to convince the gainſayer by theſe ſteps or degrees of proof, which though perhaps not each ſingle, yet all being put together, will, I believe, where prejudice doth not hinder, be ſufficient to do it.

1. Becauſe this Government by Biſhops, ſuperiour to Presbyters, is of Apoſtolical inſtitution. But this being an affirmation, as demonſtrable by Eccleſiaſtical Records, as any thing can be, or as the Canon of Scripture which we receive, is demonſtrated to be the Canon of Scripture, and in regard it hath by others been ſufficiently proved, I ſhall therefore wholly ſpare the repeating of that trouble, and add unto it, 2. That it hath the example, though not the diſtinct precept of Chriſt, who with his twelve Apoſtles, and the many other Diſciples in time of his reſidence upon Earth, ſuperiour one to the other, are the Copy, of which the Biſhops, Presbyters and Deacons in the following age were a tranſcript, who are therefore by Saint Ignatius, Saint Johns Contemporary, allowed to receive honour, the Biſhops as Chriſt, the Presbyters as the Apoſtles, the Deacons as the Seventy. 3. That as far as concerns ſuperiority of one order to the other (which is ſufficient to eject the Presbytery which ſuppoſes an ἰσοτιμία, or equality of all) it is authorized by ſacred Scripture-practice, where it appears, that when Judas fell from his orb of motion, the dignity of being one of the twelve, is by the direction of the Spirit, and by lot beſtowed upon Matthias, who, though before a Diſciple of Chriſt, was not till then aſſumed to that dignity. Fourthly, that ſuppoſing it to be in this manner Apoſtolical, there is little colour of reaſon to doubt, but that the preſerving of it is of as great moment as many doctrines of Chriſtianity, not only becauſe many doctrines were not ſo explicitely delivered by Chriſt, but that they needed farther explicating by the Apoſtles, (and are therefore by the Church grounded not in any words of the Goſpel, but in the Epiſtles of the Apoſtles) but alſo becauſe it was in Gods providence thought fit that Government ſhould be ſetled not by Chriſt perſonally, but by the Apoſtles, that is, mediately by Chriſt, as doctrine was by Chriſt immediately. Chriſt in his life-time gives them the ground of a Church, divine truth, the word of his Father, the acknowledgment of which is the Rock on which his Church is built; on this the Apoſtles are to build, and gather members, and to ſettle the whole edifice κατὰ τάξιν, or ordinately; and that they may not err in that work, the Holy Ghoſt is promiſed to deſcend upon them, and Chriſt by that power of his to be with them in eminent manner, εἰς συντέλειαν τοῦ αἰῶνος, to the end of the world. And Government being neceſſary to this ſetling, was undoubtedly thus referred and left to them by Chriſt, and ſo their authority in inſtituting that which they inſtituted, as evidently deduced from Chriſt, as their power of preaching what they preached, or baptizing whom they baptized. And having gone thus far, I cannot but reſume my conſideration thus far made more conſiderable, and appeal to any ſober conſcience, whether it be not ſome irreligion, thus to diſplace or remove that which the Apoſtles (to whom only by Chriſt it was intruſted) according to Chriſts own Samplar and Scripture-grounds, thought fit to ſettle in the Church, ſuppoſing it to be a matter of Religion which is ſpoken of, as before we proved; nay, whether if an Angel from Heaven were to be anathematized for teaching any other doctrine than what an Apoſtle had taught, it would not be matter of juſt terrour to any that ſhould have any part in the guilt of inſtituting any other Government than that which the Apoſtles had inſtituted, eſpecially when the acts of Councils tell us, that what St. Paul denounces againſt the heterodox Angel, the Church did practiſe againſt Aerius, anathematized him for impugning this Government, which now we ſpeak of. And if ſtill the Authority of all this be blemiſht by this one exception, that this inſtitution of the Apoſtles is not affirmed in Scripture, or there commanded to poſterity to continue, and retain for ever;

Acts 1.

To this I anſwer, by ſaying that which may be a fourth Argument to prove the irreligiouſneſs of ſuch change, That there is as much, or more to be ſaid (in both thoſe reſpects, both for mention of this inſtitution in Scripture, and for Apoſtolical precept for continuing of it) for this Government, as for ſome other things whoſe change would be acknowledged very irreligious. I will only inſtance in one, the inſtitution of the Lords day, of which there is nothing can be ſaid to the ſetting up the Authority and immutability of it, which will not be ſaid of Epiſcopacy. A ground of it there was in nature, ſome Time to be ſet apart to the ſpecial publick ſervice of God; and the like ground there is in nature for this, that ſome Perſons ſhould be deſigned to, and rewarded for the ſpecial publick ſervice of God. A pattern of that there was among the Jews, one day in the ſeven deſigned for Gods Quotum or portion; the like pattern there is among the Jews for this; a Government by High-Prieſts, Prieſts and Levites. That was an inſtitution not of Chriſt in his life-time immediately, but of the Apoſtles, after his departure inveſted with ſuch power; the like inſtitution there is of this by the ſame Apoſtles after Chriſts aſcenſion, directed and aſſiſted by the Holy Ghoſt. The occaſion of pitching on the firſt day of the week, was a ſolemn action of Chriſt his Reſurrection on that day; the occaſion of this, the ſeveral diſtinct orders in the Church in Chriſts time, Chriſt, Apoſtles, Diſciples, and the manifeſt ſuperiority of him before all of them (who affirms himſelf their Lord, even when he ſpeaks of his office miniſterial, his coming to Miniſter to them) and of the Apoſtles before the Diſciples, as even now was ſhewed. The mention of that was found once in the Revelation diſtinctly, κυριακὴ, the Lords day, and twice or thrice in equipollent terms, the firſt day of the week; and the mention of Epiſcopacy is as clear, the Angel of the Church of Epheſus, &c. in the Revelation (which hath been cleared by irrefragable evidence to belong to this matter) and the Ruling Elder in Saint Paul, that muſt have double honour, and Titus left in Crete to ſet in order the things that were wanting, and to ordain Elders in every Church; and many other more clear mentions of the ſeveral titles and offices of Biſhop, Presbyter, and Deacon, than there is of the name and duties of the Lords day. The obſcure mentions of that in the Scripture were explained in the Writings and Stories of the firſt age of the Church, particularly in the Epiſtles of Ignatius; and the obſcurities of the ſacred Texts concerning Epiſcopacy, are as clearly explicated and unfolded by the ſame Ignatius, even in every one of thoſe Epiſtles of his which Vedelius (as great an enemy of this Order as Geneva hath produced any) after his fiery trial of that Author hath acknowledged to be his. The uſe of that continued from the Apoſtles time (though not univerſally till the Jewiſh Sabbath was fairly laid aſleep) till theſe days in the univerſal Church, and all particular Churches, that we read of; and the like uſe and practice of this continued univerſally without any exception from the Apoſtles time, till this day in the univerſal Church, as that ſignifies the Eaſtern and the Weſtern Church, and in each particular Church, till about this laſt Century, and in this of ours from the plantation of the Goſpel till this day. Theſe are parallels enough to even the ballance (and I profeſs to know no one more, which might weigh it down on that ſide) and to make it now ſeaſonable to demand, whether it would not be thought an act contrary to Religion (whether that ſignifies Chriſtian Piety, or meekneſs, or awe, to all that is Sacred) for any particular national Church, or part thereof, without any more warrant than is now offered for this preſent change, to remove the ſervice of God from the Lords day to any other day in the week, (which ſure is as ſmall a difference, as that betwixt Presbyterial and Epiſcopal Government can by any be conceived to be) or inſtead of our firſt day of the week, to ſet apart either an eighth or a ſixth day, and ſo to change that Apoſtolical inſtitution. If that ſeem ſtrange, or be ſtartled at, as unfit to be ventured on, or yielded to, I ſhall deſire the ſame plea may be entred for this, and that conſcience may be ſecured, that either both are lawful, or that the difference is clear, and the advantage on the Lords days ſide, or that it may be reſolved that this is unlawful as well as that.

A fifth Argument will be this, That the making (or yielding to) this change will be a ſcandal (very worthy to be conſidered) in them that ſo yield, toward thoſe which oppoſe this Government as unlawful; for this yielding will be an appearing acknowledgment, that their contrary pretenſions are true, and ſo a confirming them in their error (which is no light one, but the ſame for which Aerius was, and any another oppoſer would certainly have been anathematized, and turned out of the Catholick Church for an Heretick,) which is one ſpecial kind of Scandalizing, or occaſioning the fall of our Brethren, and withal a nouriſhing them in their uncharitable opinion, not only of us, but of the ancient Fathers of the Church (who were all Antichriſtian if this be ſo) which is another cauſing my Brother to offend: nay, a kind of countenancing that unchriſtian (I am ſure unproteſtant) Doctrine, of the lawfulneſs of taking up Arms, againſt lawful Superiours and eſtabliſh'd Laws, and propagating our opinions in Religion by that means, which perchance ſome may be betrayed to by this example, others brought to believe conſentaneous to Proteſtant Doctrine, if they which are thus guilty be thus gratified; which as it were a change in our Doctrine, if it were really acknowledged, ſo is it, in this reſpect, another act of Scandal, if it thus appear to be acknowledged, and that which would make any Heathen Prince unwilling to embrace our Religion, if this diſloyal perſwaſion were conceived to be a part of it.

A ſixth Argument (which to me is of no ſmall force) I will yet but name, and refer it to others to conſider of, That no man is a Prieſt, or lawfully ordained Miniſter of any Chriſtian Church, but he that is called and ſent by God; that there is now no way in this Kingdom, to have that calling or miſſion duly, but from Biſhops, who are the only perſons who have their power of Ordaining others, given to them in their aſſumption to that Order, by thoſe who had it before, and can derive it from the Apoſtles, who had it immediately from Heaven: and whatſoever other power a Prieſt, or Presbyter, may be thought or ſaid to have common with a Biſhop, it is yet the conſtant judgment of the univerſal Church, for 1500. years, that this of Ordination is not competible to one or more bare Presbyters without a Biſhop, and it will be eaſie to ſatisfie any reaſonable man in whatſoever may be produced of ſound, or probability to the contrary: and therefore if any Office, or Order, or Miniſtry in the Church be conſiderable, this which is the ſtanding well-head and ſpring of all the other, muſt be thought ſo alſo.

Having premiſed theſe Arguments of ſo much weight, ſufficient to ſupport the burthen deſigned to them, I ſhall add, ex abundanti, ſome inferiour ones (though they amount not ſo far, as alone of themſelves to conclude it direct irreligion, yet to add to the former heap ſome aggravations. As,

1. That to yield to this change, is to diſclaim thoſe bleſſed means of Gods providence which brought us to our Baptiſm, to all our ſpiritual life and growth that we have attained to; and that is a great ingratitude to that Government.

2. It is an act of pride and inſolency, to prefer any ſcheme of humane and modern invention before that which the Apoſtles, the Primitive, and (for ſo many years) the Univerſal Church had authorized; and therefore I could almoſt adventure to believe, that the framers of the Covenant had obliged themſelves ſecretly to maintain Epiſcopacy by putting in thoſe words [the beſt Reformed Churches] that I might eſcape thinking them ſo inſolent as to prefer any Churches before thoſe which they cannot but know have uſed Epiſcopacy.

3. It is a great tempting of Gods providence, in not being contented with that Form which hath proſpered ſo happily with us, and the whole Chriſtian World, though ſubject (as all that is humane, or mixt with fleſh, is; even the very grace of God in us) to be abuſed, and putting it to the adventure, whatſoever inconveniences the next may be ſubject to. Of the inconveniences that Presbytery doth infallibly bring along with it, and the unreconcileableneſs of them with Monarchical Government in the State, ſufficient evidences have been given; and if there were no other but this, that the endeavouring to bring it in at this time, hath brought this tempeſt and συσμὸς upon this Kingdom, and that this hath been but the general conſequent of that Government whereſoever it hath but begun to heave, caſting out Peace, and obedience to lawful authority together, it would well deſerve to have this mark of reprobation or non-election ſet upon it, if it were but for this, that the proſperity of ſuch attempts ſhould not encourage others to the like. This and the like inconveniences are of ſuch weight, that for men to be willing to exchange the certain benefits of the one, for the uncertain advantages and ſtrongly-probable calamities of the other, is a ſin that may provoke and tempt God to puniſh them yet further with greater and unexpected curſes, and therefore may deſerve in its place to be conſidered.

4. It is an Act of infidelity and practical Atheiſm (for thoſe eſpecially who being convinced with the former reaſons to acknowledge any irreligion or ſin in ſuch change) to ſacrifice any thing to our own preſent conveniences, to make any change in ſacred matters, meerly out of intuition of our own ſecular advantages; Atheiſm, in thinking that God cannot as eaſily blaſt that convenience ſo acquired, as thoſe many which came more directly to our hands; and infidelity, or diſtruſt, in thinking that God will not in his time give thoſe conveniences and advantages (if they be ſuch indeed) by means perfectly lawful, which now we covet by unlawful. To which might be added the wants and omiſſions of thoſe duties of confeſſion of Chriſt, in not defending and ſtanding to thoſe truths which we are convinced to be ſuch, in time of their being oppugned and perſecuted; ſelf-denial, in not depoſiting our own carnal ſecular aims and intereſts, and of taking up the Croſs, in not ſuffering willingly and chearfully when it lies in our way to the performing of any act of obedience to Chriſt. But I would not inlarge to theſe, but only conclude this proof with a fifth difficulty of ſeparating ſin from changes, when they are great, and in matters of weight. It is the wiſe mans advice that occaſioned this obſervation; My Son, fear thou the Lord and the King, and meddle not with them which are given to changes: The changes are ſure changes in Government, and thoſe are named indefinitely, without any reſtraint, and the medling with them that are inclined to ſuch, is oppoſed both to Piety and Loyalty, Fearing of God and the King.

I have done with the conſiderations proportioned to the firſt part of the ſuggeſtion, I proceed to the view of the ſecond part of it, and there the conſideration ſhall be only this, whether,

The change of this Government, be not a common intereſt of all, as well as of thoſe who are now Clergy-men. That it is ſo, may appear probable, becauſe the revenue or honours which belong to them in Government are not the ſole, or main part of Government; there is a weight and office, which our fore-fathers thought worthy to be encouraged and rewarded with thoſe payments, and if any man ſhall think them ill proportioned, I ſhall not doubt to tell him Saint Chryſoſtomes judgment, that the burthen of a Biſhop was formidable, even to an Angel to undergo, and if the corruption of latter times be affirmed to have changed that ſtate of things, I anſwer, That the reſtoring Epiſcopacy to its due burthen as well as reputation, were a care worthy of Reformers, and it is ſo far from my deſire that any ſuch care ſhould be ſpared, that it is now my publick ſolemn Petition both to God and man, that the power of the Keys, and the exerciſe of that Power, the due uſe of Confirmation, and (previous to that) examination, and tryal of youth, a ſtrict ſearch into the manners and tempers, and ſufficiencies of thoſe that are to be admitted into holy Orders, and to be licentiate for publick Preachers, the viſitation of each Pariſh in each Dioceſs, and the exerciſe of Church-diſcipline upon all offenders; together with painful, mature and ſober Preaching and Catechiſing, ſtudies of all kinds, and parts of Theological Learning, Languages, Controverſies, Writings of the Schools and Caſuiſts, &c. be ſo far taken into conſideration by our Law-makers, and ſo far conſidered in the collating of Church-preferments, and dignities, ſo much of Duty required of Clergy-men, and ſo little left arbitrary or at large, that every Church-preferment in this Kingdom may have ſuch a due burthen annexed to it, that no ignorant perſon ſhould be able, no lazy or luxurious perſon willing or forward to undergo it. And if this might be thus deſigned, I ſhould then reſolve, that the direct contrary to the fore-mentioned ſuggeſtions would be truth, that the ſetling and continuing of this preſent Government would prove the common intereſt of all, and only the Burthen of thoſe few that have thoſe painful offices aſſigned them; and leſt any man think this word a boaſt (which I can ſafely venture with the World at this time, and not have reaſon to fear a ſurpriſal, or being taken at my word) I ſhall venture another offer in the name of my Brethren of the Clergy; (not that I have took their particular Votes, but that I perſwade my ſelf ſo far of their Piety,) That rather than the Glory ſhould thus depart from Iſrael, by the Philiſtims taking the Ark of the Lord, laying waſte this flouriſhing Church of ours, or transforming it into a new guiſe, every one ſingle of us, that have any poſſeſſions or titles worthy any mans envy or rapine, and ſo are thought now by our own intereſts to have been bribed or fee'd Advocates in this cauſe, may forthwith be deprived of all that part of the Revenues of the Church, wherein we are legally inveſted; and he that ſhall not chearfully reſign his part in the preſent proſperity of the Church, on the meer contemplation and intuition of the benefit that may now, and after his life, redound to others, let him have the guilt of Achans wedge laid on him, and the charge of being diſturber of the State. I hope we have learnt to want as well as to abound, and to truſt God (that can feed the young Ravens when the old have expoſed them) for the feeding of us, and our Families, though all our preſent means of doing it were taken from us. If this may ſerve turn to ſatisfie the thirſt of thoſe that gape, and the ſuſpicions of thoſe that look unkindly on us, we offer to free you from all blame of Sacriledge, or oppreſſion, or injuſtice (from one of which, no other means imaginable can free a change of Government) by our own voluntary Ceſſion or reſignation, as far as our perſonal intereſts reach: and ſhall think the peace of this State, and continued proſperity of this Church, a moſt glorious purchaſe, moſt cheaply bought, if it be had upon ſuch terms as theſe. And if the Function it ſelf, with the neceſſary adjuncts to it, be not ſwept away in the calamity, we ſhall be perfectly pleaſed whatſoever befal our Perſons, and deſire, that trial may be made of the Ingenuity of Clergy-men, whether they have not thus far profited under Gods rod, as to be willing to yield to any poſſible propoſition (which will bring no guilt of ſin upon our conſciences) toward the averting the judgments of Heaven, which are now (I wiſh I might ſay for our ſins only) moſt ſadly multiplyed upon this Land.

to

PREFACE.

THAT the prime Act of Power enſtated by Chriſt on his Apoſtles, as for the governing of the Church, (and exorciſing or baniſhing all devils out of it) ſo for the effectual performing that great act of Charity to mens ſouls, reducing pertinacious ſinners to repentance, ſhould be ſo either wholly dilapidated, or piteouſly deformed, as to continue in the Church only under one of theſe two notions, either of an empty piece of formality, or of an engine of State, and ſecular contrivance, (the true Chriſtian uſe of ſhaming ſinners into reformation, being well-nigh vaniſhed out of Chriſtendom) might by an alien, or an heathen, much more by the pondering Chriſtian, be conceived very ſtrange and unreaſonable, were it not a little clear, that we are faln into thoſe times of which it was foretold by two Apoſtles, that in theſe laſt days, there ſhould come ſcoffers, walking after their own luſts: the Pride and contumacy (which have almoſt become the Genius) of this profane polluted age, heightning men to an Atheiſtical fearleſs ſcoffing and ſcorning of all that pretends to work any cures, to lay any reſtraint on them, to rob them of any degree of that licentiouſneſs, which is become the very religion, and doctrine of ſome (under the diſguiſe of Chriſtian liberty) and (the Lord be merciful unto us) the practice of moſt ranks of Chriſtian Profeſſors. This is the more ſad and wounding a conſideration, becauſe it was antiently reſolved, that Chriſtianity where ever it entred in its purity, did plant all manner of exact and ſtrict conſcientious walking, all humility, meekneſs, purity, peaceableneſs, juſtice, charity, ſobriety, imaginable; that wickedneſs and diſſolution of manners was to be lookt on, as the only hereſie, (and therefore Simon Magus, the Nicolaitans, and Gnoſticks, with other their neareſt followers, that led the Van of hereticks in Epiphanius, are notoriouſly known to have been perſons of the moſt vitious debauched, libidinous lives) and good life revered as the only orthodox profeſſor; from whence (as nothing can be more conſequent, ſo) I ſhall deſign to infer no farther concluſion, than only this, that they which live ill in the profeſſion of a moſt holy faith, (or farther than ſo, embrace and diſſeminate doctrines which tend to the diſſolution of mens lives, making the good ſpirit of God the author or cheriſher of any of their unchriſtian enterprizes) but eſpecially they that diſcharge and baniſh out of the Church thoſe means which might help to make the generality of Chriſtians better, have the ſpirit of Antichriſt working in them, even when they think themſelves moſt zealouſly buſied in the beating down his kingdom. What thoſe means are which might moſt effectually tend to the amending the lives of Chriſtians, I ſhall need no farther to interpoſe my judgment, than 1. by ſubmitting it to Chriſts, who put the Keys into the Apoſtles hands, on purpoſe as a means to exemplifie the end of his coming, Σῶσαι τὸ ἀπολωλός, Matt. 18. 11. to ſave that which was loſt, not to uſurp authority over the temporal power or ſword, and like an apoplectick palſie-fit, ἐκπλήττειν ἢ παραλύειν, to invade, or ſmite, or diſſolve the ſinews of civil government or peace, ('tis a moſt ſacred truth, that the ſpiritual hand hath no manner of juriſdiction, nor was ever believed to have for the firſt 1100 years, over Princes in their temporals, and the compoſition of the Anglican Church moſt perfectly, I had almoſt ſaid, peculiarly acknowledges it) nor again to give an office of ſplendor or grandeur to the Clergy, an authority valuable only from the ability of hurting others, or magnifying our ſelves over them, (which where it is pretended to, is indeed ſomewhat of the making of the heathen ἄρχοντες and κατακυριεύοντες, that lorded it over Gods heritage, ſerved themſelves, either their purſes, or their ambitions, or their paſſions out of the ſubjects under them) but as Chriſt ſaith διακονεῖν, ἢ διακονηθῆναι, to adminiſter charitably to them in the matters of the higheſt alloy, the divineſt, valuableſt charity of not ſuffering ſin upon the brother, Levit. 19. And 2. by minding my ſelf and others, what the Apoſtles ſay of this power, that it was given them πρὸς οἰκοδομήν, to build up the Church of Chriſt by it in general, and in particular παιδεύειν, to diſcipline them, whom no fairer means would work on, and teach them not to blaſpheme in words or actions, to work them off from all lees of ſpeculative, but eſpecially of practical Atheiſm. That theſe are the [not weak or carnal weapons of the Churches warfare, but mighty to bring down every ſtrong hold] i. e. the moſt contumacious, ſtout, impenitent ſinner, that doth but acknowledge the truth of the Goſpel, I ſhall anon have leiſure to ſhew you. In the mean, the only deſign of this Præloquium is, to awaken, (if it be poſſible) the drowſie world, and quicken them ſo far from the mortified, putrefied ſtate of ſin and ſtupidity, as to be willing but to hearken to Chriſt himſelf, when he comes but on a meſſage of mercy to them, to redeem them from iniquity, and purifie to himſelf a poſſeſſed purchaſed people (or the people which he had purchaſed for that one end that they might be) zealous of good works. If this general propoſal, (ſo pertinaciouſly decryed by our actions) might once be thought worth the hearing, then ſure Chriſts peculiar way and method of working this cure would be thought of ſome uſe, and advantage alſo; not lookt on as a meer engine, or artifice of ambitious men, as they cannot be blamed to conceive it, who think it doth any way entrench on thoſe regalities which are placed by God, I moſt willingly profeſs to believe, far above the reach of any humane authority, ſolo Deo minores, or elſe ſuppoſe it a tyrannizing, or triumphing over the moſt inferiour offender, (he that can take any carnal or ſenſual pleaſure in the exerciſe of thoſe Keys, in the uſing that ſharp engine of ſurgery, or ever draw it but in meer neceſſary charity, (to edification, and not to deſtruction) as one of the בני רמים ſons of blood, not fit to be admitted on a common Jury, much leſs advanced to be a ſpiritual Judge) but as a moſt ſovereign medicinal Recipe, that which hath the inſcription of Chriſt on it; not as of a Lord, but as a Jeſus; not as a Law-giver, but as a σωτὴρ and ἰατρὸς, a Saviour and a Phyſician of ſouls. And this peculiar way is the power of binding and looſing, (the ſubject of this enſuing Diſcourſe) which that it may be reſtored to its full vigor in this Church again, and (where-ever ſobriety ſhall adviſe) by addition of pœnitential Canons be reformed or regulated, and being put into the primitive Channel, may there be permitted to ſhew forth it ſelf in the native purity and brightneſs, and ſo being ordered according to Gods deſignation, obtain Gods bleſſing to make it effectual to its end, (the almoſt only piece of reformation which this Church of England, as it hath been long, and as yet ſtands eſtabliſhed by Law, may juſtly be thought to ſtand in need of) ſhall be the prayer of him, who profeſſes to love and admire the beauty of this Fabrick, even when it lies polluted in its blood, and to wiſh no greater bleſſing to its deareſt Friends, or, for whom he daily prays, moſt implacable enemies, than (that of old Bartimæus for himſelf, Lord, that they may receive their ſight) that the ſcales may fall off from all our eyes, that we may ſee and value what is ſo illuſtriouſly conſpicuous, and eſtimable in it ſelf, and not ſo blear our ſight with the obſervation of the miſcarriages in this kind, as not to diſcern or value the deſignation; which, if the abuſes, and exceſſes, and miſtakes (that have crept in in that matter) were timely diſcerned, and removed, and that which is Chriſtian and Apoſtolical revived, and reſtored in prudence and ſobriety, might yet again ſhew the world the uſe of that Prelacy, which is now ſo zealouſly contemned, and recover at once the Order, and the Eſtimation of it, ſet more Saints on their knees, in petitions for the reducing and reſtoring, than ever employed their hands towards the ſuppreſſing of it. I ſhall no longer need to detain the Reader in his entrance, having no uſe of any popular topicks to court, or get advantage on his affections, but deſiring only to treat with his reaſon (as that is elevated by Chriſt) his more noble maſculine faculty, and 1. From the inſtitution of Chriſt to ſhew him the benefit that will accrue to that better part of him, by continuing within ſubjection to this government: and 2. By the peculiarity of the Fabrick of this excellent (yet eſtabliſht) Church of England, to challenge the moſt ſharp-ſighted oppoſition to ſhew where the due execution of this power according to Law, can provoke him to any thing, but charity and gratitude, both to the Saviour that deſigned, and to the Prelate that is his Angel in conveying this ſeaſonable mercy to him; and more generally, where, or in what point of conjunction, or motion, it can any way enterfere, or diſturb the civil intereſt. Which it would be hard to affirm, of any other national Church in Europe, which hath any power either of repreſſing Hereticks, or of reforming, or but of ſhaming notorious offenders, left in it. The Lord grant us unprejudicate honeſt hearts to judge uprightly of it, and every one of us, that κόσμος πολυτελὴς, precious ornament, 1 Pet. 3. 4. (inſtead of that πορφύρα τῦ σκότους, that bravery of hell in Macarius, that the proud ſinner is ſo well pleaſed with) I mean that meekneſs and quietneſs of ſpirit, to think ſome others may poſſibly diſcern betwixt good and evil, as well as our ſelves; and when that prayer is once heard, I ſhall then ſuppoſe that κρεῖττον that hath given Themiſtocles the πρωτεῖα or prehe-minence over his fellows in the Judgment of all poſterity, (viz. that every man named him next after himſelf) will certainly end the preſent Church-controverſie of theſe ſad times. A moderate Epiſcopacy, with a ſtanding aſſiſtant Presbytery, (and * every of thoſe aſſigned his full task and province of employment alſo) being the only fourth, which as it will certainly ſatisfie the deſires of thoſe whoſe pretenſions are regular and moderate, (having by their ſtudy of learning and Chriſtianity, attained to ſome meaſure of that grace which Ariſtonymus of old recites among the benefits of Philoſophy, βιῶσαι ἀρκούμενον τοῖς παροῦσι, τῶν ἀπόντων μὴ ὀρεγόμενον) craving nothing more, and in many things leſs than the ſtanding Laws of the Land allow them, ſo will it appear to be that which all other parties can beſt tolerate, and which next himſelf, both Presbyterian and Independent, and Eraſtian will make no queſtion to chuſe and prefer before any of the other pretenders.

Tit. 2. 14.

* Vid. Con. of preſent uſe concerning change of Church-government. p. 16.

This,

This, I conceive, is not by me magiſterially dictated, but already demonſtrated à poſteriori, by the experience which the few laſt months have yielded us, ſince the pretenſions of the Prelacy grew weaker, and of the other three more flattering and hopeful one againſt the other. Where in every turn of the trembling motion, that which hath feared moſt to be ſupplanted by either of the other pretenders, hath been content to acknowledge, that their coſt and induſtry in the eradication of Prelacy, is not likely to be rewarded in this life, but with ſorer preſſures, or more dangerous looſeneſs, than that which formerly they had mourned under: And for a demonſtration à priori, I ſuppoſe it ſufficient, if it be but calmly conſidered, that the ſeveral excellencies of the other three, by which they ſet themſelves out amiable and deſirable to admirers or followers, (the Presbyterians ſharpneſs and ſeverity againſt all ignorance and ſin, the Independents zeal againſt mixt Congregations, and the Eraſtians care that the civil power may not be entrencht on, and that they that might receive benefit by the Word and Sacraments, ſhould by no means be interdicted the uſe of them) may all and each of them be found (at leaſt, as in mixture, refracted and) compounded in this fourth: Which to ſhew particularly, would require a length beyond the bounds of this Preface, and on that civility to the Reader, it is now omitted, as alſo that I may not ſeem to have miſtaken the point of the preſent Controverſie; which certainly among the quickeſt ſharpeſt deſigners or managers of it, is not, what are the uſes and excellencies of this power, but what the propereſt ſeat, who the fitteſt to be intruſted with it.

One thing yet more there is, which in this matter will deſerve to be conſidered, viz. the Conſcience of Our Soveraign, in order both to our common duty to Him, and to an honourable and durable peace, toward which how near ſoever we conceive our ſelves advanced by providence, we cannot reaſonably expect the ſure bleſſing of God, to conſummate and crown our hopes, if we do not, φιλοτιμεῖσθαι ἡσυχάζειν, in the Apoſtles phraſe, i.e. uſe all the expedients, that any ambitious man would employ to the attaining his worldly deſign, I mean, all that prudence will ſuggeſt, and ſober Chriſtians conſcience not reject, to the making up a happy compliance with him; in a word, if we do not all by moderate lawful means love and follow peace, and conſider them who have the legal power over us.

O that we would know, at leaſt in this our day, the things belonging to our peace, before that fatal voice go out, But now are they hid from our eyes.

OF

POWER of the KEYES, OR OF Binding and Looſing.

FOR the clear ſtating of this point, there is but one Method ſeaſonable, (becauſe but one aſteriſm that hath any powerful influence upon it) the conjunction of the ſeveral paſſages in the New Teſtament about the donation and exerciſe of this power, For in matters of Chriſts inſtitution, which have no foundation in the Law of Nature, it muſt needs be improper for reaſon to interpoſe and aſſert, or define what that accounts moſt agreeable, (for that is to ſubject to our tribunal, not the acts of his juſtice, which God hath been willing to yield us, *Iſa.*5.3. and Ezek. 18. 25. and in them to appeal to our own reaſon; but the acts of his wiſdom, (for ſuch are all his inſtitutions) which God will not allow us to judge, or diſpute, *Rom.*9.20.) any farther than by diſcourſe to conclude from the context, and words of that inſtitution, what is moſt agreeable to the importance of thoſe words, and by way of advice to direct us, to compare our conceits with the doctrines of thoſe, who were neareſt to the times of that inſtitution, and might probably know more of it (and be more inſtrumental to us for the deciding any difficulty) than thoſe that being farther removed, look on at that greater diſtance. And therefore, as in the buſineſs of the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, the ſureſt courſe to compoſe the Controverſies, and ſatisfie the ſcruples of men in that point, were to reduce it to its principles, and to reſolve by conſent to aſſert no more in that point (as matter of faith at leaſt) than might be naturally and infallibly concluded from the places of Scripture concerning the inſtitution, uſe and nature of that Sacrament, or the antient primitive underſtanding of thoſe places, and natural deductions from them (for the reducing of which operation to practice, an attempt hath been made in another place) ſo will it be the moſt probable towardly courſe, I conceive, leaſt ſubject to any dangerous miſtake, to reſolve and obſerve in this buſineſs.

Pract. Cat. l. 6.

CHAP. I.

Sect. 1. AND then the firſt thing obſervable will be, that the three only places to be met with in the Goſpel concerning this inſtitution (Matth. 16. 19. Matth. 18. 18. John 20. 23.) are no two of them fully parallel to one another, or co-incident; I mean no two of them narrations of the ſame one ſpeech of Chriſt, but (as by the occaſion and circumſtances of time and place it will appear) each delivered by Chriſt at a ſeveral time; the firſt Matth. 16. 19. was upon occaſion of Peters confeſſion) a promiſe of what ſhould be conferred afterwards upon him by way of reward and encouragement [I will (not yet de præſenti, I do, but de futuro, I will) give thee the Keys, &c. and then ὃ ἐὰν δήσῃς, whatſoever thou ſhalt, &c.] In like manner as Matth. 19.28. Thoſe which had parted with all to follow Chriſt, and undertook his diſciple-ſhip, are promiſed by way of reward, that they ſhall in the παλιγγενεσία (i. e. the new age, or ſtate, beginning after Chriſts Reſurrection) ſit upon twelve thrones and judge, &c. i. e. have every one of them, not Peter only, under and after Chriſt, a juriſdiction and power in the Church, ſomewhat proportionable to that of the ſeveral Phylarchæ, or rulers of the Tribes among the Jews. The ſecond Mat. 18. 18. was an exemplifying of that glorious truth, *ver.*11. that Chriſt came σῶσαι τὸ ἀπολωλὸς, to ſave that that was loſt: upon the heels of which bare aſſertion, follows firſt a Parable, *v.*12,13,14. (a ſpecial piece of Chriſts Logick and Rhetorick to prove popularly, and ſo to perſwade, and then v. 15. the inſtitution of a piece of diſcipline perpetually to continue in the Church of his plantation, as moſt eminently inſtrumental to that deſign, the reducing obſtinate ſinners to repentance. The conſideration of which one thing, that theſe Keys, when Chriſt was gone, were to continue imployed on that ſame great work, or deſign, which brought Chriſt into the world, the ſaving of ſuch as were loſt, will be able to ſet a competent value on this Inſtitution, and reſcue it from the contempts and ſcorns, which the impious world is pleaſed to make its portion; very agreeable to that greater ſtratagem of Satan, who by complying with our wiſhes and

and our intereſts, eaſily prevails with vitious men, to believe neither reſurrection, nor judgment to come; and this, as it is noted by the Fathers, the κοινὸν δόγμα καὶ νόμος ἐς ἀκολάστους καὶ λάγνους φιλῶ, the only beloved doctrine of the effeminate and voluptuous. The third place John 20.23, is apparently part of Chriſts ſpeech to all his diſciples, (after his reſurrection, and his having confirm'd them all but Thomas, in the truth of it, v. 20.) and was a kind of farewel to his Church, and an actual inauguration, or conſecration of them from diſciples into Apoſtles, as μαθηταὶ diſciples, v. 20. and ἀπέσταλκε ſent, v. 21. put together do import, (and the τοὺς σὺν αὐτοῖς, they that were with them, Luke 24. 33. doth not contradict, for there is no mention of theſe words, of Binding and Looſing in that Goſpel, and if there were, it would not follow that the power of binding was delivered to that mixt company, any more than the power from on high was promiſed to them, v. 49. which ſurely belonged only to the Apoſtles, as will appear by the words immediately precedent, ὑμεῖς δὲ ἐστε μάρτυρες, being rightly interpreted, [and be ye witneſſes of theſe things] i. e. of his death and reſurrection, which we know was peculiarly the office of the Apoſtles) which being a ſolemn donation was ſet out by a ſpecial ceremony, viz. that of Chriſts breathing upon them, a ſignificant one to expreſs the τὸ πνεῦμα, the eternal breath or ſpirit of God, which he would ſuddenly pour on them, and for it * prepares them by this λάβετε πνεῦμα ἅγιον, receive the holy Ghoſt, (which were the words annext to that ceremony, the words of Conſecration, the ſame that we now retain in the Ordination of a Prieſt) whoſe ſins you do remit, (or ἂν τινων ἀφῆτε ἁμαρτίας, if you do remit any mens ſins) they are remitted to them, and if you do retain any, they are retained.

From all which Three thus compared, the firſt general reſult is this, That the power of binding and looſing is a ſolemn privilege or ‖ Prerogative of the Church of Chriſt, thrice inſiſted on by our Saviour, 1. By way of Prediction, that he would confer it, Matth. 16. then ſecondly, by way of a more particular deſcription of the manner, and direction for the end and uſe of it, Matth. 18. And thirdly, by a preparatory kind of inſtating them in this power, an initial inveſting them with this ſacred ghoſtly authority, John 20. (immediately before his final departure from the world) which ſeemeth to have been * throughly perfected and compleated, when after his aſcenſion, the holy Ghoſt did viſibly deſcend upon thoſe to whom theſe words were by Chriſt then delivered [Receive the holy Ghoſt, &c.] This formal compleat inſtating of this power (of binding and looſing) upon them, and not only the giving of thoſe gifts of tongues, &c. being a main branch and effect of this deſcending, and their receiving of the holy Ghoſt, according to that of Iſai. 32. if you compare v. 1. of the [King and Princes ruling in judgment, prophetically intimating Chriſt and his Apoſtles,] with v. 15, and 16. where the deſcent of the Spirit is mentioned as a preparative to the exerciſe of that judicative power, and ſo Epheſ. 4. he gave gifts unto men, v. 8. and gave ſome Apoſtles, &c. v. 11. And this I conceive will direct us to the importance of thoſe words. Luke 24.49. [I ſend the promiſe of my Father upon you] ſo as they may be parallel with this place, John 20. 23. receive the holy Ghoſt. No doubt that promiſe of the Father was the holy Ghoſt, John 15. 26. and the [I ſend upon you] (both as a verbum ſolenne, I ſend, i. e. I inſtate on you, and that in the preſent I ſend, not in the future, I will ſend) all one with the [λάβετε receive him] and ſo the power from on high, in the end of the verſe, clearly ſignifies that viſible miſſion of the holy Ghoſt, which they were to expect, as the means of compleating this donation; and ſo 'tis clear by comparing it with Acts 1. 4. and 8. where the ſame phraſes are uſed. And therefore John 20. 21. immediately before the [receive the holy Ghoſt] he ſaith, As my Father ſent me, ſo ſend I you, intimating that as at his miſſion to his office he was anointed with the holy Ghoſt, Acts 10. 38. viz. upon his Baptiſm, Luke 3. 22. (whereupon 'tis ſaid, that he by the ſpirit caſt out devils, Matth. 12. 28. which is clearly ſymbolical, and parallel to his looſing, or remiſſion of ſins (ſo the Apoſtles at their miſſion, or entrance on their power, ſhould be anointed alſo.

* τὸ δὲ [λάβετε] πνεῦμα ἀντὶ τοῦ γίνεσθε ὑπηκόοι τοῖς τὸ λαβεῖν πνεῦμα. Theop. in Joh. 20. The Words [receive the holy Ghoſt] ſignifie, be you ready to receive him. Sect. 2.

‖ ἐξουσία ἀφίεναι καὶ λυσιτ. Theoph. in Mat. 16. in the ſence of ἐξουσία Joh. 1. 12. for privilege, or right, or power.

* ἐμπνεύσας, ἵνα τὴν πλείαν δωρεὰν τοῦ ἁγίου πνεύματος αὐτοῖς ὑμῶν, παυτὸν δὲ τῷ πνεύματος ἔμελλε δώσειν, ἀλλὰ πρὸς ὑποδοχὴν τοῦ πνεύματος ὑπηδύνεν αὐτοὺς ποιῶν. Theoph. in John 20. The perfect gift of the holy Ghoſt was diſtributed to them in the Pentecoſt, a preparative only adminiſtred to them in that breathing.

CHAP. II.

HAving proceeded thus far by way of general precognition, that which is behind, will, I conceive, be moſt intelligible, if it be reduced to theſe few heads. 1. On whom this power was beſtowed. 2. In what it conſiſts. 3. To what uſe 'tis deſign'd, and to what ſort of men it belongs objective, or who are to be bound and looſed. 4. What is the real effect of it, or what conjunction it hath with binding and looſing in Heaven. Sect. 1.

For the firſt, though to him that conſidereth the place of Matt. 18. alone by it ſelf, (which is an obſcure place) the matter be not ſo clear to whom this power was given by Chriſt, and though thereupon ſome miſtakes have ariſen, and occaſion of conceiting this power of binding, &c. to be inſtated by Chriſt on the whole aggregate of any particular Church, yet ſurely the matter will be ſufficiently clear, if (as it is moſt reaſonable) we firſt allow that obſcure place leave to borrow light from the two other moſt evident ones (and not obſcure the more evident by that:) and ſecondly (after we have brought that light to it) obſerve, what glimmerings of light we ſhall be able to diſcern (by that help) even in that obſcure place it ſelf, which will (as the weak light of the Moon with that treaſure of light, borrowed from the Sun, added to it) become by this means exceeding light ſome. For although theſe three places are not parallel one to the other, in reſpect of the times, and occaſions of delivering them, and other circumſtances, yet there is no doubt, but they belong all to the ſame general matter, the power of binding, &c. And that being (as it is apparent even by that of Matt. 18. 18.) inſtated not on the whole world, or community of men, but determinated to ſome peculiar ſubject, there is all reaſon to reſolve that that ſubject, though diverſly expreſt, is yet the ſame in all Sect. 2.

those places, unless some evidence of Scripture or authentick testimony of antient Church, or practice shall demonstrate the contrary; which that it doth not, will (as far as concerns the Scripture, which deserves our first search) be thus cleared, by considering the several places.

Sect. 3. And first, Matt. 16. 19. which was occasioned thus; Christ examining his disciples what opinion they had of him, is answered by Simon, that he was the Christ, the Messias, the Son of the living God, v. 16. upon which Christ pronounceth him a blessed person, as having received that supernatural gift of Faith from God himself, which no humane means could have helpt him to; and upon this changes his name from Simon Bar Jona (the only name he had, ver. 17.) to Cephas in Syriack, that is πέτρα in Greek, or, as Homer and other good Authors, and (which bears most affinity with the dialect of this book) the author of the second book of Mac. c. 4. 41, used in the masculine πέτρος, signifying a rock or stone, to intimate that he should be (as a foundation or strong rocky stone in a building is a principal ingredient in the building, and a means of the future stability of it, Matth. 7. 27. the storm and flouds and winds came upon it, and it fell not, because τεθεμελίωτο ἐπὶ τὴν πέτραν, it was founded on such a firm rocky stone) a principal part, call it foundation, or rock, or pillar of that Church of Christians, which partly by this confession of his, here recorded to all posterity, and partly by his future teaching, he should be a means to erect for Christs service: and then being so glorious an Instrument of converting so many, Christ is pleased to give him the Keys of this Kingdom; λέγει τὸ, δώσω σοι, ἐξουσιαστικῶς, ὥσπερ γὰρ πατὴρ δέδωκέ σοι τὴν ἀποκάλυψιν, οὕτως ἐγὼ τὰς κλεῖς. Theophil. in Matt. 16. authoritatively he gave him the keys, as his Father had done the Revelation, ἐξουσίαν ἀφέσεως, &c. as he goes on, a power of binding and loosing, &c. so ἁμαρτιῶν συγχωρήσεως καὶ ἐπιτιμήσεως, the pardoning and punishing of sins, in a word, a spiritual grace or power, or jurisdiction over these future Converts of his (as generally in the Apostles times, and after, he that converted any country or chief city in his Apostleship, was setled as their Bishop or Governour in spiritual matters, and so continued all his life, unless having setled them, he thought good to commit that office, and power to some body else, that so he might be the more free to go and preach and convert more) though not as yet, because they were not by him as yet converted, yet by way of promise in diem to be performed, when time should serve; I will give thee the keys, and whatsoever thou shalt bind, &c. The sum is, Peter was to be an Apostle, and to do wonders in converting whole nations to Christ, and among those whom he thus converted, Christ promises that he should have a Jurisdiction, a power to govern, and discipline, and censure, as there should be occasion in those Churches.

Sect. 4. This being thus promised to Peter, as a chief Apostle, and Confessor of Christs, not exclusivè by way of exclusion, that none should have this power but he, but honorificè by way of honour mentioned first to him by the privilege of πρωτοκλησία, of being (as I conceive he was) the first that was call'd, but more peculiarly as a reward of his notable confession, ver. 16. is by Christ a little before his parting from the world, after his resurrection Joh. 20. 23. actually instated both on him, and * the rest of the Apostles, who were to joyn in the same office with him of begetting unto Christ, and educating those which were so begotten, of converting and preserving, or governing, and in order to that end were to have their several Provinces assigned them (ὁ μὲν τοῦτο, ὅδε ἐκεῖνο λαβὼν τὸ μέρος, saith Chrys. every of them his distinct part) for Preaching first, as afterward for Jurisdiction; which I shall adventure to affirm not improbable to be the meaning of πορευθῆναι εἰς ἴδιον τόπον, to go to his own place, Act. 1. 25. applying it not to Judas, but to Matthias, or the ἵνα ἓν ἐκλέξῃ, him that should be chosen, and so again most probably of the κλῆρος καὶ διακονίας καὶ ἀποστολῆς, the part, or lot, or portion of Ministry and Apostleship, in the beginning of the verse, (the former of them belonging to the Office of Preaching peculiarly, the latter to that of Governing also) distributed to each, either by lot or by joynt consent, and designment of that great πρεσβυτέριον, the Colledge of the Apostles; It being most proper and according to analogy, that the κοπιῶντες ἐν διδαχῇ those which had laboured and toiled in the word and doctrine, for the converting and begetting men to Christ, should be also thought worthy of the διπλῆς τιμῆς, or πρωτοτόκια, the elder brothers privilege and prerogative, to be rulers or Masters of the family after the fathers departure, and so be endued with a paternal power of chastisements (i. e. discipline) and Government for the keeping of them in some compass, within the terms of a peaceable, holy, ‖ truly-Christian Congregation; and therefore after the (πέμπω ὑμᾶς John 20. 21. I send you) (the form of words, that made them Apostles answerable to the שְׁלִיחִים nuntio's, messengers among the Jews, and not far unlike to the Proconsuls sent out, though on a quite distant errand of secular power, among the Romans) immediately follows the ἐνεφύσησε, he breathed on them (proportionable to God's course of making a living soul, Gen. 2. ver. 7. by breathing on him the breath of life) and said, Receive the holy Ghost, If you remit any mens sins, they are remitted; if you retain, they are retained; which words were apparently delivered, (and in them this power) to as many as were breathed on, i. e. to as many as were * sent by Christ, and indeed to no more, unless either first by way of Communication from them, to their successors, or secondly by special immediate vocation from Heaven, by the bath col, as the Hebrews phrase is, the daughter of thunder, i. e. voice from Heaven sent to consecrate them. Thus St. Paul who was none of the twelve, yet speaking of the Power of excommunicating, saith, it was given to him (to him not as a successor of the Apostles, but to him as one called immediately from Heaven) by the Lord or by Christ, 2 Cor. 13. 10. In a word, it was by Christ immediately then given to the Apostles all and each of them, and to none else, till Matthias was received into the place of Judas, and St. Paul was afterward extraordinarily designed, and called unto the same office, together with Barnabas, Act. 13. 2. proportionably it may seem to what befel the twelve Patriarchs, Ephraim and Manasses being taken in, in Josephs stead that died, as these two in the place of James the brother of John, who was cut off, before he came to do that work to which he was sent, the preaching to all Nations.

Those two places thus agreeing on the Subjects of this power, or objects of this donation, 'tis already more than probable, that the third witness producible, will agree with those two, or if it seem otherwise, sure 'twill not be thought reasonable, that these two shall be forced and violenced, to consent to that, which is but an alien sence, by some Interpreters imposed upon that third.

This

* Εἰ γὰρ καὶ πρὸς Πέτρον μόνον εἴρηται, τὸ, δώσω σοι, ἀλλὰ καὶ πᾶσι τοῖς ἀποστόλοις λέλεκται· ὅτι ἐκεῖνον, ἂν τινων ἀφῆτε, &c. Theoph. in Matt. 16. p. 94. Though 'twere said only to Peter [I will give thee] yet 'twas given to all the Apostles: When? when he said, If you remit any mans sins. John 20. 23.

‖ καθάπερ τὶς βασιλεὺς ἄρχοντα ἀποστέλλων, ἐξουσίαν εἰς τὸ δεσμωτήριον ἐμβαλεῖν καὶ ἀφεῖναι δίδωσιν, ὕστερον καὶ τέτυς ἐκπέμπων, πάντα ἐκείνῳ τῇ δυνάμει, Chr. in Joh. 20. As a King that sends out rulers over Provinces, gives them power to cast in Prison, and to let out; so sending the Apostles he endues them with this power.

* πᾶσι τοῖς ἀποστόλοις. Theoph. To all the Apostles.

This third place I shall set down at large, because I acknowledge there is some difficulty in it, Matt. 18. 15. If thy brother shall offend against thee, it seems the place belongs not primarily, (but only patritate rationis, by analogy of reason) to all sins in the latitude, but peculiarly, to trespasses or personal injuries done by one brother, one Christian to another; as besides the expres words v. 15. (If thy brother trespas against thee) is more clear by St. Peter's question to the same purpose, v. 21. (How oft shall my brother trespas against me, and I forgive him?) Go and reprove ἔλεγξον, i. e. either reprehend him for it, (as the word is used sometimes when 'tis joyned with παιδεύω, chasten or discipline, Heb. 12. 5. Apoc. 3. 19. or again ἔλεγξον *, make him sensible of the wrong he hath done thee, or as it may be rendred, ‖ make him ashamed of his fact) betwixt thee and him alone, (i. e. do thy best by private admonitions to bring him to a sense) If he hear thee (be thus wrought on) thou hast gain'd thy brother; gain'd him, first to thy self (gotten a friend instead of an enemy;) and secondly to Christ, gained a Convert, a Proselyte to him, and this also a great acquisition to thee, to have had the honour of doing that glorious thing, and of being capable of the reward of them, that convert any to right eousness. Sect. 6.

* ἔλεγξις, φανέωσις ἢ καταμήνυσις, Phavor. ἐλέγχω, τὸ καταμηνύω ἀτίμημα πνὸς εἰς φῶς ἄγω, &c.

ἁπλῶς τὸ ἀληθὲς φανερόω, ib. and so John 3. 20. he that doth evil cometh not to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved, ἐλεγχθῇ [discovered] in our margent, and therefore 1 Cor. 14. 24. when 'tis said of the unbeliever, that he is convinced of all, &c. 'tis added v. 25. Thus are the secrets of his heart made manifest; so Ephes. 5. 13. All things that are reproved, or discovered, are made manifest by the light; for whatsoever doth make manifest, is light. ἐλεγχθῆναι, αἰσχυνθῆναι, & ἔλεγχος ἀεὶ αἰσχύνης πέπλος, & ἐλέγχειν ἀντὶ τοῦ αἰσχύνειν, Phavor.

But if he hear thee not, if this first method of thy charity, and discipline of this calmer making succeed not, another assay must be made, another artifice used, Take with thee (ἔτι farther, or over and above) one, or two, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established, i. e. that the thing which thou layest to his charge, be so confirmed; according to that Joh. 8. 17. The testimony of two men is true, i. e. of sufficient authority in law) according to an Hebraism, whereby, נאמן, ἀληθὲς true, among the Greek translators signifieth πιστὸς fit, to be credited) that so either by the testimony of these as witnesses, he may no longer be able to deny the fact (as Heb. 6. 16. an oath is said to be εἰς βεβαίωσιν, for establishing, or confirmation, in that it is ἀντιλογίας πέρας, an end of affirming and denying; the thing so established (βεβαιωθὲν or σταθὲν) by oath, cannot be denyed, or the parties denial will no longer stand him in stead) or by authority of these he may be induced (as the Judge is on the accused, Deut. 19. 15. Heb. 10. 28.) to give sentence on, to condemn himself; which if it may be obtained, is the prime end of all these charitable artifices, to bring the injurious to a sight and shame, the best preparatives to reformation; To which purpose is that of Tertullian, Apol. c. 39. Disciplinam præceptorum inculcationibus densamus, We thicken the doctrine of precepts with ways of inculcating, i. e. press them to reformation, whom our doctrine will not prevail on; where he mentions these three degrees, exhortationes, castigationes, censura; exhortations and chastisements, and then censure. Sect. 7.

By what hath been said of this place, and in it by observing the method of the first and second admonition, you will by the way understand the meaning of that obscure verse in Saint Paul, 2 Cor. 13. 1. This third time I come unto you; in the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established, &c. It refers clearly to this usage of the second admonition. St. Paul had written before, or perhaps had admonished them before at his second being among them, which was as it were the first single admonition, which ver. 2. he calls (προείρηκα I told you formerly;) but that prevailing not, he now before his third coming, warns them again, either ὡς παρὼν τὸ δεύτερον, προλέγω I give you warning, as I did when I was the second time among you, but now more solemnly, as in the presence of two or three witnesses, or else προλέγω τὸ δεύτερον, I foretel you this second time, ὡς παρὼν, by this Epistle which is all one as if I were present and did it personally, this being to supply the place of the taking with him ἔτι ἕνα ἢ δύο, one or two more, as appears by the addition of these very words, which are in Matt. [in the mouth of two or three witnesses, &c.] which is, you see, the stile and character of the second admonition: This by the way. Sect. 8.

But if he hear not them (παρακούσῃ αὐτῶν, if he be still refractory, either through non-conviction of the fact, or non-contrition for it) if this second admonition be not in event εἰς οἰκοδομὴν, 2 Cor. 13. 10. to edification, or instruction, if it work not on him, then tell it to the Church, (I shall tell you what that is presently) and if he hear not the Church, (continue his refractoriness still) let him be unto thee as a heathen or a publican] which may possibly signifie, that in that case thou hast liberty to implead him, as thou wouldst do any heathen, in any foreign heathen Court for that injury, that trespas done to thee, which was at the first mentioned. For certainly though it were unlawful for a Christian both here and 1 Cor. 6. 1. to implead a Christian for a personal trespas before a heathen tribunal, yet to deal thus with a heathen (or publican, which was in account the same) was not either by Christ, or the Apostle counted unlawful (but only the ἀδελφὸς μετ' ἀδελφοῦ, i. e. Christian with Christian, v. 6.) and consequently with a perverse refractory brother, whom you see Christ gives leave to account and deal with, as with an heathen or publican, it would not be unlawful also; But another interpretation I shall not doubt to propose, and prefer, that by heathen and publican may be meant a desperate deplored sinner, such as the Rabbins call חטא i. e. ἁμαρτωλὸς a sinner, as in the Gospel γυνὴ ἁμαρτωλὸς, a deplored sinner; Thus in Musar, If he will not then, (i. e. when two or three friends have been taken to be present at his admonition) be reconciled, go and leave him to himself; for such an one is implacable, and is called חטא, of whom again 'tis there said, Si nec hoc modo quicquam profecerit, i. e. adhibitis amicis, if this second admonition do no good, debet eum pudefacere coram multis, he must be ashamed before many, (which may be the meaning of Dic Ecclesiæ, tell it to the Church, as will anon appear by 1 Tim. 5. 20.) And this interpretation of that phrase will seem most probable, if you mark 1. That τελῶναι & ἁμαρτωλοὶ publicans and sinners are frequently joyned together in the Gospel, as once publicans and harlots, those γυναῖκες ἁμαρτωλοὶ sinner-women. 2. That the heathen are call'd κοινοὶ sinners, as when 'tis said that Christ was by the Jews delivered into the hands of sinners, i.e. Romans heathen, and in St. Paul [not sinners of the Gentiles] and then those words, [let him be to thee a heathen and a publican] will sound no more, but [give him over as a desperate deplored sinner] to whom those privileges of a Christian (viz. of not being impleaded before an heathen tribunal) &c. do not belong, i.e. leave him to himself. This sure is the simplest rendring of the place; and then he that is such, that is capable of that denomination, is Sect. 9.

certainly fit, and ripe for the cenſures of the Church, which follow in the next verſe, and are appointed to go out againſt this refractory incorrigible.

Sect. 10. For ſo immediately it follows, Verily I ſay unto you, who are thoſe you? why 1. in the plural number [ὑμῖν.] Secondly, ὑμῖν μαθηταῖς to you diſciples, the ſame that were after made Apoſtles, (for ſo in the firſt verſe προσῆλθον οἱ μαθηταὶ, the Diſciples came to him with a queſtion, and v. 3. he ſaid, verily I ſay to you, i. e. to you Diſciples, and ver. 12. τί ὑμῖν δοκεῖ; what do you think? asking the Diſciples, or appealing to their own judgment, and ſo ſtill the ſame auditors continued, and his ſpeech addreſt to them, I ſay unto you Diſciples) whatſoever you ſhall bind on earth, &c.

Sect. 11. After this, it follows ver. 19. again I ſay unto you, that if two of you ſhall agree upon earth, &c.] Many falſe illations are by men of different perſwaſions made from theſe words, which will all vaniſh, I conceive, and the truth be diſinvolv'd, if the Reader will not deſpiſe this one obſervation, which I ſhall offer to him; and it is this, that the method oft-times uſed in Scripture is, (when it hath propoſed one or two ſeverals to ſpeak of) to reſume the laſt firſt, and ſo orderly to go back, till it come to the firſt, to which you may accommodate that expreſſion, and deſcription of Gods method in other things. Many that are laſt, are firſt (the laſt in propoſing, firſt in handling or reſuming,) and the firſt laſt.

If there be two things mentioned one after another, and any occaſion to add any thing on each of them, then I ſay the obſervation is, that the Scripture ſometimes uſes to reſume the ſecond firſt, and the firſt after that. And ſo if there be more than two. I ſaid this was oft-times the manner and ſtile of Scripture, and to make good my obſervation, I am a little obliged to go out of my way, and preſent you with ſome examples. Three viſible ones I ſhall firſt offer you out of one book, the Epiſtle to the Hebrews. Firſt, Chap. 5. where in the four firſt verſes there are three things propounded of an High Prieſt, 1. That he offer for ſin, and negotiate the cauſe of men with God. 2. That he be compaſſionate toward ſinners, and to that end be himſelf infirm, and offer for himſelf as well as for the people. 3. That he be called to this office by God himſelf. To theſe three the author ſpeaks particularly (and applies them to Chriſt) in the remainder of the Chapter, by way of ὑπόδοσιν, or ὑπόμνησις, to the laſt, firſt, v. 5,6. So likewiſe Chriſt glorified not himſelf to be made an high Prieſt, &c. To the ſecond next, ver. 7, 8. who in the days of his fleſh offered up prayers, and ſupplications, with ſtrong crying and tears to him that was able to deliver him out of death, (as when he commended his ſpirit into Gods hands, and cryed with a loud voice, Matth. 27. 50. Mar. 15. 37. Luke 23. 46. at the delivering theſe words) And * was heard, for, or by his piety, through the great ardency of that his prayer (expreſt both by the loud voice in three Evangeliſts, and by the bodily worſhip, bowing of his head, in the fourth, Joh. 19. 30.) or as it may more probably ſignifie, He was delivered from his fear, i. e. from that which he feared and prayed againſt. And though he were a Son, yet from the things he ſuffered, he learnt obedience, (whether to God thus deſigning him to thoſe ſufferings, and to that office of hearing prayers, or to men, by giving them audience in their prayers, as ὑπακοὴ ſignifies, ſo to hear, as to anſwer a requeſt; or, which is the more probable interpretation, learnt by his ſufferings (even that of death it ſelf) in obedience to his Fathers will, which he that was a ſon was fain to undergo, what a difficult thing obedience is, eſpecially exact obedience at ſuch a time as that, when, as 'tis oft, death muſt be taken in the way to obedience; This being moſt proper to teach him compaſſion to ſinners, v. 2.) And then the author returns to the firſt, laſt, v. 9. Being made perfect he became the author of eternal ſalvation, &c.

* εἰσακουσθεὶς ἀπὸ τῆς εὐλαβείας.

Thus ſecondly, Heb. 9. 1. the author having named two things, the δικαιώματα λατρείας, the ordinances of worſhip, and the ἅγιον κοσμικὸν, he dilates firſt of the latter of them, v. 2,3,4,5. For there was a tabernacle made, the firſt, &c. and after the ſecond vail, the tabernacle, &c. and over it the Cherubims of glory ſhadowing the ἱλαστήριον the (not mercy-ſeat, but) * covering of the Ark, &c. all theſe belonging to the ſecond particular; and then afterwards he comes back to the former, the ordinances of worſhip, ver. 6. Now when theſe things were thus ordain'd, the Prieſt went alwaies, &c.

* So כפרת from כפר (which ſignifies both to propitiate and to cover) is here to be rendred covering, and though the Greek be ἱλαστήριον from the former ſence of the word, yet being to denote a part of the Ark in this place, it muſt be taken in the other ſence of the Hebrew, and rendred, as if it had been χαλαστήριον, As 'tis Exod. 26. 34. and 30. 6. or as the Hebrew כפרת if it had been retained, would have imported.

So thirdly, c. 10. 33. the author having mentioned two acts of ſuffering in them, the firſt perſonal in themſelves, by reproaches, and afflictions, the ſecond by way of ſympathy with their Apoſtle, κοινωνοὶ τῶν οὕτως ἀναστρεφομένων, partakers with, or relievers of others that ſo lived; in the next verſe he reſumes both again, but firſt the latter, For ye had compaſſion of me in my bands, v. 34. and then ſecondly, the former, took joyfully the ſpoiling of your goods.

This is farther evidenced by an example in this Goſpel, Matth. 7. 6. Give not that which is holy unto dogs, neither caſt your pearls before ſwine, leſt they tread them under their feet, and turning again, tear and rend thee. Where there is no doubt, but the former of theſe latter ſpeeches belongs to the latter of the former, and the latter of the latter to the former of the former; per modum regreſſus, by way of going backward thus, leſt the Swine tread the pearls under their feet, and leſt the Dogs rend and tear thee. For it is not the manner of ſwine to fall upon men, and tear them, but of dogs, it is, and it is not the manner of dogs to tread a thing under their feet, but of ſwine it is. So Rom. 2. 12. having affirmed two things, the firſt of the Gentiles that had not the Law, that they ſhould periſh without it; the ſecond of the Jews that had the Law, that they ſhould be judged by it; he ver. 13. ſpeaks firſt of the ſecond, For not the hearers of the Law, &c. and then v. 14. of the firſt, For when the nations, &c. So the 2 Cor. 2. 15. St. Paul having mentioned the σωζομένοις firſt, and then the ἀπολλυμένοις, them that are ſaved, and them that periſh, he goes back, v. 16. Firſt to the latter of them, to thoſe a ſavour of death unto death, but to theſe a ſavour of life unto life; So in the Epiſtle to Philemon, v. 5. hearing of thy love, and faith which thou haſt towards the Lord Jeſus, and towards all the Saints, 'tis apparent that the Lord Jeſus is the object of the faith, and the [all Saints] the object of the love. So again Rom. 14. having ſet down two heads of diſcourſe, that the ſtrong ſhould not ſet at nought the weak, nor ſecondly the weak judge or condemn the ſtrong, ver. 3. he reſumes the latter firſt, ver. 4. who art thou that judgeſt?

judgest? and then ver. 10. returns to the former, and thou why dost thou set at nought thy brother? So Matth. 12. 22. the blind and dumb both spake and saw, i. e. the blind saw, and the dumb spake. So chap. 23. 16. Christ having mentioned swearing by the Temple first, and then by the Altar, ver. 18. he after resumes them both again, v. 20. and first that of the Altar, and then of the Temple after it. So also in the same chap. 23. 25. Christ having mentioned first the outside of the cup or platter, and then the inside, v. 26. he returns first to the cleansing of the inside, and then the outside of it. So 1 Cor. 6. 11. after the general of washing, which contains the two subsequent, sanctifying, and justifying; the mention of our Lord Jesus Christ, which is first named, must belong to the latter of the two, that of justification, and the Spirit of our God to the former, that of sanctifying. So 2 Pet. 3. when the Atheists objection consists of two parts, first that God hath not made good his promise concerning his coming, v. 4. and secondly as a proof of that, that there hath been no sensible mutation since the beginning of the world, in the latter part of the verse; the Apostle makes answer first to the latter, v. 5, 6, 7. and then comes back and satisfies the former also ver. 8. &c.

Other examples of this observation I shall leave the Reader to observe, when he reads the Scripture more ponderingly, and only proceed, to help him to take notice of it in the point in hand. Three cases, it is apparent, are here mention'd orderly by our Saviour in the matter of trespass, 1. Telling the trespasser of his fault between him and thee alone. Secondly, taking one or two with thee, to do it more convincingly, and with greater authority. Thirdly, telling the Church of it. Having said somewhat to each of these, as he delivered them in the three first verses 15, 16, 17. he resumes the matter again, and speaks first to the last of them, v. 18. telling them, what, after the not succeeding of the third admonition, the Apostles and their successors are to do, when the cognizance of this injury and contumacy comes before them, (which, that in every case of trespass, it always should, I conceive, doth not hence appear to be necessary, save only in case that the magistrate or secular tribunal be heathen, because that supposition may perhaps be the ground of the sit tibi Ethnicus, on which this other is superstructed) viz. excommunicate such a refractory till reformation, and then upon that, absolve him again, and [verily I say unto you, whatsoever you shall bind on earth, &c.] From this view it is not irrational to conclude, that the ἐκκλησία and the ὑμεῖς, the Church, and the Disciples (considered prophetically under the notion of Apostles, i. e. Founders first, then Governours of Churches) may in that place signifie the same thing. So saith St. Chrys. in Mat. Hom. 6. εἶπε τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, τουτέστι τοῖς προεστῶσι, Tell it to the Church, i. e. to the president and rulers of it; and Theoph. in Matt. 18. ἐπὶ τῶν ἐκκλησίας προεδρων, &c. the Church for the rulers of the Church; To which purpose it is observable, what Kimchi a Jewish learned Rabbi hath affirmed, that the Governours, and Rulers are oft meant by the word קהל, ἐκκλησία, or Congregation, and so the word People, Ex. 4. 29. doth clearly signifie, the Elders, not all the People, Ex. 3. 16. Agreeable to which is the inscription of the antient Apostolical Epistle of Clemens Romanus to the Corinthians, ἡ ἐκκλησία τοῦ Θεοῦ παροικοῦσα Ῥωμὴν, The Church of God that dwells at Rome, meaning I conceive by the title [the Church] himself (who wrote the Epistle, and was chief there, or Bishop at that time) and the other Clergy with him; for so the other part of the inscription [τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ Θεοῦ παροικούσῃ Κορινθον, to the Church of God at Corinth] is after explained by him, in the words Ἐπισκόποις, καὶ διακόνοις, to the Bishops, and Deacons; but if this will not be acknowledged, then by ἐκκλησία I shall give you leave to understand any meeting, or Congregation of pious men, either a consessus Presbyterorum, a Colledge of Presbyters, which were ordinarily assistant to the Bishop in the antient Church, or possibly the whole or any part of the people convened, whose authority or consent may work somewhat upon the offender, as S. Paul conceives it were apt to do, when he commands Timothy, ἁμαρτάνοντας ἐνώπιον πάντων ἐλέγχειν, to rebuke the offenders before all men, i. e. in the presence of the community of the people, 1 Tim. 5. 20. and perhaps when he speaks of the ἐπιτιμία ἡ ὑπὸ τῶν πλειόνων, 2 Cor. 2. 6. the rebuke that was by or under the many, though it be not certain whether that signifie the chastisement, (as our English reads) punishment and censure inflicted by the Presbytery, or ὑπὸ under them, those assisting or joyning in the censure, σκληραγωγίαι, acts of Canonical severity, (which in case of sorrow and relenting of the offender upon rebuke, or admonition before ejection out of the Church, were wont to be thought sufficient without excommunication; and after excommunication, as in this place to the Corinthians, if they were submitted to, were sufficient, though not presently to restore him to the Communion, yet to make him capable of being prayed for by the Church, 1 John 5. 16. and to be delivered from the stripes of Satan, the diseases that the delivering to Satan in the Apostles times brought upon them;) or whether, as the words may be rendred, it import the rebuke, or reproof, viz. the third admonition, (or the second given by the Bishop, which was equivalent to that) which was ὑπὸ under, or in the presence of many, viz. of the people or Congregation. The former of these sences seems more agreeable to the place to the Cor. the latter rather to belong to that in 1 Tim. and so that which even now in Musar was coram multis, before many, and in S. Paul (if not ὑπὸ πλειόνων under many, yet) ἐνώπιον πάντων, in the presence of all men, Christ may here express by ἐκκλησία the Church; This interpretation being admitted, or not rejected, it then follows commodiously, and reasonably in the text of the Evangelist, that after the matter is brought to them (i. e. to those many) or after this act of reproof, or rebuke before them, and upon continued refractoriness to these last admonitions, then the ὑμεῖς (that sure is) the Apostles or Governors of the Church, the Pastors, (which cannot be in any reason excluded from under the former word ἐκκλησία Church, whatsoever it signifies) and those already promised this power, v. 16. may, or shall bind, or excommunicate them. And that is the sum of the 18. verse in reference to the 17. and then v. 19. Again I say unto you, (or as a very * ancient Manuscript, and some printed copies read it, πάλιν ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, again verily I say unto you, (that second verily noting the speech to be of a new matter) that if two of you shall agree upon the earth, or here below, (in reference to the second thing mention'd, v. 16. take with you one or two) concerning any thing, which they shall ask, (or as it is possible, the Greek, ὃ ἐὰν αἰτήσωνται may be rendred, whereto they shall be required) it shall be done unto them of my Father, &c. For where two or three are gathered together in my Name, there am I in the midst of them, which words are brought to give authority to the solemn admonitions of the second order (addrest by the injur'd man, accompanied with one or two assistants, or witnesses to inforce them) by telling them, that as the consessu trium virorum, virorum, the assize of three men among the Jews had some power, so shall any two or three Christians be considerable in this matter, joyning in such a reprehension, having the priviledge of Gods presence, (as in their prayers thus united, so also in this act of united admonition) to give them authority assistance, and blessing; for, first, God is to be thought to be in the midst of them (as that fourth person added to the three children in the furnace (and the face of that fourth like the Son of God, to be present with them (as it is 1 Cor. 5.4.) in this his ordinance, in this piece of Discipline appointed by him; whereupon the παρακοὴ the refractorineſs of the transgressor is become so much the greater in this case; and besides, secondly, if upon admonition, they shall be hearkned to, it will be in their power to pray for the penitent trespasser, (as Jam. 5.16.) and that prayer of theirs joyned with the injured person is likely to be more effectual than a single prayer, and so in both these respects a greater weight is set on the παράκλησις the taking of one, or two with him. Thus having returned to the second of the three, in the second place, and dispatched that, the method would direct to go on to the first again in the third place, but instead of that, St. Peter, it seems, asks again about it, how long a man is to forgive private injuries; and the answer in the following words supplieth the place of having proceeded to that, and serves for the conclusion of the whole matter.

Sect. 1.

Sect. 13. The result then of this whole Chapter is this, that of the three places of the Gospel concerning the donation of the power of binding and loosing, two of them at the first sight most clearly convince, this power to be given to the Apostles as Governours of the Church, (which will not be communicable to any, but either to others that are κλητοὶ ἀπόστολοι also, set apart to the office, immediately by Christ, or to their successors; Dominus in Evangelio potestatem Apostolorum eorumque successorum annuntians, ait, Quorum peccata, &c. Christ setting down the power of the Apostles and their successors, saith, whose sins you remit, &c. * Eutychiani Epist. Episc. per Siciliam An. Dom. 275. and ὅτι κατὰ Πέτρον ἐπισκοπῆς ἀξιωθέντες χάριτος. Theoph. in Matt. 18.) and the third upon a thorow consideration doth the same also. For this we have the plain testimony of Theophylact on that place Matth. 18. πᾶσιν ἀποστόλοις δίδοσθαι. πότε; ὅτε εἶπεν, ἂν τινων ἀφῆτε, &c. The power of binding and loosing was given to all the Apostles; When? why, when he said, whose sins ye remit, they are remitted, &c. i. e. in this place of St. John; and again, [καὶ δώσω] μέλλουσα χρόνον συμαίνει, τυτέστι τὸ μετὰ τὴν ἀνάστασιν. [and I will give] it signifies the future, i. e. the time after the resurrection, which is that in St. John also; and again on Matt. 16. ἔχουσιν ἐξουσίαν ἀφίναι καὶ δεσμεῖν, where the binding in St. Matt. and the remitting in St. John are put together, as belonging to the same matter: and it is confirm'd by no mean authority that of St. Paul himself, of himself, 2 Cor. 13.10. where speaking of these censures, (noted there by ἀποτόμως χρῆσθαι, using excision, and καθαίρεσις, which is all one, and which, it seems, he as an Apostle was to use among them, he, not the Congregation; οὐ φείσομαι I will not spare) he addeth κατ' ἐξουσίαν ἣν ἔδωκέ μοι ὁ Κύριος, according to the power that Christ hath given me, (which sure was not peculiar to him, but common to the rest of the Apostles, which had it before him, and in a more ordinary way) and v. 3. he distinctly calls it, Christ speaking in him, a high expression, making every such act of judicature in him, an act of Christ.

CHAP. III.

Sect. 1. THE only difficulty remaining in the point, will be, who are the Apostles successors in that power, and when the question is asked of that power, I must be understood of the power of Governing the Church peculiarly (of which the power of the Keys was, and is a principal branch) for it must again be remembred, that the Apostles are to be considered under a double notion: 1. As Planters, then as Governours of the Church. The title of Ἀπόστολος in its literal notation of Missus, sent, (Embassador or Messenger) belongs peculiarly to the former of these, and so though it have some extraordinary privileges annext to it, necessary to the work of planting, (as the gift of tongues, the power of working miracles) which ennobles it beyond the order of Governours in the Churches since their plantation, yet in the persons of the Apostles, it was but a precedaneous power, preparatory to that other of Ruling or Governing, which no doubt is the reason, that Chrysost. calls Ignatius the martyr, both ἀπόστολος and ἐπίσκοπος, an Apostle and a Bishop, and perhaps is the meaning of that saying of an Anonymous writer, in * Photius ὅτι ὁ ἀπόστολος Τιμόθεος ὑπὸ τοῦ μεγάλου Παύλου καὶ χειροτονεῖται καὶ ἔφεσίων μητροπόλεως ἐπίσκοπος, καὶ ἐνθρονίζεται, That the Apostle Timothy was by Saint Paul ordained, and enthronized, or seated Bishop of the Metropolis of the Ephesians, i. e. that he that had helped to plant Churches, and so was an Apostle sent out to that purpose, was at length ordained Bishop to govern that of Ephesus being planted. Which distinction being premised, the question will now more easily be satisfied, being proposed in these terms, [Who were the Apostles successors in that power, which concerned the governing these Churches which they had planted] And 1. I answer, that it being a matter of fact, or story, later than that the Scripture can universally reach to it, cannot be fully satisfied, or answered from thence, any further than the persons of Timothy, or Titus, &c. and the several Angels of the Churches in the Apocalypse (who are acknowledged by all the antients to be single persons, that had power over all others in those Churches,) but will in the full latitude through the universal Church in those times, be made clear from the next evidences, that we have, viz. from the consent of the Greek and Latin Fathers, who generally resolve, that Bishops are those successors. This I shall not be so unreasonable as to attempt to prove at large through the writings of those Fathers, but content my self with one or two of the first of them.

* Bibl. num. 254.

Sect. 2. Of this number I conceive the testimony of Clemens Romanus in his Epistle to the Corinth. (which hath been so often of late produced) might to any disinteressed person be allowed to have some ſome force in it; where ſpeaking of the Apoſtles, he ſaith, that they foreſeeing that there would be contention and emulation, περὶ ὀνόμα[τος] & ἐπισκοπῆς about the name of Epiſcopacy, i. e. the power of governing Churches, as name and thing is all one in Scripture ſtyle, or (as ὄνομα may denote ἀξίωμα) about the dignity of Biſhops, or Epiſcopacy, διὰ ταυτὴν αἰτίαν, πρόγνωσιν εἰληφότες τελείαν, καθίσ[α]ν τοὺς προειρημένους, καὶ μεταξὺ ἐπινομὴν δεδώκασιν, ὅπως ἐὰν κοιμηθῶσι διαδέξωνται ἕτεροι δεδοκιμασμένοι ἀνδρες τὴν λειτουργίαν αὐτῶν. And therefore they conſtituted or ordained ſuch and ſuch perſons, and for the future (as μεταξὺ ſignifies in the words immediately following, and as Act. 13. 42. it ſignifies εἰς τὸ μέταξὺ) gave them a liſt, i.e. either a ſucceſſion and continuation of ſucceſſors, (as when Heſychius (and out of him Varinus) renders ἐπινομοι, κληρονόμοι, perhaps it may be a falſe print, as there be many in the edition of that book, for ἐπινομὴ, κληρονομία, but howſoever the Analogy from thence may extend to this alſo, that as ἐπίνομοι ſignifies κληρονόμοι, ſo ἐπινομὴ will ſignifie κληρονόμια inheritance, or ſucceſſion) or elſe ἐπινομὴν a roll or Matricula of the Rulers of the Church, that in which the whole Eccleſiaſtical Senate was ſet down (antiently called κάνων, and ἱερὸς κατάλογ&, and ἱερατικὸς) or again, a diſtribution, from ἐπινέμω diſtribuo, according to which, ἐπινέμεσις in Heſychius is ἐπιμερισμὸς diſtribution, i. e. a note diſtributing theſe to the office of Biſhops, thoſe to that of Deacons in all Churches; or laſtly, it may be ἐπινομὴν a command or direction for the future, viz. that when they ſhould dye, other approved men might ſucceed them. To which affirmation of Clemens, when I have added, (that which all Eccleſiaſtical Stories have made familiar to us) that there were preſerved in ſeveral Churches ſuch * rolls and catalogues of Biſhops beginning from the Apoſtles in each See, I ſhall conceive that that of Clemens was a pertinent teſtimony to this purpoſe; eſpecially when 1. St. Jerome himſelf ſaith that the ſuperiority of Biſhops was inſtituted to take away Schiſm (when one ſaid, I am of Paul, &c. which was in the Apoſtles time) which Clemens here affirms in the ſame manner, and on the ſame occaſion, (and uſes it as an argument againſt thoſe who being (two or three of them) ſupported by the people, raiſed a faction againſt the Biſhops, and thruſt them out) and when 2. in the front of that Epiſtle there is mention of ἐπίσκοποι and διάκονοι: and when 3. the voice of antiquity is ſo clear, that ‖ Clemens himſelf was one of thoſe Biſhops (an Adjutor of the Apoſtles in their life time, and after the departure of Linus, and Cletus, the only one that retained the name of Biſhop in Rome, all others being ſtiled Presbyters only) that * Vedelius at Geneva hath at large acknowledged it, Exercit. in Ignat. Epiſt. ad Mar. Caſſabol. c. 3. P. 57.

* Διὰ τοῦτο τὸν τοσοῦτον ἀπὸ τῶν Ἀποστόλων κατέχει κλῆρον Ἐλεύθερ&. Ircn. lib. 3. cap. 3. & ſucceſſiones Epiſcoporum quibus Apoſtolicam, quæ in unoquoque loco eſt, Eccleſiam tradiderunt, Ib. lib. 4. cap. 63. ‖ τοῦτο τοίνυν ἀπὸ τῶν Ἀποστόλων ἡ ἐπισκοπὴν κληροῦ Κλημὴς, Ircn. lib 3. cap. 3. * Solus Clemens ſuperſtes, ſolum Epiſcopi nomen retinuit, tum quia inter adjutores Apoſtolorum ſolus ipſe reſtabat, tum quia jam invaluerat diſtinctio Epiſcopi, & Presbyteri, ita ut cæteris Eccleſiæ Romanæ Presbyteris qui cum ſolo Clemente eſſent, nomen illud non fuerit tributum.

After Clemens (an aſſertor at once, and example of this truth) I muſt next appeal to the Martyr Ignatius himſelf alſo Biſhop of Antioch, that lived in the Apoſtles age, and is by the enemies of Epiſcopacy diſcerned to be ſo full a treaſure of this truth (and of others in this kind) in ſo many notable paſſages, that there hath been no way (imaginable by thoſe who reſolve to have it otherwiſe) to reſiſt the plainneſs of his authorities; but firſt by * ſcoffs and defamations; Secondly, by ‖ confident rejecting of our whole volume of his Epiſtles, as ſpurious, and of a later birth; and thirdly, by ſome very ſlender ſhews of proof, that they are ſo. One ſpecial of this ſort (which I ſee lately made uſe of by Salmaſius, and for which it * now appears he was beholding to a ſight of Blondels book, not then printed) I ſhall mention, to remove prejudices, and it is this; that in the Epiſtle to the Magneſians, he diſtinctly calls Epiſcopacy νεωτερικὴν τάξιν, which, ſaith that learned Grammarian, ſignifies it to be a new Order, and he attempts to prove it, becauſe τάξις, ſaith he, cannot be referred to the age; and νεωτερικὸς ſignifies καινὸς, agreeable whereunto he interprets νεωτερικὰς ἐπιθυμίας, 2 Tim. 2. 22. to be novæ, or novarum rerum cupiditates, new deſires, or of new things. Sect. 3.

The dealing of this learned Grammarian in this buſineſs will be ſufficiently ſtrange to him, that conſiders the whole matter. I ſhall only (in paſſing) give ſome few hints of judging it, by telling you firſt, that the generality of Copies read not νεωτερικὴν τάξιν but νεότητα, the youth of the Biſhop (and no one of the Greek editions hath ſo much as mention'd any various lection in that place, till now the Florentine or Laurentian copy hath given us that variety.) Secondly, that the whole context of the Epiſtle drives to this of νεότητα, as even this author confeſſes, by ſaying, that he perſwades them to receive their Biſhop, and give him honour, quamvis ætate juniori, though he were younger than they, and again that he goes on to tell them, καὶ ὑμῖν δὲ πρέπει μὴ συγχρᾶσθαι τῇ ἡλικίᾳ τοῦ ἐπισκόπου, that it becomes them not to be too familiar with the age of their Biſhop. But then beſides this, thirdly, the vulgar, and even Geneva edition reading νεότητα, back it with citations of places of Scripture pertinent only to that ſence, as that Wiſdom is not always with the hoary hair, &c. Fourthly, that other reading is not avowed by, or cited from any Greek manuſcript, but only that in the Laurentiana Bibliotheca, and the old Latin, made uſe of by the moſt Reverend Primate of Armach, which is directly tranſlated out of it, and ſo doth not at all add to the authority. But then fifthly, if that reading of νεωτερικὴ τάξις ſhould be acknowledged, yet would it conclude nothing againſt the Order of Biſhops in thoſe firſt times. For 1. what if it were a new Order in Ignatius his time? that were pretty antient, Ignatius living with the Apoſtles; for that it was written by ſome body elſe above 200 years after Chriſt, will want ſome other probation. Secondly, there is no neceſſity that νεωτερικὴ τάξις muſt ſignifie a new order, for although, as he ſaith, τάξις doth not ſignifie age, nor νεωτερικὸς young, but may be interpreted καινὸς new, &c. yet we are not bound to accept that interpretation of it, when the Context of the Epiſtle belongs to another matter, and when another interpretation of this phraſe may be given, which (if that reading were acknowledged) will reconcile all difficulties; For why may not τάξις ſignifie ordination? and νεωτερικὴ that, that belongs to a νεώτερ&, or a young man, and ſo it ſhall be the Ordination of a young man, or a young mans being Biſhop, which might have been apt to provoke contempt

in

in interiors, if that good Martyr had not fortified them againſt that temptation. And laſtly for the interpretation of that place of St. Paul to Timothy, it is ſo new, and ſo irrationally preferr'd before the ordinary one, that one may juſtly conclude, 'twas prejudice, and willingneſs to find an example for his novelty, that made him think of this; for why ſhould not the luſts (there appointed to be avoided) be youthful luſts, or ſuch as young men are ſubject to? why new luſts; or deſires of new things? were not the old ordinary luſts (ſo frequent among young men) fit enough to be avoided? might any other be enjoyed, ſo they were not new? I am ſorry I have inſiſted ſo long on ſo weak an objection, and yet it is the beſt that that learned man (ſo much looked on, and believed in this matter by thoſe who deſire change) hath produced, on which to build all his confidence, that thoſe Epiſtles are not

* Grot. diſcuſſ. Δαλ. p. 400.

Ignatius's: And 'tis a little ſtrange that another learned man * And. Rivet ſhould ſpeak of Epiſcopacy as of a novel order, and add [ſive τάξις, ut loquitur Ignatius, νεωτερικὴ] making Ignatius to ſay this, which if he doth, then is not only his Illuſtriſs. Salmaſius deceived, but alſo Epiſcopacy muſt be acknowledged in Ignatius's time, in which if it were acknowledged to be novel, it will ſtill be antient enough; and ſo 'tis indeed by that author confeſt (perhaps by incogitancy) in the next page, when he acknowledges, that the cuſtom of Presbyters joyning with the Biſhop in impoſition of hands on a Presbyter (which ſure is to ſuppoſe, not to deny the office of Biſhops) ex veteris ævi reliquiis manſit, and ſpecifies what age he means, by [juxta illud Apoſtoli per impoſitionem manuum Presbyterii] wherein yet it had been more ingenuous to have rendred μετὰ cum, and not have chang'd it into per quite contrary to the text; but this by the way. As for that other argument added by Salmaſius, that in that Epiſtle to the Magneſians there is mention of the word σιγὴ (as when he ſaith that Chriſt was not, λόγῳ ἀπὸ σιγῆς προελθὼν) by which he concludes that Epiſtle written after Valentinus, whoſe Idiom that was; If the argument were concluding, (as ‖ If. Voſſius in his late Edition hath ſufficiently proved it is not) it cannot ſure be in force againſt us, who find no ſuch thing, in our former Greek copies; or, if we did, could readily acknowledge any ſuch paſſage to be ſuppoſititious, and thoſe few words taken into the text out of the margent, without caſting away the whole volum of Epiſtles, in that fit of jealouſie, or rage; If I could diſcern in that writer any other ſhew of argument againſt that general opinion, which the Chriſtian world hath had of theſe Epiſtles, I ſhould proceed to the weighing of it. But now upon the Edition of Blondels book (out of which Salmaſius only brought us ſome gleanings) we find a great deal of pains taken to caſt off thoſe Epiſtles; and it is very obſervable, firſt that he that hath taken in all the antient Church writers into his catalogue (even Hermas himſelf without any note, or character of Apocryphal ſet upon him) and out of each of them laboured (though very improſperouſly) to gather ſome honey to his hive, ſome word or other, that might look like an accordance with that opinion which he aſſerts out of St. Hierom, and, it ſeems, had skill enough to make even Tertullian, Irenæus, and Cyprian, (and many others that have innumerable manifeſt places againſt the ἰσοτιμία or equality of Biſhops and Presbyters) inſtrumental to his deſign, was not able to find one ſentence in Ignatius, which might be perſwaded to be uſeful to him, and therefore hath expreſt that ſeverity on him, that he hath not thought reaſonable on any other, even thoſe which all antiquity hath rejected; So partial and unequal is the mind of man, when that ἀμετρία ἀνθολκῆς (that I ſay no worſe) hath the ruling of our counſels. The exceptions which this learned man hath made againſt Ignatius being the author of thoſe Epiſtles, are 1. Scriptionis genus affectatum, an affected kind of writing, pompous Epithets (which, ſaith he, could not agree with an Apoſtle panting in the chains of Martyrs) ſuch as θεοφόρῳ, &c. ἀνλίψυχῳ, ἀνθρωπόμορφῳ, and among them πολυπληθία, ἀχαυχησία, παραϋπάδεια] the very naming of which, I ſuppoſe, doth ſhew the frivolouſneſs of the charge, and weakneſs of the inference from it; For ſure an author may uſe compounded words, (yea and words of his own making, as, I ſuppoſe, St. Paul's ἐλαχιστότερῳ is acknowledged to be, and yet many of theſe recited from thoſe Epiſtles are not) without the crime of affectation, as well as St. Paul might his ἀθλησιομάχησα, συμάχοι, and the like: and though a holy Martyr in his chains may not be allowed the vanity of affectation, as that hunts for glory from men, yet ſure he may be allowed to have elevated affections, and by the command of them, to uſe expreſſions which are not vulgar and ordinary. The ſecond is his barbarous words ἄκκεπλα δεπούσιλα, δεσέρσως, ἐξεμπλάριον, which indeed are Latin words made Greek, but ſo there are many more in the New Teſtament, inſtead of thoſe four charged on Ignatius as barbariſms, theſe fifteen, which are ready at hand to me, (I will not take the pains to ſeek for others) μίλιον, ἀσσάριον, κήνσος, κοδραντὴς, δηνάριον, λεγεὼν, πραιτάριον, κεντυρίων, φραγέλλιον, Ἰουδὰς, κολωνία, μάκελλον, μεμβράνα, and many as Latinizing (i.e. barbarous) phraſes ἱκανὸν ποιεῖν, ἔχειν παρηγμένον, λαβεῖν τὸ ἱκανὸν, σὺ ὄψει, δὸς ἐργασίαν, and the like. And 'tis a little ſtrange how this learned man hath minced this matter, confeſſing indeed that there is δηνάριον in the Goſpel (naming only one of ſo great a number) and δηναριεύειν in Hegeſippus: and for the excuſe of that one word in Hegeſippus, adding that he was at Rome from the year 150 to 170. whereas this liberty might be allowed either Ignatius, or Hegeſippus, without having been ſo long at Rome, as well as the Writers of the New Teſtament, which have three times more of ſuch words than he cites out of both of them. The third is, ſeveral paſſages, quæ incommodè dicta videri poſſunt, which may ſeem incommodiouſly ſpoken, (and if it be but [ſeem,] and that but [may ſeem,] and at laſt but [incommodiouſly ſpoken,] ſure this charge will not wound deep) & comparationes non exactæ ad amuſſim, compariſons not drawn by the rule exactly, (and truly the Martyr that was not to be permitted to have the vanity to affect, might as well be thought not to have the leaſure to take the line and the plummet, and delineate every expreſſion ſo exactly; But what are the miſcarriages, and defects in this kind? why, that he calls the Spirit σχοινίον a cord, and Faith ἀναγωγεὺς, the Leader, whence, ſaith he, in Ignatius's eſteem, Fidei potior quàm Spiritus functio, Faith hath a nobler office than the Spirit. But why may not I more truly ſay, that the advantage in that compariſon is given to the Spirit, becauſe that is ſaid to draw, when Faith doth lead only? 'Tis certainly clear that his anger was very cauſeleſs, who could quarrel at that doctrine, which is in effect no more than this, That the Word of God apprehended by Faith doth lead us our way to Heaven, and the Spirit of God is the cord to draw us thither. 2. That he calls his bands πνευματικὰς μαργαρίτας ἐν δὶς γένοιτο ἀναστῆναι, ſpiritual jewels, in which he wiſhes he might riſe, whereas ſaith Blondel, there is nothing properly ſpiritual in the bands which wicked men put on the body of a Martyr, and no hope that he ſhould riſe in thoſe bands. But ſure his ſufferings may be called his bands, and thoſe be matter of joy, and ἀγαλλίασις to his Spirit, more than all the Gemms to the moſt vain-glorious worldling, and this be very commodiouſly expreſt by thoſe words, and then ſure he might wiſh, (though not hope) (and γένοιτο is no more) to have this matter of joy continued to him, and ſo that he might riſe with them. 3. That he uſes σαρκικὸς and πνευματικὸς ſo oft; What a cruelty upon a patient Martyr is this, not to give him leave to uſe ſuch frequent innocent words as theſe frequently, as well as St. Paul is allowed the very ſame, and ψυχικὸς and πνευματικὸς, &c. theſe are certainly ſtrained exceptions, the learned man was at great leaſure to quarrel, when this provocation was accepted. 4. That when Baptiſm is called ὅπλα weapons, he calls Faith ὡς περικεφαλαία, as an helmet; love, ὡς δοῦ as a ſpear; patience, ὡς πανοπλία as a compleat armour. For * what, ſaith he, doth faith and love, &c. confer to him that is already armed by baptiſm? and if patience be the Chriſtians compleat armour, what new advantage hath he by having a helmet from faith? but why may not Baptiſm be called weapons in the plural, and every of thoſe graces profeſt and vowed in baptiſm, have their ſeveral uſes in the after life? and ſure the armour of baptiſm is not ſo perfectly of proof, but that there is need of the exerciſe of every one of thoſe Chriſtian vertues to hold out againſt the impreſſions of Satan, which are like to be ſo oft repeated; and if faith do not defend the head, and charity the heart, and patience and perſeverance every part of the body, i.e. every action of the future life, that ſubtle enemy may chance to wound us mortally. As for the new advantage of faith to him that hath the compleat armour of patience, the author of that Epiſtle ſaith no ſuch thing, but on the other ſide firſt requires the helmet of faith, and then the πανοπλία of patience, that ſure is the arming of all parts, which were not before armed, and that may go for an addition, as perſeverance is to ſanctity, and as our Saviour ſaith of his believers, that he that endureth to the end ſhall be ſaved 5. That 'tis not likely that preſently after Ignatius coming into Aſia, Biſhops, Presbyters and Deacons ſhould be ordained ejus rogatu, at his intreaty, qui ad Antiochenos Aſianorum gratulatorias Epiſtolas deferrent, who ſhould carry the gratulatory Epiſtles of the Aſians to the Chriſtians of Antioch. I ſhall only ſay to this 1. that they were ordained to ſome other end beſide this, yet might perform that task alſo, and that very ſolemnly: 2. that a probable argument, or a conceived improbability againſt a narration of a matter of fact (which relies not upon a confluence of all probabilities, but only on the authority of the relator) is of all other the moſt unconvincing; there was nothing ever done 1600 years ago, but a good phanſie will obſerve ſome improbability in it, and the matter of fact being ſtill but one, when the poſſibilities, which never did come to paſs, are infinite, ſome one of thoſe poſſibilities may perhaps become at a diſtance, to him that knows nothing of the fact (but would perſwade others that 'twas never done) tolerably probable alſo. 6. That he bids follow the Biſhop as Chriſt did his Father: and the Presbytery, ut Apoſtolos, as the Apoſtles, and ſaith that he that doth any thing clancularly without the Biſhops knowledge, is to be thought διαβόλῳ λατρεύων to ſerve the Devil: whereupon, ſaith he, An Epiſcopos ullos Presbyterorum comparatione Dominos, imo Deos, à Chriſti martyre habitos credere par eſt? Is it fit to believe that any Biſhops in compariſon to Presbyters ſhould be counted Lords, yea Gods by that Martyr of Chriſt? But ſure this is to pervert and torment the ſence of that Martyr; For to bid follow Biſhops as Chriſt did his Father, is far enough from making Lords, or Gods of them: nay if the compariſon were bound to hold that way, it were more proper to prove the ἰσοτιμία or equality of Biſhops and Presbyters, for ſure Chriſt was equal with his Father: and 'tis obſervable that in the place of Polycarp ſet down by this learned man, p. 15. when obedience is required to Presbyters and Deacons as to God and Chriſt, he finds no fault with it, though that be the very thing actually ſaid by Polycarp of Presbyters and Deacons, that here he unjuſtly firſt impoſes on, then accuſes in Ignatius's words of Biſhops, which yet are only for the manner of performing the obedience due to Biſhops, as Chriſt obeyed his father, and cannot be extended to any equalizing the Biſhop to God, or the leaſt appearance of doing ſo. 'Twere too long to go thorow, and render formal anſwers to the reſt of the heap of exceptions, which are every one ſingle ſo ſlight, and of no value (and conſequently the total of them will not amount any higher, it being not in the power of 1000 probables to become one demonſtration, or to be equipollent to one, much leſs of a few ſlight improbables) that 'tis clear the number of the exceptions was the thing depended on, and not the weight of them: Witneſs theſe four more, that ſhut up the rear: 1. That he ſaith that all pious men are changed εἰς νέαν ζυμὴν into a new leaven, which he thinks inconvenient, when St. Paul calls the Godly ἀζύμους unleavened, whereas Chriſt being by Ignatius in the next word expreſſed to be that νέα ζυμὴ new leaven; there is then nothing fit to be quarrel'd in it, unleſs to grow in grace, and the practice of all Chriſtian duties (which is the meaning of that expreſſion) be an inconvenient advice. 2. That he bids fly to the Apoſtles ὡς πρεσβυτερίῳ τῆς ἐκκλησίας, as to the Presbytery of the Church, whereon having reſolved that by the Apoſtles he muſt mean the Apoſtles writings, (becauſe in the ninth of Trajan then paſt all the Apoſtles were dead) he concludes that the Author of that ſaying makes no more of the Apoſtles writings, than of the Congregations of men ſubject to errour. Where in all ſober reaſon and equality, if the Apoſtles ſignifie the Apoſtles writings, then the πρεσβυτέριον ἐκκλησίας need not ſignifie any other latter Presbytery, but thoſe Apoſtles themſelves, who when they wrote thoſe writings, were the Chriſtian Sanhedrin, or Presbytery of the Church, which was to decide all their controverſies in Religion. 3. That writing to Polycarp, tanquam ad plebeium neſcio quem, as unto an ordinary perſon, he ſaith, τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ προσέχετε, obſerve your Biſhop; as if forſooth the Epiſtle written to Polycarp might not be written to the Church under him alſo, to whom 'tis clear that plural precept [προσέχετε] muſt belong, and not to any one man, though he were never ſuch a Plebeian. 4. That he ſaith he will flatter, nay, if they will not, force the wild beaſts to kill him, which, ſaith he, is like the deſperabunda ſæculi mancipia, the moſt deſperate ſlaves among the Heathen. As if theſe fervent expreſſions of deſire to ſuffer for Chriſt were thus to be deformed, and charged againſt a pious man. After all this unprovoked ſeverity, one act of grace and mercy theſe Epiſtles are vouchſafed from this Author, viz. that he contains himſelf from making uſe of one paſſage which ſuppoſititionis earum argumentum videri poſſit, might ſeem an argument of the ſuppoſitionſneſs of them; (and yet no greater an argument than that, [multa quæ incommodè dicta videri poſſunt] made up a great number of arguments even now) the paſſage is, that he diſputed profeſtly againſt the δοκηταὶ, thoſe that affirm'd Chriſts humanity to have been but an appearance, no reality, for ſaith he, whether you make Caſſian with Baronius, or Saturninus, Baſilides, and Valentinus the anteſignanos Docetarum, the principal Authors of that hereſie, theſe being under Adrian and Antoninus Pius, will appear to be after Ignatius: having gone thus far, he comes off again, with a Volens hoc argumento abſtineo, he willingly abſtains from uſing this argument; becauſe, ſaith he, Simon Magus was before Ignatius, and he, ſaith Irenæus, taught this doctrine of Chriſts appearing only, not being a true man; and that Caſſian, &c. were call'd the chief of them, muſt ſignifie, not that they were the firſt broachers, but in their times the chief maintainers and abetters of that Hereſie. This mercy, I confeſs, was but ſeaſonable, and had much of Juſtice in it, and ſhews that that Author was able to have anſwered his other arguments, if he had ſo pleaſed, particularly that which is made uſe of ſo confidently both by him and Salmaſius of Σιγὴ, the Valentinian dialect, which is by Iſaacus Voſſius ſatisfied with this very anſwer which here Blondel gives to the uſe of the word δοκηταὶ, viz. that Valentinus was not the firſt that ſaid λόγον ἀπὸ σιγῆς ortum, but that 'tis agreed on by the Antients, that he was not the founder of a new, but reviver of an old opinion τὰς ἀρχαίας εἰς ἴδιον χαρακτῆρα διδασκαλίας μεθαρμόσας ἀναλαττῶν, ſaith Irenæus, and other Fathers to the ſame purpoſe, as Iſaacus Voſſius hath collected their affirmations in his Annot. on the place. Having gone thus far in rejecting theſe Epiſtles, he is at laſt at leaſure to remember and acknowledge, Plenam illis ipſis, quas confictas putamus Epiſtolis, fidem habere Patres, that the Fathers (indefinitely, if not univerſally, and it ſeems he had no one to produce to the contrary, if he had, he would certainly have produced it, and with reaſon have depended on it more, than all theſe other Topicks) afforded a full plenary belief to theſe very Epiſtles, which the two Champions of the age Salmaſius and he think to be ſuppoſititious, [putamus] is but a poor word, Salmaſius could ſpeak bigger on weaker or fewer arguments, [tam certò ſcio, quam me hæc ſcribere.] To this authority of the Fathers againſt his opinion, his anſwer is ſhort, but hath much weight and aſperity in it (which they that have as ſtrong an appetite to lay the Presbyterians flat, as the Presbyterians have expreſt to deſtroy the Biſhops, they that have the ſame exceptions againſt all diſtinction, or diſcrimination of Lay and Clergy, as Blondel and Salmaſius have againſt the imparity and inequality of Biſhops and Presbyters, will, when they can hope to be heard, be ready enough to make uſe of, and muſt not be deny'd to have urged an argument ad homines unanſwerable, whenſoever they ſhall pleaſe to make uſe of it; and 'tis but this, Quid tum? What then? the authority of the Fathers in a matter of fact (as that Ignatius wrote theſe Epiſtles) caſt off without any ceremony, or difficulty in two ſyllables. And the reaſon for ſo doing, which is added, will help the matter but little; Quàm multa minimè ſuſpicaces ac imparatos & fefellerunt ſemper, & quotidie fallunt? How many things have always deceived, and daily do deceive men that are not ſuſpicious, nor upon their guard? And if all the Fathers of the Church, beginning from thoſe that were neareſt Ignatius's time, muſt be involved in the number of theſe incautious, cheatable men, I ſhall be afraid to mention the conſequences, that will too readily be deducible from hence. I ſhall only ſay; May not this liberty, or licence rather, be ſoon extended very inordinately to the invaſion of the ſacred Canon of Scripture? Nay, when the ſame current, and conſent of Fathers, which delivers down all the books which make up our Canon of Scripture, for Canonical, and Theopneuſt, ſhall be found at the ſame time to deliver down, and make uſe of theſe Epiſtles of Ignatius, only with the diſtinction of Apocryphal, (and mean by that, not ſuppoſititious books, or books which are under ſuſpicion that they are not their off-ſpring, whom they call Father, but only books of inferiour authority, as Apocryphal is oppoſed τοῖς τῆς θείας γραφῆς, to the books of divine Scripture, & legi Domini, to the Law or Word of God, & τοῖς κανονιζομένοις to thoſe that are put in the Canon, and in a word τὰ τῆς νίας Ἀποκρυφα, as you may ſee in the end of Nicephorus's Chronography, and in others; inter ſcripta novi Teſtamenti apocrypha, numbred among the Apocryphal books, not of Ignatius, but of the New Teſtament, and appointed to be read by pious men, though not allowed that ſame authority and dignity, in which the books of Sacred Scripture have been juſtly eſtated) when, I ſay, the ſame hands of the ancient Church ſhall deliver both the Epiſtles of St. Peter for divine Scripture, and theſe Epiſtles of Ignatius for the Epiſtles of Ignatius, though not for Divine Scripture, who can ſay that * Salmaſius when he had thus confidently thrown off theſe Epiſtles from being written by Ignatius, did not conſequently, and agreeably to his προλήψεις in the throwing off one of Saint Peters Epiſtles alſo? And who can think it reaſonable that our warineſs and cenſoriouſneſs ſhall enable us at 1500 years diſtance to judge more truly of a matter of fact, (which none but they that are near, be they never ſo wary, and ſuſpicious, can diſcern any thing of) than they that lived in thoſe times which were neareſt to the ſcene of action? Nay, how much more rational is that of the ſame Salmatius? who in the controverſie about the parts of the Croſs, i. e. when he conceived antiquity to be favourable to that opinion which he defended, hath made this argumentative againſt his adverſaries, An credibile eſt Gregorium qui vixit tanto tempore poſtquam crucis ſupplicio nemo amplius afficiebatur, certiorem eſſe teſtem de habitu crucis totius &c. quàm eos authores qui ſcripſere cùm adhuc paſſim in uſu eſſet communiſſimo nocentum crucifixio? Is it credible, that he that lived ſo long after the uſe of that kind of death was left off, ſhould be a ſurer witneſs of any thing that belongs to it, than thoſe Authors that wrote when it was in uſe? De cruce, p. 255. And again, if Blondel may ſay without proof, that the Fathers were incautious in general, and thence conclude, that they were actually deceived in this particular; Why may not I as reaſonably affirm (having given my reaſons, when he hath not) that Blondel is too cenſorious and partial, and willing to bring all to the cauſe he hath eſpouſed, and thence conclude (knowing how contrary theſe Epiſtles are to his intereſts) that he hath actually expreſt his paſſion, and injuſtice in this cauſleſs cenſure of theſe Epiſtles? I have done with this learned mans obſervations in this matter, and when I ſhall hear of any other argument which can ſeem of force againſt theſe Epiſtles, I ſhall be glad to conſider it, profeſſing my ſelf to conceive that as long as that one Author ſtands in the Church in his juſt value, the cauſe of Prelacy, and Hierarchy cannot want ſupports, every page almoſt of thoſe Epiſtles being ſufficient (which the adverſaries acknowledge in ſaying he doth εὐκαίρως, ἀκαίρως, in ſeaſon and out of ſeaſon, at all turns aſſert Epiſcopacy) to interpret the obſcurer veſtigia in the New Teſtament, and to aſſure us what was the practice and doctrine of the Apoſtles and Primitive Churches in that point; and that is the reaſon I have inſiſted ſo long on a thing which may ſeem ſo extrinſecal to my firſt undertaking, and ſhall not think think my self out of my way, if I be content to return to this controversie again (as having such an immediate influence on the cause in hand) whensoever I shall be call'd to it; In the mean, I shall content my self with this view of that matter; and for the present, as I cannot but conceive it rashness to cast away an Epistle of S. Peter upon a bare affirmation in a Parenthesis (quæ sola plane genuina est) so will it be in a lower degree, but in like manner, to deal with a most antient Apostolical-spirited volum, upon such unproved censures as these; and it is observable, that the first Writer that ever undertook to be thus severe against that whole Volume of Epistles, did with as much confidence, and as little pretension to argument, cast off one of the books of Canonical Scripture. This I thought not amiss here to insert, to vindicate the Writings of that antient Martyr, though it may be taken for a parergon in this place.

that

Supposing then this Writer to stand in the same repute in the Church of God, in which he did, before he was observed to be unreconcileable with the designs of the new Reformers, I shall proceed to make use of his testimony. He commands obedience to be paid to Bishops, ὡς ἀποστόλοις, as to the Apostles, to the Presbyters as to the Seventy, to the Deacons, as to the Deacons in the Acts. The passage is known, and although in another place, he makes the Presbyters parallel to the Apostles and the Bishops to Christ, yet these places are easily reconciled, it being clear, that that latter place considers the Apostles at the time, when Christ was here on earth, at which time, they were indeed but a second rank (and in that respect it is that Origen saith, Tr. in Mat. 24. Proprie Episcopus Dominus Jesus est, Presbyteri Apostoli, Christ is properly the Bishop, and the Apostles Presbyters) but the former place considering them after Christs departure, is that which more properly belongs to this matter; this power (though promised before) being not yet instated on them, till after his resurrection, immediately before his leaving of this World (or indeed till the coming of the Holy Ghost) at which time they were left the Governours of the Church, as Christ had been before, and the Bishops, their successors ever since. To which purpose St. Cyprian, Ep. 65. Apostolos i. e. Episcopos & Præpositos Dominus elegit, the Lord chose Apostles, i.e. Bishops and Governours. So Judas's Apostolical function is called ἐπισκοπὴ Bishoprick Act. 1. 20. so Theodoret thinks Epaphroditus was Bishop of the Philippians, because he is called Ἀπόστολ& Apostle, and on 1 Tim. 3. saith thus τὰς νῦν καλουμένας ἐπισκόπους Ἀποστόλους ὠνόμαζον, those that are now called Bishops, they then call'd Apostles, so Titus, saith he, and so Apollos, and so (saith Remig. on 1 Cor. 4.) Sosthenes also. Thus St. Hilary frequently calls St. Paul Episcopum, Bishop. And Hilarius Sardus in Eph. Apostoli Episcopi sunt, the Apostles are Bishops. So the Scriptor qu. in vet. & nov. Test. qu. 97. Nemo ignorat Episcopos Servatorem Ecclesiis instituisse: ipse enim priusquam in cœlos ascenderet, imponens manum Apostolis, ordinavit eos Episcopos. No man is ignorant that our Saviour instituted Bishops over the Churches: For he himself before he ascended to heaven, laying his hand on the Apostles ordained them Bishops. So saith Rabanus Maur. in 1 Tim. 4. 14. of the Apostles times, Episcopi provincias integras regebant, Apostolorum nomine nuncupati. The Bishops were called Apostles. So doth Blondel himself confess not only out of Gildas, that St. Matthew Episcopatum sortitus est, was Bishop, but acknowledges it of St. James the brother of the Lord, as the voice of all antiquity, that he was Bishop of Jerusalem. Jacobum Hierosol. Ecclesiæ Episcopum constanter asserunt veteres omnes. Apol. pro sent. Hieron. p. 50. And if it be said, that he meant by the word Episcopus Bishop, no more than a Presbyter, one of many; I shall only then put him or the Reader in mind, what the same Blondel in his censure of the Pontif. Epistles (when they say he was not so severe against Bishops) hath put together of that James. Hieros. Ecclesiam rexisse statuunt veteres, & à Christo Episcopale munus accepisse, ait Hegesippus apud Hieron. in Cat. Epiphan. hær. 78. Hieron. in Gal. c. 1. Greg. Turon. l. 1. c. 17. Nic. Methon. de pane consecr. (He might have added Chrysost. Hom. 3. on the Acts.) A Christo & Apostolis. Eus. l. 7. c. 19. Constit. l. 8. c. 35. ab Apostolis, Constit. l. 7. c. 48. l. 8. c. ult. Clem. Alexand. apud * Euseb. l. 2. c. 1. Athanas. in Synop. Euseb. l. 2. c. 2. Hieronymus de Script. Eccl. Beda de 6. ætat. & Martyrol. ad Cal. Maii. & Chron. Grælanon. Scriptor. ὃν ἀνεθρόνισεν ὁ ἅγι& Πέτρ&, acknowledging all, that as Bishop he governed that Church, as a single person, sat in the sea or throne; all the difference between the Antients being, whether by Christ or the Apostles, or both, or by St. Peter only, he was ordained Bishop.

* The same author in his Chr. p. 43. affirms that he was by the Apostles ordained Bishop of Jerusalem, the nineteenth year of Tiberius, i.e. the very next year in his account after the death of Christ.

Thus, saith St. ‖ Chrys. did Christ invest the Apostles with this power of retaining and remitting sins, καθάπερ τὶς βασιλεὺς ἄρχοντας ἀποστέλλων, &c. as when a King sends Governours over Provinces, he gives them power of imprisoning, and releasing, intimating the ἄρχοντες or Rulers of the Church to be the men that are here represented by the Apostles, and so in L. 3. περὶ ἱερωσ. speaking of the weighty office of Bishops (to excuse himself who had fled from it) he principally insists on the power, which is intrusted to them, and in that respect applies to them the stile of the faithful, and wise servant, whom God makes Ruler over his houshold. So Theophylact. on Matt. 18. ἔχουσιν ἐξουσίαν ἀφίναι καὶ δῆσαι ὅτι κατὰ Πέτρον τῆς ἐπισκοπικῆς ἀξιωθέντες χάριτ&, They that after the manner of St. Peter, are vouchsafed the honour of being Bishops, have the power of binding and loosing. So again appears by the forecited Testimonies of the προεδρεύοντες Presidents in St. Chrys. and the ἐκκλησίας πρόεδροι Præfects of the Church, in Theophylact. And so in the name and sence of the Greek Church, Gabriel of Philadelphia περὶ τῆς β. διαφ. in his second difference betwixt the Greek and the Roman Church; οἱ ἅγιοι Ἀπόστολοι, καὶ οἱ αὐτῶν διάδοχοι ἀρχιερεῖς, The chief Priests, i.e. Bishops, are the successors of the Apostles, and in plain words, ὥστε φανερὸν ὅτι οἱ Ἀπόστολοι ἦσαν ἐπίσκοποι, So that 'tis manifest, that the Apostles were Bishops, and applies to them that of the Psalmist, Psal. 45. 16. of Gods constituting them Rulers over all the earth, and names the several Churches wherein the several Apostles ordain'd Bishops, St. John in Asia, St. Andrew in Achaia, St. Thomas in India, &c.

‖ Hom. 86. in Joh.

Thus also among the Latins St. Jerome, who was not very favourable to Bishops, saith expresly, that they were the Apostles successors, Episcopi omnes Apostolorum successores sunt. Ep. 83. ad Evagrium. So St. Ambrose, Claves illas regni cœlorum in beato Petro Apostolo cuncti suscepimus sacerdotes. All we, that are stiled Sacerdotes, in the blessed Apostle St. Peter received the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven. And what Sacerdos signifies among the Writers of that time, and particularly in St. Ambrose, the observation of any diligent Reader will instruct him; viz. that which the [suscepimus] applyed to St. Ambrose's person, will inforce, he being Bishop of Millain at that time, (and this is agreeable even to the Heathens acception of the phrase, who use Sacerdos and Pontifex promiscuously; witness Servius in Æn. 3.) So de dignitate Sacerd. c. 2. he shews out of Scripture, that the

The word ποιμὴν (which together with Paſtor in Latin, is ordinarily the Biſhops Title, in order to the Shepherds office of ruling, and governing, as well as feeding the flock) and ἱερεὺς, Sacerdos, are promiſcuouſly taken, and the latter by the Interpreter there rendred Epiſcopus, Biſhop.

Sect. 8. And to the ſame purpoſe moſt clearly S. Cyprian, Ep. 12. ſpeaking of the Lapſi, thoſe who having fallen were under the cenſures of the Church, and how the Presbyters had preſumed to reconcile, or abſolve them, he concludes that they did not (Reſervare Epiſcopo honorem Sacerdotii ſui, & Cathedra) reſerve to the Biſhop the honour of his Prieſthood, and chair, ſhewing the indifferent uſe of thoſe words, Epiſcopus and Sacerdos, at that time; and that in oppoſition to Presbytery, appropriating to the one the Power of the Keys, excluſively to the other. This he had ſet down more plainly before Epiſt. 10. ſhewing, and aggravating the greatneſs of the fault of thoſe Presbyters, that had taken upon them to uſe the Keys in that caſe, Præpoſitum ſibi Epiſcopum non cogitantes, not thinking that there was a Biſhop ſet over them; quod nunquam omnino ſub anteceſſoribus factum eſt, reſolving that it was a fact without any precedent in the Church; and again, L. 1. Epiſt. 3. having proved the Epiſcopal power to be immediately from God, he expreſſeth it in theſe words, Sacerdotalis auctoritas & poteſtas divinâ dignatione firmatur, The ſacerdotal power is ſetled by divine dignation, and adds the occaſion of all Schiſms in the Church to be, quod Sacerdoti Dei non obtemperatur, that the Biſhop is not obeyed: Nec unus in Eccleſia ad tempus Sacerdos, & ad tempus Judex, vice Chriſti cogitatur; and that 'tis not conſidered, that the one Prieſt, i. e. Biſhop, and Judge, is for the time in the Church in Chriſts ſtead; which is yet more clear by his making Sacerdotum Collegium, the College of Prieſts, all one with Coepiſcoporum conſenſus; The conſent of Fellow-Biſhops, and preſently adding, that he that ſets himſelf above this unus Sacerdos, one Prieſt, ſe non Epiſcopi ſed Dei judicem facere, makes himſelf Judge not of the Biſhop, but of God. And therefore 'tis a ſtrange proof of Blondels, that Epiſcopacy, and Presbytery is all one, from that ſpeech of Pontius Diaconus concerning this Cyprian, Quod ad officium Sacerdotii & Epiſcopatus gradum novellus electus eſt, having before ſaid, Presbyterium & Sacerdotium ſtatim accepiſſe. Whereas the equipollence of the words Sacerdos and Epiſcopus being obſerved, and the difference of Presbyter from them, doth clearly infer the contrary; and that is apparent by the very place, Multa ſunt quæ jam Presbyter fecit; ad probationem bonorum operum ſatis eſt, quod ad officium Sacerdotii & Epiſcopatus gradum adhuc novellus electus eſt. He was, it ſeems, a Presbyter firſt, and did many things in that ſtate, and a proof that he did ſo, was his election to the office of Sacerdos or Biſhop, when he was a novice, i. e. preſently or ſoon after his converſion; where the difference of his being a Presbyter and a Biſhop is moſt manifeſt. So when St. * Hilarius Pictav. ſaith, Aarone Sacerdotes ſignificari non ambiguum, in Levi, miniſtros oſtendi, the ſame Blondel concludes, Sacerdotes ſive præpoſitos, & ſeniores to be all one, not knowing or obſerving again that Sacerdos ſignifies Biſhop, who is there ſet parallel to Aaron, in lege primus Sacerdos, the firſt Prieſt in the Law.

Apol. pro Sent. Hieron.

* In Pſalm.

Sect. 9. Many other evidences might be produced out of thoſe and after-times, as in the Council of Taurinum ſpeaking of Palladius, A Triferio ſacerdote fuerat multatus, he was puniſhed by Triferius, who, that he was a Biſhop, (if it were doubted) would appear by the acts of that Council, and particularly by his excommunicating Exuperantius, a Presbyter, Can. 4. which ſure none but a Summus Sacerdos, a High Prieſt, or Biſhop could do.

Sect. 10. But there can be no need of more proofs in this matter, and if there were now any more doubt, that the Biſhops were the confeſt ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles in this Privilege or Prerogative, that one Canon of the Apoſtles might ſatiſhe it, Οἱ πρεσβύτεροι καὶ διάκονοι ἄνευ γνώμης τοῦ ἐπισκόπου, μηδὲν ἐπιτελείτωσαν, αὐτὸς γὰρ ἐστὶν ὁ πεπιστευμένος τὸν λαὸν τοῦ Κυρίου, &c. Let not the Presbyters, or Deacons do any thing without the conſent of the Biſhop, for he hath the people of the Lord intruſted to him, and ſhall one day be required an account of their ſouls, which beſides that it is evidenced to belong to this power of the Keys, by the uſefulneſs of that to the diſcharging the truſt about ſouls, appears further by the μηδὲν ἐπιτελείτωσαν, the prohibiting of Presbyters to do any thing without him.

Sect. 11. A ſaying, which whatſoever is thought of it, is the voice of the firſt Antiquity. Ignatius muſt begin the number in Ep. ad Trall. Ἀναγκαῖον ἴσθι, ὅσαπερ ποιεῖτε, ἄνευ ἐπισκόπου μηδὲν πράσσειν ὑμᾶς. It is neceſſary that whatſoever ye do, ye do nothing without the Biſhop. And if, becauſe it follows immediately, ἀλλ' ὑποτάσσεσθε καὶ τῷ πρεσβυτερίῳ, ὡς Ἀποστόλοις, obey the Presbyters, as the Apoſtles, it be conceived, that that precept belongs to the people only, and not to the Presbyters, it will then be eaſily replyed, that to the whole matter the ſame Ignatius in Ep. ad Mag. hath given it in a latitude, which had prevented this ſcruple, ὥσπερ οὖν ὁ κύριος ἄνευ τοῦ πατρὸς οὐδὲν ποιεῖ, οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς ἄνευ τοῦ ἐπισκόπου, μήδε πρεσβύτερος, μήδε διάκονος, μήδε λαϊκός. As the Lord Chriſt doth nothing without the Father, ſo you alſo without the Biſhop; You, whether Presbyter, or Deacon, or Laick. Once more in Ep. ad Smyrn. μηδεὶς χωρὶς ἐπισκόπου τι πρασσέτω τῶν ἀνηκόντων εἰς τὴν ἐκκλησίαν, Let no man without the Biſhop do any of thoſe things which belong unto the Church. And the Council of Laodicea hath (almoſt in Ignatius's words) commanded the ſame, Can. 56. τοὺς πρεσβυτέρους μηδὲν πράττειν ἄνευ γνώμης τοῦ ἐπισκόπου, The Presbyters muſt do nothing without the conſent of the Biſhop; and many more acts, and Canons might be produced to the ſame purpoſe.

Sect. 12. And if againſt all theſe, this exception be made, that by the force of ſuch Rules not only the power of the Keys, but alſo all other power belonging to the Church is appropriated to Biſhops: to this the Anſwer (as it will be eaſie, ſo it) will tend much to the clearing, and ſerve for the ſhutting up of this whole matter; That indeed there is great truth in the Objection, that all power in all matters Eccleſiaſtical did primarily belong to the Biſhop, and to no others, even Presbyters themſelves; but as it was by the Biſhop communicated to them, not only by that firſt act of Ordination, in giving them the χάρισμα, or firſt power, but alſo by a ſecond act neceſſary to give them that other power to uſe or exerciſe that power, when they have it.

Sect. 13. This is the plain ſence of the Canon of the Council of Arles, Can. 19. Nec Presbyteris civitatis ſine Epiſcopi præcepto amplius aliquid imperare, vel ſine authoritate literarum ejus in unaquaque Parochia aliquid agere. The Presbyters of any City muſt not command any thing without the precept of the Biſhop, nor do any thing in any Pariſh, without authority of the Biſhops letters, licenſing them to do it. Thus, I ſay, it is not only for the power of the Keys, but even for the Sacraments. Ignatius's ſaying laſt produced in Ep. ad Smyrn. is by him thus enlarged, ἐκείνη βεβαία εὐχαριστία ἡγείσθω ἡ ὑπὸ τὸν ἐπίσκοπον οὖσα, ἢ ᾧ ἂν αὐτὸς ἐπιτρέψῃ. Let that Euchariſt be reputed firm (or rightly celebrated) which is done by the Biſhop, or by him to whom he ſhall give leave; and for Baptiſm and that together, οὐκ ἔξον ἐστὶ χωρὶς τοῦ ἐπισκόπου οὔτε βαπτίζειν, οὔτε προσφέρειν, It is not lawful without the Biſhop, i.e. without his leave, either to baptiſe, or adminiſter the Sacrament; ἀλλ' ὅταν εἰκὸς ᾖ δοκῇ κατ' εὐαρέστησιν Θεοῦ, but when he ſhall think fit according to Gods pleaſure, ἵνα ἀσφαλὲς ᾖ καὶ βέβαιον πᾶν ὃ ἂν πράσσητε, that all that you do, may be ſafe and firm. It ſeems the conſent of the Biſhop was thought neceſſary to make it ſafe for any Presbyter to do any Eccleſiaſtical act, or to give validity to it, when 'twas done by him. So Tertul. de cor. mil. Non de aliorum quàm de præſidentium manu Euchariſtiam ſumimus, We receive the Euchariſt from none but the Preſidents, or Governours. They are all one with the προεστὼς in Juſt. Mart. Apol. 2. to whom that whole buſineſs is there remitted. So again Tertul. de bapt. Dandi baptiſmum jus habet Summus Sacerdos qui eſt Epiſcopus, dehinc Presbyteri & Diaconi, non tamen ſine Epiſcopi authoritate, propter Eccleſiæ honorem, quo ſalvo ſalva pax eſt. The chief Prieſt who is the Biſhop, hath the power of giving baptiſm, after him the Presbyters and Deacons, yet not without the authority of the Biſhop, for the honour of the Church, which as long as it is preſerved, the peace of the Church will be preſerved alſo. So when the Scriptor. anon. quæſt. in V. & Nov. Teſt. which is thought to be Hilary, ſaith, In Alexandriâ & per totam Ægyptum, ſi deſit Epiſcopus, conſecrat Presbyter, that in Alexandria and Egypt, if there be no Biſhop, the Presbyter conſecrates; 'tis clear by the mention of that liberty in the Presbyter, as of a thing peculiar to Ægypt, and that too, only when there is no Biſhop preſent, that regularly this power belong'd to none but the Biſhops, and to thoſe Presbyters to whom he gave it. Where by the way will appear a great miſtake of Blondel and (I ſuppoſe out of him, as his many other Notes in his apparatus againſt Biſhops) of Salmaſius, who in another place of Hilary in Eph. 4. cited by both of them, [apud Ægyptum Presbyteri conſignant, ſi præſens non ſit Epiſcopus; In Ægypt the Presbyters conſign, if the Biſhop be not preſent] interpret conſigning, either to be * confirmation, or bleſſing (I ſuppoſe abſolving) of penitents, or ordination. It being clear by the other place, juſt now cited, that conſignatio ſignifies there conſecrating of the Sacrament, which is peculiarly call'd conſecration, that of giving orders being ordination, not as he calls it ordinandorum conſecratio (which what it would grammatically ſignifie I know not, unleſs ſome benediction of them that are after to be ordain'd) and it ſeems ‖ Blondel himſelf, p. 61. thinks it poſſible that conſignatio may ſignifie the conſecrating the Elements, & by what follows, I conceive him to uſe it in that ſenſe, ſaying, quod antiquis per ſolam Epiſcoporum abſentiam licuit, omnibus nunc abſolutè licet, that which anciently was made lawful to all (i.e. to Presbyters) only by the Biſhops abſence, is now abſolutely lawful to all: Which I ſuppoſe he doth mean of conſecrating the Sacrament, and I am ſure could not reaſonably believe of ordination. But this by the way, in paſſage, to confirm that aſſertion of Ignatius ſufficiently, that the Church was by the Apoſtles put into the hands of Biſhops, that ordinarily the conſent of the Biſhop was required to enable a Presbyter for any Eccleſiaſtical act, the plenitude of power being by Chriſt delivered down to the Apoſtles, and through them to their ſucceſſor-biſhops, and by them diſpenſt out to others in that meaſure, and thoſe portions, which they ſhould think fit.

* Sive baptizatorum confirmatio, ſive pœnitentium benedictio, ſive ordinandorum conſecratio. Blond. Apol. p. 57. & Salmaſ. in appar. ad l. de Prim. Papæ.

And if it be demanded here, What it is which in our Church is given to Presbyters in their Ordination, as the full importance of the form then uſed [Receive the holy Ghoſt:] I anſwer, 1. not all that is at any time contained under that phraſe, when it is uſed in the conſecration, but only the particulars, which are after mention'd; and ſo diſtinctly not the power of ordaining, which is not mentioned, and which is a particular, that never was regular for any Presbyter in the antient Church to aſſume to himſelf, or to any number of that order, without a Biſhop over them (and it would not be hard to give an account of all that hath been produced of late by Salmaſius, or any other from the origines Alexandrini, or any other record of antiquity to the contrary, but that it is ἄλλης σχολῆς, and would be too large a παρεργον in this place; and if the practice of ſome few Proteſtant Churches in this laſt Century be oppoſed againſt it; then 1. I ſhall conceive thoſe very unfit to be confronted againſt the Univerſal for 1500 years: and therefore, ſecondly, I ſhall not doubt to affirm, that want is not only a defect, but a corruption among them. Thirdly, it will be obſervable, that even thoſe that want it among them, have formerly thought fit to excuſe it by the caſe of neceſſity, and to acknowledge it their infelicity, but not their fault, (their ſuperiors in the State not permitting them to have Biſhops to ordain them;) and to give their judgments freely, that where Epiſcopacy is, it is to be preſerv'd; and where it is not, it is to be wiſht for; which is a ſufficient expreſſion of their ſenſe of it: And if the improſperouſneſs of the cauſe of late in this Kingdom hath moved ſome of them to change their ſtyle, I ſuppoſe there is no greater reaſon to depend on their judgments who are mov'd or wrought on by ſuch extrinſecal arguments, than on his, who lately made no ſcruple to confeſs, in giving his opinion of H. Grotius, Ego non probo prudentiam minùs felicem. He lik'd not the choice of that ſide which was not proſperous. And then fourthly, that this cannot be applicable by way of excuſe to thoſe, who deſire to caſt out Biſhops where they are, on purpoſe that Presbyters may uſurp the power which belongs to them. Secondly, not all power of binding, and looſing, retaining, or remitting, though thoſe words are there added (whoſe ſins you do remit, &c.) but ſo much as the Biſhops or Governours are preſumed to have thought fit to impart to them, and what that is, will appear by other acts of our Church, eſpecially by the Liturgy: as 1. The declaring of abſolution in the Church after the Confeſſion of ſins: 2. The abſolving them by way of prayer before the Sacrament (in caſe the Biſhop be not preſent,) and 3. in Baptiſmal waſhing, and 4. upon ſpecial Confeſſion on the ſick-bed; or any time elſe which may by analogy or reduction come under theſe ſame heads, as in the caſe of private conference, and confeſſion at other times: In all theſe the remitting of ſins is allowed among us to a bare Presbyter, not only by way of pronouncing, or declaring of abſolution, but (as a miniſterial act) actually abſolving him, (by Chriſts authority committed to the Presbyters) from all his ſins.

Sect. 14.

All which yet will not extend to the abſolving from the band of Excommunication, or proportionably to ſuch power of binding, any further (at moſt) than to confer the firſt power of it, which if it be then given, doth yet remain (as the other power of Preaching, and adminiſtring the Sacraments) bound, and reſtrained from being exerciſed, till they be further looſed by the donation of a ſecond power as Luke 24. 49. when Christ sent them the Promise of his Father, which was at the time of his breathing on them, Joh. 20.22. and gave them a χάρισμα, a grace, or first power of it, he yet restrains the exercise of it, till the actual descent of the Holy Ghost, (but tarry you in Jerusalem, till you be indued with power from above) and that is not done in this Church as it stands established by Law, and in this particular of the Keys) till he becomes a πρεσβύτερος, a ruling Elder, whether by being made Bishop, or otherwise by having Jurisdiction vested on him; and thus much will serve turn for the first enquiry, on whom the power of the Keys was bestowed.

CHAP. IV.

Sect. 1. I Come now to the second general enquiry, in what this power consists, and shews it self; which I shall make no stay, or scruple to define in this proposition, That the power of binding and loosing in these places of the Gospels is * χάρισμα πνευματικὸν, a spiritual gift or grace, and belongs to the τὰς τῶν σφαλμάτων ἢ συγχωρήσεις ἢ ἐπιτιμήσεις, in Theoph. in Mat. 16. the pardoning or punishing of faults, the former to the Censures of the Church, the Ecclesiastical punishments of Excommunication, and the later, the power of loosing to that of absolving from them.

* Διάφορα χαρίσματα τὰ πνεύματος. Δὸ ἐπάγαγεν, ὧν ἀφῆτε &c. Chrys. in Joh. 20.

Τὸ εἶδος τῶν πνευματικῶν χαρισμάτων αὐτοῖς δίδωσι τὸ τὰ ἁμαρτήματα ἀφίεσθαι. Theoph. in Joh. 20. ἐστὶ δὲ εἰπεῖν ὅτι ἐξουσίαν τινὰ καὶ χάριν πνευματικὴν δίδωσιν αὐτοῖς, ὥστε ἀφιέναι, &c. Ib.

Sect. 2. This position I must vindicate from the contrary interpretations or objections which are thought to keep these Texts from concluding or countenancing any such Censures. And of these, though they are not all to one sense, yet one interpretation I have chosen rather to insist on, because it hath not yet been considered by others, and because it seems to pretend to more antient grounds than the rest formerly have done, I mean that which proceeds by interpreting the Phrases out of the writings of the Talmudists, and from them concludes (I shall give it you in the learned Writers own words) that the power of binding and loosing is רשות להורות באימור והתר facultas decernendi, explicandi, interpretandi, declarandi de ligato & soluto, quod planè millies in Talmudicis ex vetustissimæ Ecclesiæ illius usu denotat, quid vetitum ex lege sacrâ, quid permissum (quemadmodum & Græcis * scimus δῆσαι, quod ligare est, etiam interdicere sonare, & λύειν, quod est solvere, etiam permittere, seu obligationem sive auferre, sive nondum inductam monstrare, aut asserere) adeoq; ad docendi, seu interpretandi, seu Theologiæ Præceptivæ munus solum ibi attinuit, &c. making it no more than the faculty of explicating, or interpreting what is lawful, what not, &c. in a word, no more, than the power of deciding cases of conscience, seu sic de jure publicè respondendi illudq; dicendi, &c. The truth of which, I shall, with all due respect, for a while take boldness to examine. First, by yielding, or for the present not denying, that there was or might be an office or power among the Jews intrusted to some select Elders of the people, of teaching and giving publick responses (by way of deciding cases of Conscience, though not by way of Judicature) what was to be accounted lawful, what not, both by the Law of God, and the Tradition of the Antients; which yet being supposed and granted, I must secondly interpose, that it is not thereby proved that this is called in the Talmud, or by any of those writers, the power of binding and loosing, (or that the power of binding and loosing is by them so described) but (which is quite another thing) רשות להורות a power of teaching or instructing, &c. what is lawful, what forbidden. Nor will it be a proof of any force to conclude (that which we have no reason to believe without a proof, or some kind of affinity in the phrases, viz.) that this power of binding is that power of teaching, and no more, only because there was such a power of teaching among the Jews. For if we will judge à pari, experience proves the contrary, in this Church of ours; where though there be a power of binding, and a munus docendi, an office of teaching, &c. yet no man is bound from thence to acknowledge these two to be all one, but we have long believed them to be two faculties, or offices, the one given the Apostles in the donation of the Keys, the other in the mission to preach; (and though it were granted that we were mistaken in affirming them to be two such distinct faculties, yet would not that hinder the truth of this assertion, that in our books they are so distinguished, the question being now of the fact, and not of the right, and it being clear that in our practice our Preaching is one thing, and our Excommunicating is another) and secondly, because 'tis clear, there were two distinct powers among the Jews, one of declaring in foro, as well as the other extra forum, one judicial, as well as the other doctrinal; and sure it would be but a poor supersedeas, or prohibition to keep the Sanhedrin among them from judging and punishing any offender brought before them, by telling them that there was among the Jews a רשות להורות a licence or faculty of declaring what was lawful, without any power of punishing; For they would be so soon able to say, that 'twas by some other power (and not by that of declaring) that they undertook thus to judge and punish, and let me add, that although the power among the Jews, were acknowledged only to be a civil power, yet might Christ in his Church set up an Ecclesiastical power proportionable to that, and imitate that in the sacred, which they used only in civil judicatures; as anon we shall have occasion to demonstrate. And thirdly, the phrase of the Gospel, from whence we pretend, is not the facultas, faculty, or power of binding, but the donation of Keys, and with that, Christs promise, that whatsoever they shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven: and therefore I conceive this will not be a convincing way of inferring this conclusion.

* Vide Eustath. & Did. in illud Iliad. Σ. ἐμεῖο δὲ δῆσιν Ἀρῆς ἀλκτῆρα γενέσθαι, & Inscript. Isid. apud Diodor. Sic. l. 1.

Sect. 3. We must therefore in the next place proceed to examine the reasons, or arguments produced to perswade us, that the power of binding and loosing is no more than the power of declaring, &c. what is prohibited, what is permitted, the office of the Casuist only. And these reasons I can find to be but two.

1. That

1. That ligatum & ſolutum planè millies in Talmudicis ex vetuſtiſſimo Eccleſiæ illius uſu denotat quid vetitum, quid permiſſum. 2. That in ſome places of Greek Authors, δῆσαι and λύσαι, to bind, and looſe are uſed alſo. Sect. 4.

For the firſt of theſe, I ſhall firſt ſay, that if it were true, that the Idiom of the Talmudiſts were ex vetuſtiſſimo Eccleſiæ illius uſu, out of the moſt antient uſe of that Church, the Law of Moſes, and the Scriptures of the Old Teſtament, being the Records of the moſt antient Church, ſome footſteps of it might be expected there; but I ſhall ſuppoſe there are no ſuch to be found, not only becauſe I have there ſought them in vain, but becauſe I preſume the Author would have conceived any Teſtimony from thence to be more Authentick than the Talmud, and ſo would certainly have produced them, if there had been any. 2*ly*. For the Talmudiſts acception of the phraſes; firſt I might ſay, that we are no way obliged to interpret Greek words in the New Teſtament by the uſe of the Talmudiſts, becauſe though the traditions concerning Hebrew cuſtoms mentioned in the Talmud may reaſonably be thought antienter than Chriſts time (and ſo the Teſtimonies brought thence be worth the heeding for ſuch, and fit ſometimes to be uſed for the explaining the like cuſtoms mentioned in the New Teſtament) yet the book it ſelf, and conſequently the words in it (which only we have now to conſider) was written, and ſet out long after the New Teſtament, the Miſnaioth, or firſt δευτερώσεις, which contain the Text of the Talmud, being ſet forth by the תנאים Tannaim, or Doctores Miſchnici, about the year 150 after Chriſt, who as they profeſs to have had their beginning per continuam ſucceſſionem acceptionis legis oralis à Moſe, ſaith Buxtorf; by a continual ſucceſſion of tradition of the oral law from the times of Moſes, ſo they acknowledge to end in R. Jehudah hakkadoſch, (ſtiled Haunaſi the Chief or Prince, and by way of eminence Rabbi, when he is cited in the Gemara) who lived under Antoninus in the midſt of the ſecond Century. After theſe Tannaim, are the אמוראים Amoraim whom Scaliger calls γνωμολόγοι, the Authors of the Gemara, and of that Gemara, i.e. thoſe diſputations, and deciſions of thoſe learned men at Jeruſalem, together with the Miſchna forementioned, doth the Jeruſalem-Talmud conſiſt, as was ſet forth * an. 230. as the collection of the like diſputations and deciſions on the Miſchna, which were had in Academiis Pombedithana, Soriah, and Nahardeah, make up the Talmud Babylonicum, which was compleated, ann. 500. This will be ſufficient to ſhew that the words of Chriſt, either as they were ſpoken by him, or repeated by the Evangeliſts, ought not to be conceived to have imitated the phraſes of the Talmudiſts, ſo long after them; and there will be as little reaſon to believe that the writers of the Talmuds have imitated the phraſes in the Goſpel, being themſelves both Jews, and enemies to the Chriſtian Religion. The only thing which can be ſuppoſed reaſonable or poſſible in this matter, is this, that our Saviours Language was ſo near kin to that which the Jewiſh ſchool after uſed, that we ought to have regard to it in expounding his words. But this will not extend to all Chriſts ſpeeches, or phraſes, nor be uſeful but where there appears ſuch a conſent, or agreement, much leſs be ſufficient to prove a poſition of this conſequence, where the agreement is not clear and neceſſary: and beſides, if the Idiom of the Talmudiſts were of any weight in this matter, yet ſure it is not ſufficient to weigh down the contrary Interpretation of the Chriſtian Fathers, (who are to us in all reaſon to be heeded, as the veryer Talmudiſts of the two, the Traditors and deliverers of our Goſpel, and Creed unto us) or the uſe of it among the Jews, that they have written in Greek, particularly of the Author of Eccleſiaſticus, who is conceived to be the famous Ben-Sira, and with him λύειν ἁμαρτίας, is punctually to forgive ſins, c. 28. 2. however no way able to extend it ſelf to that other place in St. John, where the phraſe is varied, and the [power of remitting and retaining of ſins] is given to the Diſciples, which will have no analogy with that which is here pretended; for whatever ſhould be granted of the words ligatum & ſolutum, being all one with prohibited, &c. the retaining or remitting of ſins, will be diſtant from it, for ſure that will not be, to declare one mans ſins unlawful, anothers lawful, which it muſt do, if this interpretation be applied to that place alſo. Sect. 5.

* Vid. Buxtorf. Lex. Rab. p. 583.

This being premiſed as an Anſwer ſufficient to take away the force, or unconvincingneſs of this interpretation, I ſhall ex abundanti ſuperadd, that I have uſed ſome care to examine thoſe words, and to obſerve their importance in thoſe, and other Jewiſh writings: I ſhall give you an account of it. Sect. 6.

The Hebrew word for binding is אסר, which I ſhall make no ſcruple to acknowledge, doth in the Talmuld many times ſignifie to forbid and prohibit; and from thence אסור and אימור ſignifies a thing forbidden, prohibited, unlawful; only by the way I ſhall crave leave to ſhew you by what degrees it comes to ſignifie thus. The word in the Old Teſtament ſignifies to bind, (and ſure that is the beſt interpreter of Idioms in the New) and accordingly is rendred by δέω, δεσμεύω, ζωννύω, πεδάω, &c. and is uſed commonly for binding with cords, and ſometimes for that band, or obligation, that proceeds from having made a vow, as Num. 30. 4. & is then rendred ὁρισμὸς definition or decree, becauſe by that vow I bind, or define, or determine my ſelf to ſuch a performance; Farther than this, 'tis true this word is rendred by our Tranſlators Num. 11. 28. to forbid] Lord Moſes forbid them, where yet 'tis obſervable that the forbidding there, which Joſhua deſires, is applied to the perſons, and not to the thing, and ſignifies a checking, repreſſing, [Lord Moſes ſuffer them not, cohibeto eos] as when by chiding, or diſciplining, a ſuperiour reſtrains another, according to which uſe of the word it is, that Philip de Aquin. makes it agree in ſence with מנע, and חשך prohibuit and cohibuit, forbidding, and repreſſing: and thus it will be very agreeable with our ſence of binding, as that ſignifie Church-cenſure, παίδωσις, diſciplining, repreſſing offenders by that means. In the whole Scripture I believe there will not one place be found where that word is rendred by the 72. by any word ſignifying barely to prohibit, or the like, unleſs you will ſay it doth Dan. 6. 7, 8, 9. where the word אסר is rendred δόγμα, and ὁρισμὸς, a decree, and yet if you examine that place, and the nature of the decree, you ſhall find, that it was not a bare prohibition, but a binding to puniſhment upon non-performance, (for the decree was there, ver. 7. that whoſoever ſhall ask any petition from either God or man, but of thee, O King, ſhall be caſt into the den of Lions:) and ſo the decree is that deſignation to the puniſhment, of caſting into the den, which is there call'd אסר binding, as when the Judge decrees the Offender to be Excommunicated, that act of judicature is a decree, yet nevertheleſs a binding, (this binding being a judicial act, and from thence receiving its force of obligation) and è converſo in that a binding, or obligation to puniſhment, that it is ſuch a decree, to wit, a decree ſub pœnâ, that ſuch a thing ſhall be done; ſo ſaith Schindler, that the Chaldee אסר is obligavit ad obedientiam, aut pœnam, binding to obedience, or penalty, and Elias Levita, that כל דבר &c. Every thing from which either ſin or puniſhment cometh unto him that doth it נקרא אסור is ſaid to be bound, or is call'd Aſſur; and therefore Munſter giving an account of the uſe of the word in the Commentaries of the Rabbins, ſaith אסר or אסרא ſignifies edictum aut ſententiam, quâ quis tenetur, &c. by which any man is bound to puniſhment, if he obey it not. In like manner as he that vows, binds, (and the word אסר Num. 30.4.&c. belongs peculiarly to that) becauſe in vowing he doth either by words of execration explicitly, or elſe by intimation implicitely, call puniſhment upon himſelf, if he perform not his vow, and ſo binds himſelf to that puniſhment. And ſo ſtill the word [binding] by denoting a decree in this kind, doth not at all vary from our preſent ſenſe of binding by way of cenſure, which now we contend for, but rather confirm and concur with it; and ſo I conceive (in thoſe excerpta about excommunication, which J. Coch hath ſet down in Latin out of Maimonides) thoſe words of Maimonides do import, Quod totus Iſrael decrevit, non obſervat Princeps, &c. What all Iſrael decreed, the Prince obſerves not: he ſpeaks of inflicting anathema's, and I ſhall grant that the word rendred decrevit, is in the original אסר the word for binding, (in reference to which it follows in the next words, by him ſet down, remittitur à læſo, ſi ei ſatisfecerit, &c. The injur'd perſon remits, if ſatisfaction be made him:) and from thence ſhall conclude, that even when it is to be rendred decrevit, it may yet note puniſhment, particularly that of excommunication or decree ad excommunicandum, ſentence to puniſhment being a kind of Legiſlation, and all binding to that, an act of Command or power.

from

Exc. Gem. Sanhed. p. 147.

Sect. 7. Having thus conſidered the verb אסר I ſhall as freely grant that the participles, or nouns deduced from thence, אסור and אימור among the Rabbins or Talmudiſts, ſignifie very often a thing forbidden, prohibited, unlawful (though in the Old Teſtament again the nouns there uſed אסר, and אסרה ſignifie not ſo, but are taken in a regular ſence, and ſo rendred by the 72 δεσμὸς a band, and ὁρισμὸς an ordinance or decree, and אסור δεσμὸς and δεσμώτης, bound or impriſon'd, and the like, and not the thing unlawful or prohibited) which yet being granted and added to what was before granted of the Talmudical uſe of the Verb, comes not home to prove the Objectors concluſion, which is this, that the verb אסר ſignifies among the Talmudiſts, decernere, explicare, interpretari, declarare, de ligato, vel quid ligatum ſit, i.e. quid vetitum: to diſcern, explicate, interpret, declare concerning a thing bound, or what is bound, i.e. what is forbidden: for to prove this ſence of the verb, that other ſuppoſed uſe of the participle is not ſufficient, any more than my confeſſing amatum to ſignifie a thing loved, will conclude me to affirm, that amo ſignifies to declare a thing to be loved, which we know ſignifies formally to love, & nothing elſe.

Sect. 8. That the verb ſignifies to forbid, or decree, per modum legiſlationis (which is all that could be deduced from theſe premiſes, (though ſuppoſed true of ligatum in the Talmud ſignifying nothing but illicitum,) 'tis acknowledged, but that will not ſerve the turn, thereby wholly to evacuate and nullifie the power of the Keys, which is pretended to belong to the Church from theſe texts; If the Apoſtles had this power to forbid or decree, this were 1. more than to interpret or declare a thing to be unlawful, the office of making laws is more than that of the Caſuiſt, or Counſellour, or Preacher: and beſide, ſecondly, it would be but reaſon to ſuppoſe thoſe decrees backt with ſome power of Cenſures againſt reſiſters, and ſo indeed the word imports, to decree ſub pœna, under penalty, and not ſimply to decree. But the thing for which this Talmudical interpretation contends, and which we oppoſe, is that this power of binding is only a power of declaring, and explaining a thing to be unlawful, and for this from all that is pretended, or offer'd to our view, I have after all my ſearch no temptation to ſuſpect, that even the Talmudiſts themſelves do uſe the word. The verb with them may ſignifie [to prohibit] and the nouns, and participle, a thing prohibited, or unlawful, and that is the utmoſt that Buxtorf could obſerve of the words among the Talmudiſts, or that the author of the interpretation offers any proof for [ligatum & ſolutum, i.e. millies in Talmudicis vetitum lege ſacrâ aut permiſſum;] and if theſe notions will be taken, then the meaning of [whatſoever ye ſhall bind on earth ſhall be bound in heaven] will be, that whatſoever they ſhall by decree prohibit on earth ſhall be prohibited, or unlawful in heaven; which were only to exchange the power of Cenſures, for the power of giving Laws, which, as it is more than that of the Caſuiſt, ſo, I conceive, is never to be found any where without power of puniſhing alſo.

Sect. 9. This I conceive to be anſwer ſufficient to all that is produced, or pretended, even upon ſuppoſition that the Talmud were the Umpire, or the uſe of words there, the beſt Nomenclature for the New Teſtament. But then over and above, we muſt again remember, that this Talmudical obſervation will be but little conviction to us, who find that the Writers of the New Teſtament have no ſympathy with the Talmud in this matter, but uſe variety of other words to expreſs [commanding, or decreeing, or forbidding;] ſuch are ἐπιτάττειν, ἐντέλλεσθαι, ἐπιθεῖναι, κελεύειν, κωλύειν, δογματίζειν, and the like, but never δῆσαι or any of that making; and in like manner have other phraſes to expreſs a thing unlawful, or forbidden, ἀθέμιτον, and the like, but never δεδεμένον, or any thing like it: neither is it, I conceive, pretended, that theſe words δῆσαι and δεδεμένον have any ſuch ſence in any other place of the New Teſtament; but only in theſe two, which are (parallel one to another, and ſo) in effect but one, and that the matter of the preſent Controverſie, and ſo a petitio principii, when 'tis made uſe of to confute him that concludes the Cenſures from thence.

Sect. 10. Add unto theſe yet farther, that even in the Talmud it ſelf the word אסר (of which this obſervation is made) ſignifies binding too, and that not only in the obvious vulgar ſences, but in that alſo which we here contend for, of binding by cenſures, or binding over to puniſhment (obſtrinxit ad pœnam, as Schindler renders the Chaldee, and as Elias Levita the Rabbinical word, he bound over to puniſhment) and ſo with great reaſon may be reſolved (even when it ſignifies to prohibit) to belong only to ſuch penal prohibitions, or at leaſt, (belonging at firſt to ſuch only) to have fall'n after in common uſe (which ſure hath been obſerv'd to bend words from their primitive ſence) to ſignifie κοινῶς all kind of decrees or prohibitions: which ſurely will not exclude, but contain under it that which we now contend for.

I ſhall ſhew the ſtrength of this argument by a parallel, as I conceive, exactly proportion'd to it. חרם in Arabick ſignifies millies, very ordinarily, [to * forbid, or reſolve any thing to be unlawful] from thence the noun מחרם and חראם is vetitum, any thing prohibited, or forbidden, and חרם and תחרים prohibition; Suppoſe now in ſome diſcourſe concerning the kinds or degrees of excommunication among the Jews, or of the power of the Sanhedrin, or indifferently in any Jewiſh Writing, I ſhould meet meet with the word חרם and render it in Latin prohibuit, interdixit, and a friend ingenuously admonish me, that it ought to be rendred, anathematizavit, devovit; would it be thought reason or ingenuity in me to reply to my admoniſher; No, but I have rendred it aright, for in Arabick, חרם ſignifies [prohibuit] and therefore 'tis but an ignorance in the Arabick Dialect, to render the Hebrew, anathematizavit, and but a popular errour (to be reform'd from hence) in them, that conceive there was any kind of excommunication among the Jews, meant by that word, חרם, whereas 'tis clear, that word ſignifies only prohibition, and therefore belongs among the Jews only ad Theologiæ præceptivæ munus, or to the Office of teaching and interpreting, what is vetitum, vel interdictum lege ſacrâ] If, I ſay, I ſhould deal thus with any piece of plain Hebrew, my firſt queſtion would be, whether this account of my rendring that word would be accepted; and if not, my ſecond now is, whether the proceſs of the preſent arguing hath not done the like, or ſomewhat more.

This will be yet more clear by proceeding to conſider the words which are oppoſite to it, (and to which this Author refers when he ſaith, Solutum millies in Talmudicis licitum, aut permiſſum, a thing looſed is taken a 1000 times in the Talmud for lawful or permitted) ſuch are התיר and מותר, which I alſo acknowledge to be taken amongſt the Talmudiſts for licitum & permiſſum, lawful and unforbidden. Sect. 11.

Of which yet ſomewhat muſt be further obſerved, 1. that נתר from whence they come, in hiphil ſignifies ſolvere, to looſe (as indeed that which hath no obligation laid on it, which is looſe from all band to obedience, or obligation to puniſhment, is properly reſolv'd to be lawful) but then this hinders not, but that the verb in hiphil may ſtill ſignifie, (and indeed even among the Rabbins ordinarily doth) to looſe, both properly and metaphorically; properly, as to looſe, or unty thoſe that are bound with cords, or ſuch like bands, properly ſo called, as Pſalm 146. 7. מתיר אסורים ſolvite vinctos, looſe thoſe that are bound, and Pſal. 105. 20. the King ſent ויתירהו and looſed him, where the Chaldee Paraphraſe reads ושריית & ſolvit eum, and the 72 ἔλυσεν αὐτὸν, and Pſal. 146. 7. Dominus מתיר qui ſolvit vinctos, looſing men out of priſon: or metaphorically, and that in a double ſence, either as it is applyed to doubts, or difficulties, and then 'tis to diſſolve them; or to perſons, and then 'tis to let looſe, or unobliege, and in this latter ſence J. Coch cites it ex cap. 1. Nedarim, that on whom the anathema or cherem is inflicted coram, or in his preſence אין מתיר לו אלא בפניו it ſhall not be remitted to him, but before his face alſo: where this word ſignifies clearly remiſſion or abſolution, and that from a ſentence of excommunication; ſo again in that conſtitution of the Law cited by Buxtorf, the word is twice uſed moſt clearly in our ſence, He that continues in Niddui 30 days ולא בקש להתיר and deſires not to have it looſed, they ſeparate him, or put him under Niddui again, and if he continue ſo 30 days more, ולא בקש לחתורו and deſires not to have it looſed, (or as he renders it, relaxate) they excommunicate, or put him under cherem, and therefore Schindler mentioning התרה, and the Rabbins uſe of it, renders it ſimply ſolutio, looſing; and there is a ſaying in שלחן ערוך in which it bears this ſence. If any man ſwear in this form, [If this be true, let me be excommunicate in this world, and in the other] and be perjured, he cannot be abſolved by any. Sect. 12. Ep. Heb. inſtit. p. 57.

Another word Synonymous to this, and ordinarily uſed by the Talmudiſts is שרה, and that primarily ſignifying (as the other did) to looſe or diſſolve, as to looſe cords which tye, or Camels which are tyed with them, is by the Talmudiſts taken for * abſolving, remitting, forgiving, pardoning; ſo ſaith Elias Levita in Thisbi, it is uſed by the Rabbins for pardoning and remitting, as, שרי רחמנא הוללי, The merciful God pardon Hillel, and in the prayer that begins כל נדרי All ſhall be remitted, or pardon'd. So in a place cited by Coch out of Gem. Moed. Caton. c. 3. Quid remedii? age cum ipſo. רלישרי לך ut remittat tibi, that he may looſe you from the excommunication: and again, ads principem, רלישרי לך that he may remit it to you. So c. 1. Nedarim, Steti coram R. Huna, cum audiens quandam nomen Dei in vanum proferre, eam excommunicaret, & ſtatim eâ præſente anathema relaxaret, there the word שרא is uſed again, for looſing in our ſence, relaxating of, or freeing from a cenſure of excommunication, directly all one with מתיר לו remittatur ipſi, following in the ſame place, which even now we produced. Sect. 13. * Vid. Buxtorf. Rabb. Lex.

A third word there is ordinarily uſed to this purpoſe, of the ſame importance, and that is פיר. So in * Moed. Katon, Sapiens poteſt ſeipſum excommunicare, a wiſe man may excommunicate himſelf ומיפר לעצמו and free or looſe himſelf again: and ſo in that out of 1. Nedarim, in J. Coth, excommunicationem poſſe è veſtigio reſcindi, there the word is, להתפרה in both, contrary to excommunication. Sect. 14. * Vid. Buxtorf. Lex. Rabb. p. 2465.

By the little that hath been ſaid it may ſufficiently appear, that to bind, and to looſe may be found even among the Talmudiſts to ſignifie ſomewhat beſide interpreting or declaring, quid vetitum, quid permiſſum ſacrâ lege, what is forbidden, what permitted by the Law of God, as that refers ſimply ad ſolum docendi, & interpretandi, vel Theologiæ præceptivæ munus, only to the Office of teaching, and interpreting, and of preceptive divinity, &c. and that 'tis no way contrary to the ſtyle or idiom of thoſe Writers to affirm, that binding and looſing belongs to Cenſures, (and not only to ſtating of caſes of Conſcience) even if the Talmud were our judge: for ſure there is nothing more ordinary in that, than to hear of looſing them, who are excommunicate, till they were looſed, were ſuppoſed bound alſo. Sect. 15.

And therefore it may be obſerved (in paſſing) that the learned H. Grotius having in his Notes on Matt. 16. 19. made this Talmudical obſervation that אסר δεῖν to bind, and התיר or פטר λύειν to looſe, are by the Hebrews attributed to the interpreters of the Law, (which ſeems ſomething agreeable to this obſervation) conceiving the Keys there ſpoken of, to be the Keys of knowledge, Luke 11. 52. doth yet on Matth. 16. 19. interpret δεῖν and λύειν binding and looſing there, by κρατεῖν and ἐρύειν retaining and remitting, John 20. 23. and in his notes on that third place acknowledges that thus the Apoſtles did remit, either when by Baptiſm they received into the Church thoſe that profeſſed the faith, or when after the Teſtimony of ſerious repentance they received into their communion, thoſe that had been lapſt or faln, and applyes to it that of the 2 Cor. 2. 10. To whom ye forgive any thing, I forgive alſo, (which belongs clearly to the excommunicate, inceſtuous perſon, in the former Epiſtle, who was it ſeems by this Eccleſiaſtical courſe brought to a capacity of remiſſion and abſolution by that time, and now abſolved by S. Paul) and for the conjunction of both theſe ſences in the interpretation of that place, he produces S. Cyprian's authority Epiſt. 73. To which I ſhall only add, that in another part Sect. 16.

of

of his Notes upon the Goſpels, Luk. 6.22. this very Judicious man (whoſe education might have given him as great prejudices againſt the Prelacy, as any other) hath given us a very excellent tract concerning this ſubject of Excommunication, or Cenſures; And at laſt reſolves out of S. Cyprian's Epiſtles, Totum ferme Chriſtianæ diſciplinæ vigorem in iſtis judiciis conſtitiſſe, &c. that well-nigh all the vigor of Chriſtian diſcipline conſiſted in thoſe judgments of the Church. Quem morem qui ex Eccleſiâ ſublatum volunt, graviſſimum infligunt vulnus diſciplinæ, quam corruptis adeò Chriſtianorum moribus ad veterem ſeveritatem reduci maximum ſit operæ precium, tantum abeſt, ut ulla ejus pars reliqua laxari debeat, &c. which cuſtom they which would remove out of the Church, inflict a moſt grievous wound on diſcipline, which (now in this notable corruption of the manners of Chriſtians) it were moſt excellently worth any mans pains to have reduced to its ancient ſeverity, ſo far is it from being fit, that any remaining member or part of it ſhould be looſed, or put out of joynt; and in another place, Diſciplinam moxum ego non refugio, ut modò pax coeat, nulla futura ſit tam ſevera, cui non libenter me meoſque ſim ſubjecturus. For the diſcipline in order to manners, I would willingly ſubject my ſelf, and all that belong to me, to the ſevereſt that could be brought into the Church. But this by the way.

Sect. 17. For the perfecting of this anſwer, and ſatisfying all the contrary appearances fully, it muſt yet farther be obſerved, that there is one thing preſumed, and not undertaken to be proved in this objection, without which all the obſervations from the Talmud are utterly invalid and unconcluding, and that one thing not at all to be granted by us, being indeed as I conceive, very far from truth. It is this; that by the particle ὅ and ὅσα [whatſoever ye ſhall bind, &c.] is noted the thing, and not the perſon, for ſo that interpretation requires [what thing ſoever ye ſhall declare to be unlawful, &c.] whereas it is no new thing in all languages and dialects to put the neuter for the maſculine gender, things for perſons, and that in the New Teſtament, is not without example, as Matth. 11. 27. πάντα μοι παρεδόθη, All things, i.e. all men, the babes or believers, ver. 25. (for which he thanks his father) are given to me of my father; and ſo. 1 Joh. 5. 4. πᾶν γεγεννημένον, expounded by πᾶς, &c. verſe 18. every thing, i.e. every one, that is born of God. Thus when S. John, Apoc. 21.27. ſpeaketh of man, and other the like inhabitants of the new Jeruſalem, he ſaith, There ſhall not enter in there any thing that defileth, or that worketh abomination, or a lye; πᾶν ποιῶν in the neuter, which is, no doubt, no unclean abominable perſon, &c. So 2 Theſſ. 2.4. the Apoſtle ſpeaking of Antichriſt, ſaith, that he exalteth himſelf above all that is called God; where the [πᾶν all] in the neuter, ſure ſignifies in the maſculine, every perſon that partakes of that name; ſo Heb. 7.7. τὸ ἔλαττον in the neuter, for the leſſer, or inferiour perſon, v. 9. οὐδὲν for no man, and Ch. 12. 13. τὸ χωλὸν for him that is lame; With which Examples the phraſe in this Text bears ſuch a proportion, that it cannot be unjuſt to reſolve, that it is at leaſt poſſible, that the neuters here may in ſence be maſculine alſo; which very poſſibility were enough to evacuate the Talmudical obſervation, the accommodation of which to this place ſuppoſes the neutral ſence of the ὅ and ὅσα to be certainly there meant, and is not reconcileable with the maſculine. For to ſay [whomſoever you ſhall declare to be unlawful or prohibited, &c.] were not ſence; whereas on the other ſide, the granting the neutral ſence, would not ſo neceſſarily deſtroy our pretenſions, this rendring of the words being proper enough, and home to our turn, [whatſoever ye ſhall bind on earth, i.e. whatſoever ſins of any treſpaſſer ye ſhall conclude under the Cenſures] or again [whatſoever puniſhment you ſhall bind on mens ſhoulders (the ſpeech being ſtill limited to this one ſort of puniſhments) it ſhall be bound or ratified in heaven:] though the truth is, the perſonal notion of the ὅσα, being ſo agreeable to other phraſes of the Scripture, I have no temptation to doubt but that it is the importance of the place [whatſoever, i. e. whomſoever you ſhall bind on earth, by the power of the Keys, ſhut out of this lower kingdom of heaven, conclude under the Eccleſiaſtical bands, or cenſures, &c. ſhall be bound in heaven, &c.] i.e. by God ratified there, (ſuppoſing that what they do, they do according to the rule,) this is moſt commodious and agreeable to the mention of the Keys (to which 'tis annext, Matth. 16.) which certainly denote power of receiving, or excluding not ſome thing, but ſome perſon, and to the treſpaſſing brother ſuppoſed to become refractory (to which 'tis annext, Matth. 18.) who is ſtill a perſon alſo; to which I will only add that in the beginning of that diſcourſe, Matth. 18. 11. there is another manifeſt example of a neuter word in a maſculine ſence, The Son of man came to ſave τὸ ἀπολωλὸς, that which was loſt, i.e. thoſe little ones, ver. 10. of whom God would not that one ſhould periſh, verſe 14.

Sect. 18. To this account of that firſt argument (ſufficient I conceive to prove that this interpretation hanging thus looſe from the Talmudical uſe of the word, is not in the rendring this text of the New Teſtament, neceſſary to be received) I ſhall yet farther add theſe two obſervations more, 1. That the Talmudical ſence cannot have place in the latter part of Chriſts ſpeech [ἔσται δεδεμένον ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς ſhall be bound in heaven] and therefore will be improbable in the former. For ſure the binding in heaven] is ſomewhat more than Gods interpretation or declaration of the lawfulneſs of any thing; and if the Church ſhould be thought unfit to have any kind of power, yet heaven is acknowledged capable of it; beſides the form and compoſure of the words will enforce, that if that pretended Talmudical ſence were admitted into both places, God declaring any thing to be lawful, or unlawful, muſt be conſequent to the Miniſters declaration here, which will be very unreaſonable, for though Gods Cenſures may by vertue of his Promiſe follow the Cenſures of the Church, yet Gods Laws (for ſuch are his declarations of what is law) ſure cannot, or if they do, this will be a great aſſurance that there is ſome power in the Church, when it is ſo backt by God.

Sect. 19. A ſecond argument to this purpoſe may be taken from the Analogy of Scripture, or comparing the two places in Matth. of binding and looſing, with that third in John of remitting and retaining; which I conceive is proved to belong to the ſame matter, whatſoever that ſhould prove to be, but then will not be ſo capable of the Talmudical interpretation, for ſure that will not be ſo clear from thoſe Writers alſo, that κρατεῖν to retain, hath that ſence among the Talmudiſts, which was impoſed upon δῆσαι, to bind, which for the preſent I ſhall take for granted, till ſome proof be offer'd to the contrary, and in that found the power of the Church, (ſuppoſing it were not deducible from S. Matthew,) and then by analogy of thoſe places in S. Matthew with this in S. John, apply it to thoſe places alſo.

Sect. 20. Now for the ſecond proof which is offer'd by the ſame hand againſt the received interpretation, the places in Greek Authors, where the word δῆσαι or binding is vouched to ſignifie forbidding only, though though I might juſtly ſay, firſt, that the producing of two places in the whole ſhole of Greek Authors, will not with any Logick infer the neceſſity of taking them in this ſence here; then ſecondly, that forbidding is much more than declaring, or interpreting a thing to be forbidden; that an act of power, and not only of doctrine, of a Magiſtrate, and not only of a Caſuiſt; and thirdly, that we are not wont to require the dictions of the New Teſtament, which have ſo much of the Old Teſtament Hebrew idiom in them, to be tryed by Attical heathen Greek Writers: yet ſhall I not now need to refuſe that tryal which is here offered. Two only places there are produced (or in the margent appointed to be conſulted with) to that purpoſe, Euſtathius and Didymus in Hom. Il. σ. ἐμοὶ δ' ἥσσων Ἄρης ἀλκτῆρα γενέσθαι, and Inſcription. Iſidis ap. Diod. Sic. l. 1. Theſe two places I have with all attention conſidered, and ſhall truly report what I have found in them.

Euſtathius brings ſeveral interpretations of theſe words in Hom. the firſt of which is, that δῆσαι may ſignifie κωλύσαι, ἐμοῦ δ' ἧσσων ὁ Ἀρὴς, i. e. ἔδησε καὶ ἐκώλυσε τὸ ἀλκτῆρα γενέσθαι, ὑγὲν ἀμύντορα τῷ Πατρόκλῳ, which that you may underſtand, you muſt know the occaſion of Homers ſpeech, it was this, Patroclus was ſlain, and Achilles knew not how to help him, or avenge his death, for which he hath very paſſionate ſorrow, even to wiſh he were dead himſelf, becauſe he could not avenge that death of his; this he thus expreſſes in Homers language; Sect. 21.

Ἔφθιτ', ἐμοῦ δ' ἥσσων Ἄρης ἀλκτῆρα γενέσθαι.

I would, or, O that I might preſently die, in that I was not able to avenge the death of my Companion; He died far from his Countrey, and Mars, or the Fate of War hath bound, or hindred, or reſtrained me from being avenger of his blood: where it muſt be obſerved, that Mars did not give any precept or interdict to Achilles not to avenge Patroclus, or declare that it was unlawful, but only that the fate of the War had not ſo far favour'd him, as that he could find any means to do it, which he calls binding or hindring him, and therefore Didymus, to whom we are referred, renders it ἐνεπόδισεν, hindred, and explains the whole matter by this paraphraſe: ὁ πόλεμος τὴν ἐμὴν ἀφελόμενός παντοπλίαν, ἔδησεν ἐμοὶ τὴν ἔξοδον, ὥστε ἀλκτῆρα μὴ γενέσθαι πατρόκλ. τ. ἐ. βοηθόν, The fight having deprived me of my Arms, would not ſuffer me to go out, and help Patroclus; and ſo it ſeems the forbidding, by which they render δῆσεν, is only that of hindring, or ſtopping, (which is a natural effect of the vulgar notion of the word, as it ſignifies binding, he that is bound being hindred or ſtopt from his courſe or action) not of prohibiting or interdicting. But then moreover you muſt conſider, that the ſame Euſtathius and Didymus obſerve in that laſt verſe many different lections, as for example, one eſpecially, inſtead of Ἄρης Mars in the Nominative caſe, ἀρῆς hurt, or miſchief in the Genitive, which reading they reject not, but accordingly explain the place, and render ἀρῆς ἀλκτῆρα, βλαβῆς καὶ κακώσεως ἀποτρεπτικὸν, damni averruncatorem, and ἐμοῦ δ' ἧσσων, ὅ ἐστιν ἐνεδέησε τῷ πατρόκλῳ, εἰς τὸ ἀρᾶς ἐκείνῳ ἀλκτῆρα γενέσθαι, Patroclus had need of me, to avert that miſchief from him; and this, ſaith Euſtathius, the antients thus paraphraſe, ἐμοῦ τὴν πρᾶξιν ἔδησεν Ἄρης, ἢ τὸ ἐξ ἐμοῦ βοηθείας ἐνεδέησεν, Mars wanted my action, or the help which might have come by me; and Ariſtarchus ſomewhat to the ſame purpoſe, ἐμοῦ ἐδέησεν εἰς τὸ ἀλεξιτῆρα γενέσθαι τῷ Ἄρει, he wanted me to avert the danger of the War; and agreeably Didymus ἀρῆς ἀλκτῆρα. τ. ἐ. ἀποτρεπτικὸν πολέμου, which different lection thus explained by them, takes off all colour, or pretence of affirming that binding ſignifies prohibiting, or interdicting in that place, but only ſtanding in need of, which is another ſence of the word δέω, and ſo ſtill 'tis apparent, that δῆσεν may ſignifie ſomewhat elſe in that place, and if it do ſignifie binding, and that be rendred κωλύσαι to forbid, that yet it muſt not be taken in that ſence, that forbidding ſignifies preceptive interdiction, eſpecially not the bare pronouncing a thing unlawful, the ſence which 'tis brought to prove, and which alone is againſt our pretenſions,) but only forbidding, as when the matter forbids, hindring, or reſtraining, or binding from a poſſibility of doing it, and juſt ſo the Hebr. מנע by which Philip de Aquin. renders אסר binding, ordinarily ſignifies to hinder.

As for the other place referr'd to, the Inſcription of Iſis, thus it lies in Diodor. Siculus, l. 1. p. 16. of Stephanus's Edition, ἐγώ εἰμι Ἶσις ἡ βασιλίσσα πάσης χώρας, ἡ παιδευθεῖσα ὑπὸ Ἑρμοῦ, καὶ ὅσα ἐγὼ δήσω, ἄδηλός ἐστι λῦσαι, I am Iſis the Queen of the whole Region, educated by, or under Mercury, and what ſoever I ſhall bind, no body can looſe. What advantage can be taken of theſe words thus lying (and not reſtrained, by either antecedents, or conſequents) toward the juſtifying or approving of the forementioned interpretation, or acception of the phraſe, for declaring, or pronouncing of the unlawfulneſs of a thing, I do not fully diſcern; for why may not the latter words paſs for an interpretation of the former, and ſo the ſence be, that ſhe being Queen of the whole region had all power in her hands, to do, or conſtitute (not only what laws, but) what puniſhments ſhe would, and then, that no body had power to undo, whatſoever ſhe thus did, to reſcind, or looſe, or abſolve, what ſhe ſo bound? In as wide a ſence as this, I could produce many places in Greek Authors, particularly a paſſage of Proclus out of Plato in his ſixth Diſcourſe about the eternity of the World; where to prove the World cannot be diſſolv'd by the Creator of it, and yet by none but the Creator, he expreſſes it often in theſe two words, δῆσαι and λῦσαι [ἄλυτον δ' ἐστὶ παντὶ πλὴν τῷ συνδήσαντι] meaning by binding, the compoſing the whole compages of the World, and by looſing the deſtroying, or, as we ſay, the diſſolution of it; this, I confeſs, is nothing to our ſence of the words (and as little to that other) and yet very near as much as the place now cited. Being left to gueſs what was the occaſion of producing this place to that other purpoſe, I ſhall think it poſſible, that it was occaſion'd by this, that in the margent Stephanus hath ſet ἐγὼ μοδίτησα, inſtead of ἐγὼ δήσω, which if it were conceived to be a Scholion, might be taken to be a teſtimony, that binding ſignifies making of Laws, as far as that Scholiaſts authority would reach. For the preſent, I ſhall ſuppoſe, that this is it, becauſe I cannot think of any other way to help this medium to infer the deſired concluſion in any degree, and yet make no queſtion but there was ſome; But then, if that be it, I muſt interpoſe, 1. that that in the margent, is not a Scholion, but an emendation, or various lection, as the mark prefixed ſignifies, and then ſeeing 'tis aſſured, that Diod. Sic. or the inſcription it ſelf, which he ſets down, had not both theſe readings, it will thence follow, that Sect. 22.

either it was truly ἐνομοθέτησα (and then there is no authority from thence for any ſignification of δήσω) or elſe that it was δήσω, and then there is no appearance of proof, that δήσω ſignifies there νομοθετῆν, and this is ſufficient to the matter in hand, which part ſoever of the dilemma be accepted.

Sect. 23. But having ſaid this, I ſhall ſuperadd ex abundanti my opinion of the importance of that inſcription, viz. that Iſis the Queen of that region, was taught or inſtructed by Mercury in the ἀποκεκρυμμένη φιλοσοφία, hidden Philoſophy, ἀμυδραὶ ἐμφάσεις καὶ διαφάσεις τῆς ἀληθείας, dark repreſentations of truth, αἰνιγματώδης σοφία, the enigmatical wiſdom which their theology was full of, mention'd by * Plut. de Iſ. & Oſir. and that no body was able to reveal, or expound her riddles or myſteries. The ground of this my interpretation is, an inſcription of Iſis's Temple mention'd by Plutarch, immediately upon his diſcourſe of that enigmatical theology in the place forementioned. Τὸ δ' ἐν Σάει τῆς Ἀθηνᾶς (ἣν καὶ Ἶσιν νομίζουσιν) ἔδος, ἐπιγραφὴν ἔχε τοιαύτην· ἐγώ εἰμι πᾶν τὸ γεγονὸς, καὶ ὂν, καὶ ἐσόμενον, καὶ τὸν ἐμὸν πέπλον οὐδεὶς πω θνητὸς ἀπεκάλυψεν. The Temple of Minerva (which they take for Iſis) in Saos had ſuch an inſcription (not literally this, but ſuch an one, or to this purpoſe) I am every thing that hath been, and that is, and that ſhall be, and my vail (or what I ſhall think fit to conceal) no mortal hath ever been able to diſcover. This ſeems to be a paraphraſe of that other inſcription in Diodorus, and then though the words differ (which the τοιαύτην [not the very ſame, but ſuch an one] intimates) yet the ſence of the one ſeems to be fully expreſt by the other, and then the concluſion will be this, that as λύειν in Diodorus, ſignifying no more than ἀποκαλύπτειν to reveal in Plutarch (as to looſe a riddle, a ſecret, is to reveal it, to which the Key of Knowledge in the Scripture may alſo refer,) belongs not at all to the matter in hand, of declaring a thing to be lawful, ſo the contrary δήσω is not applyable to that purpoſe of forbidding, or declaring a thing to be forbidden; and ſo much for that teſtimony alſo.

* Edit. Pariſ. p. 354. B.

Sect. 24. To all this which hath been ſaid the Reader may farther add, that Suidas, Heſychius, and Phavorinus have no other notion of δῆσαι than that of binding in bands, and therefore render it by δεσμεύω, and δεσμάω. Only in Heſychius in one place I find theſe words δεδεμένος, νόμος, δεσμός: which words ſtand in need of ſome emendation (as a very great part of that book doth) and may be thus ſet right, δεδεμένος νόμῳ, δέσμιος, a man bound by law, i.e. a priſoner; or δεδεμένος νόμῳ δέσμιος, bound, i. e. a priſoner of the law; or elſe this ſeems to be the deſign of them, that the word δεδεμένος is uſed in a ſence proportionable to that, wherein νόμος law, is δεσμὸς a band, as indeed every law is a band to all thoſe that are under it: but then you may obſerve, that this is a very diſtant ſence of the word from that which was cited from the Talmudiſts, (where the thing bound is ſaid to be forbidden,) for here δεδεμένος ſignifies bound, or commanded, and ſo this (beſide that it gives the Church a power from Chriſt, of commanding and making laws, to which in any probability the power of puniſhing would be conſequent) is little to our preſent diſquiſition.

Sect. 25. I cannot ſatisfie my ſelf, that I have vindicated my poſition ſufficiently, unleſs unto the conſideration of the former objections, I add alſo ſome few words in taking notice of what the Socinians have reſolved to this matter; which I ſhall tranſcribe out of Volkelius, de ver. cel. l. 6. c. 4. Where having expreſt the power of binding and looſing to be the power, Alios quidem reatu peccatorum quodammodo conſtringendi, alios verò ab illo abſolvendi, of binding ſome in ſome manner under the guilt of ſins, but of abſolving others, he reſolves this to conſiſt in this only, ut pro authoritate muneris, quod tanquam Chriſti legatus ſuſtinebat, aliis quidem nempe omnibus in Chriſtum credentibus, atque ex animo ei obtemperantibus, remiſſionem peccatorum, ipſius nomine offerret, aliis verò pœnas ſempiternas denunciaret. That by authority of that office which he ſuſtains as an Embaſſadour of Chriſt, he ſhould offer in his Name remiſſion of ſins to ſome, to wit, to all that believe in Chriſt, and cordially obey him, but denounce unto others eternal puniſhments. So that in effect the Power of binding and looſing ſhould be only the power of offering remiſſion of ſins to penitents, that is, preaching the Goſpel, and no more.

Sect. 26. This magiſterial affirmation having no tender or offer of proof annext to it, will need no long ſtay to conſider it; whatever is in it of poyſon, or danger, will eaſily be diſpell'd by an antidote, which the very ſame ſhop in another box will yield us, and that is another very diſtant interpretation of that power of binding and looſing, c. 15. of that book (how faln from the ſame pen of him that had before ſaid in eo tantum fuiſſe conſtitutam, ut remiſſionem offerret, &c. that it conſiſted only in the offering of remiſſion, &c. or by what means reconcileable with that ſence, I will not go about to conjecture) where affirming the power of exterminating impious Chriſtians, to be intruſted to the Church, he proves it, 1. from the words of St. Paul about the excommunicating the inceſtuous Corinthian; then from this, that Chriſt ſpeaking of the contumacious treſpaſſer refuſing to obey the Church, and thereupon commanding him to be accounted as an heathen, and a publican, in cœlo ratum eſſe dicit, quicquid Eccleſia in terris ligat, aut ſolvit, affirms that to be ratified in heaven, whatſoever it is the Church on earth binds or looſes, i.e. quoſcunque vel à fidelium commercio ſegregat, vel in eorum numerum reponit, whomſoever the Church ſeparates from the commerce of the faithful, or reſtores to the number of them: where I conceive it apparent, (unleſs ſome very cloſe ſophiſm lye hid under plain words) that binding ſignifies diſterminating, excommunicating, ſegregating from the commerce of the faithful, which I willingly imbrace, as the conceſſion of that man, and the ſence of his fellows, very fit to be confronted to his former negation, eſpecially being backt, as it is, with a conjecture of his (which I have long thought to be moſt probable) that St. Paul forbidding Timothy, to lay hands ſuddenly on any man, 1 Tim. 5. 22. leſt he partake of other mens ſins, refers to the reception of penitents that had been formerly excommunicate. For ſuch, he truly ſaith, were wont to be received into the Church again by impoſition of hands.

Sect. 27. Evidences of that cuſtom he brings from the narrations of Victor, about the Vandalick perſecution, l. 2. Qui nobis pœnitentiæ manus collaturi ſunt, & reconciliationis indulgentiam, obſtrictos peccato peccatorum vinculis ſoluturi, who confer on us the hands of penitence, and favour of reconciliation, looſing from the bands of ſins, thoſe which are bound by ſin. Where the pœnitentiæ manus the hands of penitence, and looſing from bands of ſin, belong to thoſe which were bound, but now are reconciled: and the like from the 5*th Canon of the Council of Carthage*, diſt. 50. Presbyteris ac Diaconis, ſi quando de gravi aliquâ culpâ convicti à miniſterio remoti fuiſſent, manus non imponerentur, ut pœnitentibus, vel aliis ex fidelium laicis. That Presbyters and Deacons when upon conviction of any

any grievous fault, they are removed from the Ministry, should not have imposition of hands as penitents, &c. and out of Fulgentius Ep. 1. de conjug. Illa egrota acceptâ manus impositione pœnitentiam secundum morem, quem habet Christiana religio, peregit, she performed her penance by receiving imposition of hands according to the manner observed in the Christian Religion; To these you may add that of Alcimus Ep. 24. Manus impositionem adhibete converso ab hæresi, They that were recover'd from heresie were to have imposition of hands, a sign of absolution; (as together with unction or Chrisme it is now used in the Romish Church, when any is reconciled to them.) Interdictâ nominis ejus in posterum, si ex corde convertitur, mentione, and his name no longer to be mention'd in the bed-role of the heretick's: and the author contra Prædestin. l. 3. Non ausi sunt Ecclesiarum Pontifices manum imponere p. 148, pœnitenti, nisi confessionem voluntariam ostendenti. The Bishops durst not impose hands on the penitent, unless he exprest a voluntary confession; and many the like. And in the Chron. of Jo. Gerundens. speaking of the Arrians Synod of Toledo, congregated by Leovigilaus, one of the Canons is, De Romanâ religione ad nostram Catholicam fidem venientes non debere baptizari, sed tantummodo per manus impositionem & communionis perceptionem ablui. They which came over to them from that which they counted heresie, should only have imposition of hands, &c. and not baptism a new, and many other passages there are of that kind. This is a very probable interpretation, made use of by Saint Cyprian and Pacianus among the antients, Paran. ad Pœnit. and by Mat. Galenus among later Writers; and may, by the way, farther be attested not only by the analogy between absolution, and healing diseases, of which imposition of hands was the Ceremony, but also by the context it self, where ver. 19. is set down the proceeding, by way of Censure, against a Presbyter, and the publick checking of sinners, ver. 20. a charge to do all χωρὶς προκρίματος ver. 21. without prejudging, and μηδὲν κατὰ πρόσκλισιν, nothing by favour or inclination, and then immediately follows, lay hands on no man suddenly, absolution very properly annext to censures, (and I conceive a caution, that by knowing mens sins, be be not brought to partake with them, but that he keep himself unpolluted, in the remainder of that verse, upon which the 23. verse may follow pertinently, though as in a parenthesis, that Timothy may drink a little wine for his health, and not incur that danger of partaking of other mens sins) and then ver. 24 a rule of direction for that whole matter, that as some mens sins are conspicuous before-hand, and so bring them per modum meriti præcedentis, by way of precedent merit, to censure, and in some the sins follow after that censure also, as when there is no reformation upon censure, (in which case there must be no absolution) so in like manner also mens good works (in case they do reform upon censure) are, or must be, manifest before absolution, (and therefore the antient Canons require the ἀναθοεργίας, good works or alms-deeds in the penitent to prepare for absolution) and those that are not so, (i. e. their not bringing forth such worthy fruits of repentance) cannot be concealed, and so by that means Timothy may discern who are fit to be absolved, who not, and so all the context clearly belongs to this matter. But this by the way.

Only having so pregnant an opportunity, I shall add what I conceive concerning the imposition of Sect. 28. hands, Heb. 6. 2. joyned there with the doctrine of Baptisms. The Apostle there had mention'd λόγον τῆς ἀρχῆς τοῦ Χριστοῦ, the discourse of the beginning of Christ, i. e. the first things that we read of in the Gospel, and he refers them, as I conceive, to four heads, 1. Repentance, or change from dead works; 2. Faith on God: These two he calls the Doctrine of Baptisms, and of the Imposition of hands, either by way of ἐπάνοδος, (of which I gave you * examples in the sacred style) and then the Doctrine of Baptisms will * Cap. 1. be appropriated to Faith on God, unto which men are baptized, and the doctrine of imposition of Sect. 10. hands to repentance, which is the preparatory to absolution, or else both of these together, Faith and Repentance, must be affirmed to be the doctrine both of Baptisms in the plural, and of imposition of hands too, and that both as it denotes confirmation Act. 15. 41. parallel to Christs blessing (of those which had been baptized before) with laying his hands on them, and absolution too, parallel to his laying hands on the sick, Luke 4. when he healed them, which is called loosing ἀπὸ δεσμῶν, from a band, Luke 13. 16. and all this will be proper, for both the Baptism of John, and of Christ required of them, that came to it, Repentance and Faith; and Confirmation being but a kind of sealing, and repetition of the covenant, and the promises made in baptism (without water, only by laying on of hands) was so too; and Absolution, though it peculiarly required Repentance, yet it included also Faith on God, and peculiarly that branch of it, the believing remission of sins upon repentance. Besides these, there follow two doctrines more, the Resurrection and Eternal judgment, which may be also reduced to these two heads, The Resurrection to that of Faith in Baptism, of which it was a peculiar part, (the trina immersio, the three dippings, so antient in the Church, referring distinctly to his rising the third day, and so perhaps the βαπτίζεσθαι ὑπὲρ νεκρῶν, 1 Cor. 15. i. e. in Saint Chrysostomes opinion, being baptized into the Faith, or belief, of that Article, intimated, or briefly exprest by νεκρὰ the Dead) and Everlasting judgement to that of Repentance from dead works, which if not repented from, i. e. forsaken, would bring that judgement upon men. But this by the way, and as a conjecture incident, and agreeable to the former.

I have thus far proceeded in this matter for the removing of prejudices, and vindicating our Sect. 29. position from two sorts of objectors, and might now think it reasonable to proceed to a third view, viz. of Erastus's structure, and all that he hath said of this matter; But this would require so intolerable a length, that if I should apply my self to it, I should both tire the most patient Reader, and leave the rest which I have to say on the other points at first proposed, to be overwhelmed or lost under the shade of so vast a πάρεργον. Some prudence therefore there will be need of for the compounding of this business, that I may neither too much despise, nor too largely prosecute this objector: And the most convenient middle betwixt these two extremities, I suppose, will be, 1. To bring you acquainted with the person. 2. To give you an account how he fell out, or on what occasion his quarrel to Excommunication began. 3. To view the place and the weapons, at which we are likely to meet, i. e. to follow him κατὰ πόδα so far, till we see directly what the state of the question is, wherein the point of the difference between us consists; and then to put off the combat, till the spectators are ready to call for it, and shall profess themselves armed with patience to sit it out.

Sect. 30. For the first of these, the view of the person, I shall say no more than that he was a Dr. of Physick who having fallen on an age when novelties were in fashion, (the Bishop of Geneva turn'd out, and a Government brought in, which within few years before was acknowledg'd so new, that Calvin was fain to write to the Protestants in Helvetia, that they would but signifie their approbation of it, and could not obtain that neither, though soon after, it undertook to be the only divine Model in the world since Christs time) thought it not unreasonable to step out of his profession, and offer to the world his novelty too; and having in his own profession expresst in some particulars, a zeal, which others of his faculty will affirm to have been without knowledge, (as when he speaks of the preparation of Stibium, or Crocus Metallorum, and the Antimonian receipts, he resolves that no man can salvâ conscientiâ, with a safe Conscience administer them, which yet every Physician knows now by dayly experience to be very useful and safe) it will not be matter of wonder, if he committed the like mistake in the business of Excommunication (a medicine more out of the proper rode of his studies) and conceived that a poysonous noxious recipe in the Church, (judging, it seems, at a first view, that they which were most wicked needed rather to be invited to the Church than driven from it) which the experience of all Christian Churches, and the advice of Christ himself, as a Physician of Souls, have concluded to be very harmless and medicinal. I shall say no more of his person, but that he doth not seem by his book to have considered much of Divinity, save only of this one head, and in order to that present Controversie. And then though I should not make it an Objection against an Author, that his book, and he were of divers Professions, and faculties, because he that is not a Divine by profession, may yet, if he have no calling, have spent his whole time on Divinity, and if he have undertaken another profession, may yet neglect that, that he may spend his time in this nobler faculty, or may have those excellent abilities, that he may attain to as great an height in two faculties, as others of meaner parts may do in one, yet, if it appear by any sure πρόληψις, that that Physician which writes in Divinity, hath studied little more Divinity than at that time a few months could help him to, and thinks this provision sufficient to furnish him, to write contrary to the whole judgment of the Church before him, I may as safely commend a Divine, that when he is sick first of a disease, then, through impatience of his Physician, shall by looking over some Physick-books take confidence to controll his Physician, and that he may do so the more authoritatively, cast off all the antient Masters of that faculty before him, or affirm that in them he finds nothing contrary to his opinion, when they that have read them all, know there is nothing more contrary. This I have said, because this Doctor makes his complaint of the opposition, and contempt, and affronts put upon him by those friends, to whom before the setting out he had communicated his book, objecting, saith he, nothing against him, but that he was besides his calling, which therefore with him, I confess, to be an unsufficient argument against his book, if it have no other to joyn with it, and I rather conceive, that it was a civility in his friends, which used it, than an entire, and sole objection, designed by them as a means to take him off from a confidence that he had done well, (by telling him, he was no competent judge whether he had or no, and advising him, that being a stranger in that faculty, he should not depend too much upon his own judgment) rather than an acknowledgment, that he had nothing else to object to him. And if civilities be apt to be thus mistaken, the truth is, a little plain dealing were a more friendly office. I shall therefore have no necessity of replying to his answers to those friends, that [Scrutamini Scripturas] and [Probate Spiritualia] [Search the Scriptures] and [Try the things that are Spiritual] were a sufficient commission to him for that attempt, especially if 'twere true which he adds, * that if he had had a stipend to read Divinity, this fact of his would then have nothing in it, in their opinion, alien from his office or duty. Where yet, I suppose, the office might be distinguish'd from the stipend, and though the money be not apt to inspire, as a χάρις or grace, yet sure the munus, or calling to the office may go for a χάρισμα, to which we may hope for the annexion of Gods blessing, more than to the ἀλλοτριεπισκοπία, (the medling in faculties, or studies that belong not to us) we have any promise to authorize us to expect.

In Praef.

* Si stipendio conductus theologica doceretur, nihil sec. ipsos ab officio, & munere in hac parte alieni facerem. Praef.

Sect. 31. 2. For the occasion of his quarrel against excommunication, I shall give you no other account, than what from himself I have received, (who, I suppose, was able to speak the bottom of the truth, and nothing else) and while I do so, shall desire the Reader to observe, how certain it is that the fabrick of the Church of England, I mean the antient structure, as it stands by Law, and the doctrines thereof, would never have provoked him to this enmity, if he had lived here under the best, or perhaps worst days of our Episcopacy, and then, as his Hippocrates in his excellent Tract περὶ ὕδατος, ἀέρων, καὶ τόπων, will tell us of a mighty influence, that the place, the air, or some such accidental circumstance may have upon the bodies first, and, through them, the minds of men, so will the Reader find, that his having chang'd the air, had been excellent effectual Physick for him, and, in all probability, might have made a shift to have changed his opinions also.

Sect. 32. The first thing, which, saith he, cast him on those considerations against Excommunication, was the unseasonableness of the time for the administring of such purging Physick. There was then, saith he, a great paucity of Protestant Professors, and the number of Papists extreamly over-topt them in those parts, and of the Protestants scarce the thirtieth part understood, and approved the doctrine; and therefore it must be in his opinion, a strange improper season for the setting up this course of severe rugged discipline, which would exclude from the Sacrament so many of the few Protestants, that it would both unpeople their assemblies, and necessarily cause a dangerous scissure in the multitude.

Sect. 33. The second thing was his having observ'd the unfitness of the persons, that were employ'd and presided in this matter, (their Ministers and Lay-Elders) fit, saith he, neither for age, nor experience, nor wit, nor judgment, nor manners, nor authority, to be esteem'd able to sustain so great an office with dignity.

Sect. 34. The third thing, (and that which advanced him in his conceit that he had faln upon the right sence of Scriptures produced, and pleaded for this discipline) was, the consideration of the state of the Common-wealth and Church among the Jews, God having said, Deut. 4. that that people had Laws and Statutes, so just and wise, that the institutions of no Nations, the sanctions of no Common-wealth, no Ordinances, though never so wisely thought on, could compare with them, and therefore that that Church must needs be best, and most wisely disposed, which came neareſt to the Jewish form. A consideration indeed, that, it seems, was of great weight with him; not observing that that comparison in Deut. was made only betwixt the Jewish, and other Heathen Nations of the World at that time; and only in relation to their present state, and not to the prejudice of Christs institutions after, when that Nation and Religion was destroyed; and that if that argument were of weight, (besides that he must be bound to prove his Model out of the Mosaical Law) he must be obliged also to bring back all the Sacrifices, Passeover, Circumcision, Ceremonies of the Jews into the Christian Church, and turn both the Lords Day, the Sacraments, and the very Religion of Christ, the νόμῳ πίστεως, the Law of Faith, out of it.

The fourth thing, saith he, and that which set him on writing was, an accident that he then observed, An English man which at that time had quitted this Kingdom on the distike of Ceremonies, and came to Geneva, and proposed his Theses there de adiaphoris & vestibus, of things indifferent, and of vestments; particularly, the Surplice, &c. he was, saith he, not permitted to maintain them publickly, ne Anglos offenderent, that they might not offend the English; This man therefore changing his purpose, chose a new Thesis, In quavis rectè institutâ Ecclesiâ hanc servari procurationem, in quâ ministri cum suo delecto ad eam rem Presbyterio jus teneant quosvis peccantes etiam Principes excommunicandi: That in every well-order'd Church, this government was to be observed, in which the Ministers with their Elderships chosen to that purpose should have power of Excommunicating all offenders, even Princes themselves: and this Thesis, saith he, he was permitted to maintain; I hope, he did not believe, that the English would be better pleased, or less offended with it, than with that other about Surplices, but only that 'twas a doctrine, wherein that Common-wealth of Geneva was more concern'd, and so did not so much consider, how the English might take it from them, as in the other, where they were less interested, they had leisure to do. That the doctrine of the Anglican Church, and constant practice of it, is utterly abhorrent from this dangerous, sacrilegious exces, I shall not be so wary or humble, as to think it necessary to demonstrate, but confess that he which saw that doctrine so confidently, and so early avow'd by the Disciplinarians, had a great temptation to write against their Excommunication, though no ground of assurance, that all which he should say against that subject, would therefore prove true, because that one doctrine of those which asserted it, was so far from being such. Master Hooker hath given a very good judgment of his enterprize; that Beza, and he, divided the truth betwixt them, neither of them saying all truth, nor all falshood, each of them παῦρα μὲν ἐσθλὰ μεμιγμένα, πολλὰ δὲ λυγρὰ, disguising, and allaying, and drowning a little of wholsome doctrine, with a great deal of the contrary. And let me say, to conclude this point, that both in the taking up his opinion, and in maintaining it, Erastus hath more to impute to Beza's and the Genevan's errours, and innovations, and excesses, and extravagancies, (which upon inquiry into the ancient Church records, he truly saith, he could not find avowed, or authorized) than to his own grounds, or arguments against Excommunication. Sect. 35.

The last motive, which, he confesses, perfected the work, and put him upon the press, was the contempts, and affronts of his friends, i. e. in effect, the opinions, and good advices of all men, that saw his Theses, and could by no means like them; but this hath been occasionly mentioned already, and only gives the Reader occasion to admire, and bewail the infelicity of passionate men, who cannot receive any benefit by their friends, are in the unluckiest condition of all men living, (beyond which no enemy can wish them a greater curse) sure to be the worse for that, which God meant us for the most inestimable blessing, I mean the ἀληθεύειν, καὶ ἀνυγιαίνειν, their telling us truth, and (out of desire of doing us good) admonishing us of our miscarriages, which he that cannot make any other use of, than to interpret those hugest obligations for affronts, those friendships for rudenesses, and therefore resolves to publish his conceits, because all his friends to whom he communicates them, advise him by all means to suppress them, may well be allowed to write a Volume against all kind of Excommunication, being already, it appears, so far from being able to bear such strong Physick, that the most private prudent, first, or second admonition of single persons, or ὑπὸ τῶν πλειόνων, the joynt act of a College of friends and Physicians do but make him more incurable. Sect. 36.

I come now to my third undertaking, i. e. to view his Theses of Excommunication, and follow him step by step, till we have sprang the point of the difficulty between us, and, I think, that part of the progress will sufficiently discover the weakness of his fabrick; at least how little appearance of advantage he hath against us, that are not for the Geneva-Presbytery, how well soever ad homines he may be thought to have disputed. Sect. 36.

His * first Thesis lays the ground of his discourse, and of his mistake. The word [Excommunication] he will have taken from 1 Cor. 10. which is false, and not endeavoured to be proved, and upon the back of that errour, another falsity, viz. that Communion is there call'd Corpus Christi, The body of Christ; all that is there said toward that matter, is, that the Wine is κοινωνία αἵματος, The Communication (not Communion) of the blood of Christ, the bestowing his blood upon us, a means or a pledge of making us partakers of that rich mercy, that blood that was shed for us. That that is the right rendring of κοινωνία, is undertaken in another discourse upon the Sacrament, and needs no further to be repeated here, the notion of the word Excommunication being most clear and uncontroverted, that it is the sequestring of an offender from the || Communion, i. e. the visible Society of Christians, without ever thinking to cut him off, but on the contrary desiring to engraff him the more firmly into the invisible, and then also again into the Church the visible (but mystical) body of Christ. And therefore, Sect. 37.

* Th. 1. Excommunicationis nomen videtur ex 1 Cor. 10. desumptum esse, atque emotionem significare à communione illâ, quâ ibidem corpus Christi nominatur.

|| Sanè nunc excommunicatio ab omnibus definitur exclusione à societate & communione fidelium. Ib.

For the distinction of that Communion in the * second Thesis, into internal and external, visible and invisible, we say that one only member of the distinction belongs to the point in hand according to our stating of it. (And if the adversary of Geneva did press the other, we do not defend him in it) viz. the external and visible Society of Believers, or Christian Professors, from which only we affirm any man to be cut off by the act of Excommunication, and if he that is so cut off from that, be also finally cut off from the other, this is but accidental, and very extrinsecal to that act, and distant from the Sect. 38.

* Th. 2. Est autem duplex fidelium Societas, interna sc. ac spiritualis, externa seu visibilis ac politica, the design and end of it, being the effect only of his sin, which, before he was excommunicated for it, is supposed to have concluded him under the wrath of God, and of his Contumacy, which will not permit this most fatherly punishment of the Church to work any good upon him; to which though it be consequent indeed, that this censure obtaining not the desired effect, shall tend to his greater condemnation; yet will this consequent no more be chargable on that censure, than on any other the methods of mercy or chastisement, by God used on purpose for his Reformation.

Sect. 39. In ‖ the third Thesis it is by us acknowledged true, that internal and external Society go not always together, and the consequents which Erastus builds on that, are true, and acknowledged in an unjust Excommunication, but these belong nothing at all to a just, nor consequently infer any thing against the institution, which giving rules that it may, and commands that it should be always exercised justly, may be permitted to suppose it is so; or if by errour or miscarriage it be not; it doth not exclude him from that inward Communion that was not before excluded, (supposing that he behave himself meekly and Christianly under that unjust censure) and if there be (as indeed there is) great difficulty to judge, whether the person thus to be excommunicated, be first excluded from the inward communion or no, yet will not this conclude the censures unlawful, because if he be not quite out before, this puts him not out (nor is occasion of doing so any more than chastisement from God, which may possibly work impatience and blasphemy in the person, but is not of necessity, or in any propriety of causation to do so) but rather is a means of keeping him in, of setting him upon his guard, of awaking or rescuing him from the danger of falling out of it, (and then abundans cautela non nocet, he that is awake already will be never the worse for calling) and withal of exercising some Christian vertues in him, which might possibly lye useless by him, if they were not thus employ'd, and call'd out to practice, ‖ Th. 3. Tantum verò inter utramque discrimen est, ut qui in alterutrâ continetur, non etiam comprehendatur in altera necessariò. Nam ut membrum Christi esse possit qui injustè ex visibili aliqua Ecclesia ejectus est, aut inter infidelcs latere habitaréve cogitur, ita qui in visibili cœtu numerantur non dicos etiam membra viva sancti Christi: ex quo sequitur discrepare res illas posse, qua uni nos conjungunt non alteri, & ab unâ nos abjungunt & non ab alterâ.

Sect. 40. To the * fourth Thesis we say that no man thinks, or according to our principles, hath any need to think, that any but God can joyn any to that internal Communion of Christ and the faithful, i. e. beget faith in any (nor consequently cut off any from it) unless ministerially, as ὑπηρέται and συνεργοὶ Χριστοῦ, workers under, and with Christ, and so only by power derived from him, we pretend to do what in the censures is done toward it.

* Th. 4. Membra quidem Christi efficimur, i. e. internæ spirituali Christi societati conjungimur per solam fidem quæ per charitatem est efficax, & eâdem hâc per solam infidelitatem excidimus, proinde non potest nos huic inferere, aut eâdem excludere, nisi qui fidem donare, eandemque nobis iterum auferre potest.

Sect. 41. To ‖ the fifth Thesis, we answer that there is a mistake, for we are made consortes externæ & visibilis Ecclesiæ, Partakers of the external and visible Church, not only by those three as they are the acts of the man who is so partaker, but to those three must be added a second notion of the third of these, which seems not here to be taken notice of, (though also the words are so set, that 'tis not excluded) and that is the act of the Church, first according to Christ's commission to the Apostles, in receiving them into the Church by Baptism, and, when for lapses, and returns into sin they are excommunicate, restoring them by absolution, and at all fit times allowing them the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, in charity supposing them (as long as they are in the Church) such members as ought not to be denyed that privilege, and if they be not unworthy, effectually sealing to them the benefits of Christianity. From whence 'tis clear that such the usurpatio Sacramentorum may be, (viz. if he receive the Sacrament of the Lords Supper that is * not baptized, or that is justly excommunicate) that 'twill be perfectly an usurpation, and not sufficient to give him right to be reckon'd inter membra externi fidelium cœtus, among the members of a visible Church.

‖ Th. 5 Externæ verò visibilisque Ecclesiæ consortes reddimur ejusdem fidei professione, ejusdemque doctrinæ approbatione, denique eorundem sacramentorum usurpatione; in quo tria hæc insunt, is tanisper dum ei insunt, inter membra externi fidelium cœtus computatur, etiamsi ad internum spiritus & mentis communionem non pertingat.

* Though sacramentorum usurpatio in proper speaking suppose Baptism, which is one of those Sacraments, yet Sacramentorum participatio, Thes. 6, signifying only receiving the Lords Supper, I have reason to suppose it may do so here, and therefore I put in this.

Sect. 42. Th. 6. ‖ in the first part their is need of a distinction: for the Confession of Faith, and approbation of Christian Doctrine may be, 1. either Cordial or Hypocritical. 2. Either Private or Publick. If it be Cordial, then 1. it makes me partaker of the inward Communion with Christ and his members, and supposes a man to be in that state, in which he that is, ought not to be Excommunicate, and so 'tis not ταύτης σκέψεως, it belongs not to this matter. If it be Hypocritical (as it will appear, if he that acknowledges Christ, and approves his Doctrine with his mouth, denyes it in his actions) then is it fit to bring the censure upon him, which he most hates and fears, to cast him out of the Church, which is only his disguise and vizard, or turn him out of that hypocritical confession of Christ, to display and lay open his hypocrisie, that he may be asham'd, and think good to reform, and to that end, to deny him the publick hearing of the Word, which it seems hath wrought so little good upon him, and to assure him that he shall not be accounted a Christian, unless his actions accord with his profession; All which you may mark is so far from deterring him from the cordial Profession, that 'tis the most probable means to invite him to it. So again for private confession and approbation (which belongs more to the internal communion again, than to the external) we drive no man from that by Excommunication, but onely from the publick performance of it in the Congregation (under which, and which only, the publick hearing of the Word read or preach'd is contained.) And by so doing we separate him from that visible Church on that charitable one purpose, that he may see how he hath abused that benefit, and timely learn to make better use of it, though again we do not invite him to that bare empty oral publick or private confession, or that oral approbation, which his hands, i. e. his actions confute, or that unprofitable hearing, which will only heap judgment on him; yet on the other side we are far from deterring him from the real publick confession, &c. but by thus dealing with him we shew him the necessity of it, and so by beating him out of his false holds, which will do him no good

good, drive (which is more than inviting,) him to the refuge or Sanctuary, the real confession, the effectual approbation, and profitable hearing. To which head I must add, that I much wonder why all this while in the number of the constitutives of external Communion, publick prayer is not mentioned (not so much as reductively, as here hearing of the Word is:) This ought to have been added, and then I shall add of it, that though that be a duty that men would be invited to, as vehemently as to any, yet 'tis lawful to exclude any from this benefit in publick, when that exclusion may be a means most probable to awake a lethargick sinner.

By this it appears how groundless the last part of the sixth Th. is, That excommunication is only excluding from the Sacrament; for 'tis also from prayer, and hearing, (viz. in publick) as well as from the Sacrament: when that is thought expedient to reform any. Thus Tertul. mentions exclusion à communicatione orationis, & conventus, & omnis sancti commercii, apol. c. 39. from partaking of Prayer and all sacred commerce, and generally the καθαίρεσις antiently was from all: though (the manner of receiving in penitents being first by admitting them to hearing, and then to partaking in the prayers, which were before those that are joyn'd with the Communion; and after, to those prayers also, and in time to the Communion it self) it was after thought fit, that some of the censures should not be total to the excluding from all, but only setting them inter audientes, or Catechumenos, which were not yet admitted to the Sacrament, of which only the practice which he sets himself against seems to be an imitation. What follows therefore in the conclusion of that Thesis, that, [quod aliæ pœnæ non pertinent ad substantiam excommunicationis certum est. 'Tis certain that other penalties belong not to the substance of excommunication] is very false, and proceeds from an ignorance, or willingness to deceive, as if the word Excommunication denoted only the keeping from the Sacrament of the Lords Supper (to which end, it now seems, it was, that the first Thesis was designed, and against whatsoever it is argumentative, 'twill not be against us) whereas it denotes the excision from all, or any degree of Communion in sacris, and is a generical word, of which there be different species according to the several kinds of holy things (the Word, the Prayers, the Sacrament) from which one may be excommunicate; And that of exclusion from the Sacrament is one degree of exclusion, and the exclusion from either or both of the other also, is an addition to that, never inflicted upon any but those to whom the Sacrament was denied. So far from truth is that which is added, that those other punishments possunt non excommunicatis infligi, may be inflicted upon those that are not excommunicate in his sence of excommunicatus, for one excluded from the Sacrament: for no man was denyed prayers and hearing that was admitted to the Sacrament, (nor is it rational that one should, for sure he that is thought worthy of the highest dignity and benefit in a Church, must be wronged, if he be denyed, and thought uncapable of the lowest) though the other part upon this reason be confest to be true, that these punishments of exclusion, from prayers and hearing, may sometimes excommunicatis non infligi, be not inflicted upon them that are excommunicate, as he that is thought unworthy the Priests office, may yet be allowed to be one of the Nethinim or door-keepers, as in the antient Church, he that was suspended from the sacerdotal function was yet suffer'd to communicate, ut Laicus, as a Laick. Sect. 43.

By which the answer is clear to the * next Thesis as far as concerns the interdictio templorum, exclusion out of the Church (and for the other two, that of the private commerce, & actus cujusvis liciti of doing any lawful act, we interpose not) i. e. from all the parts of the publick service, which that it was brought into the Church by the Pontificians, or that it is contra apertam Scripturam, against manifest Scripture, is certainly so very far from truth, that no man that hath read any part of antiquity, can doubt of this practice and usage, before thy tyranny of Popery is affirmed by any to have come into the world; and for the second, what that aperta Scriptura is, I shall not divine, but resolve that if it be that which is named in the end of the Thesis, 1 Cor. 14, there is nothing at all concluding from thence. The ver. that seems to be referred to (for we are left to divine) is v. 23. or 24. where the speaking in the Church, praying or prophesying, &c. in an unknown tongue, is by S. Paul proved to be improper, and not to tend to edification, because prophesying, i. e. explaining of Scripture, praying, singing of Psalms, &c. being designed for the use of the believers, and no others, are in any reason to be in a known tongue, that they may understand, and joyn in them. v. 16. the unknown tongues being designed, either only as a sign, v. 22. i. e. a miracle to convert unbelievers to the faith, when they see illiterate men all Jews speak all kinds of languages, or as a means of preaching to men of every countrey in their own language, from whence, saith the Apostle, 'tis consequent that if unknown tongues were used in a Congregation of believers, unlearned men that understand not those tongues, or unbelievers that have no reverence to the Congregation, and do not at all discern any miracle in their speaking with divers tongues, but look only upon the ridiculousness of the action, as of a gabbling of that which no man understands, will resolve that this is a direct madness thus to do. Whereas on the other side that of Prophesying, interpreting of the doctrine of Christ intelligibly, and the other parts of the Church Service in a known language, will be apt to convince, or instruct those unbelievers or ignorants; This, and no more but this, is the direct rational importance of those verses; wherein though there be mention of unbelievers coming in, yet that being only by way of supposition [If they come in, &c.] I might justly say, that that is no plain affirmation of Scripture, that heathens, & alii quilibet, any others that will, are not prohibited the hearing of Gods word, &c. For, 1. 'tis an old rule that suppositio non ponit, the supposing (If they do) doth not suppose they do, much less that lawfully they may: and 2. that text names ethnicks and ignorants, and belongs not at all to the alii quivis, any other that will, as that contains the impenitent Christians, which are the only persons, to which our Excommunication belongs; and of them the Apostle is far from affirming or supposing, that they might not be so excluded, and if they should by way of reduction be forced into that verse, the Apostles reasons would be spoiled, for they being supposeable to understand that unknown tongue (as they may do for all their impenitence) at least to know what belongs to the gift of tongues, and to what use they were designed, would not think them mad presently, that used it; which being said, I may further add, that those heathens coming into the Church, or the not prohibiting them to enter is a very distinct thing from the admission of impenitent Christians, when they are by Church censures prohibited, because the Apostle himself which prohibits Communion with the brother (that is, the Christian) which is a fornicator, doth yet not prohibit it with an heathen, or fornicator of this world; and the end of Excommunication being only on design of charity, to make the Christian offender by that means ashamed, and reformable, would be utterly cast away upon an heathen, who would rather be made obdurate by that means; and indeed 'twere ridiculous to turn out them who are not so forward to come in, and are not by St. Paul here supposed so, unless tanquam exploratores, to see, how Christians behave themselves there, and if they can find any such madness amongst them, as he there mentions, would be likely to charge it home upon them, though on the other side if they find such a regular frame, and beauty of all things there, they may possibly be convinced, and wrought on by that admirable order, and doctrine, as S. Aust. was by S. Amb. Sermon, though he came thither on a quite distant arrant. And so sure all this while this is a feeble text to be relyed on, as the only argument to conclude Apostolical Practice to be contrary to the excluding of any à Verbi Divini auditione, &c. from prayer, or from hearing the Word in publick, the place being quite extrinsecal to this matter, and saying nothing at all to it.

Sect. 45.

* Th 8. Ex dictis liquet excommunicationem nihil aliud esse, quàm publicam & solennem sacramentorum, præsertim cœnæ dominicæ (quam privatim Apostolus communionem (κοινωνίαν) appellat, ut de principio dictum fuit) interdictionem, præcunte seniorum cognitione: quo peccantes resipiscant rursusque ad sacramentorum perceptionem admittantur.

That which hath been said, sufficiently arms us against the concludency of that which * Th. 8. is inferr'd from the premises, and therefore there is no need of saying more to it; save only this, that in this Thesis there are some little mistakes committed, which I shall only name, 1. (that which is to the matter in hand, and on which his conclusion stands or falls, and had been mentioned, and is by us answered before in the 1 Th.) that κοινωνία 1 Cor. 10. signifies Communion, whereas, I say, it signifies indeed (from κοινωνέω communico) communicatio, and so belongs there (quite to another matter than that, to which it is here applied) only to the affirming the wine, &c. in the Sacrament to be the communication, or the making us partakers of the blood of Christ, not to our Communion one with another in sacris, which is the thing from which Excommunication cuts us off, as is noted by that definition of it, which Th. 1. is by the author produced, that 'tis exclusio à societate & communione fidelium, an exclusion from the society of believers. A second mistake (besides that which is consequent to the former, a new definition of it by only Sacramentorum interdictio, Interdiction of, or exclusion from the Sacraments, which should more unlimitedly have been Sacrorum, from holy things) that Sacramentorum is put in the plural number, which must needs be either not like a Divine, or not like a Protestant, for if it note Baptism as well as the Lords Supper, then 'tis not like a Divine, for no Divine would say that Excommunication is an Interdiction of Baptism, for till they are once baptized, they are out of the Church, are not capable of Excommunication, and when they are once baptized, though they were not excommunicate, they should be baptized no more. But if by that plural, he mean any other Sacraments besides these two, that is not like a Protestant, for such acknowledge no more. Having mention'd these two mistakes, I shall not add a third, that in this interdiction, the persons to whom this cognizance belongs, are not rightly named; because though it be true, that they are not, yet the men, against whom he wrote, were of that opinion, and I am a little perswaded, that if it had been an Episcopal audience, that should have had this cognizance, he had never written this book, nor been put upon those arts to evacuate the Church-censures. One thing only I may have leisure to commend in that Thesis, that he defines excommunication by publica & solennis interdictio, a publick solemn interdiction, & præeunte cognitione (I suppose he means legitimâ) with a legal cognizance preceding it; and shall add, that they quite deform the Primitive Institution, who deny the Sacrament to whole Congregations at once without any charge laid to all or any part of them, (save only that they are a mixt Congregation, wherein there are some evil men, which yet is not legally proved neither) and they also who deny it to particular men sufficiently catechised without any publick cognizance of their crime, or process of admonition 1st and 2d, or that design that exclusion to any other end, than ut peccantes resipiscant, the reducing sinners to repentance: and therefore no small petty trifle is a sufficient matter for this, but contumacious continuing in some scandalous sin after admonitions, from which when they return again by a sincere approved repentance, they are to be absolved.

Sect. 46.

‖ Th. 9. Hic jam oritur quæstio, utrum aliquis propter commissum peccatum aut vitam impurè actam, siquidem usurpare Sacramenta cum cæteris Christianis cupiat, ab eorundem usu, & perceptione sit removendus? quæstio de eo proponitur, qui eandem fidem nobiscum profitetur, Ecclesiæ per baptismum insertus est, atque in doctrinâ ab eadem non dissentit (ut in Th. 5. posuimus) sed in solâ vitâ & moribus errat. Hoc ergo quæritur utrum in S. literis vel mandatum vel exemplum aliquod extet, quo tales jubeantur aut doceantur à Sacramentis submoveri.

‖ Th. 9. Is the proposing of the question in the terms, wherein it is to be handled, wherein I shall only interpose for perspicuity sake, that the phrase [an removendus sit?] may have a little ambiguity in it, for perhaps it may (though less properly) be set to signifie this, Whether it be lawful to remove such an one? (for if it be but so, then he that pretends to write against excommunication, and to pretend it unlawful will be sufficiently concluded) and then I answer, that for any but for the Governour of the Church, to whom the cognizance of his ill life belongs, and who hath had a legal cognizance of it, and proceeded legally by the several degrees of Ecclesiastical process against him, it is not lawful; but for the Bishop, or Prefect, or lawful Governour succeeding to that power which Christ gave his Apostles with the Keys of the Kingdom of heaven, it is lawful, and by the Commission of [Ego dabo] and afterwards [Ego mitto] they are sufficiently authorized to do this, and upon this issue, if this be it, we will joyn most willingly. But then secondly, the (An sit removendus) may perhaps (and to that the words more incline) denote a necessity of doing it, and then the question will be, whether he must be removed? To which I then answer, that there lies not any such necessity on this, as arises from any pollution that will accrue to others, that communicate with him, if he be not prohibited any further, than the example of his sin, and the impunity may extend, and this the Fathers maintained against the Novatians. Nor thirdly, any necessity lying on the Minister that administers, for he having admonished (according to our Church Orders in our Liturgy) every such sinner to go home, and repent, and not to approach to that Table, is in charity to believe (being not able to search the heart) that he, that after that so comes, is a true penitent. Only if in prudence he think it unlikely, and therefore out of care to a poor mans soul, and for the preventing of the sin of unworthy receiving, he think fit to admonish him more privately, or particularly to that end, or to do any thing else, which in prudence may contribute to it, this is but his duty to an erring brother, and when that is done, any farther emergent guilt lies upon the receiver, and he is not (in case of the mans unworthy receiving) partaker of that sin.

All

All the necessity then that is in this matter, lies first upon the receiver himself, that he be wary, Sect. 47.
that he come not till he be prepared (and that belongs not to our present consideration) and upon the Bishops, or Governours of the Church, that, when charity to souls requires it of them, they fail not thus to proceed, that when mercy and friendly admonitions prevail not, they then take in severity, the Apostles rod, in the season for a rod, instead of his Spirit of mercy, and meekness, and to that end be watchful over the flock, that they fall not into such dangers and infections, by their neglect or mercifulness.

As for the qualifying of the persons, of whom this question is ask'd, I shall not differ with the Pro- Sect. 48.
poser, but resolve, as anon we shall shew, that he that is thus, may (and ought in the sence that I mention) be thus dealt with, and we shall joyn issue with him for the precept, and examples of Scripture commanding and teaching us to do so.

And having now, as I conceive, so easie a task before me, and such an army of seconds on my side Sect. 49.
(the consent and practice of the whole Christian World for 1500. years) against one single Combatant, walking in a melancholy posture by himself, (till after so many years, the concurrence of some accidental conceived conveniences have at last helpt him to some company,) and him again not very much used to the weapon, (I mean Divinity) which he hath undertaken to trust to, and beside having an advantage against him, which he did not foresee, we of this Church being not the men against whom his reasons were framed, and so not so likely to be prest by them, (the arguments designed against Beza, and his Presbyterians being utterly unconcludent against us) I must confess my self to be under a temptation to make use of the present advantage, and to prosecute this tryal to the uttermost; but I must in justice consider, what a chasme and rent it would make in this discourse, what an unwieldy bulk it would swell it to, and therefore must recover so much constancy of mind, as not to be thus passionately hurried out of my resolution, but leave it, till I have a louder call to it, being ready to give any man an account of what I now say in this matter.

It will be a more moderate excursion, and more reconcileable with my designed brevity, to mention Sect. 50.
one opinion, or pretension more in this matter, that of another Gentleman, who though he strive not to take Excommunication out of the Church any more than Baptism, but moreover acknowledges also, p. 369.
that it belongs to the future Pastors, as well as to the then present Apostles; yet having first resolved, p. 363.
that Ecclesia & civitas Christianorum are all one, he then concludes that the cognizance, and judg- p. 357.
ment of any fault, whether it be such or no, belongs to the Church in that notion of his, i. e. to p. 367.
the City or Common-wealth, (which with him also signifies the civil Magistrate, or, as he saith, judicem summum, the supreme Judge;) and that the power of binding and loosing (as that also of bapti- p. 369.
zing, which, saith he, is all one with it) is no farther in the Pastor than that he eject those out of the Church, whom the Church in his notion hath condemned; and receive into it, whom the Church judges worthy of absolution. I shall not labour to multiply differences, but at this time make my exceptions only to one part of this Scheme, viz. that the Church in his notion, i.e. the judex summus, the civil Magistrate hath the power of judging who are to be excommunicated, who absolved. The proofs that I can collect from him of that assertion, are only two: First, that Matth. 18. Christ bids, in case the trespasser hear not the two or three, (i.e. saith he, either deny the fact, or confessing it deny it to be a trespass) then dic Ecclesiæ, that it should be told the Church, [Quare autem Ecclesiæ, nisi ut ipsa p. 367.
judicet, an peccatum sit, necne? Why should the Church be told it, but that that may judge, whether that be a sin or no?] and if he obeyed not, then let him be to thee a publican, &c. Non dicit, Dic Apostolis, It is not, saith he, Tell the Apostles, to note that the sentence or judgment, whether it be a sin or no, belongs not to them, but to the Church; and consequently that this power was no more, than to bind those whom the Church had before judged impenitent. His second argument is from the practice and words of Saint Paul, who asks the Corinthians, [Do you not judge them that are within?] yet himself pronounces the p. 368.
fornicator excommunicate. To the former of these, I shall answer only this one thing, that there are other reasons very prompt and pertinent, why the matter should be told the Church, though the Church be taken in a notion wherein it is not supposed to judge of it: as either, 1. the [densare inculcationibus] in Tertullians phrase, the fortifying the former succesless reprehensions with this addition of authority from the number, that as the two or three might be more likely to work upon the offender, than the injur'd person alone, so now the πλείονες or the ἐκκλησία, the many, or the Church in the looset notion of it, for any assembly or meeting of many Christians together, (supposing that it do not signifie the Governours of the Church, as the Antients yet say it doth, and is far more probable, and asserted on stronger grounds, than that it should signifie the Civitas or summus judex) might probably be more effectual; or 2. the [pudefacere coram multis] formerly cited out of the Rabbins, the making the offender ashamed, when his fact is thus publish'd, and to do that is by us acknowledged the end of the admonitions, and censures; or 3. if there be need, the using the multitude, as a cloud of witnesses to convince him of the fact, or sinfulness of it, which the Text refers to before, (that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established) and in all reason may be a commodious sence here also, this third being but the ascending to an higher, and more probable convincing course, when the former had miscarried. Either of these three, much more all together, will be sufficient ground of Telling it to the Church, and so from thence there is no necessity to conclude that the judgment is the act of the Church, or Civil Magistrate in that place. And indeed it will be hard to suppose that possible at that time, when 'tis clear the Civil Magistrate was not Christian, and therefore unfit not only for the title of the Church, but much more to be appealed to as the Judge by Christians, who 'tis certain, are bound by Christ to use all other means possible (and telling it to the Church in our notion is one of those possibles) to get satisfaction for trespasses, before they proceed to any Heathen tribunal, to implead their fellow-Christian there. Nor will it, I conceive, be reasonable to reply, that Christ's speech belongs to after-times, when the Magistrate should be Christian; For then 1. he must acknowledge that till then, it was to be in the Church in our notion, and consequently that the Ecclesiastical Governours were the Judge at that time, and then by his own doctrine (that data est potestas ligandi, &c. futuris pastoribus eodem modo quo præsentibus Apostolis) it will still belong to the Ecclesiastical Superiour. And 2. though it may very justly be extended to that future state, (as what p. 363.

was ſaid to the Apoſtles was not perſonal, but belonged to their ſucceſſors alſo) yet there will be no probable argument that the Apoſtles then preſent ſhould be themſelves excluded. For, beſides that this muſt lie on him to prove, if he will aſſert it againſt all Antiquity, it will alſo be a little unreaſonable to affirm; for that were for our Saviour, to give all the power, and direct all the ſpeech to the Succeſſors, not to the Apoſtles, as a Prophecy only, or a prediction, no Evangelical inſtating on theſe to whom he ſpake. This I ſuppoſe a ſufficient anſwer to this proof, without proceeding to any deeper ſearch or examination of that which in the argument is taken for granted, viz. that the Church ſignifies the Summus judex, which yet is as far from being formerly convincingly inferred, as it is from the ſound of the words, or the notion wherein all the antient Church have uniformly taken it, (which will, I hope, be conſiderable in this matter) for that Chriſt did not take upon him to be a Judge, or introduce any change in civil Government, as it is by us acknowledged moſt true, ſo will it not belong to this of binding, &c. which is but a ſpiritual, not civil puniſhment, only a denying them that, which Chriſt brought into the World, and gave thoſe Meſſengers of his the ſole power of diſpoſing it, and indow'd them with power from on high, particularly for the exerciſe of it. As for the ſecond argument 'tis certainly a miſtake, if it be thought to conclude that the Apoſtle did but pronounce the judgment of the Church in that matter of the inceſtuous, or that the judgment of the civil ſtate was preparative to his. For ſure the Apoſtle had, (before the uſing of thoſe words of [Do not you judge them that are within?] in the end of that Chapt.) paſt his ſentence definitive on that inceſtuous in the beginning of it, ver. 3. For I have already (not ego autem, but ἐγὼ μὲν γὰρ) as abſent in body, but preſent in ſpirit, judg'd him that hath thus done this thing ἤδη κέκρικα τὸν οὕτω κατεργασάμενον, I have judg'd this evil doer: Judg'd, I ſay, and what is the ſentence? Why, In the Name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, you and my ſpirit being met together (the Apoſtle and his Presbytery; or he in the face of the Church) with the power of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, to deliver ſuch an one to Satan, &c. And this at a time, when 'tis clear, the Church had not paſs'd ſentence on him, for Verſe 2. They were puffed up, as he complains, and through an opinion of their own deeper wiſdom (a leaven, verſe 6. i. e. a doctrine either of the Heathen Philoſophers, or of the Gnoſticks among them) took it for an indifferent thing, and did not mourn for him that had done it. The ceremony uſed by the Church, when any was to be excommunicate, and notes that they ſhould have ſo joyn'd together in mourning, in complaining to the Apoſtle, and prayer to Chriſt, that this cenſure might paſs on ſuch an one, but that they did not do it, nay, it ſeems, proceeded not ſo far as to fraternal correption, which was infallibly their duty toward him. As for the words cited, [Nonne vos judicatis?] they come in on another incidental occaſion (not directly to this firſt matter) to make the diſtinction betwixt the dealing with the Chriſtian and heathen fornicators; the Apoſtle reſtraining his preſcription of not converſing with fornicators, verſe 9. to the Chriſtian fornicator, whom, ſaith he, being within the Church, 'tis reaſonable to conclude within the Churches cenſures, ἐχὶ τοὺς ἔσω ὑμεῖς κρίνετε; Do you not judge them that are within? not you emphatically, or in oppoſition to the Apoſtle, but you κοινῶς as a general title of Chriſtians, who uſe not to judge any but Chriſtians, all other being left to God's judgment, the Church having nothing to do with them. It is clear enough, that the context looketh wholly that way, and conſequently there will be little reaſon to extend theſe words any farther than this, that the Church judgeth Chriſtians, not Heathens; and the Church in the notion only wherein 'tis oppoſed to God, not in which 'tis oppoſed to Saint Paul, but in which in any reaſon it includes the Apoſtle or Governour of it; For ſure he may judge them that are ἔσω, within the Church, (for ſo he doth, ver. 3. and no part of the context of that Chapt. ſeems to ſay any thing to the contrary) though them that are without he cannot; which is the only thing the Apoſtle had in hand to ſay at that time.

1 Cor. 5. 12.

Having briefly anſwered the reaſons, I ſhall by way of compounding the Controverſie with this Gentleman, moſt willingly acknowledge, that ſomewhat the Church in his notion, or more clearly the ſupreme Magiſtrate, being ſuppoſed Chriſtian, may have to do in this buſineſs of Cenſures, precedaneous to the judgment of the Apoſtle, or before the Paſtor or Eccleſiaſtical Governour proceed to them. As 1. in the chooſing or nominating him to that office: 2. in the ſetting of rules, or Laws by which he ought to proceed in hearing or judging: No queſtion, this may, and in Chriſtian Common-wealths very reaſonably ought to belong to the civil Magiſtrate; and truly this diſcourſe doth not pretend to, or deſire any unlimited, or arbitrary power in the Biſhop, but only that, the rules being prudently ſet by thoſe to whom the power of making Laws belongs in every Common-wealth, he ſhould have the cognizance in ſuch cauſes, as regularly belong to his audience, and according to that rule, and not otherwiſe, give ſentence on the offender; and that only thus far, that he ſhall be turn'd out of Chriſtian ſociety, or received into it again: (which, beſide that this is, and hath always been taken for an inſtitution of Chriſts, which 'tis reaſonable we ſhould obey, and not diſpute, is alſo in it ſelf ſimply conſidered, far from any degree of unreaſonable, no man in ordinary reaſon being more fit to judge who is fit to enjoy the privileges of the Church, who likely to be reformed by being deprived of them, than he that hath ſtudied that great skill of winning ſouls, and is intruſted by Chriſt with the charge of them.) Again 3. it will be granted that the Church in the ordinary notion, as it ſignifies the whole diffuſive Chriſtian Society in any place, may ſo far be intereſſed in this matter, as that theſe only ſhall be liable to theſe Cenſures, who have offended others by their notorious ſins, and are by the Proxyes, as it were of thoſe others, I mean, by their choſen officers, or by the like publick fame, the voice again and interpreter of their ſence, delated, or complain'd of to the Governours of the Church, as thoſe that have wrong'd the Church, and defamed that Chriſtian Profeſſion, to which they had given up their names; and this is a kind of judging (in large or looſe ſpeaking, as to be infamous offenders ſignifies to be conceiv'd and judg'd ſuch by the community among whom they live, for otherwiſe they are not infamous) but yet in ſtrict propriety, is only a preparative to the ſentence of the Judge, and an accuſing or impleading rather, and is not, I ſuppoſe, the thing for which this Author doth pretend, or if it were, would not to us be matter of contention with him.

The truth is, the power of binding, &c. which we contend for, as the office more than privilege of Biſhops, (in the careful exerciſe of which they miniſter moſt charitably to the good of the ſouls intruſted to them) is another manner of thing, than what this Gentleman ſeems to have conceived it (both here, here, and eſpecially, when of it he concludes, Unuſquiſque ſi mentis compos ſit obediet in omnibus ſimpliciter ei, cujus arbitrio credit ſe ſalvandum aut damnandum eſſe.) God knows they pretend to no ſuch arbitrium in the ſaving or damning of any man; It is only an engine of Chriſts invention to make a battery and an impreſſion on the obdurate ſinner, to win him to himſelf to * bleſs, not to triumph over him; (which very thing he hath in one place excellently expreſt, ‖ The end of this diſcipline, ſaith he, is by depriving men for a time of the favour and ſpiritual priviledges of the Church, to humble them to ſalvation,) much leſs to invade any part of civil Judicature, or looſen the bands thereof by theſe ſpiritual pretences, but to leave the Government of the World juſt in the poſture, that it was before Chriſts coming, or as it would be ſuppoſed to be, if he had never left any Keys in his Church. And therefore when in an Annotation affixt to his laſt Edition he was pleaſed to extend his obſervation of the * Doctrines that might diſturb Government, not only to that power which many attribute to the Pope of Rome in other mens dominions, and to the liberty uſurpt by the cives infimi, under pretence of Religion, but alſo to that which alicubi extra Eccleſiam Romanam Epiſcopi in civitate ſuâ ſibi poſtulant, I muſt hope that it was a miſtake, or which I rather think (being perſwaded of the uprightneſs of his affections to our eſtabliſh'd Government) that his [alicubi] did not in any wiſe refer (as I was apt to fear it did) to the conſtitution of Epiſcopacy in this native Kingdom of his and mine. For that this, ſince it departed from the Roman Church, hath been perfectly free from any degree of that guilt, is that of which we are ſo far perſwaded that we neither fear, nor deprecate any Hiſtorians inſtance, nor can imagine what one particle of the Doctrine, or conſtitution of our Church there is, on which a rational man can by any conſequence build ſuch a ‖ charge; Of which nothing can make Us capable, but the leaving the [non] out of it; and that makes me a little confident, that either [Epiſcopi] in that place ſignifies not in the known vulgar Chriſtian ſence, or that the (alicubi) lookt not on this Kingdom, or Church of ours, (as it hath long ſtood eſtabliſht by Law) which moſt chearfully acknowledges the truth of his many other obſervations (particularly that of Obedience due to the Moſes's, not Aarons chair, of Abiathar the High-Prieſt being no way exempt from the commands of Solomon, of his three axioms alſo concerning Excommunication, that neither the Common-wealth, nor the ſupreme Magiſtrate, nor all the perſons in any Common-wealth can be excommunicate) and reſolves that no man ſhall ever deprive her of this glorying, that ſhe is pure from the bloud of all men, hath entertain'd no one principle, or doctrine in any degree incompetible with the civil power, or peace in the utmoſt extent, in which the moſt loyal Author hath deſign'd to eſtabliſh it. And if it muſt be Arminianiſm (as one hath lately confuted it under that title) to teach * that the Eccleſiaſtical power is ſubjected to the Civil Magiſtrate, who in all cauſes over all perſons is acknowledged by us ſupreme under Chriſt, we muſt be content to lie down under that envy, and not excuſe or renounce that piece of Loyal Arminianiſm.

I have thus far proceeded in this matter for the removing of prejudices, and vindicating our propoſition from three ſorts of Objecters: 'tis now time to advance a little toward the poſitive aſſertive part, and to that end (the knowledge of looſing depending wholly from the conſideration of binding) I ſhall in the firſt place examine what images of binding we have in the Scripture, and thoſe we ſhall refer to two heads: firſt, thoſe that belong to the power, and practice Apoſtolical, (in the time and perſons of the Apoſtles;) ſecondly, thoſe that after the Apoſtles perſons (and ever ſince) were to continue in the Church, which we ſhall call Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline (as diſtant from Apoſtolical) exerciſed (the one, as the other) upon offenders either publick and ſcandalous, or whoſe crimes otherwiſe came unto their cognizance, and conſiſting either in ſeparating and removing to ſome diſtance, or in caſting them totally out of the Church, or Congregation of viſible Profeſſors here on earth; anſwerable unto which [looſing] muſt conſequently be a delivering from thoſe cenſures, the abſolving of him, who was formerly ſeparated, or excommunicated, reſtoring him to the viſible Church, or any part thereof (to the privileges of a Chriſtian, and the comforts of the Word, and Services, and Sacraments) who was before legally caſt out of it, and deprived of them.

For the underſtanding of which, and ſpecially of the former, the Apoſtolical power and practice (or as it was diſcernible among the Apoſtles) it will not be amiſs to do theſe three things: 1. To give you a view of the ſeveral ſorts of Excommunication among the Jews, to which ſome phraſes in the New Teſtament refer: (becauſe I ſee there is ſome controverſie raiſed concerning them.) 2. To mention ſome of thoſe places in the New Teſtament, which ſeem to refer to theſe; And then 3. to obſerve the phraſes in the New Teſtament, which are more purely Chriſtian, i. e. which more diſtinctly and peculiarly reſpect the uſe of theſe Cenſures among Chriſtians.

For the firſt, I am ſure, 'twill be no news to ſay that there were three degrees of Excommunication among the Jews; the firſt called נדוי ἀφόρισμὸς remotion or ſeparation; the ſecond, חרם ἀνάθημα Execration, a more ſolemn Excommunication (with curſes out of Moſes Law and execrations added to it, a δέησις of which we have Acts 8. 20.) inflicted on him who after the נדוי firſt for 30. days, and then being allowed 30. days more (which is doubling of the נדוי) ſtill continued in that contumacy, for then, ſay the Jews מחר ימין אותו, they anathematize him without defining any limited time, as before in Niddui they did. The third is שמתא a kind of Proſcription and delivering to deſolation and deſtruction; or to the coming of the Lord in judgment againſt him, noted by μαρὰν ἀθὰ (added to the anathema) μαρὰν in the Oriental tongues ſignifying Dominus, (whence in Etruria the Kings are called Murani, ſaith Servius in Æn. 12. and the Syrians now Maranita, becauſe they call Chriſt מראנו our Lord, Agreeable to which it is that in Epiphanius, GOD is by the Gazari call'd Marnas, and by the Cretians their Virgins Μαρναὶ, i.e. κυρίαι Ladies) And ſo among the Spaniards the form hath been uſed, Sit anathema Marano, & excommunicatus, or מחרמא מן רחא אלרב Let him be excommunicate from the hope of the Lord: (and he that loves not the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ſignifying him that was tainted with the leaven of the Gnoſticks, and ſo would not confeſs Chriſt in the time of perſecution, and ſo had not that love of Chriſt that caſts out fear, it is very reaſonable that this cenſure ſhould be inflicted on him.) Of theſe three ſpecies thus ſet down ἐν τύπῳ, I ſhould not add much more, but that again I ſee two things reſolved on by a fore-mentioned learned Author, contrary to what hath been generally received in this matter, and the latter of them apt, if believed, to diveſt the Church of all kind of diſcipline, even of ſuch as was inſtituted on no other deſign, but to bring ſinners to heaven, and which we deſire ſhould be uſed only to that end. They are theſe, 1. That there are but two ſpecies of Excommunication among the Jews, Niddui, and Cherem, and that Schammatha is all one with Niddui; 2. That theſe puniſhments among the Jews belonged not to Excluſion from ſacred, but only from civil ſociety.

Sect. 53. For the firſt of theſe, that which I find produced to diſprove thoſe three ſpecies, is, 1. The promiſcuous uſe of Niddui and Schammatha among the Talmudical writings; ſecondly, the derivation of Schammatha from שמת, which among them ſignifies no more than to ſeparate and to abdicate; and thirdly, that Elias Levita, and David de Pomis, which are for theſe three ſpecies, were not Lawyers but Grammarians, and ſo did oſcitanter negligently and drowſily make three ſpecies of Excommunication, when they ſhould have made but two. To all which I anſwer, that thoſe learned men which maintain the three ſpecies may very well do it, for ought theſe objections enforce to the contrary. For it will not be neceſſary for us to affirm that the Talmudiſts ſhould uſe theſe ſeveral words conſtantly according to their diſtinct, proper, peculiar, critical importance; there is nothing more ordinary than for words that are uſed in foro to loſe their native proper ſignifications, and to be uſed κοινῶς for ſomewhat elſe of affinity, and near ſignification with them, and therefore it will be worth obſerving, that as Schammatha in the Talmud is ſometimes taken only for ſeparation (which is the reaſon that they which are againſt the three ſpecies make Schammatha to be all one with Niddui, and ſo ſet down Niddui and Cherem for the two:) So in other places Niddui is ſet to denote Schammatha as a higher degree than Cherem, as will appear (to any that cannot otherwiſe paſs judgment on it) by the p. 2467. places which Buxtorf hath produced in his Rabbinical Lexicon, which ſhew clearly that Schammatha is a heavier degree of Excommunication, and yet that Niddui is by them put for Schammatha, which indeed will be a proof that Niddui and Schammatha are uſed promiſcuouſly, & ſine diſcrimine, among thoſe Writers, but not at all, that there are but two degrees or ſpecies, Niddui and Cherem, but clearly the contrary, that Cherem is a middle ſpecies, beyond which there is Schammatha (which they ſometimes improperly call Niddui) as well as below it Niddui, which they ſometimes call Schammatha; and therefore Jo. Coch which is cited to prove that Niddui and Schammatha are all one, ſaith withal, that נרת and שמת, non tantùm de leviori ſed & de graviori indifferenter uſurpantur, Exc. Gem. San. p. 146. both uſed for the greater, as well as both for the lighter Excommunication. To which I ſhall add, that the Hebrew writers are ſo far from ſpeaking conſtantly, and exactly, and critically in this matter, that they ſometimes put Cherem, or anathema loweſt, and add Schammatha to that, and then ſet Niddui as the laſt of the three, as in Jelammedenu ſect. וישב ſpeaking of the Samaritans, the ſpecies of Excommunication are thus enumerated, ומחרימין ומשמתין ומנדין, and they anathematized, and ſchammatized and excommunicated him, by which it will appear, how promiſcuouſly thoſe words have been uſed among Hebrew Writers, (to which purpoſe may be again remembred, what was even now produced of the phraſe in Spain, Sit anathema Murano, & excommunicatus, Excommunicatus after the higheſt anathema) but it will not be a proof of any validity, againſt the three ſpecies of Excommunication, or the order or difference of them, when they do ſpeak exactly.

Sect. 54. For the ſecond proof taken from the derivation of Schammatha from שמת, which, ſaith he, ſignifies no more than to ſeparate or abdicate, I deſire this may be noted, that there is no ſuch antient Hebrew word as שמת but only of later uſe among the Rabbins, and Talmudiſts, which to me is an argument convincing that that verb may come from Schammatha, and not Schammatha from that verb; and therefore Buxtorf, when he meets with it, renders it Schammathizare, as a verbal from that noun, not willing to affix any other Interpretation to it, but this, that ſo he might leave it to ſignifie in the ſame latitude (as a verb) that belongs to Schammatha, as a ſubſtantive, i. e. ſometimes to be taken properly and ſtrictly to denote the third ſpecies, ſometimes improperly, to be all one with Niddui, or the firſt ſpecies.

Sect. 55. For the confirming of what I now ſay, I ſhall premiſe what I ſuppoſe will be eaſily granted me, that every compound or derivative Hebrew word, is to be reduced to ſome original Hebrew root or roots, from which it is derived, or of which compounded; conſequently, that the ſame muſt be reſolved of שמתא which that it is not a derivative from שמת I conceive is ſufficiently evinc'd, becauſe שמת is no primitive Hebrew word to be found in the Bible, or other authentick Hebrew writing (which he that will not truſt his own obſervation, but ſurvey Schindler and Buxtorf, will acknowledge with me) but only among the Rabbins and Talmudiſts, and may rather be thought to come from שמתא than Schammatha from that; this is not my conjecture, but the direct words of the learned Buxtorf in his inſtitution of Hebrew Epiſtles, p. 58. in theſe words, Talmudici ex nomine שמתא verbum faciunt שמת proſcribere, proſcriptionis pœnam in aliquem ferre, the Talmudiſts from the noun Schammatha make the verb Schammeth to proſcribe, &c. and though Buxtorf in his Rabbinical Lexicon place the verb before the noun, yet is that no argument of diſagreement between theſe two Writings, but is only cauſed by a care of obſerving his wonted literal method of ſetting the verb of three letters before the noun of one letter more.

Sect. 56. If it be now demanded of me from whence then the noun comes (ſeeing I make the verb come from that,) I anſwer that learned Jews have given it ſeveral originations, ſome bringing it from שם אתא Dominus venit, the Lord comes, making it all one with μαραν ἀθα, 1 Cor. 16. 22. (but the dageſh in מ makes me that I cannot conſent to that Etymology;) others from שם מיתא ibi mors, there is death; others from שממה תהא deſolatio erit, there ſhall be deſolation. Of theſe two latter I know not which to chuſe, 1. having little objection againſt either of them, and 2. finding them both avowed in the Gemara Moed Katon, in theſe words, what is Schammatha? Rab anſwered שם מיתה there is death, and Samuel ſaid, שממה תהא there ſhall be deſolation, &c. and 3. finding the ſence of both thoſe originations to come to the ſame purpoſe of death, or deſolation, or deſtruction, noting that kind of offender to be by that cenſure given up to divine vengeance, which is generally the notion of that third degree of Excommunication, which makes it to be taken for the ſame with Maranatha in the Apoſtle, that God comes as a judge or avenger to ſuch an one. For let me add to this matter this one thing, that this third degree of cenſure among the Jews at Chriſts time was proper to him, that under Moses Law had deserved death, but by reason that the power of capital punishments was taken from the Jews, could not by them be so punished, and therefore was by this way thus delivered up to Gods hands, to inflict vengeance upon him, which they say did very frequently befall them in a remarkable manner; and S. Augustins observation is to this purpose, quæst. super Deut. l. 5. c. 38. Hoc nunc agit in Ecclesiâ excommunicatio, quod agebat tunc interfectio, Excommunication doth the same among Christians, that killing did among the Jews. As for the third proof of the objection, taken from the lessening of the authority of Elias Levita, and David de Pomis, it will be sufficient to say, 1. That to make that argumentative, it ought to have been (but is not) proved, that others which have call'd the three species in question, are of greater authority than these; 2. That Grammarians (if they be such indeed, as those have been allowed that reputation (are * Criticks also, and so as fit to be hearkned unto in such a matter of antient custom among the Jews, as if they had been Lawyers, they would have been; more, I am sure, than any other Lawyers, which had not been so good Grammarians; and yet that any Jewish Lawyer hath avowed the contrary opinion is not, that I know of, as yet pretended. And 3. For the negligence or oscitancie of these Grammarians, that hath not with any proof or confirmation been laid to their charge, and if it were, 'tis as possible that Jewish Lawyers might have been guilty of it as they, nay it were more reasonable to accuse them of oscitancy, that make but two, and them of double diligence that have discerned one species more than they. To this Topick ab authoritate, I shall add only, that Aloysius (whom the Reader is by this Gentleman advised to turn to Sched. sacro-prof. l. 7. c. 10.) doth affirm in these direct words, Sunt apud Hebræos plures excommunicationis gradus, Niddui, Cherem, Sematha, there are several degrees of excommunication among the Hebrews, those three by name, though he enlarge not to explain the third, as he doth these two former: and so much for the first particular.

Moſes

* Γραμματικῆς τέχνης μέλη· Τεχνικὴ, Ἐξηγητικὴ, Κριτικὴ. Mosc.

Now for the second thing, that these species of excommunication among the Jews were only to exclude from civil society, and had nothing to do with sacred, I shall venture it to the judgment of intelligent indifferent men, who shall but examine what they meet with on this subject, if it be but at second hand in * Buxtorf, &c. out of the Hebrew Writers. It is his observation of Niddui the lowest species, that it is remotio ab aliorum congressu tàm sacro, quam politico, & domestico, ad 4 passus, separation not only from civil commerce, but from sacred also. Now that which I conceive hath caused this mistake in this first kind (and from thence perhaps without any new cause extended it to the rest) is that such an one that was separated by Niddui, was allowed to come to the sacred meetings, to be present at Common prayers, to teach others, and to be taught with others, as the same author affirms; but then this concludeth not against us, for the same Buxtorf still adds, sed semper sub dictâ lege remotionis, always under the fore-mentioned law of remotion, and distance. And so these two ἐναντιοφανῆ, it seems are reconcileable, thus, Niddui is not a total remotion or separation neither from sacred, nor from civil society, (being you know but the first degree or species) but only add 4 passus, that none come within the distance of 4 paces of him, that is under the censure, and this degree of separation being extended to sacred as well as civil assemblies, yet excluded him not either from praying with the Congregation, or learning, or (if he were a Doctor) teaching in it. Only a mark was set upon him, to discriminate him from others, which were under no censure; this is described in R. Eliezer, c. 17. King Solomon, saith he, when he built the house of the Sanctuary made two gates, one for Bridegrooms, another for Mourners and excommunicate persons, by which they went into the Temple. Sect. 57.

* Instit. ep. Heb. p. 55.

And to these two gates and sorts of men the Apostle may seem to allude Rom. 12. 15. and 1 Cor. 7. 30. when he speaks of weeping with them that weep, and rejoycing with them that rejoyce; and no question the πενθεῖν which we render bewailing, 1 Cor. 5. 2. refers to that stile of mourners, and denotes the solemnity usual among the Jews of putting on mourning habit, and wailing over them that were excommunicate, according to that of the author of the Constitutions under Clements name, μετὰ λύπης καὶ πένθους ἀνιάτους ἔχοντας τὸ ἐκκλησίας ἀποπέμπετε, l. 2. Let the incurable be put out of the Church with sorrow and wailing. These mourners, or excommunicate in that Rabbi were those under Niddui, who it seems were admitted to the Temple, but appointed to come in at a door peculiar to them, and with some such mark of discrimination, that they that saw them might pray for them in this form, Qui inhabitat domum hanc, consoletur te, indatque animo tuo ut obtemperes, &c. He that dwells in this house, comfort thee, and give thee a heart to obey; by which I am forced to confess, that Niddui did not separate from all society in sacris, but only remove to such a distance; and yet the Reader will be forced to confess also, that this separation or rather remotion belonged ad sacra, as well as ad politica, and in the same degree that it restrain'd the one kind of society, it restrain'd the other also; and so saith Jo. Mich. Dilherr. Elector. l. 2. c. 10. having premised that Niddui est hominis ab aliorum conventu tam sacro, quàm politico, & domestico, ad 4. usque cubitus sive passus per dies 30 remotio &c. A remotion from sacred, civil, domestick commerce, to the distance of four paces for 30 days, a deprivation of the marriage bed, of shaving, and washing, and such other commodities, he adds that מנורה he that is under this censure, may be present at sacred meetings, but so many paces off from the rest of the company. Sect. 58.

And therefore whereas this Author affirmeth that by Niddui is not meant an ejection out of the Church, but only a deprivation of that liberty of civil society within four paces, and applies to it that sence, wherein the Poet calls the Britains toto divisos orbe, divided from the whole world, not that they are totally divided from the rest of the World, but to denote a peculiar situation of those Islands in the Ocean, I shall acknowledge the observation so far as it denies a total separation, but not as it intimates a greater separation in civilibus than in sacris, as the words [peculiari illâ civilis inter suos consortii libertatis deprivatione] would seem to import, and as the intention of the Writer is by himself demonstrated to be. The matter is sufficiently clear that Niddui is but a lighter censure, remotion or restraint for such a degree, but not a total separation either from sacred, or civil society, yet still as much from sacred as from civil, in both limitedly for 30 days, and for the distance of four Cubits. Sect. 59.

But then for Cherem the second degree, that is defin'd by * Buxtorf, exclusion from the sacred Assemblies, casting out of the Synagogue with all the curses of Deut. 28. (to which, say || others, was added the Ceremony of putting out the Candles, to signifie him deprived of the light of Heaven) and he hath proof for it out of Maimonides in Madda, c. 7. Muchram non docet neque discit cum aliis. He Sect. 60.

* Ep. Hebr. inſtit. p.56. that is under the ſecond cenſure, is excluded from hearing the Law in publick; And as * Buxtorf elſewhere adds, E Synagogâ, conventibus, negotiis publicis, ſacris & politicis omnibus excluſus, donec reſipiſcat; which may further appear by the form of this anathema, which he brings out of an ancient Hebrew manuſcript. Sit in anathemate ſanctorum excelſorum, in anathemate Seraphim, & Ophunnim, in anathemate totius Eccleſiæ, &c. Now from this, the third ſpecies differs only in this, that as that was a total ſeparation, donec reſipiſcat, till he repent, but reverſible upon repentance, total for the preſent, but not irremiſſible; ſo this was both total and final too, and ſo undoubtedly (not remitting of the ſeverity of the ſecond, but adding to it) extended to the ſeparation in ſacris alſo; and therefore whatſoever may be ſaid of Schammatha in the wide Rabbinical acception of it, as it goes indifferently for Niddui, there will be little doubt, but the Schammatha peculiarly ſo call'd, or that which is call'd שמתא דייי and ראלהו ישראל the Schammatha of the Lord, or of the God of Iſrael, is, as the learned define it, Ea quâ quis totaliter & finaliter ab Eccleſiâ (as that notes cœtum ſacrum, as well as civilem) ſegregatus, divino judicio ſit devotus, & cum eâ mors & exitium; ſaith Dilherr. l. 2. of Maranatha (which he ſuppoſes to be all one with it.) Eſt proſcriptio extrema, & abſque ſpe venie irrogata, quâ reus omnibus humanæ ſocietatis juribus, legibus & officiis excluſus, judicio divino committitur, & ad extremam deſolationem condemnatur. A perfect proſcription, without hope of pardon, by which the offender is excluded from all priviledges, and offices of humane ſociety, and committed to the judgment of God, and condemned to extreme deſolation. I ſhall abſtain from adding more to the proof of this truth in the ſeveral ſpecies, conceiving that I have ſufficiently proved or vindicated it in the loweſt, and ſhewed the ἄτιον τῆς ψεύδους, the cauſe or the occaſion of their miſtake, who deny it; and then there will be little need to confirm it any further in the other two degrees, which do add to that loweſt, but cannot be thought to come ſhort of it.

Sect. 61. And having thus clear'd the firſt thing which we propoſed, view'd the ſeveral ſorts of Excommunication among the Jews, I proceed now to the ſecond, to thoſe places of the New Teſtament which ſeem to refer to them: In which matter I ſhall not be confident or dogmatical, but deliver my thoughts as for the preſent it ſeems to me, and ſhew you the grounds of my ſo ſeeming. And 1. that place Luke 6. 22. doth appear to belong to Excommunication among the Jews, but whether to one only or more ſpecies of it, I am uncertain; ἀφορίζειν ſurely belongs to the firſt kind, that of Niddui, which cannot be more literally rendred in Greek than by ἀφορισμὸς, ſeparation, or remotion four paces off, and perhaps that with ὀνειδίζειν added to it, ſignifies to do it contumeliouſly; But yet becauſe 'tis poſſible, that ὀνειδίζειν may have a greater force in it, and be a notation of curſing and execration, not only in this but other places of the Goſpel, therefore I conceive that word (ſet immediately after ἀφορίζειν) may denote the ſecond degree, that of Cherem, and then to the ſame will belong that third phraſe alſo of ἐκβάλλειν ὄνομα ὑμῶν ὡς πονηρὸν to caſt out your name as evil, for an Hebraiſm there is in theſe words, which though a very learned man conceive to conſiſt in this, 1. that ἐκβάλλειν ſhall be all one with ἐκφέρειν, (as indeed ſometimes it is) 2. that as ἐκφέρειν ὄνομα πονηρὸν is to bring up an evil report, ſo ἐκβάλλειν ὄνομα πονηρὸν ſhall ſignifie the ſame thing; yet I ſhall take leave to interpoſe, 1. that the phraſe uſed for bringing up an evil report, Numb. 15. 36. is ἐξενέγκαι ῥήματα πονηρὰ περὶ τῆς γῆς, not ὄνομα, but ῥήματα, nor ῥήματα γῆς, but περὶ τῆς γῆς, and in brief that I cannot find any where ἐκφέρειν or ἐκβάλλειν ὄνομα πονηρὸν in the tranſlators of the Old, or Writers of the New Teſtament, for bringing up an evil report. 2*ly*. that ἐκβάλλειν ὄνομα ὑμῶν ὡς πονηρὸν, to caſt out your name as evil: 1. [ὑμῶν yours] then [ὡς as] added, will be ſomewhat another kind of phraſe, than ἐκβάλλειν or ἐκφέρειν ὄνομα πονηρὸν· as [to bring up an evil name or report] is in our language a very intelligible phraſe for defaming, but [to bring up your name or report as evil] is not ſo; and therefore I ſhall venture to propoſe my conjecture, that the Hebraiſm is not in the word [ἐκβάλλειν] but in the [ὄνομα] and [πονηρὸν:] ſo that 1. ὄνομα ὑμῶν ſhall ſignifie no more than your perſons, or you (as ὀνόματα, Acts 1. 15. ſignifies perſons of men) and then ὡς πονηρὸν ſhall ſignifie [as ſcandalous] or offenſive, or abominable, as באש is by the 72 ſometimes rendred αἰσχύνομαι being aſhamed (whence perhaps our Engliſh baſhful and abaſh,) ſometimes βδελύσσω, to abominate, ſometime πονηρὸς εἰμι to be evil or wicked, *Gen.*34.30. *Eſd.*4.12. and ſo [to caſt out your names as evil] will clearly ſignifie to caſt you out as wicked, ſhameful, abominable perſons, a denotation of the חרם, which was not only ſeparating or removing to a diſtance, but total caſting out, and that with reproaches, curſes, and execrations, ſuch as in Moſes are denounced againſt greater malefactors. Whether theſe circumſtances of this text do thus denote, I am not confident, and therefore have only propoſed a conjecture, but that the ἀφορίζειν doth refer to the Niddui, and ἐκβάλλειν to the Cherem at leaſt, if not to the Schammatha, I doubt not, nor if you mark it, doth H. Grotius who hath enlarged on that ſubject of Excommunication in his annotations on that verſe.

Sect. 62. No more do I find my ſelf moved by the arguments of that Learned Gentleman to doubt, but that ἀποσυνάγωγον γενέσθαι to be turned out of the Synagogue, Joh. 9. 22. 12. 42. 16. 2. refers to the ſecond of theſe ſpecies among the Jews, for the קהל, and συναγωγὴ do ſometime ſignifie a civil Congregation or Aſſembly, and not always a ſacred (as when the hypocrite is ſaid to pray ſtanding, ἐν συναγωγαῖς in places of publick concourſe, and corners of the ſtreets, as the moſt viſible places, Matth. 6.) I ſhall eaſily grant, and yet not think my ſelf thereby concluded, or obliged to yield, but that it may alſo, at other times, note the holy Aſſembly, or meeting for the performance of ſacred duties, out of which it was ſure no news for the Jews (after that capital judgments were taken away from them) to eject notorious malefactors, particularly Hereticks, falſe Prophets, or their ſectators and diſciples, as theſe here for preaching of Chriſt, whom the Jews acknowledg'd not; in like manner as in the time of the Captivity, Eſd. 10. 8. the order is given, that whoſoever appears not upon ſummons ἀναθεματισθήσεται πᾶσα ἡ ὕπαρξις αὐτῶ, all his eſtate ſhall be (forfeited we render, the word is יחרם noting the Cherem which we now ſpeak of) devoted, anathematiz'd, as an evidence of that kind of Excommunication which follows in the next words, καὶ αὐτὸς διασαλήσεται ἀπὸ ἐκκλησίας τῆς ἀποικίας, he ſhall be ſeparated from the Church or Congregation of the Captivity, not only from Civil, but Eccleſiaſtical ſociety with them, for ſo Cherem was formerly demonſtrated to ſignifie; nay, it may with ſome reaſon be conceived in that place, from Eccleſiaſtical only, in caſe of Cherem or total ejection; for 'tis more probable, that the King under whom they were captive, allowing them ſome liberty for the exerciſe of their religion, ligion, but in civil matters keeping them as captives and servants, should permit them to punish one another by that way of casting out of their Ecclesiastical Assemblies, than by that other of civil interdict, especially if it be conceiv'd to extend to banishment, &c. which would intrench upon his Prerogative, and be a kind of turning the Captive out of his captivity.

That ἀποσυναγωγία belongs to this second species, and so to casting out of the society in sacris, is the distinct affirmation of the learned * Buxtorf in these words, Hæc est illa excommunicatio (speaking of Cherem) de qua in Evangelio Johannis, cap. 9. 22. 12. 42. etsi ab eo tempore Rabbini quadam ipsi adjecerint, and the intimation of ‖ John Coch also in these words, Qui simpliciter excommunicatus est, מנורה est ille quidem separatus à cœtu, ita ut pro vero membro Ecclesiæ non habeatur, non tamen videtur esse ἀποσυνάγωγος quia doctrinæ particeps est. From which words of that very learned man, I observe these two things contrary to what I see lately affirm'd. 1. That ἀποσυναγωγία doth not belong to Niddui, but to Cherem. 2. That it is an ejection not only ab Ecclesiâ, Synagogâ, as that notes rempublicam Judaicam, but from sacred Assemblies, noted by doctrinæ particeps, according to that rule in Maimonides, Devotus nec docet, nec docetur, such an one is excluded from both, it seems, and so from those holy Assemblies, where that was wont to be done. Sect. 63. * Instit. Ep. Heb. p. 56. ‖ Exc. Gem. Sanhedr. c. 1. p. 149.

To this phrase of [ἀποσυναγώγους ποιήσουσιν] is subjoyned John 16. 2. ἀλλ' ἔρχεται ὥρα, &c. but (or yea) the hour cometh that every man that killeth you shall seem, to be thought to do God service, or to offer a sacrifice to him; whereon I shall interpose a conjecture, that those words may possibly denote the third degree, that of Schammatha, at least a consequent of it, for so saith * Buxtorf of that species, Mortem dicit, quia cujusvis manibus ejus vita exposita est, & cuilibet eum interficiendi libera potestas: It is so call'd, because such a mans life is exposed to any ones hands, every one having a free power of killing him, and so to that he applyes the Maranatha which is added to Anathema, 1 Cor. 16. 22. a form of extreme proscription, delivering up the sinner to divine revenge, in which case whosoever kill'd him, conceived himself to perform an act of execution of justice, and service to God. Sect. 64. * Ep. Heb. inst. p. 58.

Some other places there are in the New Testament belonging to these Judaical censures, fit to be explained, but I have chosen to insist only on these, because I lately find them otherwise rendred, but yet discern no reason to recede from what I have now delivered, that they do belong to those species of Excommunication not only from civil but from sacred Assemblies, though one in an higher degree than another. To which I shall only add, that they which have applied these places to Christian Excommunication, any otherwise than only by way of accommodation, shall not be pleaded for by me, who acknowledge that they belong to the Jews, and to their usage of Christians, and not to some Christians dealing with others; but then sure there is as little reason on their side who will not allow that way of accommodation, which would not be at all unreasonable, though those phrases among the Jews were supposed to belong only to civil commerce; It being ordinary for Christ to ordain some things in his Church, which were answerable to civil not sacred customs among the Jews (as the Lords Supper sure an Ecclesiastical rite among us, was to their post-cœnium, which was not so, and many the like) to transplant from their forum to our Church, and therefore no way unfit for the Apostles, and following Church to appropriate those words to Ecclesiastical sences, though they were supposed to be among the Jews of a greater latitude; Of which sort, because I formerly promised it, I shall now specifie in some instances. Sect. 65.

This may be discern'd in the word ἐκκλησία, which if any man should prove to have no other sence among Christians, than that of a meeting together in a Town-hall, upon no other way of probation, but that the Hebrew words answerable to that, are by the Talmudists, yea even in the Scripture of the Old Testament taken in this sence, this would be a little strange; the matter of fact being most evident to the contrary, and it being most prompt and proper, that words used either among the Greeks or Hebrews in forinsecal sences, may be bent by Christian Writers to a sacred. Sect. 66.

So in like manner, the word Ἀπόστολος, it is acknowledged, is answerable to the שליח among the Jews, and that word denoted among them some officers, which if they may in any respect be counted Ecclesiastical, are yet very distant from the Christian use of it: such was that of the Messengers sent out to demand and bring in the dues to the Synagogues, which cannot without the help of accommodation be applyed to the Christian acception of the word, and such again was the proxy in contracting or marrying two persons, for he was called שליח i. e. Apostolus also, an intercessor or internunce betwixt them, which as a sponsor undertook for one to the other, the νυμφαγωγὸς, i. e. in Varinus his definition ὁ μετερχόμενος ἑτέρῳ νύμφην, ἐξ ἄγων ἐκ τῆς τοῦ πατρὸς οἰκίας, of whom he saith that when the Bridegroom himself must not go into the fathers house, (viz. in a * second marriage, such as that was of God with the Gentiles, who had before espoused the Jews) ἀποστέλλει τῶν φίλων τινὰς, he sends one of his friends: To which notion of the word (according to one punctation of the place) the Apostle may seem to refer, 2 Cor. 11. 2. when he expresses his Apostleship by ἡρμοσάμην ὑμᾶς ἑνὶ ἀνδρὶ, I have espoused you to one husband, according to that sence of ἁρμόζω acknowledged by * Julius Pollux, ὁ πάνθαρος ἐγγυᾷ ἁρμόζει, ὅθεν τίνες τῶν πολλῶν ἁρμοστὴν ἢ μνηστῆρα ἐκάλεσαν, making the μνηστὴς, or sponsor all one with ἁρμοστὴς, and ἐγγυᾶν to signifie the interceding or mediating a marriage, all one with that word ἁρμόζειν there used by St. Paul, agreeably to which the word ἁρμοστὴς is by ‖ Pollux farther extended to the mediatours of any kind of league, εἰρηνοποιοὶ, and then according to that notion also, is the Apostles pacifick office, praying and beseeching us in Christs stead to be reconciled to God, all which are very convenient accommodations, but far from requiring the Christian word to the very kind of sence that the Hebrew שליח did import. Sect. 67. * Μάλιστα δὲ ἐπὶ δευτέρου γάμου, καθ' ὃν ὁ δίμοιρος νυμφίον μιμεῖται, ἀλλ' ἀποστέλλει φίλους, Phavor. ‖ Ὄνομ. 3. c. περὶ μνηστείας. ‖ Ὄνομ. 1. c. περὶ συμμαχων.

So again, ἐπίσκοποι, Bishops in the Christian Church, do in respect of their office, particularly that of imposition of hands (peculiar to them above the Presbyters even in St. Jeroms confession) refer to the נשיא the Princeps Synedrii, who imposed hands upon those that were elected into the Sanhedrim, but in respect of the name they refer to the use of the word מפקד among the Jews, and accordingly the very word ἐπίσκοποι is both 1 Mac. 1. 51, and in Josephus, set to signifie them that are set over any publick business, the ἐργοδιώκτας that set men a work, and require an account of the performance, and yet are by way of accommodation brought both in the New Testament, and in all Sacred Writers since, to signifie an office parallel to this, but purely Ecclesiastick. Sect. 68.

So

Sect. 69. So the word πρεσβύτερος, though in the Old Teſtament it belong properly to the Elders of the people either in a common notion, or as members of their Sanhedrim, not any body (or ſingle perſons) peculiarly Eccleſiaſtick (though by the way 'tis moſt clear, that the high Prieſts were, not only of that number, part of their Sanhedrim, or γερουσία or πρεσβυτήριον, but alſo the chief of them, and therefore in the New Teſtament the mention of the high Prieſts and Elders comes oft together in point of judicature, and the buſineſs of that Court being all kind of affairs, Civil as well as Eccleſiaſtick, it was moſt reaſonable that ſome perſons of both conditions ſhould be intruſted with them, and there being ſo, no wonder that there was no other Court, or Tribunal meerly Eccleſiaſtical) yet doth it unqueſtionably belong, both in many places of the New Teſtament, and in the conſtant acception of primitive and after-Writers, to an order of Eccleſiaſticks, as is moſt apparent both by Clemens and Ignatius, and is confeſt by them, which aſſert the ἰσοτιμία of Biſhops, and Presbyters: which makes it not very reaſonable to conſent to the way of arguing, twice uſed by that learned Writer, who from the Talmudical writings of the Creation of the Jewiſh Elders, would conclude how little, or how nothing there is in the Creation of a Presbyter among Chriſtians, more than of a Doctor of Law, &c. But this by the way.

Sect. 70. Laſtly, ſo the διάκονοι Deacons in the Chriſtian Church are directly parallel to the חוני"ם under the Synagogue, called by Epiphanius (by a light inflexion or change of the Hebrew) Ἀζανῖται, the γαζοφύλακες or Treaſurers, τὰς διακονικὰς χρείας ἐπιτελοῦντες in Philo, χειροτονηθεὶ ἐπιμεληταὶ in Joſephus) which I wonder a * learned man ſhould carp at, only upon this exception, becauſe it was not proved they were in ſynagogis præfecti, ut miniſtrarent menſis, when 'tis clear that the διακονεῖν τραπέζαις in the Acts, noting firſt the miniſtring to them in the ἀγάπαις, that common table for the poor and rich, doth in univerſum ſignifie [providing for the poor] and that is as clearly parallel to the office of thoſe treaſurers among the Jews, as if they had literally in the ſynagogue ſerved tables.

* Rivet. Grot. diſc. Hal. p. 475.

Sect. 71. I ſhould now proceed to my third propoſal, the phraſes which are purely Chriſtian, but that I conceive it not unfit to take notice of one difficulty (which we have not yet mentioned, nor ſhall have occaſion to mention among the phraſes purely Chriſtian) and to give ſome account of that in this place. And it is, to examine what was the condition 1. of Heathens, 2. of Samaritans, 3. of thoſe that are called ſinners, 4. of Publicans among the Jews; being tempted to that (if it be an extravagance) by another parentheſis in a learned Author before mentioned.

Sect. 72. For Gentiles they were of three ſorts: either 1. proſelytes of juſtice, who were circumciſed, and undertook their whole law, and theſe were allowed to live among them, to enjoy all liberty and priviledges, that any Jew did, differing from them in nothing but their Gentile-birth. Secondly, proſelytes of the Gates, which were converted ſo far by them, as to receive the Precepts of the ſons of Adam and Noah, but not to be circumciſed, &c. and theſe were alſo permitted to live freely among them in civil ſociety, and to come to the Temple (Gods houſe being a houſe of prayer to all people, i.e. to all ſuch Gentile worſhippers, or godly men of the Nations) but that with a mark of difference from the Jews, and perfect proſelytes, there being a court provided on purpoſe for them, called the court of the Gentiles, divided from the court of the Jews by a little partition called by the Apoſtle μεσότοιχον τῦ φραγμῦ, by Joſephus γῆιον & or δρύγδε, on which was written μὴ δεῖν ἀλλόφυλον ἔντ& ἴέναι, that no ſuch Gentile proſelyte might go in, i.e. beyond their own, into the Jews Court, and ſo theſe though admitted to ſociety in ſacris, yet were ſo removed or ſeparated by Law, the whole body of them, that they were in a manner under the ſame cenſure of Niddui, or ἀφορισμὸς, ſeparated from them for ſome ſmall ſpace, proportionable to that of four paces, but this not by any act of excommunication, but by a general Law or tradition, thus diſcriminating them from Jews in this particular.

Sect. 73. Thirdly, there were the Gentiles continuing ſtill utterly unconverted in their Gentiliſm, and with thoſe they were not to have ſociety at all (not only in ſacris, for there was no need of interdicting that, they would not joyn with them, and for them to joyn in the Gentile ſacrifices were down-right Idolatry) but to ſeparate from them, for fear their company and converſation ſhould infuſe their Gentile ſins into them, wherein they were ſo ſtrict, that they would not go into the prætorium, where the band of Roman (i.e. ſuch Gentile) ſouldiers were, John 8. ver. 28. counting it a Pollution, if they had ſo done. So you ſee what was the condition of the Gentiles among the Jews, and all this by Law or ſtanding cuſtom among them, without any interpoſition of any degree of excommunication, as having nothing to do to judge them, which are without, i. e. the laſt kind of Gentiles, and having ſet rules for the other two.

Sect. 74. Then for the Samaritans they are almoſt, if not quite, in the ſame caſe with the laſt ſort of Gentiles, no converſation allowed between the Jews and them, as you ſee John 4. verſe 9. οὐ συγχρῶνται Ἰουδαῖοι Σαμαρείταις, the Jews have not common commerce with the Samaritans, no not ſo far, as that one ſhould give the other meat, or drink in his want, or help him to it, as appears by the former part of that verſe, Doſt thou being a Jew ask to drink of me being a Samaritan? they might not συνεσθίειν, eat together, which was proportionable to the Niddui, (that being a ſeparation, to the diſtance of four paces, à congreſſu domeſtico, as well as ſacro & civili, and a prohibition of eating, and drinking together promiſcuouſly) and not only ſo but an interdicting of acts of common humanity, as helping to neceſſaries of life, like the proſcription among the Romans, but this is not by way of excommunication again, (but by ſtanding law or cuſtom) for the Samaritans uſed not the ſame place of worſhip with the Jews, came not to Jeruſalem, John 4. ver. 20. and ſo could not be excommunicated by them. Nay, Matthew 10. ver. 5. you ſhall ſee the Samaritans and the Gentiles joyned together in oppoſition to the Jews, when the Apoſtles are commanded to go neither to the way of the Gentiles, nor to the City of Samaria, but only to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael, that is, firſt to them, before either Samaritans or Gentiles were preach'd to, which were all one in effect, the Samaritan being called ἀλλογενὴς an alien, Luke 17. 18.

Buxt. Ep. Heb. inſtit. p. 55.

Sect. 75. In the next place, the word ſinners is in the New Teſtament an equivocal word, for it may ſignifie either Gentiles, as Gal. 2. 15. ſinners of the Gentiles, or elſe ſcandalous offenders, infamous perſons, harlots, &c. theſe (it ſeems) it was unlawful to eat with, Matth. 9. 11. If taken under the firſt notion, the caſe will be clear upon the ſame account, as before we gave you of the Heathens; but under the ſecond

ſecond notion, if ſinners ſignifie notorious offenders, then are they conſidered either as men under the puniſhment of excommunication, or at leaſt worthy to be under it, and that either under Niddui or Cherem, the loweſt of which would make them uncapable of familiar converſation, and eating together with other Jews; and upon that ground, the Jews might quarrel with Chriſt for eating with them, and Saint Paul ſpeaking of the inceſtuous perſon might refer to the Jewiſh cuſtom, and thereupon command τῷ τοιούτῳ μηδὲ συνεσθίειν, not to eat with him, (that remotion in Niddui for the diſtance of four cubits, being unreconcileable with familiar eating together) and ſo the Phariſee, when the γυνὴ ἁμαρτωλὸς. Luke 7.37. came with her cruſe of ointment, and anointed and kiſt Chriſts feet, reſolves that if Chriſt knew what ſhe were, he would not admit of ſo near a commerce with her, and concludes him no Prophet, that he did not know it.

Laſtly, for the Publicans, who were alſo thought unfit for men to eat and drink with, I conceive Sect. 76. that is not again from any of the Jewiſh cenſures paſt upon them, but only becauſe either they were Gentiles, and ſo uncapable of that commerce, or elſe being Jews, yet being officers of the Romans, they were ſuppoſed to commerce ordinarily with Gentiles, and ſo to be polluted by that means, and by the law of legal pollution interdicted that familiar reception among the Jews; notwithſtanding which, it appears the Publican, Luke 18.10. went up to the Temple to pray, as well as the Phariſee; and, if the Parable be argumentative, it ſeems the Phariſee and the Publican were in the ſame Court of the Temple, (as may be gueſt by the Phariſees pointing him out, This Publican) and ſo that the Publican enjoyed all the ſame privileges of acceſs that the other did, (though ſtill he continued afar off, and that in a moſt humble poſture, as if he were under Niddui, that loweſt degree of excommunication) but becauſe it may be ſubject to miſtake, to argue from Parables, I ſhall not do ſo, but leave the Publican joyned with the ſinners, as one Heathen with another, both by the Jewiſh laws, forbidden to converſe with, and not expelled by any cenſure of excommunication.

Theſe conjectures being thus obiter and in paſſage premiſed, only on purpoſe to diſcard ſome leſs pertinent places, which ſome others perhaps have taken liberty to make uſe of, and not out of deſign to make any ſpecial advantage of this explication of them, in order to my preſent purpoſe, or in oppoſition to any; I come now to the laſt thing propoſed even now, to ſhew you the phraſes more purely Chriſtian: Such are, 1. To deliver unto Satan, παραδῦναι τῷ Σατανᾷ. 1 *Cor.*5.5. 1 *Tim.*1.20. anſwerable to Cherem among the Jews, ſo far as belonged to the ſociety in ſacris, a turning the blaſphemer out of the Church of Chriſt. This was the frequent ſtile of excommunication, becauſe it was the depriving the man of thoſe every-day means which are in Chriſtianity afforded, as ordinarily uſeful to eject Satan and the power of his Kingdom out of the heart: Such are, 1. The Prayers of the Church: 2. The publick uſe of the Word or Doctrine of Chriſtianity: (for ſo he that is under Cherem, nec docet nec docetur, neither teacheth nor is taught, and in the antient Chriſtian Church it appears they were excluded from that, and upon repentance received for the firſt three years among the ἀκροώμενοι, or hearers in the porch, στῶν ἀκόων γραφῶν, ſaith Zonaras, which being the firſt degree of their return to Communion, argues that before they were excluded from it:) and thirdly, the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, in which reſpect ſcandalous ſinners are by Saint Jude call'd ſpots in their feaſts, or agapæ (which being annext to the Lords Supper denoted the whole action) i.e. unfit, as blemiſhed Sacrifices to be received there. The uſe of which means being in the Oeconomy of the Goſpel deſigned to ſo much advantage to the Soul, or the caſting Satan out of it, conſequently the baniſhing from, or depriving of the uſe of thoſe means is properly ſtiled the delivering to Satan, though in Gods gracious diſpoſal of all things, that be deſigned by him alſo to the ſame gracious end, to caſt Satan out of him, on whom nothing elſe can be able to work.

And then ſecondly, it was ſo call'd, becauſe in the Apoſtles times a ſad conſequent there was of this Sect. 77. tradition or excommunication, proportionable to the diræ or execrations, in the Jewiſh Cherem, which, ſay they, raro effectu carebant, ſeldom wanted the effect, to wit, corporal power and poſſeſſion, and inflictions of Satan on thoſe, who were delivered up to him, as to a lictor or carnifex (in like manner as we read befell Saul after his defection from God, when the evil Spirit came upon him, 1 Sam. 16.14.)

For it muſt be remembred, that about Chriſts time, and a little after, the devil was permitted to Sect. 78. have ſuch a ranging unlimited power, that he did ordinarily obtain leave to tyrannize over the bodies of mortal men, laying all kinds of diſeaſes upon them, (as indeed there is ſcarce any kind of diſeaſe, but ſome reſemblance of it you may find in ſome or other of thoſe deſcribed in the Goſpel) which is ſometimes called κολαφίζειν, Satans buffetting, 2 *Cor.*12.7. ſometimes βασανίζειν, racking, or tormenting, as of the Centurions ſervant, Matth. 8.6. grievouſly tormented, and ſo Matth. 4.24. that condition of men is deſcribed by ποικίλαις νόσοις καὶ βασάνοις συνεχόμενοι καὶ δαιμονιζόμενοι: we render it, taken with divers diſeaſes and torments, the word συνεχόμενοι (as κατεχόμενοι) is uſed ordinarily for thoſe that are poſſeſt with Devils, and ſo here of thoſe conſequents of ſuch poſſeſſions, and therefore follows, καὶ δαιμονιζόμενοι, and poſſeſt with Devils. And ſometimes δῆσαι, to bind, as Luke 13. in the ſtory of the woman which had the ſpirit of infirmity, verſe 11. (i.e. a devil or evil ſpirit that inflicted a ſtrange infirmity or diſeaſe upon her) 18. years, bowing her together, that ſhe was not able to look up. 'Tis ſaid of her, ἣν ἔδησεν ὁ Σατανᾶς, that Satan had bound her, verſe 16. and the curing her is called looſing her from her infirmity, *ver.*12. ἀπὸ δεσμῆς, from her bond, *ver.*16. agreeable to the phraſe of binding and looſing in this buſineſs, *Matth.*16.19. & 18.18. Hence it is that the Apoſtles delivering to Satan, is ſaid to be εἰς ὄλεθρον τῆς σαρκός, 1 Cor. 5.5. to the deſtruction of the fleſh, i.e. by way of pain or diſeaſe, a ſpecial part of Apoſtolical diſcipline. Thus in Ignatius Epiſtle to the Romans, we have κόλασις διαβόλου, the puniſhment of the Devil, which I conceive in that place muſt belong only to temporal inflictions, becauſe he wiſhes it were upon himſelf, μόνον ἵνα Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐπιτύχω, that he may by that means obtain or come to Chriſt, of which eternal would deprive him; and, perhaps Saint Pauls wiſh extended no farther, *Rom.*9. than to be thus excommunicate from the Church of Chriſt, and to be under thoſe temporal evils that attended it, which was an exuberance of love alſo to his brethren.

The ſumm of what hath been ſpoken on this point, is, That as among the antient Heathen Romans Sect. 79. there was baniſhment, and interdictio ignis & aquæ, offenders were interdicted the neceſſaries of life, and as in Josephus the Esseni [τὰς ἐπ' ἀξιοχρέοις ἁμαρτήμασιν ἁλόντα, ἐκβάλλουσιν ἐκ τῆ τάγματ☉ ὅδε ἐκκριθεὶς δικλίσῳ πολλάκις μόρῳ διαφθείρεται, πονηρῶν δὲ καὶ λιμῷ τὸ σῶμα τυκόμεν☉,&c. cast out from their Congregation such as are taken in notorious offences, and they that are thus cast out, come many times to miserable deaths, consumed with hunger,&c.] or as Heliodorus, 2 Mac. 3. in his sacrilegious enterprise was scourged by two Angels in the shape of young men, verse 26. and hardly come off with life; so the Apostolical Excommunication, or Anathema, was attended with these adversaries of life, diseases, pains, and grievous torments, to lay a necessity on them of returning, or being reformed by that means. And this I conceive is the rod which the Apostle mentions, 1 *Cor.*4.21. the power of inflicting death, as on Ananias; or diseases, blindness on Elymas, and the like, the Heb. מטה there rendred ῥαβδὸς, rod, being *Isa.*10.24. πληγὴ, a plague, all one with μάστιξ, *Mar.*3.10. and so very capable in that place of this interpretation, and by the matter of the choice there proposed to the Corinthians most fitly applyed to it.

Sect. 80. This have I said, (and might add a great deal more) to illustrate this one phrase of delivering to Satan, and in it that Apostolical censure of excommunication, and its attendant, corporal inflictions of diseases and pains.

Sect. 81. To all which, methinks Cains condition described, Gen. 4. is very applyable, (by way of accommodation at least) verse 14. Behold, thou hast driven me out from the face of the earth, answerable to verse 11. Thou art cursed from the earth, the חרם or Anathema to which the cursing there is answerable, being a species of excommunication higher than Niddui or ἀφορισμὸς, even a driving or casting out, (the English of ἐκβάλλειν, before-mentioned, Luke 6.22.) i. e. either from the Church (as anon you shall see γῆ signifie)or, which is all one, from that part of the earth, where Adam and his other children dwelt as the sole Church then existent, and thereupon immediately it follows, and from thy face shall I be hid: Gods face typically noting the Church, where God had always a peculiar presence, to which refers the לחם פנים the bread of faces or shewbread in the Temple, shewing or signifying the presence of God there, and I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond, and then finally it shall come to pass, saith he, that every one that findeth me, shall slay me; there is the שמתא or ὄλεθρ☉ death, ἀποκοπὴ, excision, from which though God freed him, verse 15. yet the other he lay under, as appears by verse 16. Cain went out from the presence of the Lord, went out, i.e. was turned out (as ἀπολέσουται, *Matth.*25.46. is all one with ἐκβληθήσουται, *chap.*8.12.) of the presence of the Lord, i.e. out of the Church, or visible congregation of Gods Servants, the place where God is pleased peculiarly to exhibite himself, i. e. out of Adams family or the place where he dwelt, for it follows, Cain dwelt in the land of Nod on the East of Eden; but this only as an image or accommodation.

Sect. 82. One thing I desire here to interpose as in a parenthesis, which hath been touched on in other * Papers, but will be here seasonably set down more at large, as peculiarly pertinent to the matter now in hand of delivering to Satan, and 'tis this, that this act of the Church in delivering up to Satan, is but an Image of Gods real dealing, who is wont upon occasion tradere Satanæ, to deliver men unto Satan. The ground of this affirmation you may discern by compounding these Scripture Truths together. 1. That Satan is our adversary before God, and therefore call'd Satan שטן which signifies so, and also ἔχθρ☉ enemy, and ἀντικάμεν☉ set against us,&c. Secondly, that one main act of his Satanship is expresst in accusing us before God, *Rev.*12.11. and thence he is call'd peculiarly ἀντίδικ☉, i.e. an opposite, ἐν δικῇ, in court of judicature, 1 *Pet.*5.8. and that either 1. upon some false suggestion, no real crime, as particularly that of unsincerity (or serving God only as long as God used him well, allowed him the εὐτυχία φιλόθε☉) in the case of Job, *Chap.*1. *ver.*9.11. in which respect he is peculiarly call'd διάβολ☉ a calumniator; and 'tis observable that the 72. do most-what render שטן by that word, noting this act of calumniating Gods servants to their Master, to be a special piece of his being our adversary; Or else, secondly, upon the real commission of some sin, which advantage he will be sure not to omit, when he can take it, for sure he that will accuse falsly, will not spare to accuse when he hath true matter of accusation allowed him. To which purpose he is stiled observator calcanei, an observer of the heel in the vulgar Latine, Gen. 3. 15. (agreeable to the Septuagints τηρήσεις πτέρναν, unless (which I easily believe) that be a false print for τειρήσεις) an observer of the heel of Christ, i.e. of Christians, or one that goeth up and down, to and fro in the earth, Job 1.7. to find out matter of accusation, and in this sence he is called κατήγορ☉ τῶν ἀδελφῶν, i.e. an accuser (as that differs critically from a διάβολ☉ or calumniator) of the brethren, i.e. Christians, or believers, when they fall into any fault. An example of this, I conceive, we have in the case of Saint Peter, Luke 22.31. where Satans desiring to have Peter, seems to be founded upon some previous or precedent accusation of him for some criminal commission, perhaps that of striving with the other Disciples for superiority, immediately preceding ver. 24. (as his successor at Rome hath done ever since) or for some other sin, which Satan saw, though we do not at this distance.

Sect. 83. And upon this putting in of accusations against any, follows in the third place, his expetivit ut cribraret, Luke 22.31. his desiring to winnow, his solemn petition to God that he that hath so offended, may be delivered unto him; parallel to which our English Bibles make that other place ζητῶν τίνα καταπίῃ, seeking whom he may devour, 1 Pet. 5.8. which is there plainly attributed to him, as he is ἀντίδικ☉, a plaintiff or adversary in a Court, impleading, or accusing, or delivering to the Judge, *Matth.*5.25. that so he may deliver him back again as to a tormentor, and then if this Satanical course or μεθοδεία prevail, if this accusation be received, this petition be granted, as it was (though with limitation) Job 1.12. the result is, a man delivered up to Satan, to have as Job had, so many assays of his malice practised upon him. To which purpose you may please to observe what Psellus hath given us in his Scholia on the Chaldean Oracles on that text [πόιναι μεδόπων ἀγκτῖῆαι, the devils have the power of binding men] "Αι πόιναι

Page 93. ὕτοι αἱ πωρητικαὶ, καὶ βάσκανοι τῶν ἀνθρωπίνων ψυχῶν ἐνδεσμῶσι πύτας, καὶ οἷον ἀπάγχουσι, καὶ ὁ μόνον τὰς τῶν παθῶν πλήρεις δικίζοντας, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰς εἰς ἓ ἄῦλον ὁσίαν ἐπεσφαμένας. These punitive envious devils do bind, and even strangle the souls of good and (as we say) regenerate men: and from thence it follows, saith he, that we oft see πολλὰς τῆ ὁσίως καὶ καθαρῶς πολιτευομένων ἀπροσδοκήτοις συμφοραῖς περιπίπτοντας, Many of pure and holy conversations falling into unexpected calamities: according to that of the Apostle, For this cause are many sick and weak among you, &c. And perhaps it may on this ground be farther observable, that when men are thus by God delivered up into Satans hand, and he by that permission designs them any mischief, he

he is able to foretel it to his instruments, and so sometimes doth foretel such future events, to get a reputation in the World of fore-knowing all things.

Now this being the condition of the Apostolical censure or delivering to Satan, that who were thus delivered, Satan corporally tormented them, brought them to deaths door, and sometimes killed them; it must follow on the other side, 1. That the Apostles by the power of the Keys must be enabled together, both to cast out devils, and to heal diseases, and so they were, Mar. 16. 17. In my Name they shall cast out devils, and 18. They shall lay their hands upon the sick, and they shall recover. 2. That whom the Apostles absolve from the Censure of excommunication, they might and should also cure of diseases, the consequents of that Censure then, (though not always now, and therefore perhaps only the first power belongs to the Governours of the Church now, to wit, that of absolving not of curing) and so every where in the Gospel we read forgiveneß of sins, and healing of diseases, or casting out devils, joyned together, as Matth. 9. 2. Christ saith to the sick of the palsie, Son be of good chear, thy sins are forgiven thee, and then verse 6. arise, take up thy bed and walk, (the stile and ceremony of Christs cure) and the curing of that disease, an argument in Christs own Logick convincing and demonstrative, that he had power to forgive sins on earth, for though in Matth. and Luke it be υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐπὶ γῆς ἀφιέναι, and so the ἐπὶ γῆς on earth either applyable to son of man, or to the power of the son of man upon earth, as probably, as to ἀφιέναι to forgive sins, yet in the parallel place in Mar. 2. 10. 'tis distinctly ἀφιέναι ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς ἁμαρτίας, to forgive sins on earth, which is not subject to that ambiguity, i.e. to absolve in the Church, because those diseases being consequent to Gods delivering up to Satan which is the Idea of the Churches binding, the sinner must be first loosed (i.e. his sin forgiven) before he could be cured, and therefore the phrase was very critically exact and proper of the woman with the spirit of infirmity, λυθῆναι ἀπὸ δεσμοῦ, to be loosed from her bond, to express the cure of that disease. So James 5. 15. (which if it strictly belong not, may yet commodiously be applied to this matter) you find together the (σώσει κάμνοντα) saving or recovering the sick, and [κἂν ἁμαρτίας ᾖ πεποιηκὼς, ἀφεθήσεται αὐτῷ] remission of his sins also; yea and it is observable what St. Cyprian saith so many years after, that baptism the seal of pardon of sin, freed those from evil spirits, that were before troubled with them. (Whence sure it was, that the Catechists that prepared Converts for baptism, are in the Canons of the Councils called ἐξορκισταὶ, Exorcists) and if after baptism they relapst to sinning, the evil spirit returned again, by which 'tis manifest, saith he, that the devil in baptism is turn'd out by the faith of the Believer, and, his faith failing, returns again. Sect. 84.

I shall only add two things to this matter, 1. That this may possibly be the original and occasion, if not the prime importance of that phrase, 1 John 5. 16. [ἁμαρτία πρὸς θάνατον] a sin unto death, (in which the faithful are not bound to pray for him that is guilty of it, or in which case there is no promise that their prayers shall be heard) i.e. a sin of such a nature, as to which the delivering up to Satan the שמתא the ὀλεθρος σαρκὸς belongs, the committer of which (though he might in general be pray'd for, yet) as long as he continued impenitent and obdurate he was deprived of the prayers of the Church, at least was fit to be excluded out of the Church, where men prayed in common one for another, as many as were present; nay perhaps the Apostles, having the power of discerning of Spirits, might possibly discern some man impenetrably obstinate, and so irrecoverably gone, and so give over all praying or interceding for him, (as on the other side [ἐάν τις ἴδῃ] if any man without that Spirit of discerning, see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask or pray, &c. nay on the contrary pray for his excision in some cases, as the after-Church judging, though with an humane (and so possibly fallible) judgment, of Julian the Apostate, banish'd him out of their prayers, (and rather prayed for his cutting off) to which yet I make no doubt they would have given him a return, if they should have discerned any probability of his return unto the Faith. Sect. 85.

The second thing which I shall add here by way of appendage, is, that from hence will appear, the meaning of anathema maranatha, 1 Cor. 16. 22. which is as if it were חרם and שמתא (ἀνάθεμα, the second, and μαραναθὰ (the Lord comes) the third sort of the Jewish censures) compacted or put together into one, perhaps not to signifie in that place any peculiar kind of censure among Christians instituted (as some would think) in these words against those that have committed the sin against the Holy Ghost. For the [εἴ τις φιλεῖ, loveth not] there, will not properly signifie that sin, nor indeed any other, of which the Church can have cognizance, (loving, or not loving being a secret of the heart, till it break out into some actual vertue or sin, and then it puts off that title of the affection, and is call'd by the name of the action) but by way of accommodation, to apply to the state of such a man the two last degrees of excommunication among the Jews, the one noting total, the other final, irreversible excision; and by that terrible representation, as by a clap and a flash of thunder and lightning together, to give a through sense of the danger of that state, to set an amazing formidable mark upon those that love not the Lord Jesus: whether they be hypocrites, who whatsoever else they are, are certainly no lovers of Christ, at least not lovers ἐν ἀφθαρσίᾳ, in sincerity, Ephes. 6. 24. or whether haters of him, as all vicious persons are, and then the [ἤτω, let him be] is not always a legal form of censure, but either a Prophetick or Apostolical denunciation, importing but this, that the hypocrite or hater of Jesus Christ shall undoubtedly be damned. Sect. 86.

By that which hath been said on occasion of this first phrase (of delivering to Satan) will appear distinctly, wherein this power of binding in the first branch of it, as peculiar to the Apostles from after ages, consists, peculiarly in the power of delivering up to corporal inflictions, diseases, &c. The other phrases will express the matter as it is common to the Apostles times with all after-ages, the Ecclesiastical discipline, not as it differs from, but as 'tis all one with the Apostolical, devested only of that one consequent among them, the corporal inflictions. Sect. 87.

In this rank is the μὴ φείσομαι I will not spare, 2 Cor. 13. 2. explained verse 10. by ἀποτόμως χρήσασθαι, abscision, and καθαίρεσις, sublation, taking away, or turning out of the Church; for I conceive the verse is thus to be paraphrased. These things I, now being absent, write to you, that when I come, I may not be forc'd to use acts of severity, according to the power which is given to me for edification, (which I rather desire to make use of) and not according to the power, which was given to me for destruction or excision.) So again, the ἔγραψα μὴ συναναμίγνυσθαι, 1 Cor. 5. 9. the Apostles command of not communica- Sect. 88.

ting or associating with such. It hath much troubled some scrupulous enquirers, where or when it was that Saint Paul had thus written unto them, phansying it necessary to resolve that he had written some other Epistle to the Corinthians before this first. But sure the beginning of the Chapter will lay this scruple, for to that (and not to any other farther off) the [ἔγραψα ἐν τῇ, i. e. ταύτῃ ἐπιστολῇ, (I have written in this Epistle that you should not company, &c.] doth belong, and that the [νυνὶ δὲ ἔγραψα] I have now written, verse 11. will inforce, for so in the 3, 4, and 5 verses we read, I verily, as absent in body, but present in spirit, have judged already as though I were present, concerning him that hath done this deed; in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, when you and my spirit are gathered together with the power of the Lord Jesus Christ; to deliver such an one unto Satan, &c. The Apostle though absent, yet having an Apostolick ruling power or jurisdiction over them, passeth censure (as formally, as if he had been amongst them) upon that fornicator or incestuous person: and by that spirit or power of his, whereby he was present in their Assemblies, doth therein pronounce this censure of excommunication, or delivering up to Satan against him, that by this means he may reduce that notorious offender (that is the importance of those 3. Verses) and that others be not tainted by his example, verse 6, &c. (And then verse 9. having a little digrest, v. 7, 8.) he resumes his matter again, and saith it over briefly in another phrase, with an ἔγραψα μὴ συναναμίγνυσθαι, i. e. this then was it that I wrote to you in, or by Epistle, (because I was not present) that you should not company with such. By which it appears that the delivering a man to Satan, and the commanding μὴ συναναμίγνυσθαι, are all one (or one but a light addition to, or variation from the other) all other men being so far concern'd in such a ones being so delivered, as not to company with him; yet that not so much (as men now adays think) lest they should be polluted by him, (i. e. by that act of communion with him, as under the Law by touching an unclean thing) as to help discipline him, that the insensate sinner may see himself left alone to no society but Satans (avoided, abandoned by all) and so be brought to a sense of his detestable dangerous condition, (and others kept from thinking his actions exemplary or fit to be imitated by them.) And therefore though this discipline be not used upon sinners out of the Church, verse 12. for they will not be wrought on by the Christians abandoning their company, yet saith Saint Paul, verse 11. with a professor of Christianity, one that lives in the Church, and yet is guilty of this sin, or the like, μὴ συναναμίγνυσθαι, μηδὲ συνεσθίειν, (for so I conceive the words must be joyned, all betwixt being in a Parenthesis) neither to company nor eat with him, (in stead of which, 2 Thess. 3. 14. 'tis μὴ συναναμίγνυσθε simply, only with a συμειοῦσθε (which it seems is a preparative to it) set a mark or brand upon him, and do not company with him) which in either place whether it belong only to exclusion from communion in sacris, or to be extended to interdiction of ordinary civil society, I profess my self not over confident; For the former only, this may be said; 1. That although the sound of the words μηδὲ συνεσθίειν (especially as we render it, no not to eat) seem to contain the latter also, yet perhaps the equipollence of that other phrase [delivering to Satan.] may restrain it to the former. 2. Because the interdiction of conversing or eating with Christian offenders might (now at least) make it necessary for a Man to go out of the world, as well as the interdict of heathen-fornicators company would have done then. 3. Because the phrase [ἐξαρεῖτε ἐξ ὑμῶν αὐτῶν] which in the close of the Chapter is set to express the former censure, is verse 2. applyed to this of Excommunication, οὐκ ἐπενθήσατε ἵνα ἐξαρθῇ, ye have not mourned that he might be removed from among you, and so is by the Canons of the Councils solemnly applyed to these Ecclesiastical censures, suspension either from the Church or from office in it.

Sect. 89. And yet on the other side the Jews were so severe to some, as to deem it unlawful either to eat or familiarly to converse with them, as Samaritans, Publicans, Heathens and sinners (so call'd κατ' ἐξοχὴν, i. e. notorious sinners) and a notable evidence and example of that practice of theirs we have in the 3*d.* book of Maccabees, where speaking of the ἀποχωρῆντες ἐξ αὐτῶν, deserters, or those that fell off to any notorious breach of their law, the Author saith, ἐβδελύσσοντο καὶ ὡς πολεμίους τῷ ἔθνει ἔκριναν, καὶ κοινῆς ἀναστροφῆς, καὶ ἐυχρηστίας ἐτύγχανον, they did express a detestation of them, judged them as enemies of the Nation, and denied them the civility of common converse or good usage, all friendly entertainments, &c. and the same is called after in that place, χωρισμὸς, a separating from them, ἀποστροφαὶ, (though it be read corruptly, and without sence, καταστροφαὶ) aversation, and expresst by ἀπεχθῶς ἐφαίνοντο, they appeared enemies to them: and even the Jewish Niddui or first degree of Excommunication, being a remotion ad 4. passus, not suffering any man to come within four paces of him that was so censured, was an interdiction of familiar conversation or eating with him. And therefore perhaps some of that their discipline may be here imitated, and retained; but then again for the former opinion, Christ by his contrary practice seemed to dislike that custom of theirs, and though he brought excommunication into the Church or in sacris, 'tis not necessary he should continue that other that extended to civil commerce, and therefore still perhaps may not.

Sect. 90. The best decision perhaps will be, that this censure ordinarily belongs only to society in Sacris, but yet sometimes the state of affairs so requiring, and when some other defect may be so supplyed, The Governours may proceed to the second interdict, that no man shall talk familiarly, or entertain, or eat with them, that all men shall avoid their company, discountenance them, and not so much as say God speed, allow them ordinary Christian civility, by this means to besiege, and starve them up, and so, if possible, humble and reduce them. To which purpose it is observable what the learned and judicious Hugo Grotius μακαρίτης hath noted concerning this matter, that in a Christian Church where either through the recentness of their plantation communes conventus non sunt, there are no constant common Assemblies of the Christians in it, or where upon the same occasion there is no setled Government in the hands of a Bishop and assistent Presbyters, or where the Church is torn asunder by Schisms, (as in Corinth, when this first Epistle was written, Chap. 11. 18. whence it follows, verse 31. That judgments or censures were neglected, and upon that neglect, diseases and deaths among them, (I would, I could not say among us also) whereas at the writing of the second Epistle, the discipline together with a quiet judicature was restored, 2 Cor. 2. 6.) there in stead of exclusion from communion in sacris, that other interdict of private commerce, or avoiding of private familiarity hath been thought useful by the Apostle; To this you may apply Rom. 16. 17. where the Apostle beseeches them, to mark and avoid such as cause divisions and offences among them, and so 2 Thess. 3. 14. just now mentioned, if any man obey not our word by this Epistle, note that man, and have no company with him, &c. And if in this respect, Matth. 18. 17. may be extended to this sence also, 'twill no way contradict or prejudice our present pretensions, it being very reasonable for private Christians to restrain themselves toward those who have expreſt such a contradiction to all fraternal methods of Charity, and by outward behaviour to shew a dislike of their contumacy ad obduration, especially when an Apostle at a distance shall pass that judgment on any particular man, and the present state of the Church leaves no place for expectation of formal censures, the law of the Heathen Charondas being not unreasonable in this case, ἀδίκῳ ἀνδρὶ, ἢ γυναῖκι μὴ ὁμιλεῖν μηδένα, ἢ ὀνειδίζεσθαι, ὡς ὅμοιον ὄντα, that no man converse with a wicked man or woman, or bring a reproach on himself, as if he were like him.

Another phrase to expreſs this censure is μετὰ μίαν καὶ δευτέραν νουθεσίαν παραιτοῦ, Tit. 3. 10. After a first and second admonition, avoid him, which that it belongs to the method directed to by Christ, Matth. 18. 15, 16, 18. 'tis clear at the first sight: but seeing there be three admonitions before censure, Matth. 18. the first of the injured person alone, the second of the two or three, the third of the Church, the difficulty will be, which two of those three are the μία καὶ δευτέρα first and second here; My opinion of it, with submission, is that the first and second here are the very same with the first and second in Saint Matth. 18. that of one alone, and then of that one, with one or two more with him. And if it be objected, that then the excommunication must not follow immediately upon that second, I answer that those words, being spoken to Titus Bishop of Crete by St. Paul, telling him what he should do, must needs make a difference from what it would be, if 'twere a private man; It appeared probable before that the admonition of the Church signified that of the Rulers of the Church, and therefore when they have admonished, there is no place for appeal to the Church, nor consquently for that third admonition, and therefore in this case, where the Governour (who is representatively the Church it self, a publick, no private person) after a first and second admonition, (and the second with one or two, perhaps with some or all of the College of Presbyters joyned with him) comes to be despised, the αἵρεσις follows, or proceeding to censure without any third admonition interposing. Which will appear to be the practice, if you look 2 Cor. 13. 2. where immediately after the second admonition in the προλέγω τὸ δεύτερον, characterized verse 1. by [in the mouth of two or three, &c.] he tells the offenders, οὐ φείσομαι, I will not spare, i. e. I will proceed to censure: and verse 10. he tells them, that this admonition is, ἵνα μὴ ἀποτόμως χρήσωμαι, that I may not proceed to excision, or cutting off, (for so ἀποτόμως, or ἀποτομία, which we render sharpness, signifies) which is there called καθαίρεσις, taking away, in the end of the verse; the very word which is so ordinary in the antient Canons, καθαιρεῖσθω, tollatur, for the censure of excommunication.

Sect. 91.

And the reason is there rendred, because you may know that such an one, that holds out against those admonitions of the Church, or Rulers thereof, ἐξέστραπται, καὶ ἁμαρτάνει, is a perverse wilful sinner, ὢν αὐτοκατάκριτος, being self-condemned, i. e. I conceive by that non-submission to the Churches admonitions, he withdraweth and divideth himself from that communion, and so inflicteth that punishment upon himself, which the censures of the Church are wont to do on malefactors, for that is καθαίρεσις, 2 Cor. 13. 10. and ἐξαιρεῖσθαι, cutting off from the Church, which he being an heretick doth voluntarily without the Judges sentence, his very αἵρεσις, heresie being a willing καθαίρεσις, or excision. So saith St. Jerome, whereas fornicators, &c. are turn'd out of the Church, the heretick inflicts this on himself, suo arbitrio ab Ecclesiâ recedens, going of his own choice from the Church; which departing, propriæ conscientiæ videtur esse damnatio, seems to be the censure of ones own Conscience: So in the Council of Laodicea, Can. 40. after an order that no Bishop shall disobey a citation, when he is called to a Council: 'tis added, εἰδὲ καταφρονήσειε ἑαυτὸν αἰτιάσηται, if he contemn, he shall be conceived to accuse himself, which is the next degree to self-condemnation. So in the 22. Can. of the African Codex, (or in Justellus his Account, the 19.) the words are clear of a Bishop that being accused before a Council appears not, αὐτὸς καθ' ἑαυτοῦ τὸ κατάκριμα τὴν ψῆφον ἐκφερωνηκέναι κριθήσεται, he shall be judged to have pronounced sentence of condemnation against himself, and so even in Philostratus, l. 7. c. 7. it is a saying of Apollonius, Ὃς ἐκλιπὼν τὸ δικάσασθαι, πῶς ἂν διαφύγοι τὸ μὴ οὐχ ἑφ' ἑαυτῷ ἁλῶναι, he that shall decline a judicature, how shall he avoid the being thought to have condemned himself? So in the 12. Tables, Praesenti litem addicito, i. e. that he that absents himself, be always cast; and so the Franks have always observed it, ut absens causâ caderet, ni Somnia nuntiasset, that the absent shall be alway condemned, unless he gave a just excuse of his absence. And the Regulæ ab Abbate Floricensi constitutæ, add, Qui non comparuerit, tanquam convictus judicabitur, he that appeareth not, shall be judged as convict, i. e. αὐτοκατάκριτος: The like phrase we find in Josephus, l. 2. c. 12. de Bell. Jud. Oaths, saith he, among them were wholly avoided, and counted worse than perjury, ἤδη γὰρ ἥδε παρὰ πᾶσι φασὶ τὸν ἀπιστούμενον ἄνευ θεοῦ, for he that is not believed without swearing, they say is already condemned, his very using an Oath, condemns him of lying. If you will see this interpretation more fully confirmed, I must refer you to Marculfi formul. l. 1. c. 37. and Bignonius on them, to Stephan. Fornerius rerum quotid. l. 6. c. 21. and out of him, Justellus, in the Notes on Cod. Ecclesiæ universæ, p. 38. But enough of this.

Sect. 92.

I shall take in no more places to examine for this point of the nature of this power, save only those in the Gospel (with which this discourse began) which, as we have once gone over in relation to the first enquiry, so we shall now again in order to the second.

Sect. 93.

First, then, Matth. 16. 19. δώσω σοὶ τὰς κλεῖς τῆς βασιλείας τῶν οὐρανῶν, [I will give you the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven] where 'twill be no news to him that is vers'd in the New Testament, if I tell him, that βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν, the kingdom of heaven, signifies the Church of Christ here below Militant, being not a disparate body, but a fellow-member of Christ, with the other triumphant in Heaven. I could weary my Reader with places to this purpose, ready at every turn to justifie this interpretation, as when 'tis said of St. John the Baptist, Mat. 11. 11. that though from the beginning there had not risen a greater than he, (a more than Prophet in pointing out rather than prophesying of Christ, ἴδε ἀμνὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ, Behold the Lamb of God) yet ὁ μικρότερος ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ τῶν οὐρανῶν, the least in this new Church, (this μέλλων αἰὼν---the age to come, as the Septuagint, Esay 9. 6. call it, and so Heb. 2. 5. οἰκουμένη μέλλουσα, the world to come, and perhaps Heb. 6. 5. δυνάμεις τοῦ μέλλοντος αἰῶνος, the powers of the age to come, i. e. of Christianity, and ἐρχομένη βασιλεία, the coming Kingdom, as the phrase in St. Mark 11. 10. may, I conceive, be rendred absolutely, absolutely, thus, εὐλογημένη ἡ ἐρχομένη βασιλεία ἐν ὀνόματι Κυρίου. Blessed in the name of the Lord of our father David, be the coming kingdom; or Blessed in the name of the Lord be the coming kingdom of our father David; this Church or kingdom of Christ here on earth, not hereafter in Heaven) the least believer, at least teacher of the Gospel here, (not Saint there) is greater than he. So Matth. 8.11. upon the Centurions coming to Christ, and expressing so great measure of faith, that he professes not to have found the like in any Jew, he adds, that Many shall come from the East, and West, all parts of the heathen world, and sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven, i.e. as that Centurion did, believe in Christ, (and become one Church with the Jews, of whom Abraham the Father of the faithful was the first) and the children of the kingdom (they that were till then the only Church, to wit, the rebellious unbelieving Jews) should be cast out. So clearly Ch. 13. 24. ὡμοιώθη ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν, the kingdom of Heaven, the Church here below, not the kingdom above, is likened, &c. For sure there are no enemies to sow, nor tares to be sown in Heaven, which in this kingdom are there said to be, ver. 25. (as Rev. 12,7. the War that is mentioned in Heaven, may be an argument that heaven in that place signifies the Church here below, which only being Militant can be said to have War in it) and so in the other Parables in that Chapter. I have named enough for an hint to any to observe many more in this Gospel, Chap. 18.1,3, 4. Chap. 19.24,25. Chap. 20. 1. Chap. 21. 43. and (which is a little nearer to the phrase in this place) Chap. 23. 13. the Pharisees shutting up the kingdom of heaven before men, i. e. keeping men from entring the Church from becoming Christians, and the like also in the other Gospels. If this notion of the kingdom of heaven do yet seem alien, or forced, or less proper for this place, then you may but please to observe, that a key refers to a lock, a lock to a door, or entrance to any place, and then the Church being supposed the door or gate, the only way of passage to Heaven, these keys of heaven it self must be the keys of the Church below, as of the door that leads thither, and then that will return to the same issue still.

Sect. 95. So then, Peter, and in him the rest of the Apostles and successor-governours of the Church had the keys of the Church given them, i e. clearly a power of shutting out, or receiving into the visible Militant Church, of removing the contumacious by censure of excommunication, and receiving in the humble penitents by absolution; and so of binding and loosing, (as it follows) ἐπὶ γῆς, here below, upon the earth, answerable to that acception of the βασιλεία τ̃ ὐρανῶν (for the Church) premised, and just agreeable to the phrase, Mark 2. 10. ἀφιέναι ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς ἁμαρτίας, to forgive sins on earth, which (it appears by the mentioning of the keys as the foundation of this power) signifies receiving men into the Church, disexcommunicating, and therefore the binding is there peculiarly the censure of excommunication, and nothing else; ὅπερ ἔδει δεῖξαι, the thing we undertook to shew from hence.

To this purpose an illustrious testimony we have in an Epistle of Eutychianus Bishop of Rome to all the Bishops in Sicily. Ann. Dom. 175. Quorum dimiseritis peccata, &c. i.e. Quibus Ecclesiam interdixeritis, nisi reconciliati per satisfactionem fuerint, ipsis janua regni cœlestis clausa erit. Whose sins you do remit, &c. i. e. whom you turn out of the Church, unless they be reconciled by satisfaction, the door of the heavenly Kingdom shall be shut against them, Bin. Tom. 1. Concil. f. 130.

Sect. 96. From whence, by the way, may be understood the meaning of that place, Matt. 12. 32. it shall not be forgiven him, (ἀφεθήσεται, impersonally) he shall not receive absolution, either in this world, i.e. in the Church from the Ecclesiastick censure, nor at the day of judgment, i.e. in the world to come, the phrase seeming to me to refer to that rule among the Jews mention'd before out of שלחן ערוך tr. de excom. Si quis juret in hunc modum, &c. If any man swear after this manner, [If this be not true, let me be excommunicated in this world, and in the other] and be perjur'd, he cannot be absolv'd by any: and then how ridiculous are they that ground a Purgatory on this place?

Sect. 97. We shall not need to make any distinct survey of the second place, Ch. 18. 18. because (as to the matter of this power, our present enquiry) it is verbatim (only the number and some little unimportant circumstances changed) the same with this former place, ὅσα δήσητε ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, & λύσητε ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, binding and loosing in the earthly part of the kingdom of heaven, the Church below. One thing only it will not be amiss again to add as an appendage common to these two places, (though we mention'd it before) and it is this, that [the ὅσα λύσητε] the mention of absolution is (in both) an attendant of the δήσητε or binding precedent, as indeed loosing generally presupposes a band, and therefore Acts 2. 24. (where we read, λύσας τὰς ὠδῖνας τοῦ θανάτου, and render it, loosed the pains of death) 'tis sufficiently clear, and confest that ὠδῖνες are there taken for δεσμοὶ or σχοινία (by the equivocalness of the Hebrew word חבל which signifies both, and is rendred by the 72. sometimes σχοινίον, a band, sometimes ὠδὶν, a pang of travail) and so should be rendred in that place, bands of death, in relation to which it follows, he could not be holden, &c. which intimates absolution to be in universum, or absolutely necessary only to those that have been bound, and so only after excommunication, the absolution proportion'd to the precedaneous censure, and that the only thing that lies upon any, necessitate præcepti here, or medii in any other respect, all other absolution, without this precedent binding censure, being (though it may be allowed very useful and profitable for the comfort and satisfaction of the penitent, yet) neither commanded, or prescribed the Priest to give, nor the penitent to receive (at least by either of these two places.)

Sect. 98. As for the third place, John 20.23. (which by some is thought to belong to somewhat else, rather than those censures of the Church, 1. because the phrases are other, ἀφίεναι and κρατεῖν, remitting and retaining, in stead of δῆσαι and λῦσαι, binding and loosing. 2. Because the ἀφῆτε, [remit] is before κρατῆτε, [retain.] And 3. because this is deliver'd to all the Apostles together, whereas the two other were spoken, only personally to Peter, the other of the Church) I in humility conceive, that, as before we shewed that this place in St. John belonged to the same persons to which the other two belonged, to wit, the Apostles and their succeeding rulers of the Church, so it is perfectly parallel to them also in respect of the matter of the Commission; and my reasons are these: 1. Because the phrases, though (as the first reason pretends) other in sound, are yet directly synonyma's with the former in the Scripture-style, I say that ἀφίεναι, to remit, is all one with λῦσαι, to loose, and κρατέω, to retain, with δέω, to bind. And therefore Theophylact uses together ἐξουσία ἀφιέναι καὶ δεσμεῖν -- power and remitting and binding, confounding the two places in St. John and St. Matt. together, and rendring κρατεῖν, to retain, by δεσμεῖν, to bind; and λύειν, to loose, by ἀφιέναι, to remit, in Matth. 16.19. and so promiscuously in other Writers. If there be the least difference, it is only this, that δέω signifies to bind, and κρατέω, to bind, bind, and alſo to keep bound; in which reſpect κρατέω is more proper here in St. John, becauſe the order is inverted, and κρατῆτε, retaining, put after ἀφῆτε, remitting, and ſo the word which ſignifies alſo [to keep bound] or to not-remit, is more perfectly and critically agreeable, than δέω to bind would have been; and yet when binding is mentioned firſt, δῆσαι as exact as κρατῆται, as in the other places. But yet for all this light accidental difference, I ſhall not retract ſaying, that the words are in uſe perfectly ſynonymous; ἀφῆτε, remit, and λύσητε, looſe, eſpecially as applyed to ſin; both ſignifie forgiving of it; the firſt as ſin is taken under the notion either of a debt, or a thraldom, (for ἀφίναι is in the New Teſtament applyed to both, to the one in the Lords Prayer, to the other, Luke 4. 18. and both directly oppoſed to κρατεῖν) the ſecond, as of a band; ſo in the Septuagints Tranſlation of the Old Teſtament, Gen. 4. 12. (μείζων ἡ αἰτία, perhaps falſe copyed for ἁμαρτία μὴ τοῦ ἀφεθῆναι, My ſin is greater than can be forgiven) or more clearly, Exod. 32.21. Εἰ μὲν ἄφες αὐτοῖς τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, if thou wilt, (or, O that thou wouldſt) forgive them that ſin, and in divers other places (ἀφίναι, remit) taken for forgive; and ſo in like manner λύειν, to looſe, Job 42.9. λῦσαι τὴν ἁμαρτίαν αὐτοῖς διὰ Ἰὼβ, (a Tranſlation of the words which are in Hebrew נשא פני איוב God accepted the perſon of Job praying for them) he forgave them that ſin by Job, i.e. by his mediation. There λύειν [to looſe] is taken for [to forgive.]

So alſo for δέω, and κρατέω, to bind, and to hold or retain, the ſame Hebrew word עצר is rendred Sect. 99.
by the Septuagint δέω (ὃν δεδεμένον) Jer. 33.1. and κρατέω, Dan. 10.8. and 11.6. and ſo Acts 2.24. [κρατεῖσθαι] being holden, is ſet oppoſite to (λύσας) looſing of bands, and ſo muſt ſignifie keeping bound, (and in almoſt all other places it ſignifies to hold faſt, or take hold of, Matt. 18.28. 21.46. 26.4. &c. and is ſometimes joyned with ἔδησαν, as holding faſt is precedaneous, and preparative to binding, Matt. 14.3. κρατήσας ἔδησε, laying hold on him, bound him, and Apoc. 20.2. ἐκράτησε καὶ ἔδησε, held and bound) and ſo κρατεῖν, though rendred to retain, is taken for δέω to bind alſo, (or if there be any difference, 'tis this, that it ſignifies leſs than binding, rather than more, and ſo will not conclude any thing which the former places were not able to conclude.) And ſo you may obſerve in the Fathers, viz. St. Baſil, ſpeaking of the freedom of Chriſtians in their bands, he ſaith they are κακεπιμόνοι ἀκράτητοι, bound, but not capable of binding, and many the like.

Secondly, becauſe the inverting of the order of words is too light and caſual a thing to be argu- Sect. 100.
mentative, and therefore the ſecond reaſon is of little force, being taken only from that change, for which yet ſome reaſonable account alſo may be given from the variety of the words, which cauſed this inverſion, and conſequently no more argument will be deducible from this change of order, than from the change of words would be juſt to deduce; If the change of the words would argue ought, then I confeſs the inverting of the order, cauſed by that, would per modum accumulationis do ſo too, but that being once cleared to import no new thing, this which is only attendant on that, cannot be thought to do ſo, and ſo there will be no need of farther anſwer to that, when the former hath been ſufficiently anſwered.

Thirdly, becauſe the third ground of ſcruple is as unconvincing alſo, the other two being delivered Sect. 101.
to all the Apoſtles alſo, as well as this: the firſt to all in St. Peters perſon, (as 'tis ordinary for Donations made to Communities to be delivered to one of that number for the uſe of all) as is acknowledged by all but thoſe, whoſe pretended intereſt in St. Peter hath bribed them to inflame his, and Decrep. Eccl. leſſen the other Diſciples prerogative, as much as they can. And the ſecond in plain words with a l. 5. c. 7. & 9. Preface of Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, Verily I ſay to you, i.e. to the Diſciples with whom the diſcourſe had continued by way of mutual colloquie from the beginning of the Chapter. This I am ſure is the affirmation of the Greek Fathers, particularly Theophylact on Matth. 16. where he affirms that promiſe of the power of binding and looſing to be fulfilled in thoſe words of Chriſt in St. John, whoſe ſins you do remit, &c. The place was formerly ſet down at large, and need not be repeated; and if you examine the word κρατέω, throughout the New Teſtament, you will have no temptation to doubt it.

Having now declared out of the Scripture the foundation and progreſs of this power, theſe cenſures, Sect. 102.
and occaſionally interweaved the interpretation of ſome places which I conceive to depend on this matter, it were now a fit ſeaſon to proceed to the writings of the antient Church, and draw down the hiſtory of this practice through the firſt and purer times: But that hath been ſo faithfully performed by many others, particularly by Spalatenſis, that it would be a great inſolence to attempt to do it better. Only it will be worth our rehearſing, (though we only refer you to that Magazin for all farther explication of it) that there were ſome nice differences obſerved in this matter between the binding which was a cenſure, and the other which was only a puniſhment, the one conceived to bind in heaven, the other not. 2. Betwixt the binding of the refractory impenitent, and the humble confitent penitent; the firſt for the cure and removing the ſcandal of ſome notorious crime; the ſecond on his voluntary confeſſing his crime, and ſubmitting himſelf to be bound by way of penance, that ſo by being looſed again, he might be the more ſure of that pardon in Heaven, which is promiſed to thoſe which are abſolv'd on earth, and ſo propter majorem cautelam, to ſatisfie the trembling conſcience, and aſſure it, that God hath forgiven him.

Theſe are excellent profitable ſubjects, in which I deſire the Reader will ſatisfie himſelf out of thoſe judicious Collections of that very learned unhappy man: and if it be now demanded of me, whether private abſolution be not contained under the importance of theſe places? I anſwer, that this laſt diſtinction hath in effect anſwered this queſtion, and defined, that in caſe of private binding, it doth come under it, and that that, though in ſome ſence it be left ad libitum, or voluntary to the penitents will or choice, is yet neceſſary to every one whoſe conſcience either is not able to perform and go through the work of inward repentance with God alone, or is not able to ſatisfie it ſelf with ſuch performance without the Miniſters aſſiſtance called in.

To which purpoſe I ſhall deſire that that may be conſidered which is delivered by our Church in the Sect. 103.
ſecond Exhortation before the Communion, in theſe words, Becauſe it is requiſite that no man ſhould come to the holy Communion but with a full truſt in Gods mercy, and with a quiet conſcience, therefore if there be any of you, which by the means aforeſaid, (which were, to examine their lives by the rule of Gods Commandments, and wherein they ſhall perceive themſelves to have offended, either by will, word, or deed, there to bewail their own ſinful lives, and confeſs themſelves to Almighty God with full purpoſe of amendment: and if their offences be alſo againſt their neighbours, then to reconcile themſelves to thoſe, with readineſs to make reſtitution reſtitution and ſatisfaction for wrong done, and to forgive others that have offended them) cannot quiet his own conſcience, but requireth farther comfort or counſel, then let him come to me (i.e. his lawful Paſtor) or ſome other diſcreet and learned Miniſter of Gods Word, and open his grief, that he may receive ſuch ghoſtly counſel, advice, and comfort, as his conſcience may be relieved, and that by the miniſtery of Gods Word he may receive comfort, and the benefit of abſolution, to the quieting of his conſcience, and avoiding all ſcruple and doubtfulneſs. All which being an exhortation of the Church belonging to a particular caſe, [when a man by the uſe of all helps which are within his own reach, cannot attain to quiet of Conſcience, or be ſatisfied that he is fit to receive the holy Communion;] as they do imply that thoſe foreſaid means may happily ſerve the turn, without opening his caſe to the Miniſter, and conſequently without receiving abſolution, ſo are they a fervent exhortation to all, in caſe thoſe means prove not ſucceſsful, to ſeek out, and make uſe of thoſe auxiliaries, which whoſoever in that caſe ſhall neglect, will be guilty of great unkindneſs to his own ſoul, and may well be thought to have betrayed it to great and needleſs danger. And it is worthy our noting from hence, that receiving of comfort, and the benefit of abſolution are by our Church here conjoyned, to ſignifie this abſolution to be beneficial to him that once wanted comfort, as a means of confirming that comfort which the Miniſter had now given him. To which end certainly 'tis very proper and ſeaſonable; for when a diſcreet, and learned Miniſter, having had the ſurvey of my ſoul, (the cognizance of my offence firſt, and then of my repentance) ſhall from the Word of God give me aſſurance, that (if I am what to him I appear to be) my eſtate is good, and thereupon pronounce me abſolv'd, as a true penitent from all my ſins; this will 1. ſeal me a right of Gods promiſe of forgiveneſs in Heaven, as it were ſolemnly and in the Court; and 2. extreamly quiet me, and confirm to me that comfort, i.e. that comfortable opinion of my good eſtate, and hope of my future happineſs, which he had given me, when I ſee him who hath no reaſon to be partial to me, and whom I cannot ſuſpect of ignorance, or paſſion in this particular, (both which perhaps I may upon enquiry diſcern in my ſelf) and beſide, who is ſet over me by Chriſt to this purpoſe, pronounce ſo clear a ſentence of me, and that (as the precedent words are) by the miniſtry of Gods Word, i.e. by applying peculiar parts of that infallible truth to the preſent condition of my Soul; and from thence pronouncing my abſolution. And that this is the meaning of the abſolution there, it is evident by that which is the ſecond thing, which I thought worthy our obſerving from hence, viz. what is added in concluſion, as the ultimate end of that comfort and abſolution, the quieting of conſcience, and avoiding of all ſcruple and doubtfulneſs; which whether they be diſtinct, ſo that the quieting of conſcience may be the completion of the comfort, and the avoiding of all ſcruple and doubtfulneſs, the end intended in, and obtained by abſolution, or whether both together indiſcretè belong to both together, the product will be ſtill the ſame, that in caſe a man be not able to ſatisfie his own ſcruples, and doubts concerning himſelf, the Presbyter will be able to ſtand him in good ſtead, by the Word of God applyed to his caſe to give comfort, and by pronouncing abſolution to him to ſeal that comfort, and perſwade him to a greater confirmation of mind, that that comfort is not groundleſs, and ſo take away doubts and ſcruples concerning that matter which before moleſted him, and made him unfit for the communion, which was the only occaſion of the exhortation.

Sect 103. Beſide this, it is alſo true, that in caſe of ſickneſs St. James's advice (if not command) is punctual, that the Presbyters of the Church be called for, and that they ſhall anoint the ſick (a ceremony uſed in thoſe days by Chriſt and his Apoſtles in the curing of diſeaſes, and caſting out devils, not ſo much as a viand toward our laſt great journey, as among the Romaniſts 'tis continued, but either as a ſign of our Spiritual cure, or as a means ſanctified by prayer to cure the ſick, to deliver from the diſeaſe in the beginning of the verſe) καὶ ἁμαρτίας ᾖ πεποιηκώς, ἀφεθήσεται αὐτῷ, and if he be one that have committed ſins, abſolution ſhall be given him; for ſo that phraſe will be moſt grammatically rendred [not they ſhall be forgiven him] for then it would be ἀφεθήσονται, nor that [God ſhall forgive him] for then it would be ἀφήσει, to agree with, ἐγερεῖ Κύριος immediately precedent, the Lord ſhall raiſe him, but perſonally remittetur ei, he ſhall have abſolution. Of which abſolution 1. There is little queſtion, but that it is a very proper preparative to curing of his diſeaſe, which is oft ſent to awake ſome drowſie ſinner, and is not removed till it have done the work in ſome meaſure, Eccluſ. 38. 9, 10. and therefore the ordinary preface to Chriſts cures, is [Son thy ſins are forgiven thee] as 2 Mac. 3. when Heliodorus had been ſo ſcourged for his ſacrilegious enterprize, and the high Prieſt offered ſacrifice for his recovery, ver. 32. the Prieſt is ſaid to have made an Atonement, and thereupon God granted him his life, ver. 33 and ſo Eccluſ. 2. 11. before Gods delivering in time of tribulation, there is firſt his ἄφησιν ἁμαρτίας, remitting of ſins, before releaſing from the preſſure; and ſecondly, that abſolution, as it is the Miniſters act peculiarly, and an act of benediction in him, contrary to the execration in the Cherem, or anathema, may well be thought in common reaſon to have benign influence on the Patient, as the curſes of Parents are generally believed to be fatal curſes, Δειναὶ γὰρ κατὰ γαῖαν Ἐρίννυες εἰσὶ τοιῶν, in Orpheus, the curſes of Parents are ſhrewd furies that haunt a man where-ever he goes on the earth, have an inauſpicious influence on all his earthly proſperities, devour and eat out his patrimony; and ſo alſo by the rule of contraries, the bleſſings of Parents, Eccluſ. 3. 9. may avail toward the removing of temporal calamities, and ſo conſequently, the prayers and bleſſings, and abſolution of the Presbyter the ſpiritual father. Thirdly, there will be as little queſtion who ſhall be the Miniſter of it, when 'tis conſidered that there is no ſuppoſition or preſumption in that place of the preſence of any, but only of the πρεσβύτεροι τῆς ἐκκλησίας, the Presbyters of the Church, and as little will there be of the fitneſs, and exceeding expedience, that the ſins, of which he is ſo peculiarly to receive abſolution, ſhould be confeſſed, and bewailed before him, from whom the abſolution is expected. One thing only the context may perhaps farther import, that this Presbyterial abſolution may not be (by force of that place) ſo abſolutely neceſſary to all ſick perſons, but only to the ἁμαρτίας πεποιηκώς, to him that hath (formerly, and ſo as upon examination of himſelf, he may reaſonably impute his ſickneſs to it) committed ſins, either as the word ἁμαρτίας denotes greater ſins, or as ſins contrary to our duty towards God, whoſe Miniſter the Presbyter is, or as ποιεῖν ἁμαρτίαν ſignifies to live indulgently in ſin, and ſo as it is not reconcileable with a * regenerate eſtate, as long as it continues. For 'tis worth obſerving what follows in that place, James 5. 16. Confeſs τὰ παραπτώματα your tranſgreſſions ἀλλήλοις to one another, one brother, i.e. Chriſtian, to another, the ſick to them in health, as πάντες ἀλλήλοις ὑποτάσσεσθε, Be ye all ſubject

* He that is born of God, ὁ ποιῶν ἁμαρτίαν, doth not commit ſin, 1 John 3. 9.

to one another, 1 Pet. 5. 5. i. e. all that are inferiours to all superiours. Where, whether παράπτωμα signifie a treſpaſs peculiarly againſt our brethren, or whether (as 'tis reſolved by Grammarians) lapſes, or lighter ſins, it ſeems to be here ſet in a diſtance from (if not oppoſite to) ἁμαρτίας, the greater ſins, or thoſe againſt God; and then as the confeſſion of them to the Presbyter, God's Officer, will in any reaſon be moſt proper, to obtain comfort on ſafe grounds, and the benefit of abſolution upon ſincere repentance; ſo in thoſe ſins of an inferiour rank confeſſion to the wronged brother, or to what-ever fellow-Chriſtian, may poſſibly be ſufficient; and aſſuredly not unuſeful or unneceſſary, if it be but for the obtaining of the brothers united prayers, to help to remove the ſickneſs, if that be inflicted (as oft ſickneſſes are) as a puniſhment for any ſuch treſpaſſes. In which caſe as the promiſe is there given of recovery to the ſick upon thoſe other mens prayers, and not otherwiſe, ſo there is little hope that God will accept thy private prayers for removing that puniſhment, till thou go, and reconcile thy ſelf unto thy brother, and deſire and obtain his prayers for thee, (as Job's for his friends) when thy injuring of him had cryed to heaven, and fetch'd down that *inflictio*n on thee.

Nay thirdly, there will be little matter of doubt, or controverſie, but that private, frequent, ſpi- Sect. 104.
ritual conference betwixt fellow-Chriſtians, but eſpecially (and in matters of high concernment and difficulty) between the Presbyter and thoſe of his charge, even in the time of health; and peculiarly, that part of it which is ſpent in the diſcuſſion of every man's ſpecial ſins and infirmities, and inclinations may prove very uſeful and advantageous (in order to ſpiritual directions, reproof and comfort) to the making the Man of God perfect. And to tell truth, if the pride and ſelf-conceit of ſome, the wretchleſneſs of others, the baſhfulneſs of a third ſort, the nauſeating, and inſtant fatiety of any good in a fourth, the follies of men, and artifices of Satan had not put this practice quite out of faſhion among us, there is no doubt, but more good might be done by Miniſters this way, than is now done by any other means ſeparated from the uſe of this, particularly than by that of publick preaching, (which yet need not be neglected the more when this is uſed) which hath now the fate to be cryed up, and almoſt ſolely depended on, it being the likelier way, as Quintilian ſaith, (comparing publick and private teaching of youth) to fill narrow-mouth'd bottles (and ſuch are the moſt of us) by taking them ſingle in the hand, and pouring in water into each, than by ſetting them all together, and throwing never ſo many buckets of water on them.

I conceive, I have now diſtinctly ſet down the full importance of this power of binding and looſing, Sect. 105.
and how it belongs peculiarly to the publick cenſures of the Church, the binding by way of excommunication, or depriving of the common benefits of Chriſtians, (together with that branch of corporal diſcipline, or inflictions on mens bodies, peculiar to the Apoſtles times and power) and the looſing, in reſtoring the excommunicate perſon upon repentance to the Aſſembly of the Saints. And by this perhaps may be received ſome ſatisfaction to that queſtion agitated ſometimes, whether Abſolution in the Church be only declarative, or moreover miniſterially authoritative, which queſtion will not now have ſo much place, the matter being thus ſtated. For the Churches abſolution being not the actual eternal pardon of ſins in Heaven, (which is left to be God's work, none but he juſtifying ſinners, except by way of conſequent upon this promiſe of God's) but peculiarly the freeing of the penitent from Eccleſiaſtical cenſures here below, and from that other farther obligation that aroſe from the Churches binding, there will be no matter of doubt, but as the Governour of the Church authoritatively by commiſſion from Chriſt, preacheth the Word, adminiſtreth Sacraments, and inflicts cenſures, ſo he may authoritatively too, abſolve on earth, free from puniſhments in the Church inflicted on ſinners, without any neceſſity of interpoſing, or medling (ſave only indirectly, or as I ſaid, by way of conſequence) with that which is due from God to them in another World; to which purpoſe 'tis ordinarily obſervable in the Canons of the Councils, that à pace Eccleſia arceri, being driven from the peace of the Church, is the expreſſion of being excommunicated, and pacem dari, is to be received into communion again. In other places we find both together, Communio pacis, communion of peace, all noting that, which excommunication deprived them of, to be the peace or favour, or pardon of the Church peculiarly, and not Gods peace or pardon, or favour directly, but either by ſuppoſing the perſon fit to be ſo dealt with, to be formerly deprived by God of that, or by way of conſequence accidentally, more ſurely faſtning him under God's diſfavour, if this wrought not on him, the good deſired effect of reformation. Concil. Eliber. Can. 61. Can. 47.

To all which, by way of Corollary I ſhall add, that the bare binding of the Church (abſtracted from Sect. 106. our contempt of, and perverſe ſtanding out againſt it) cannot damn any which is not otherwiſe (and if he were not thus bound) in a damnable eſtate, that is, hath not any real influence on his damnation (ſave only to bind him farther to it, in caſe he doth not ſubmit to it) diſtinct from that which proceeds from his ſin, upon which he is bound, and from his refractorineſs continued in, in deſpight of this cenſure, (which no doubt may make his caſe more highly dangerous, as the word is the ſavour of death to them that believe not) but is rather a means tending, as it is deſigned, to the ſaving of him, as in the next Chapter ſhall appear.

On the other ſide looſing on earth, or the abſolution of the Church ſhall not free any impenitent un- Sect. 107.
reformed ſinner, in foro cœli, i. e. obtain pardon for any that is not contrite, (much leſs turn attrition into contrition, as the Romaniſts, or a votum pœnitentiæ, a wiſhing we were penitent into penitence, as others dream) but will rather be a means of damning him the deeper, of betraying him to, and hardning him in an impenitent eſtate, who is abſolved, or freed from under that diſcipline before he be reform'd; which therefore the Church in pure Charity to the man is bound not to do, but to continue him under the puniſhment till it produce the reformation.

CHAP. V.

Sect. 1. FOR the third enquiry, the end or use to which this binding is designed, &c. there will not be so much occasion to enlarge; 'tis speedily stated by answering that the whole end, aim, design, in inflicting of publick Church-censures, may be reduced to these three heads: 1. νουθεσία, for reformation of the offender: 2. ἀποκατάστασις, the repairing, or making up the honour of the Church, which suffered by him: and 3. παράδειγμα, that others may be warned by the example of his punishment, and not corrupted by example of his sin, but especially to reform those by these sharper methods, which no other calmer means of admonitions will work on, to cut off that member that balsams will not cure, or keep from gangrening, according to that of the writer of the Answers Ad Orthodox. Ὅτι δὲ τῆς μακροθυμίας τῶν ὑβριζομένων ὁ χρόνος διορθώσεως, τότε ἡ ἀποτομία τῆς μακροθυμίας τοῖς ἀδιορθώτοις ἔσται χρησιμωτέρα, when by long-suffering offenders are not reformed, then excision to them which are not corrigible, is more useful than clemency. For both those distant ways, 1. of application of Plaisters, and 2. of excision, are the same Physicians methods of preserving the whole, and proportionably to them the ministration of the Word and Sacraments are the Churches first method, and when that fails to produce its effect, this other of censure is the second, (and upon the good working of that, Absolution) wherein the Governours of the Church are as truly σύνεργοι, or co-workers with Christ, to bring back sons unto God, as they are to beget them in the preaching of the Word.

Sect. 2. To which purpose you may see and observe what the Apostle constantly adds to his sentences of binding, or excommunication, or delivering up to Satan, ἵνα σωθῇ τὸ πνεῦμα, 1 Cor. 5. 5. the destruction of the flesh, that the Spirit may be saved, &c. So of Hymenæus and Alexander, 1 Tim. 1. 20. I have delivered them up to Satan, ἵνα παιδευθῶσι μὴ βλασφημεῖν, that they may be disciplined, instructed, taught not to blaspheme, or resist contumaciously, whence the word παιδεύεσθαι, (which we render taught) in a common notion, may perhaps be more critically taken in a notion peculiar to this purpose, by way of reference to the punishments amongst the Jews. For of the four punishments put into Esdras's hand by Artaxerxes, Esd. 7. 26 the second (rendred by us banishment, but in Heb. eradication, i.e. saith Schindler, casting out of his inheritance) is in the Septuagint παιδεῦσαι, and so vulgarly παιδεία for discipline or punishment, but there peculiarly for distermination, and so the fitter to express, this turning out of the Church, this Church-banishment, or distermination: So 2 Thess. 3. 14. μὴ συναναμίγνυσθαι αὐτῷ, ἵνα ἐντραπῇ, the end of Excommunication is again, that he may be ashamed, that he may see himself alone, no company but the devil thought bad enough for him, and so be brought to sense and shame of his own vileness, which is the most necessary preparative to Reformation; and therefore, to signifie it an act of mercy and charity, of all other the greatest, (though under the shew of severity and wrath) it follows in that place, verse 15. Καὶ μὴ ὡς ἐχθρὸν ἡγεῖσθε ἀλλὰ νουθετεῖτε ὡς ἀδελφόν, Count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother, and therefore Matth. 18. 18. the doctrine of binding, &c. is used as a means of exemplifying that great Evangelical truth, verse 11. that Christ came σῶσαι τὸ ἀπολωλός to save, rescue, deliver, reduce that which was lost, i.e. impenitent sinners, or those, that the soft ministry of the Word would do no good on.

Sect. 3. For there being (among others) two principal means of continuing men in sin. 1. In some an opinion, that Christian profession, or the bare being Christians (however qualified, or demeaning themselves) will stand them in stead, and prove sufficient; or if not so, yet the creditableneß of an unchristian, impious life, so long as they may be allowed but the Christian name (mens general design being to get the praise of men, not of God.) 2. In others a mistaking sorrow or attrition, or any the most slight wish that they were penitent, for that repentance which Christ calls for, and accepts and crowns: It follows hence, that unless men may be driven out of these false holds, they will never set themselves aright in the way to that great work, and therefore proportionable to these two heads, are the two exercises of the power of the Keys designed, the first to turn the Christian professor, that will go on in sin, quite out of all society of Christianity, not allowing him the privileges of his Christianity, the Word, the Sacraments, &c. unless he will walk worthy of so honourable a vocation; the second to set him his task of repentance, to prescribe him some κρίσεις and probations, by which he shall be discerned, whether he be in earnest contrite and willing to make his peace with Heaven, to take any the most laborious course to approve himself to Christ. The former of these in the act of excommunication, the latter in imposing the penance, upon which he shall be received again, and both together to bring sinners to repentance.

Sect. 4. When sinners by obstinacy provoke God, 'tis his manner to withdraw his grace, to deliver them up to themselves, (a worse kind of devil or Satan) that by this means they may see their former forlorn condition, their vileness first, and then their danger, and so he uses to bring the secure, proud sinner to humility, to the use of prayer, and wrestling with God, to raise him out of this sad estate. And so the Church in like manner by Christs direction withdraws the benefits and privileges of Christians, from those whom it judges contumacious, delivers them up to plain barbarousneß and heathenism, deals with them, as God did with Nebuchadnezzar driving him from the Court into the Wilderness, transforming him into the shape of a very beast; and all to this end, that his understanding might by that means return to him, the field teach him lessons of piety, whom the palace could not. Agreeable to which is that of Pletho upon Zoroaster, Αἱ ποιναὶ ἤτοι αἱ κολάσεις δαίμονες, ἀγχόνῃσι τὴν ἀνθρώπων ὕβριν, ἤτοι συνεχλικαὶ τῷ ἀπάγειν τῆς κακίας αὐτὸς, τῇ ἀρετῇ ἐγκαταδῦσαι. The revengeful devils or furies do gripe men to bring them off from sin, and set them on vertue.

Sect. 5. And then as afflictions are one of Gods engines and stratagems to besiege, enter, and take the soul, (when he slew them, they sought him, saith the Psalmist) So among the Apostles were those corporal inflictions, diseases, &c. superadded on purpose to make the impression more violent, and to work more effectually on their hearts.

The

The effectualneſs of which we may diſcern in one of the degrees of penitents in the ancient Church, Sect. 6.
namely προσκλαίοντες, whom we find weeping and howling in the Church-porch, not permitted to come in, lying without, for them that enter'd to tread on in their paſſage, which was certainly a means to make them prize thoſe benefits more dearly, which they ſaw themſelves interdicted, and others partakers of, and withal to read them a Lecture of their own unworthineſs, ſeeing themſelves of the number of thoſe dogs and evil workers that are without.

The ſecond end which I named, was the repairing the honour and dignity of the Church, which con- Sect. 7.
ſiſting in the purity of the lives of Chriſtian profeſſors, is neceſſarily loſt both in the opinion of God, and men, (eſpecially thoſe which are without) by the impieties and unchriſtian actions of many which are called by Chriſts Name, which is therefore by the Apoſtle ſaid to be blaſphemed or evil ſpoken of, when Chriſtians fall into any notorious ſins, and then there is no way to recover the reputation of the Church, and even of the Chriſtian Religion, and in a kind of Chriſt himſelf, but by expreſſing the wrath and diſpleaſure of the Church againſt thoſe, who walk thus inordinately, and ſo proclaiming unto all, that Chriſtianity is not a Doctrine (as Zoſimus, and Celſus, and Julian miſtook it) of ſecurity or impunity to any ſort of impenitents, but of ſtrict, preciſe, exact purity, though ſome ungracious perſons walk contrary to thoſe preſcriptions: This is the only tabula poſt naufragium, plank or means of relief, when the fame and good name of the Church is thus ſhipwracke, and ſo fit to be deſigned in the ſecond place.

A third gain and profit deſigned by theſe cenſures is the warning and admoniſhing of others; not Sect. 8. leſt they ſhould be polluted by preſence among the prophane, as they that toucht the unclean thing were polluted under the Law, (any farther than by the ſpreading, leprous quality of their example) which is the common errour of the proud faſtidious Phariſees of all ages, and is clearly confuted by Saint Paul, 1 Cor. 5. 10. (where the μὴ συναναμίγνυσθαι is not extended to Heathen fornicators, which ſure would be able to pollute by ſociety as much as Chriſtian ſinners) and by Clemens or that ancient Author under his name, Conſtit. Ap. l. 2. c. 14. who hath a notable place to fortifie againſt this miſtake, ſpeaking of thoſe which (ἀνηλεῶς λέγουσι μὴ δεῖν τοιούτοις συμμολύνεσθαι, ὡσὰν λόγῳ κοινωνεῖν) unmercifully affirm that men ought not to pollute themſelves by accompanying with ſinners, nor converſe with them, αὐτὰ γὰρ ἃ συμβαίνει ἀγνοοῦντων ἐστὶ θεὸν, καὶ τὴν αὐτοῦ σοφίαν, ἀλόγων καὶ κτηνῶν, καὶ θηρίων ἀμιλίκτων, ἃ γὰρ γινώσκουσιν ὅτι χρὴ φυλάσσεσθαι ἃ τὴν ἐν λόγῳ κοινωνίαν οὐδεὶς πω ἐμαρτύρησε, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἐν ἔργῳ) For ſuch reaſonings ſavour of men that know not God and his providence, of unreaſonable judges, and untamed beaſts. For they obſerve not that the communion with ſinners that muſt be avoided, is not that of converſing with, but imitating of them, not ſpeaking, but doing with them.

But the deſign is to ſet a brand upon ſuch ſins, which otherwiſe might haply be thought imitable, and inſenſibly grow into faſhion, and ſo infect, and pollute, were not men thus told of their uglineſs, ſhew'd their deformity, and forewarn'd of their danger, which is ſure another act of mercy to all eaſie, ſeducible ſpectators, to the Church it ſelf, and to him whoſe ſcandalous ſins are by this means hindred from being damners of other men.

And as the cenſures themſelves, ſo the inexorableneſs, or at leaſt, difficulty of ſome Ages, (of Ca- Sect. 10.
nons of Councils, and practice of Churches) in granting of abſolution to penitents, that alſo hath been deſigned out of pure charity to help multiply their fruits of repentance, to ſet a value on Gods Ordinances, to quicken their zeal, to demonſtrate their ſincerity both to others and to their own ſouls, each of which might perhaps be miſſing, if abſolution were over-eaſily obtainable.

All which the more it is weighed, (how this inſtitution of Chriſts, (beſides that, as 'tis ſo, it ought Sect. 11. not to be neglected) is an act of ſpecial Chriſtian charity in not ſuffering ſin upon thy neighbour, but in any wiſe rebuking him, Levit. 19. 17.) the more reproachful will it be to this age of ours, the more bitter Paſquin, and laſting σηλιτεύτικον, when it ſhall be told in Gath and Askalon, that for ſome years the arts of ſome uncharitable men have ſo prevailed, that all exerciſe of this inſtitution of Chriſt hath been caſt and kept out of this Church of ours; the firſt, I think, that is recorded ſince Chriſt's time to have continued any conſiderable ſpace without Liberty of uſing that power of the Keys in excommunication, left unto the Church by Chriſt. The Lord be merciful to us in this matter.

As for them who either look upon this in others (or uſe it themſelves) as a matter of ſecular ad- Sect. 12.
vantage, or accruement either of power or gain to the rulers of the Church, and ſo as a carnal deſign or engine diſguiſed in the ſhape of a ſpiritual inſtitution, and on that ground either are willing by their calumnies to help rend it out of the hands of the Church, or being themſelves in place, either by paſſion, or miſtake, or ſloth betray it to the odium and cenſure of other men (whoſe ſhortneſs of diſcourſe cannot ſeparate the order from the perſon, or the abuſe from the inſtitution) I ſhall ſuppoſe they will change their minds, and their practices, when I ſhall have given them one advertiſement, which I may hope to do more effectually, not only by putting them in mind of Saint Chryſoſtoms judgment, who in this very matter having reſolv'd ὅτι μεγάλη ἡ τῶν ἱερέων ἀξία, &c. that the ſacerdotal dignity in pardoning and retaining of ſins is very great, expreſſes that preſently by this only way of probation, that a Prieſt if he live never ſo well himſelf, if he be not accurately careful of other mens lives, μετὰ τῶν πονηρῶν δεῖ τὴν γέενναν ἄπεισι, he bears thoſe wicked men (which he reform'd not) company to hell; and often when he is not betrayed by his own, he periſhes by other mens ſins, if he have not done all things rightly, which may tend to their recovery, and in that, ſounds all the reſpect and obedience that Saint Paul requires to be paid to the ἡγούμενοι: But alſo, and eſpecially if I preſent it to them in a brief paraphraſe of one place of Scripture, which by miſtake and raſh judgment, is wont to be produced againſt all exerciſe of power in Churchmen, but being rightly weighed, as it doth not take away the power which we only plead for, that of exerciſing charity, of diſciplining, reforming, i. e. doing the greateſt good to thoſe that are placed under us, ſo will it teach every man (to whom that power is intruſted) to learn nothing but meekneſs and diligence, and all kind of Chriſtian temper from the condition and peculiarity of this honour, and authority of his.

The place is that known Text, Matth. 20. I ſhall deduce it from the beginning of the ſence, and Sect. 13. lay it plain before you, Verſe 21. The mother of Zebedees children (having heard by her ſons of the promiſe made to the Diſciples by Chriſt, Matth. 19. 28. that they ſhould have the dignity of ſo many φυλάρχαι, which among the Jews, was a dignity next unto the Regal) petitions Chriſt in the behalf of her two ſons, whom ſhe conceived favoured by him above all the reſt, judging it by the expreſſions to them two, and Saint Peter; and her petition was this; That (ſeeing in the equality of that dignity promiſed to all, there might be yet, nay (if it were according to the old Jewiſh pattern, where the πρωτεῖα belong'd to Judah and Joſeph) muſt be ſome kind of inequality, at leaſt a precedence of ſome before others) her ſons that he had ſhewed ſuch ſpecial kindneſs to, might have that favour by

22. him conferr'd on them. Jeſus repreſſes her demand by telling her, ſhe is miſtaken in the kind of dignity that ſhould be inſtated upon his Diſciples, 'twas not ſuch a one as in any worldly reſpects, would prove very deſirable, but a place of great burthen, ſubject to great perſecutions, and even death it ſelf, of which indeed her ſons ſhould undoubtedly taſte, as Hiſtories teſtifie they did. If this would
23. not ſatisfie her, then let her know her importunity ſhould gain nothing; for * the diſpoſing of any ſuch honours was to be according as God the Father had determined it, and although all power were conferred upon the ſon by the father, yet there was ſmall hope that the ſon ſhould thwart God the Fathers deſtination in any ſuch act of dignifying any. This was fully ſatisfactory to the woman, and therefore ſhe (nor her ſons) reply not; But the reſt of the Diſciples upon advertiſement what had paſt, begin to mock the two brethren, and ſo there is another tempeſt raiſed which Chriſt muſt alſo calm; and therefore to this indignation of the Diſciples (not now to the ambitious requeſt of the mother, or brethren) he accommodates an anſwer; that they need not be offended at the ambition of thoſe
24. brethren; for if they had had their deſires, they had been but ſmall gainers by it; for in Chriſt's
25. Kingdom preeminence ſignified (or brought along with it) no great ſecular felicity, (ſuch as was to be found among Heathen Emperours (the great ones) and Princes, that being under them, and over others, ὠφελοῦντο ὑπ' ἀνδρῶν, in Xenophons preface to his Κύρου Παιδεία, were ſerved and benefited by their ſubjects, This is the manner of the King, 1 Sam. 8. 11. all Kings among the Nations receiving tributes and the like from their ſubjects, and by them being maintained in all that ſplendor and greatneſs that belonged to them, all their pomp, and expences of their Families and Courts being fetcht out of their ſubjects purſes and perſons, which, ſaith Samuel there, would make them think their preſent eſtate, wherein God was their King, much better to them, ver. 18. And this is meant by δυναστεύειν, ver. 28. having and uſing their power in order to their own profits, κατακυριεύοντες, behaving themſelves as lords and maſters over ſo many ſervants, (like thoſe Nehem. 5. 15. where the following word ἐξουσιάζειν is uſed) but quite contrary, an office of burthen, and pains, and humility, and doing of ſervice, (as
26. Saint Mark reads it more clearly, not ἴσον, but ἴσται, Chap. 10. 43. ſhall be your Miniſter) and he that will have that preeminence, muſt provide himſelf for that task, by the qualifications which are moſt agreeable to that, and count of that way both of acquiring and enjoying it, for otherwiſe it will not be had; (and upon theſe terms you need not envy them it) as you may gueſs by Chriſt himſelf, whoſe kingdom in this world was of this nature, not adminiſtred in that way as might bring in ſplendour or profit to himſelf, but in acts of charity, miniſtring of all kinds of grace, enduring, and ſerving, and dying for his people, and not requiring that ſervice, thoſe offices from them, as other Kings have done.

Sect. 14. This excludes not Diſciples of Chriſt from power, (for he regulates them by his own example, and no farther, and he, we know, was not only as God, King of kings, and Lord of lords, but as θεάνθρωπος, had all power given unto him in heaven and in earth, and in this his ſtate of condeſcenſion here, he was a Maſter over his Diſciples; and when he was called Good maſter, although he asked, why he called him good? yet the title of Maſter he diſclaims not, nay tells them clearly that they did well, who called him Maſter, and Κύριε, Lord, Joh. 13. 13.) but ſhews the lot that was like to befall them, the ſame that did him, whoſe greatneſs was expreſt in humility, and charity, and patience, and offices of ſervitude, and ſo the greater any of them ſhould be, the greater portion of theſe ſhould be expected from them, as the appendage of their greatneſs; which conſideration fully makes up the τὸ λογικὸν, or rational importance of the place, which was to be anſwer ſatisfactory, 1. to the ambition of the two brethren, by diſabuſing them; 2. to the envy or indignation of the reſt, by ſhewing, that this preeminence was no fit object for any ones envy, but pity rather.

Sect. 15. As for the uſe of κατακυριεύειν, 'twill be beſt rendred to lord it, to play the lord, and the importance of that, diſcerned by the word δυναστεύειν that follows, verſe 28. or if you will by comparing it with 1 Pet. 5. verſe 3. where 'tis explained by that which precedes in the ſame ſence, verſe 2. by feeding, or governing (for ſo ποιμαίνειν ſignifies) ἀναγκαστῶς, by force, or violence, ἀισχροκερδῶς, to make gain filthy, unlawful gain, of the flock, which is all one with δυναστεύειν, (as in the Goſpel, heathen Kings did over their people) contrary to that of ruling others by ſhewing them his own exemplary obedience, ſetting them patterns to tranſcribe, which certainly is the Clergy-mans duty, (and beſt way of ruling, if it may poſſible prevail) ὁ δεῖ μὴ πλήκτην, μὴ αἰσχροκερδῆ, who muſt be no ſtriker, no covetous perſon, Titus 1. 17. and to the ſame purpoſe, 1 Tim. 3. 3, 4, 5. and ſo ſure 2 Cor. 1. 24. Κυριεύειν ſignifies imperious behaviour in any kind, as there over mens faith, very contrary to meek, gentle perſwaſion, the method that Saint Paul and all followers of him ought to uſe, and I ſhall never excuſe them if they do not.

Sect. 16. All which I ſuppoſe not impertinent (as to juſtifie the authority, ſo) to limit and regulate the uſe of that, and determine it to that one Chriſtian ſpiritual end, the reforming and winning, and ſaving of ſouls; a thing of all other the moſt contrary to oppreſſing or violating, invading or tyrannizing over them, in brief (to them which have need of it) the only ſeaſonable mercy and Charity in the World, thus in any wiſe to reprove, and not hate or ſuffer ſin upon my brother.

Sect. 17. For the other part of the ſecond enquiry, who are the objects of theſe cenſures, ſubjected to the power of the keys by Chriſt, I anſwer, 1. Negatively, that the ſupreme Magiſtrate in every Kingdom is exempted from it, not only à poſteriori, becauſe the offering him up to ſhame and contumely (which is the work of excommunication) would be a certain means to expoſe him to the contempt of his ſubjects, and ſo be in danger to diſſolve and ſhake the peace and ſetled Government of a Kingdom, (which I ſuppoſe to have been the deſign of that peſtilent Romiſh Hildebrandine or Gregorian Doctrine,

* οὐκ ἔστιν ἐμὸν δοῦναι ἀλλ' οἷς ἡτοίμασται. It is not mine to give, ſave to whom it is prepared, &c.

Doctrine, that the Subjects of an excommunicate Prince were discharged from their allegiance, which was but a small encrease of the former doctrine (if that were supposed true) of Christs placing a power in the hands of the Church to excommunicate Princes, for from the concession of that, the other would generally follow of its own accord, and need no new doctrine to help it forward, the universal distemper of mens passions being a sufficient encouragement to the many, to cast off allegiance to those persons which they conceive themselves taught by Christ, and so by Christianity appointed to despise;) but also à priori, because Christ found the World disposed by his Father, in a regular subjection of all men, to the powers placed over them (and those higher powers at the time of Christs birth, as far as stories will help us to discern, were all Regal or Monarchical through the whole World) and was so far from changing that course by any new law of his, that he laboured by all means possible, to settle and confirm it on that basis, and not so much as to accept, when it was offered him, the exercise of any Secular or civil power, but to submit himself, and consequently all his, and so all that can plead or pretend any title from him, (καὶ ἀντιολ☉, καὶ ἰνλουσ☉, &c. say the Fathers) to the ὑπερέχουσαν ἐξουσίαν, the supream power in any Kingdom. For the practice and opinion of the Church to this matter, through all times, infinite testimonies might be alledged. I shall refer the Reader to David Blondel in his book, de formulâ Regnante Christo, and not endeavour a further disproving of that Doctrine which he thought more worthy of an exclamation in the language of St. Athanasius, ad Epist. Τίς ἤκουσε ταῦτα πάντοτε, ἢ τίς ὁ διδάξας, ἢ μαθὼν, ταῦτα πρὸ τοῦ ἐξῆλθε, καὶ ☉ Ἅδης ἐμέσατο; τίς δ' ἤκουσεν ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ, ἢ ὅλως παρὰ χριστιανοῖς; Who ever in the Church or among Christians, heard or taught, or learnt that Gregorian Doctrine? What an hell was it which vomited it out? I shall add no more to the negative part, which being supposed, and to be remembred in that which follows, P. 187, 188, 189, &c.

I answer in the second place, positively, That the objects of this Church-charity or Church-censures are, every open notorious offender, (whose crimes come to our cognizance, whether by complaint of others, by notoriety of the action, or by his own confession) that lives, and indulges himself in any grievous crime, any wilful sin; Every such I say is to be bound by the Church, when after admonition first less, then more publick, he continues refractory, unreformed, and not till then. The more shame for the over-easie denouncers of that censure, that either inflict it on every trivial commission, without consideration whether repented of or no; or that use this soveraign recipe, this generosum medicamentum, (that, say Artists, must not be cast away, either on the wanton, or the desperate patient, but only on those whom we see to want it, and hope it may do some good on) this strong Physick; this last and most generous medicament so ‖ unadvisedly and uncharitably, so for any other end, rather than reforming of prophane men. Sect. 18.

‖ Hence Avitus Alcimus, Ep. 61. to Constantius the Bishop, Illud monere præsumo ne propter leves causas, & non ad Deum, sed sæculum pertinentes, ne Laici quidam, non dicam Clerici, sanctâ communione priventur, quia nefas cujus dignitatis sit ipsa communio, qui non tam omni animositate sepositâ & cum magno dolore suspendit, & cum maximâ festinatione restituit. vid. Can. 2. Concil. Aurel. 5. & Leon. magn. Ep. 89. taxing Hilary for that fault.

Then for loosing, who is capable of that, is agreed in general, the greatest sinners upon approbation of their repentance: As for Novatus who denied absolution to the Lapsi, he himself was censur'd and punished for that severity, as you may see in the 8. Can. of the Nicene Council, on which saith Zonaras, ἀνεκλήθη καὶ ἀναθεματίσθη, he was cast out and anathematix'd in a Council at Rome, Cornelius being Pope, and Decius Emperour, Καὶ μὴ περὶ τὴν πίστιν ἐσφάλλετο, ἀλλὰ διὰ τὸ ἀσυμπαθὲς αὐτῷ, καὶ μισάδελφον, Though he offended not in matter of faith, yet for his want of compassion and kindness to the brethren. Sect. 19.

But then, what degree of approbation will serve turn, what time of humiliation, what fruits and evidences of repentance may be thought sufficient to give capacity of this loosing? The judgment of Councils and Churches have much varied in that particular, the * Roman being anciently milder than any other Churches; and how much these latter ages have been more favourable to the guiltiest sons of the Church, than the most merciful of the first ages had learned to be, even those very Councils that condemn'd the severity of Novatus and the Cathari, are able to testifie; I will give you but an hint or two out of the Canons of the Council of Nice, (before quoted against Novatus) Can. 11. the Council speaking of them that fell in the time of Licinius his Tyranny, χωρὶς ἀνάγκης, ἢ χωρὶς ἁρπαγῆς ὑπαρχόντων, ἢ χωρὶς κινδύνου, without any violence, or plundering, or danger of either, the censure is, that upon true and unfeigned repentance, τρία ἔτη οἱ ἀκροώμενοι ποιήσουσι, Three years shall they continue among the Audients (i.e. saith Zonaras, ἔξω τῆς ἐκκλησίας ἑστῶτας ἐν τῷ νάρθηκι, καὶ ἅμα πίστιν ἀκούοντας γραφῶν) stand without the Church in the porch so long, and only partake in hearing the holy Scriptures. Then καὶ ἔπειτα ἔτη δέκα ὑποπεσοῦνται (i.e. saith Zonaras, ἔτι δὲ μὴ τῆς ἐκκλησίας ἐνδέχεσθαι, &c.) for the space of seven years more they shall have leave to be admitted within the Church, but to be behind a pillar, near the door, and go out with the Catechumens. Ten years already you see, and yet farther, Δύο ἔτη χωρὶς προσφορᾶς κοινωνήσουσι τῇ λαῷ τῆς προσευχῆς, Two years shall they joyn in prayer with the people, but without the oblation: i.e. saith Zonaras, they shall not yet be vouchsafed the participation of the holy things, till these two years be over. This approbation of their repentance cost them, it seem, no less than 12. years. * Vid. Grot. in Heb. p. 810. Sect. 20.

But then the same Council speaking of others, that having made some profession of Christian valour, like dogs returned to their vomit again, Can. 12. resolves, διὰ τῶν αὐτῶν ὅρων μετὰ τῆς τριετοῦς τῆς ἐκφόρου χρόνον, After the three years in the porch among the audients, they must be ten years at the pillar; the seven years it seems are improved into ten, and 'tis probable the two years of communicating χωρὶς προσφορᾶς still behind, and so the probation fifteen years long. Sect. 21.

Only the Bishop had power left him of the remitting of this severity, if he saw them (ἰδὼν δάκρυα καὶ ὑπομονὴν καὶ ἀγαθοεργίαν ἢ ἐπιτροπὴν ἔργῳ καὶ σχήματι ἐπιδεικνύμενα, by humility, and tears, and patience, and almsdeeds, demonstrate their conversion to be sincere, not feigned. And so Alcimus to Victorius the Bishop, Auctoritatis vestræ est, errantium compunctione perspectâ, severitatis ordinem temperare; 'Tis the part of your authority, when you perceive the compunction of those that have sinned, to temper the order of severity, i.e. to receive him earlier into the Church, Epist. 16. Sect. 22.

That which might be added in this point out of the antient Canons, would be endless to report, he that would see a particular description of the several degrees of these penitents, may have it very Sect. 23.

clearly ſet down in Sozomens Hiſtory, *l.*7. c. 17. and I ſhall not ſo much as enquire what grounds our latter ages have had to remit ſo much of the antient diſcipline, till at length it be crumbled and moultred away into a nothing, or a meer formality: what is amiſs in it, I beſeech God may be reformed.

*Sect.*24. I ſhall only add to this Chapter, that there have been in the practice of the Church, (I ſay not grounded in thoſe Texts of the Goſpel) two ſorts of binding; One temporary or penitential when the perſon confeſſes himſelf penitent, and deſires the abſolution of the Church, at leaſt when there is hope of repentance, in which caſe the cuſtom hath been to impoſe for ſome ſet time the ἔργα ἄξια μετανοίας, ſuch works as are agreeable to that repentance, and proportion'd to the former ſin, and not to abſolve, till what is impoſed, be performed. This the Nicene Fathers expreſs by this ſtile, [ἐφ' ὃν ὁ χρόνος ὥρισται καὶ καιρὸς τέτακται] for whoſe penance the time is defined, and the ſeaſon ſet, Zonaras by (καιρὸν ὡρισμένον τῇ μετανοίᾳ τῶν παραπεπτωκότων) the ſpace determined for the penance of thoſe that had faln: And Alcimus by propoſitis obſervationibus interim ab Eccleſiâ ſequeſtraxi, to be appointed ſome obſervances, and in the mean time to be ſequeſtred from the Church: & notâ excommunicationis indictâ, donec publicâ panitentiæ profeſſione deſuescant, ſetting a mark: (anſwerable to the σημειῶσθαι in St. Paul) of excommunication upon him, till by publick profeſſion of repentance he diſuſe his former courſe, a kind of Niddui, or temporary remotion; The ſecond abſolute, & ſine præfinito tempore, without any certain definition of time. When men are refractory, and give no hope of amendment, and that is a kind of Schammatha, Alcimus's irrevocable anathema, the binding over for ever, perennis excommunicatio, Turon. Concil. 2. *c.*20. Pariſ. conc. 3. can. 5. or uſque ad reformationem, for ever if they reform not. The former of theſe is ſometimes, but not always, an excluſion, or abſciſſion from the Church, (but ſometimes on the other ſide a command to frequent the prayers of the Church, or the Sacrament, every Lords day for ſuch a ſpace, hath been the penance or diſcipline) nor conſequently is it a binding that man ſo, that his ſin is not yet pardoned on earth, but 'tis deſigned for other uſes, for ſatisfaction to the Churches edification, &c. But they of the ſecond ſort are truly under that band, and cut off from the communion of the Church, and by no means admitted to the ſervices of it.

CHAP. VI.

Sect. 1. THere is but one enquiry now behind, i. e. what is the real effect of binding and looſing, or what conjunction it hath with binding and looſing in Heaven. Which though it be the weighticſt conſideration of all the four, yet ſhall I have occaſion to ſay leaſt to it, and indeed only this, that a cenſure of the Church is a venerable thing, not only caſting a Chriſtian out of the Church, wherein he is appointed to ſeek ſalvation, and of which as long as he is thought unworthy, he is uncapable of Heaven; but withal a ſuperaddition to the band in Heaven, by which that ſin is made indiſſoluble before God, till it be abſolved on earth, or that abſolution duly ſought from the Church; Chriſt having affirmed of him, that in this caſe his ſins ſhall not be pardoned there; as on the other ſide, that being by repentance return'd to that capacity, heaven ſhall return again to be his portion, and that pardon by the promiſe of Chriſt become due to him.

Sect. 2. The plain reaſon of it is, The denunciation is irreverſible, and indiſpenſably univerſal, [Except you repent you ſhall all periſh] and the promiſe as infallible and immutable [He that confeſſeth and forſaketh ſhall have mercy.] Now the binding, if it be as it ſhould be, (clave non errante) ſuppoſeth the man impenitent and refractory, and ſo to continue till he uſe means to return to the peace of the Church again, and then without controverſie, whoſoever is ſo bound on earth, (caſt out of the Church for an impenitent and refractory, and continuing ſo) is bound in heaven, caſt out from all title to that by God alſo. To which purpoſe is that known antient paſſage in Tertullians Apol. ſpeaking of theſe Cenſures. Judicatur cum magno pondere ut apud certos de Dei conſpectu. Summumque futuri judicii præjudicium eſt, ſi quis ita deliquerit, ut à communicatione orationis & conventus, & omnis ſancti commercii relegetur. c. 39. The judgments of the Church are exerciſed with great weight, as being among them that are certainly reſolved that they are in the ſight of God. And it is but a preparative pronouncing or paſſing of the future judgment, if any man offend ſo highly, that he be baniſh'd from communication, or partaking of prayer, of Church-meetings, and all holy commerce.

Sect. 3. But on the other ſide, he that upon his repentance, and approbation of that to be ſincere, is (clave non errante, ſtill) let into the Church again, is ipſo facto ſuppoſed to have right, (and by his abſolution that right ſealed to him viſibly, and Chriſts promiſe particularly for it) to heaven.

Sect. 4. Now if it be demanded, Whether a true repentant ſinner once bound by the Church be not preſently looſed in heaven, i. e. pardoned and forgiven at the firſt minute of his repentance, without (or before he receive) abſolution from the Church? I anſwer, that in caſe of publick or ſcandalous crimes, the reformation muſt be publick and notorious alſo. And to that purpoſe confeſſion and ſatisfaction before the Congregation, and him that bound, i.e. the Governour of the Church (to repair the injury done to the former by the ill example, and to teſtifie the ſincerity of the repentant to the latter) is neceſſarily required to the approving of this repentance even to God, without which non remittetur peccatum, there is no more poſſibility of looſing in Heaven, than hope of abſolution on earth. But on the ſincere performance of this, as there is no doubt but God will have mercy, will looſe in Heaven, will juſtifie and pardon that (ſuch a) penitent ſinner; ſo is the Church-ruler on earth bound to looſe him here below, to reſtore him to the Church alſo, as ſoon as by his ſubmiſſion to his penance he approves himſelf to him to be ſuch; and though 'tis poſſible he may be ſincerely penitent in Gods ſight, before he

he appear so to the Church, yet is he obliged to seek thus to approve himself to the Church, if his case have come under her cognizance, or in case he desire to have any of that assurance which is to be had from the Church; or by title to the promise in those texts.

And yet this exercise of the keys, is not to be conceived so absolutely necessary, that none can be damned without that seal of damnation, or binding, or non-forgiveness, nor again that none can be saved, or forgiven without the seal of remission; For sure the neglect of the Bishop in the first case, his not-performing his office of excision, is no way able to rescue the impenitent from the eternal guilt and punishment of his sins, but rather a means to leave him remediless unto it (his binding being indeed such a remedy, if it be made use of) and the bare want of the remission or absolution, so it be joyned with readiness to perform all that is preparative to it, and an hearty desire to be partaker of it, is in the merciful gracious Court of Gods audience sure to be accepted, when there is no space or room for more. For the words of Christ (whatsoever you shall bind, &c.) though they be universal, binding all in Heaven that are bound on earth, yet are they not exclusive, so as none shall be bound in Heaven, but such as are bound on earth, or in the Church below. Nor on the other side [whatsoever you shall loose on earth, shall be loosed in Heaven.] 'Tis [Whatsoever ye, that I] but not [Whatsoever not ye, that not I] and consequently, this double affirmation of Christ may be perfectly true; whosoever stand bound here, stand bound there; and whosoever are absolved here, are absolved there; and yet for all that are many bound in Heaven, which are not bound in the Church; and loosed in Heaven which are not absolved by the Church. And if the phrase used in St. John [Whatsoever ye retain, it is retained] seem to any to have an exclusive sence, thus, that what we absolve not here, we do retain; and consequently, that whom we absolve not, God will not absolve; I answer, that this is a mistake arising from the equivocalness of the word [retain] which in the Greek κρατέω (as we shewed) signifies no more in this place than δέω, or binding in the other Gospels, in which because that intimates not an exclusive power, neither will it be reasonable that this shall. And so much for the fourth particular also. Sect. 5.

To which, before we part from it, it will not perhaps be unseasonable (though I hope I shall not be obliged to justifie the truth of the relations) to annex a passage or two out of the latter stories of the Greek Church, (believed generally by them, and mention'd on affirmation of particular knowledge by some which have come from them to this place, and lived amongst us) which will acquaint us with the awe, and signifie the opinion, which it seems they have of the real efficacy of these censures of the Church. It is related (saith Crusius in Turco-Gracia) in the Constantinopolitan histories, that the Sultan Mahomet among other things concerning the Christian Religion, asked the Patriarch Maximus, περὶ τῆς ἀφορισμοῦ, concerning excommunication, of which he had heard ὅτι ὅτ' ἂν ἀρχιερεῖς καὶ ἱερεῖς τῶν χριστιανῶν ἀφορίσωσιν ἄνθρωπόν τινα, ἡ σαλεύεται ἐν τῇ γῇ καὶ φαίνεται ὅτε τὸν τάφον ἀφορισμένου, ἀντέχει ὡς τύμπανα καὶ φλάντες, That if the high Priests, and Priests of the Christians should excommunicate any person upon just cause, the body of that man dissolves not in the earth, but remains entire and woole; and when the sepulchre of any such is opened, they appear like drums or timbrels and black, i. e. the body swell'd, but whole, and withal much discoloured: And that upon absolution the body is dissolved to dust. In the truth of which tradition the Sultan desired to be confirmed by the Patriarch, who upon search made, found (saith he) that a certain loose woman having defamed a former Patriarch, Gennadius Scholarius, was by him excommunicate, and so died. Her Sepulchre Maximus caused to be opened, and (ὦ θαυμασίων Θεοῦ, O the wonders of God, saith he) εὑρέθη ὡς ἐτέθη, ἐξογκωμένη δὲ μόνον, καὶ μέλαινα, She was found as she was at the time of her burial, only swell'd and black. This (saith he) was certified to the Sultan, who sent some of his Nobles to view it, which they did with admiration, and caused the corps to be sealed up in a coffin with the Imperial Seal, and returned at a set day. Then the Patriarch opened it, and ἐτέλεσε λειτουργίαν, καὶ ἀνέγνω εὐχὴν συγχωρητικήν, officiated and read the prayer of absolution: Whereupon the joynts of her hands and feet were immediately loosed. They sealed it up again, and returning after three days found all turn'd to dust. This they reported to the Sultan, who wondred, and was astonished, and said, ὅτι θαυμασία καὶ ἀληθὴς ἡ πίστις αὐτῶν, That the Religion and faith of the Christians was wonderful and true. This same story is related again at large, l. 2. Turco-Gr. sect. 32. in the Patriarchal History of Emanuel Malaxus in vulgar Greek. A like example there is also of one Arsenius, who died excommunicate, l. 2. sect. 43. p. 151. and also of Johannicius, a Pseudo-patriarch. l. 2. p. 156. of whom, saith he, εὑρέθη ἀφορισμένος τυμπανιαῖος, the excommunicate was found hard and swelled as a drum or timbrel. And that these relations of the ἄλυτοι and τυμπανικοὶ are not without all truth, a man would be tempted to believe by the confident assertion of * Jacobus a Goar a French man, who spent six or seven years among them, and affirms long a apud eos experientia compertum esse, excommunicati cujusvis corpus post mortem non putrescere, that they had long experience of this truth, and that he himself had met with many witnesses who testified it upon knowledge, and that even the Latines that live among them, which are wont to scoff at their impostures, do not accuse this as such, but reverence it as an argument of the power of the Church, and for other examples and testimonies, he that shall desire them, may have store of those Notes of Jac. a Goar, p. 688. and 689. The truth of the passages, I hope it will not be expected of me to assert or confirm, (nor can I any further than the forementioned authority will bear) I shall rather give the Reader my conjecture, how this perswasion became so general, and these stories so confidently reported among them. It was, I suppose, from the observing, but not understanding in the Gospel the phrases of binding and loosing, which not knowing to what they belong'd (for the modern Grecians are far from being very learned) they may have applyed them to the dissolving or not dissolving of mens bodies in the earth, which they there expreis by ἀδιάλυτον, and ἀδιάλυτον, and λύονται, the word of the Evangelist. If this be not it, I have no more to say of it, but that it was a πάρεργον. * Not. in Eucholog. p. 688.

And now having taken this licence a little to expatiate, I shall enlarge my teather a little wider; and having said thus much of this custom of excommunication among Jews and Christians, proceed yet farther, ex abundanti, and by way of appendix, shew the consent of others, even of Heathen people in this matter, by that means (if not to confirm, as by an instance, that antient truth of Clemens, so oft repeated by him, Ἕλληνες δὲ καὶ πάλαι, The Grecians knowledge and solemn practices, are gene- Sect. 6.

rally ſtoln from the Jews, yet) to ſhew the opinion of other men, imbued with other principles of Theology, by which the deſign of this former Treatiſe may with a rational man, who is not a Divine, be ſomewhat eſtabliſhed: I ſhall inſtance but in two particulars (becauſe it is but ἐκ παρέδρου, or as ex abundanti, that I ſay any thing of it.) The firſt, of the antient Grecians, as I find it mentioned by Diod. Siculus, Bibl. 16. in the diſcourſe of the ἱερὸς πόλεμος, the ſacred War betwixt the Phocenſes and Lacedemonians on one ſide, and the Thebans, &c. on the other; of which there is mention in Thucydides, but a full narration in Diodorus Siculus in the place fore-cited. From that one Author, in one Page theſe few things may be learnt by way of ſtory. 1. That on occaſion of ſacrilege or invaſion of the rights of their Gods, ἀποτεμνόντες τὴν θεὸν, as the plowing up a piece of ſacred ground call'd Cirrhea (which was the crime of the Phocenſes) or the taking in War, and ſeizing on the like place call'd Cadmea (which was the Lacedemonians fault) the Senate of the Amphictyones upon complaint of the ἱερομνήμονες or recorders of holy things, did devote or Anathematize, even a whole Country or Region at once, as that of the Lacedemonians, and that other of the Phocenſes. 2. That what was thus done, was confirm'd by the Grecians generally, i.e. by the twelve chief Cities of Greece, which were independent the one upon the other, and the Amphictyones, the delegates of thoſe Cities) τὰ δὲ Ἑλλήνων συνεπικυρώντων τὰ δόγματα τῶν Ἀμφικτυόνων, &c. 3. That though Sacrilege was the occaſion of this devoting, yet was it not the immediate cauſe or crime, wherein it was founded, but their not ſubmitting to ſome former puniſhments, not paying the mulcts which had been inflicted on them by the ſame Judges for that crime. The puniſhments of thoſe firſt crimes are there mentioned to have been great ſums of money laid on the offenders (κατεδίκασαν αὐτοὺς πολλοῖς χρήμασιν, and πολλοῖς τάλαντοις κατεκρίθησαν) and upon the not paying of that, this devoting follows. If this devoting were no more than a confiſcation, and that therefore made to the Temple of Apollo, becauſe that was the Plaintiff and had ſuffered the injury, then, I acknowledge, this judgment of the Amphictyones, being a ſecular judicature, will not come home to our excommunication as an Eccleſiaſtical puniſhment. Only it may paſs for an obſcurer image of it; And to that end it may further be obſerved in the fourth place, that the nature of this puniſhment conſiſted, 1. in the ſhame that it brought upon the offenders, ſuch as Philomelus tells his Phocenſes, ἀνάνδρων ὑπάρχει περιορᾶν, 'tis the part of unmanly perſons not to lay it to heart, or conſider it: 2. In the conſequents of it, in that it would κίνδυνον ἐπιφέρειν καὶ τῷ τῶν πάντων εἴδει ἀνατροπὴν, bring danger and ſubverſion to all their lives, and that in two reſpects; 1. In reſpect of God, to whoſe vengeance they were thus devoted, (anſwerable to the παραπαῖ fore-mentioned, added to the ἀνάθεμα) in which reſpect it is, in order to the Phocenſes, called there καθιερῶσθαι, being conſecrated or devoted: 2. In reſpect of men, to whoſe miſchief alſo they were expoſed, (parallel to what we read of Cain, when he was caſt out of Gods preſence, any man, ſaith he, that meets me, will kill me) and therefore in order to the Spartans, it is call'd there μισοπονηρίας ἀξιοῦσθαι, an expoſing them to the common hatred of all men. 5. That for them that were under any ſuch ſentence, there was no way, but to obey the mulct, that was formerly inflicted on them, i.e. to reform their contumacy, which they that were not able to do, or not willing, and therefore pretend they were not able, (διδάσκων ὡς ἐκτίσαι μὲν οὐ δύνανται τὰ χρήματα διὰ τὸ μέγεθος τῆς καταδίκης) have no way left, but endeavour to null the ſentence, by proving it was unjuſt, (ἄκυρον κρίσιν ποιῆσαι, κρίσεις ἀδίκους δεικνύναι, ἀδίκους ἀποφάσεις ἀκυρῶσαι, by ſhewing that it was no fault, on which the former puniſhment, (to which their contumacy had been expreſt) was inflicted. And to make good this plea, their beſt and indeed only way was that of force, viz. to make Philomelus their General, and to provide him an Army, which was accordingly done, and after ſome three or four proſperous fights on that ſide, the concluſion was, that at laſt agreeably to the cauſe, in the ſight of his proſperous impiety he was routed and ſlain. And ſo you have a brief of the firſt paſſage. The other is that known one of the Druids among the antient Galls, mentioned by Cæſar de Bell. Gal. l. 6. the ſumm of it is this. Among the Galls two only ſorts of men there are, ſaith he, qui in aliquo ſunt numero & honore, which are of account and honour among them, The Druids, and the Equites, or Noblemen, all the reſt being peazants and ſlaves. The former of theſe are thus deſcribed, by their offices or employments, Illi rebus divinis intersunt, ſacrificia publica & privata procurant, religiones interpretantur, ad hos magnus adoleſcentium numerus diſciplinæ causâ concurrit, magnoque ii ſunt apud eos honore; nam ferè de omnibus controverſiis publicis, privatiſque conſtituunt, & ſi quid eſt admiſſum facinus, ſi cædes facta, de hæreditate, de finibus controverſia eſt, iidem decernunt, præmia pœnaſque conſtituunt: Si quis aut privatus, aut populus, eorum decreto non ſteterit, ſacrificiis interdicunt. Hæc pœna apud eos eſt graviſſima; Quibus ita eſt interdictum, ii numero impiorum ac ſceleratorum habentur, ab iis omnes decedunt, aditum eorum ſermonemque defugiunt, ne quid ex contagione incommodi accipiant, neque iis petentibus jus redditur, neque ullus honos communicatur. His omnibus Druidibus præeſt unus, &c. They are the men employed in all the ſervice of God, perform the publick and private ſacrifices, inſtruct the youth, and are honoured by them, are the judges in well-nigh all both publick and private controverſies; if any outrage or murder be committed, any difficulty about bounds, or inheritance, they decree and determine both rewards and puniſhments. If any private perſon or people ſtand not to their decrees, they forbid him their ſacrifices. This is of all other the moſt grievous puniſhment, they that are under this interdict, are accounted as impious and enormous perſons, all men refuſe their company, come not near them, nor diſcourſe with them, leſt the contagion hurt them; they receive no advantage by the Laws of the Kingdom, nor are capable of any honour in it. Of all theſe Druids there is one Prefect or Preſident, &c. And it ſeems this cuſtom and inſtitution among them was conceived to have had its original from Britain. Diſciplina in Britanniâ reperta, atque inde in Galliam tranſlata eſſe exiſtimatur, & nunc qui diligentiùs eam rem cognoſcere volunt, plerumque illò diſcendi causâ proficiſcuntur. This diſciplinee was found in Britain, and thence brought unto the Galls, and they that are willing to have any exact knowledge of it, do now ordinarily go thither to learn it. The ſtory being in it ſelf thus clear and full, will have little need of my Comment, or obſervation on it; all that I meant to do was to ſhew you the conſent of other Religions, and Nations, and by that to conclude, that the Heathens thought not that unreaſonable, which now Chriſt hath by ſtanding Law eſtabliſh'd in his Church, and many that are called Chriſtians, are ſo willing to caſt out of it. And ſo much of this παρεπόμενον alſo.

CHAP. VII.

AND now by way of concluſion of this whole diſcourſe, I ſhall add ſomewhat of the utility of this piece of diſcipline, if with another preparatory to it, it might by the Governours of every Church be carefully exerciſed: That other preparative which I mean, is that, if not Apoſtolical, yet Eccleſiaſtical inſtitution of confirmation. The intention of which, and deſign of our Church in it, every man ſufficiently knows, (although it have been much and with very ill conſequence of late neglected) and therefore I ſhall not here inſiſt on it; and beſides it hath been ſet down at large in * another diſcourſe. This whole office of confirmation, and the neceſſary preparatives of it, that of the Miniſters Catechizing (and throughly inſtructing all the youth of both ſexes, and of all ſorts within his cure, and explaining to the underſtanding of each, and laying home to his heart all the duties undertaken in his Baptiſm) being ſolemnly premiſed, according to the rules and intention of our Church, and all duties perform'd and obſerved by the Curate, the Child and the Biſhop (and none permitted to come to the Lords Table that hath not laudably paſt through this courſe) would (in the opinion of a godly and learned man, who did much ſtudy the ways of advancing piety and learning) tend moſt probably to the keeping men at leaſt within bounds of Chriſtian civility, from falling into enormous ſins, which they had in their own perſons ſo ſolemnly vow'd againſt. And therefore the uſe of that diſcipline were extreamly to be wiſh'd for, that it were revived in each Chriſtian Common-wealth; And if it ſhould be objected, that having been ſo long neglected, in this, it cannot now poſſibly be recovered again, becauſe of the vaſt number of thoſe that have been either not at all, or elſe but formally, and perfunctorily, or without precedent preparation confirm'd; I anſwer, that that argument proves not the impoſſibility, but only difficulty of doing it, or if the difficulty be ſo great, as to advance into a kind of moral impoſſibility, yet ought it not therefore to be left unattempted, (we are required to endeavour the doing of things which appear morally impoſſible to be done; becauſe God may enable us to do that, which, till we try, we conceive impoſſible; and though the not performing may not be damning, yet the not endeavouring may) or if ſtill the difficulty of an univerſal reformation in this kind diſcourage even from attempting it, yet may it be reaſonable and feaſible for every Paſtour, now to begin with all the youth of his Pariſh, which have not yet come to the Lords Supper; and keep them to this probation, and ſo for ever hereafter conſtantly to continue, and then, though the elder ſort of this preſent age come not under this method, nor conſequently this means of reformation, yet perhaps the examples of, and inſtructions beſtowed on thoſe under them, may work ſomewhat on them: and howſoever, the ſtock of the ſucceeding age will now be wrought on, and ſo Poſterity be mended, though the preſent age cannot; which to every good Chriſtian will be worth conſidering. This courſe being thus taken for the planting, and rooting all good reſolutions, and obtaining the bleſſing of God, upon the young and tender, (by the prayers of the Church, and the purport of Chriſts promiſe of habenti dabitur) together with the uſe of the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, and attention to reading, and preaching of the Word, might very probably hope to be ſucceſsful; but then becauſe poſſibly it may not, (ſome Chriſtians will be perjur'd and impudent, rather than be chaſt and conſcientious, after all this) therefore comes in the uſe and utility of the cenſures of the Church, as a Tabula poſt naufragium, a means of bringing him to repentance, that by the former means could not be kept innocent; of reducing him by the Rod, that the crook could not keep from ſtraying. And if 'twere thus uſed, if every one that fell after confirmation, were firſt admoniſht by one, then if it ſerved not, by two or three, and then upon refractorineſs, or indulgence in ſin, delivered up to Satan, turn'd out of all Chriſtian Communion without any partiality or reſpect of perſons, this would be as probable a means as the wit of man could invent, either by the fear and expectation of this cenſure, to deter them and prevent thoſe enormities, that are now ſo ordinary among Chriſtians, or elſe by ſhame, and other conſequent inconveniences, as by Cauſticks to work the cure. For it cannot but be obſerved, what force ſhame, and credit have on the minds of men. A ſin that is gotten into ſome countenance or reputation, though it be deſtitute of all other lovelineſs or ability to tempt any, doth yet carry all before it without reſiſtance; the fear of ſhame makes men vicious, that otherwiſe are not inclined to it, and certainly the ſame means would be able to commend vertue to us: there is not that infinite natural averſation againſt all goodneſs in the minds of men (unleſs as that word ſignifies the paſſions, or carnal affections) as that men would be very wicked to loſe by it; afflictio dabit intellectum, and ſuch afflictions as theſe that fall upon the fame, are not the moſt eaſily ſupportable, and therefore may poſſibly help even a ſenſual man to ſome underſtanding; and though the certain truth of this Obſervation cannot otherwiſe be proved, but by our reſolution to make experience of it; yet ſeems it to me, to have the Authority and Teſtimony of Saint Paul himſelf in theſe words, (though uſually, by thoſe that are led by the ſound of them, otherwiſe applyed) 2 Cor. 10. 4. the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God, (or to God, or (by an hebraiſm very ordinary) very or exceeding mighty) to the pulling down of ſtrong holds, &c. which words that they belong to the point in hand, will 1. be probable by the Context, where the Apoſtle ſpeaks of proceeding againſt offenders, which he calls θαῤῥῶν εἰς ὑμᾶς, being bold towards them, verſe 1, 2. and ἐκδικῆσαι παρακοὴν, to revenge or puniſh diſobedience, verſe 6. and this according to the ἐξουσία or authority which the Lord had given him for edification or inſtruction, and not for deſtruction, (which before I ſhewed you belong'd unto the power of cenſure) and then he adds a caution to remove a prejudice, that unreformed ſinners had againſt him, that his letters were ſevere, and ſo he, when he was abſent; but far from all ſuch ſeverity when he came amongſt them; κατὰ πρόσωπον ταπεινὸς ἐν ὑμῖν, vile or tame, or unconſiderable, when he was among them, i.e. that he threat-ned to excommunicate, but when he came would not do it, which he calls ἐκφοβεῖν διὰ τῶν ἐπιστολῶν, terrifying by letters, verſe 9. and ἐπιστολαὶ βαρεῖαι καὶ ἰσχυραὶ, weighty or powerful letters, ver. 10. i. e. ſevere and terrifying, which yet he threatens ſhall be equalled by his actions, when he comes among them, verſe 11. and ſo all along you ſee the buſineſs is about cenſures. And then 2. this ſence of the words will be more than probable, by weighing the words themſelves, wherein στρατεία ἡμῶν ſignifies confeſtly the Apoſtles Miniſtery, (as it doth alſo in the only other place, where 'tis uſed in the New Teſtament, 1 Tim. 1. 18. That thou mighteſt war a good warfare, i. e. diſcharge the duty of thy Miniſtery, as thou oughteſt, according to the importance of the Hebrew צבא, which is ſometimes rendred στρατεία, warfare, ſometimes λειτουργία, Miniſtery [then ὅπλα τῆς στρατείας, the weapons of that warfare] are the means to diſcharge that duty in the Miniſtery, of which nature though there be many more, preaching, catechizing, adminiſtration of Sacraments, confirmation, &c. yet the context, or antecedents, and conſequents of this place belonging, as was ſhew'd, to the buſineſs of cenſures, will reſtrain it in this place peculiarly to thoſe. Then, that theſe are not [σαρκικὰ, carnal] ſignifies that they are not weak, for ſo σὰρξ at every turn in theſe Epiſtles ſignifies weakneſs, (and from thence oft-times the Law becauſe it was ſo weak, ſo unable to give ſtrength to any diſciple of Moſes to perform that; as in the Epiſtles to the Romans and Galatians 'tis inſiſted on) and ſo to omit more places of Teſtimony, in the next precedent Verſe, though we walk in the fleſh, i.e. though we are weak, as men, and have no power over you, yet as Miniſters, we are not, our Miniſtry is with power, and therefore it follows, as an explication of [οὐ σαρκικὰ, not carnal] but δυνατὰ τῷ θεῷ, mighty, or powerful, through, or to God, or exceeding powerful. And wherein doth this mightineſs or power expreſs it ſelf? Why πρὸς καθαίρεσιν ὀχυρωμάτων, we render it, pulling down of ſtrong holds, and ſo it may literally be rendred, as the end of excommunication, pulling down of all fortreſſes, that maintain or ſecure a man in ſin, but more critically, the word καθαίρεσις ſignifies excommunication it ſelf, both Verſe 8. and Chap. 13. 10. and generally in the Canons of the Councils, and then ὀχυρώματα, ſtrong holds, may ſignifie all impenitent obdurate ſinners, that will not otherwiſe be wrought upon, and are called, verſe 5. Every high thing, that exalteth it ſelf againſt the knowledge of God, i.e. againſt piety or Chriſtianity; and ſo the words being thus interpreted in the retail, and then put together again in the groſs, will run thus: [The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God, to the pulling down of ſtrong holds:] i.e. the cenſures of the Church are exceeding powerful, and that power conſiſts in excommunicating pertinacious offenders. The truth of which obſervation, if not interpretation, will be undoubted to him that doth but remember, what this Diſcourſe hath ſo oft inculcated, that excommunication was delivering a man to Satan, and a conſequent of that, in thoſe firſt times corporal inflictions, diſeaſes, (and ſometimes death it ſelf) which, if any humane thing, would moſt probably work upon one. Only it may be objected, that that conſequent was peculiar to the Apoſtles times, and is not now in uſe, and conſequently that a great part of the power of Eccleſiaſtical cenſures is now loſt, and ſo now the weapons of our warfare may be carnal, our cenſures unſufficient to perform their task; to reduce impenitents, though theirs were not. To which I anſwer, by confeſſing the objection, that indeed it is ſo; and very reaſonable it ſhould, Chriſtian Princes having now taken the tuition of the Church into their hands, and ſo thoſe keen weapons in the ſpiritual hand not ſo neceſſary; as you know the Manna ceaſed to be rain'd from Heaven, when the People were come into the promiſed Land flowing with milk and honey. Only I ſhall then reply, that therefore it is more than fit, that ſome means ſhould be uſed, in caſe of any diſcernable defect, to interpoſe by way of ſupply, and add the more than moral perſwaſive power of ſome other fit engine beſide that of the cenſures of the Church, eſpecially in caſes of enormous, infamous crimes, which may be done by the Secular arm, in ſuch caſes (when the Eccleſiaſtical cenſures perſwade not) the impreſſion of inflicting penalties, ſevere enough, as may be found expedient, uſque ad reformationem, until they make themſelves capable, (by teſtimonies of amendment) to receive releaſe both from God and man; that ſo by that means, as God ſupplyed the want of humane aid, by his extraordinary from Heaven; and when the Secular Magiſtrates diſcharged not their duty, exerciſed not the power given them to the purging of the Church, from rotten, vicious, prophane, incorrigible members, God gave this power to the Apoſtles of inflicting diſeaſes on Malefactors; ſo now that extraordinary power being withdrawn from the Church, the Magiſtrate ſhould think himſelf moſt ſtrictly obliged to perform his duty, for which if it ſhould be required, that we produce the expreſs commands or directions of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, or Primitive preſidents; I anſwer, That will be unjuſt to require of us, 1. Becauſe in Scripture times, there were other means to ſupply that want, the Devils corporal inflictions on them that were delivered to him, and ſo any other might be ſpared: 2. Becauſe this duty naturally belongs to the Magiſtrate, who alone hath ordinarily ἀναγκαστικὴν δικαιοκρισίαν, compulſive juriſdiction, which as it was practiſed by the Kings in the Old Teſtament, ſo was it not interdicted by Chriſt in the New, but all left in that matter by him as he found it; which being granted, it may truly be ſaid, that as Chriſt, or the Apoſtles give no directions for this, ſo they needed not to give any. 3. Becauſe both then and in the Primitive Church, the Secular power was not Chriſtian, and therefore the aſſiſtance could not be expected from them, which now moſt reaſonably may, to awake, and hazen, and drive thoſe that will not be allured and drawn, that ſo even in this world there may be no peace, quiet reſt, tranquillity, or ſecurity to the wicked.

FUNDAMENTALS.

CHAP. I.

The Notation of the word Fundamental.

Sect. 1. IN this inquiry, the literal notation of the word [Fundamentals] muſt firſt be examined and reſolved on, as the Ground-work of this whole diſcourſe. And herein the moſt advantageous method and leaſt lyable to miſtake will be to proceed by theſe degrees.

Sect. 2. First, that the word Foundation being a relative, and, as it is uſed in our preſent diſquiſition, a figurative word, it will be needful to premiſe wherein this relation, and wherein this figure doth conſiſt, it being evident, what Ariſtotle ſaith, that the whole being of any relative is πρὸς τὶ, in order to that whereto it hath relation, and ſo likewiſe that ſome primary literal ſignification is prerequired to that other of Metaphorical or Figurative. And accordingly it will here be ſoon reſolved, that a foundation, being primarily of uſe in Architecture, hath no other literal notation but what belongs to it in relation to an houſe or other building, nor figurative, but what is founded in that and deduced from thence. Foundation is a relative and figurative word.

Sect. 3. But then ſecondly, it is not every building to which a foundation refers (ſome ſtructures being erected without any foundation) but ſuch as is cemented and faſtned to ſome firm, ſtable body under ground, i.e. to a foundation ; We are taught this diſtinction by our Saviour, Matt. 7. that an houſe may be (and is ſometimes) ſet upon the ſand or upon the earth, Luk. 6.49. and is then ſaid to be χωρὶς θεμελίου, without a foundation) not always ἐπὶ τὴν πέτραν, upon a rock, and though the word οἰκοδόμησε, building, be there uſed of both thoſe, yet the τεθεμελίωτο, being founded is applied only to the latter ver. 25. And the diſtant fates of thoſe two ſorts of houſes, which is there ſet down, together with the character of the Architects, the fooliſh and the wiſe, will aſſure us that this which we now inſiſt on, is no nicety, for aſſoon as ever the rain deſcended, the floods came, and the winds blew and beat upon that houſe of the fools erecting, the houſe fell (and brake to pieces, the fall thereof was great) ver. 27. Whereas all the violence and importunity of the ſame ſtorms, and winds, and torrents could make no impreſſion on the other pile of the skilful Architects erecting, upon this one account, τεθεμελίωτο γὰρ, for it was founded upon a rock. And ſo in like manner the difference is ſet by the author to the Hebrews betwixt σκηνὴ, the moveable tent or tabernacle, and θεμελίους ἔχουσα πόλις, a City that hath foundations, Heb. 11. 10. which is all one with the ἀσάλευτον βασιλεία, the Kingdom that cannot be ſhaken or moved, Heb. 12. 28. The relation of it to ſuperſtructure. Building on the ſand, and on a rock.

Sect. 4. And the difference of building upon the earth or ſand, from that other of ſuperſtructing or founding upon a rock, is obſervable in this, that though the whole body or bulk of the earth or ſand be of an heavy and ſtable nature, yet the ſurface or upper part of either of them, but eſpecially of the ſand, is ſo light and ſoluble, that there is no way imaginable to cement or faſten any thing to it, any more than to the air or water ; whereas to a ſtone or rock, which being it ſelf firm, is alſo faſtned deep within the earth, a ſuperſtructure of any proportionable magnitude may be ſo faſtned, that without a σεισμὸς or concuſſion of the earth it ſelf, (which ſhaketh the foundations, Acts 16. 26.) the building ſhall not be ſhaken, and therefore Coloſſ. 1.23. τεθεμελιωμένοι built on a foundation, is equivalent to ἑδραῖοι, firm, and oppoſed to μετακινούμενοι, moved, and ſo Chriſt ſuppoſes in another parable, that the gates of ᾅδης, the ſtrongeſt oppoſition imaginable in nature ſhall not prevail againſt that houſe which is thus built, Matt. 16. 18. The difference betwixt them.

Sect. 5. Thirdly then, the figurative or metaphorical notation of this word, and not the primarie or literal, being that which belongs to this place, and yet that bearing a direct proportion to the literal, and ſo requiring a proportionable relation to ſome figurative building or ſuperſtructure, in order to which it may be ſtyled a foundation or fundamental, the next and that indeed the Principal enquiry will be, what ſuperſtructure it is to which this Foundation doth refer, or in reſpect to which peculiarly any article of Faith may be denominated Fundamental. The Superſtructure to which Foundation here relates.

Sect. 6. And to omit the mention of all others, which have no appearance of pretenſion to this matter, two only fabricks or ſuperſtructures there are, which can come into this competition, each called by the name of οἰκία or οἶκος houſe, The firſt οἰκία πατρός, my fathers houſe, Joh. 14. 2. The ſecond (with little change) οἶκος θεοῦ, the houſe of God, 1 Tim. 3. 15. The firſt is evidently Heaven, the place whither Chriſt was then going, as their harbinger to prepare for them ; The ſecond is expreſly ſaid to be the Church, in the words immediately ſubſequent ; ἥτις ἐστὶν ἐκκλησία θεοῦ ζῶντος, which is the Church of the living God, the Church of God in oppoſition to the Idol-Temples, the Church of the living God in oppoſition to the liveleſs falſe deities, the Diana of the Epheſians and the like, whoſe pictures were inſhrined and adored in thoſe heathen Temples ; And each of theſe are metaphorical buildings (anſwerable to the figurative Two ſorts of Superſtructures. Heaven. The Church.

figurative foundations) and being capable of two ſorts of conceptions, either as they are in fieri, in building, or as in facto eſſe, when they are already built, they may here ſignifie the repleniſhing or peopling of theſe two, 1. bringing Saints to Heaven, and 2. proſelytes into the Church, or elſe by a Metonymie of the adjunct, they may denote 1. that Celeſtial, and 2. that Chriſtian condition, which is in either of them enjoyed, the ſtate of bliſs in the one, and the ſtate of Chriſtian obedience in the other.

Sect. 7. In proportion then to theſe two ſuperſtructures, two notions of Fundamentals may be conceived, one ſignifying that whereon our eternal bliſs is immediately, and regularly ſuperſtructed, the other whereon our obedience to the faith of Chriſt, giving up our names to him, is founded; the one in order to our living happily and eternally in another world, the other to our living ſoberly, and juſtly, and piouſly in this world.

Heaven cannot be it, for two Reaſons. The firſt.

Sect. 8. And if the former were it, wherein our preſent ſearch were terminated, if the queſtion were, what were now fundamental to bliſs or heaven, then 1. there could be no reaſon to explain the fundamentals, as by conſent of parties they are explained, by the credenda, matters of belief or faith; for though the acknowledgment of Gods veracity, and the explicite, unſhaken belief of all that is revealed to him by God, be the ſtrict duty of every Chriſtian, and the disbelieving of any ſuch affirmation of Gods, is ſin, and damnable, yet the foundation being that which ſupports the ſuperſtructure to which it relates immediately, and without the intervention of any thing elſe, 'tis certain, that eternal bliſs is not immediately ſuperſtructed on the moſt orthodox beliefs; but, as our Saviour ſaith (if ye know theſe things, happy are ye if ye do them) the doing muſt be firſt ſuperſtructed on the knowing or believing, before any happineſs, or bliſs, or heaven can be built on it; and without all queſtion the agenda, the things that are to be done, works of piety and juſtice, &c. are as neceſſarily required to found our bliſs, to bring us to heaven, as the belief of any the moſt pretious Articles can be ſuppoſed to be; and therefore it may be juſtly feared, that the title of Fundamentals, being ordinarily beſtowed on, and confin'd to the doctrines of faith, hath occaſioned that great ſcandal, or block of offence in the Church of God, at which ſo many myriads of ſolifidians have ſtumbled, and fallen irreverſibly, by conceiving heaven a reward of true opinions, of which vicious practices, though never ſo habitually and indulgently continued in, to the laſt, would never be able to deprive them; which as it hath been the disjoyning of that καλλίστη ζυγωγία, moſt excellent yoke, of faith and good works, and hath betrayed many knowing men to moſt unskilful and ridiculous preſumptions, and ſecurities in ſin: ſo can it not well be provided againſt, without the diſcovering, and renouncing of this falſe, and ſubſtituting a truer ſtate of this queſtion.

The ſecond.

Sect. 9. Secondly, If this were the notion of Fundamentals, there could be no certain way of judging what are ſuch, the excuſe of invincible ignorance being, in the far greateſt number of men, ready to be confronted againſt the neceſſity of their believing all the ſeverals of any ſuch ſuppoſeable Catalogue; and for that ſuppletory of an implicite belief, which is by the Romaniſt conceived to be of uſe, and ſufficient for thoſe, who are not capable of an explicite, whatſoever degree of truth can be conceived to be in that, it muſt be founded in the contradictory to the preſent pretenſion; for were it once granted that the belief of ſuch Articles were fundamental to heaven, it were not imaginable that they which have not heard, ſhould ever arrive thither, When that, which by St. Paul's authority is become a known maxim, was before demonſtrable in it ſelf, and is ſo ſuppoſed by his argument, Rom. 10.14. that faith cometh by hearing, and that they cannot believe what they have not heard. Many other inconveniences there are conſequent to this ſtating of this queſtion (and particularly that of which our experience hath given us evident demonſtration, that by thoſe which thus ſtate it, there hath never yet been aſſigned any definite number, or Catalogue of Fundamentals in this ſence:) but I ſhall no farther enlarge on them.

Fundamental to a Church, to Piety and Chriſtian life.

Sect. 10. The other notion of Fundamentals, is that whereon I ſhall more confidently pitch (as that which will remove, in ſtead of multiplying, difficulties, and accord all, which either the Scriptures, or the Antients have aſſerted on this ſubject) thereby underſtanding that which was deemed neceſſary to be laid by the Apoſtles and other ſuch Maſter-builders, as a foundation to the peopling or repleniſhing (or bringing in proſelytes to) the Church, and ſo to the ſuperſtructing Chriſtian obedience among men; In which reſpect it is, that as the Church of Corinth (and ſo any other ſociety that hath received the faith of Chriſt) is called θεοῦ γεώργιον, God's Plantation, 1 Cor. 3.9. ſo it is alſo called θεοῦ οἰκοδομὴ God's building, a ſtructure erected by his artificers.

This notion of Fundamental confirmed by S. Athanaſius

Sect. 11. That this hath been eſteemed the due and proper acception of this word, I ſhall teſtifie by this one evidence, which I acknowledge to have given me the firſt hint of this notion, the words of the great Champion of the Catholick Faith ſet down in the Council of Nice, St. Athanaſius in Epiſt. ad Epictetum, where ſpeaking of the Confeſſion of Faith eſtabliſhed by the Canons of that Council againſt the Arian and other Hereticks he hath theſe words, Ἡ δὲ ἐν αὐτῇ ὁμολογία τῆς πίστεως καὶ τὰς θείας γραφὰς ὁμολογουμένη πίστις αὐτάρκης ἐστὶ πρὸς ἀναίρεσιν μὲν πάσης ἀσεβείας, σύστασιν δὲ εὐσεβείας ἐν Χριστῷ. The faith confeſſed by the Biſhops in that Synod according to the divine Scriptures is of it ſelf ſufficient for the averting of all impiety, and the eſtabliſhment of all piety in Chriſt. Theſe words of that eminent Father of the Church might be of ſome farther uſe, toward the due underſtanding of the Articles of the Nicene and Athanaſian Creeds, but at the preſent the advantage of them will be but general, that the way of meaſuring and defining the neceſſity of any articles of faith, (the ἀναγκαῖα εἰδέναι, neceſſaries to be known, as Juſtin Martyr ſpeaks, placing under that head, the Creation of the world, the framing of man, the immortality of the ſoul, and judgment to come, Παραινεῖ. p. 9.) is by the αὐτάρκεια or ſufficiency of them to enable the teacher to perſwade good life, to ſupplant thoſe vices, which Chriſt came to baniſh out of the world, and to radicate thoſe vertues which he came on purpoſe to implant among men, which is directly that notion, or Character of Fundamentals, which we have now given, thereby ſignifying thoſe articles of the Faith, on which all the parts of Chriſtian piety and obedience (and none of impiety or diſobedience) may be regularly ſuperſtructed, or in conſequence to which being once revealed, and believed, all rational or conſidering men, when Chriſtian life is propoſed to them, muſt diſcern themſelves obliged to entertain it, to forſake in every branch their unchriſtian courſes of ſin, and to betake themſelves to an uniform obedience to the Commands of Chriſt; from whence, I ſuppoſe, it is, that the word οἰκοδομεῖν, building or edifying, edifying, is uſed every where in the New Teſtament for improving or advancing in Chriſtian practice and the duties of good life, as laying the foundation is preaching the faith of Chriſt among them, 1 Cor. 3. 11. On which ſaith Theophylact, Μεθ' ὃ ἀξίωμα ἐ θεμέλιον ἐ πίστως, ἐπικοδομῶμεν ἕκαστοι---ἀγαθὰς πράξεις, &c. After we ſhall have received the Foundation of Faith, i.e. the Faith of Chriſt, as the Foundation, we build upon it, every one, good actions of all ſorts and degrees, as he there ſpecifies, making the Chriſtian actions of life to be the ſuperſtructure, to which this Foundation refers, and in relation to which it is called a Foundation. So Theophylact on Heb. 6. 1. makes the τὸ περὶ πίστως διδάσκεσθαι, their being inſtructed in the Faith of Chriſt, to be περὶ ἐ ἀρχὴν τρέφεσθαι, to deal only in the beginning, the elements, the firſt and moſt imperfect rudiments, ὥσπερ εἰσαγωγικάς τινας, ſuch as novices, beginners, they that are but now upon their entrance, are wont to be converſant in, whereas the ſuperſtructing good life on this, is, ſaith he, ἐπὶ ἐ τελειότητα φέρεσθαι, being carried to perfection; and again in yet plainer words, Ἀρχὴ μὲν γὰρ, ᾗ θεμελίῳ ἡ πίστις, ᾗ ἄνευ ταύτης οὐδὲν ἐδραιωθήσεται, &c. The Faith is the beginning and the foundation, and that without which nothing ſhall or will be firmly built; ſtill making the Faith, or belief of the Articles the foundation, in reſpect of the ἄριστ ον the excellent Chriſtian life, which was by the Apoſtles, and Chriſt deſigned to be built on it. To theſe I ſhall add the words of St. Auguſt. in lib. de Fide & Symbolo. Hæc eſt fides quæ paucis verbis in Symbolo novellis Chriſtianis datur; Quæ pauca verba fidelibus nota ſunt ut credendo ſubjugentur Deo, ut ſubjugati rectè vivant, rectè vivendo cor mundent, corde mundo quod credunt intelligant. This is the Faith which being comprized in few words is in the Creed delivered to all young Chriſtians to be held, which few words are made known to believers to this end, that by believing they may be ſubjected to God, that being ſubjected to him they may live well, by living well they may cleanſe their heart, that by the clean heart they may underſtand what they believe.

CHAP. II.

The diviſion of the diſcourſe into four parts; What are Fundamentals in General.

Sect. 1. THe Notion of the word being now explained, that which is yet behind will be regularly reducible to theſe four heads; Firſt, What thoſe things are in general, and then in particular, to which this notion of Fundamentals belongeth, and withal, what propriety all and each of theſe have toward the ſupporting this ſuperſtructure, the planting a Church of Chriſtian livers. Secondly, What are the particular branches of this ſuperſtructure. Thirdly, What Doctrines there are infuſed among Chriſtians, which are moſt apt to obſtruct or intercept the ſuperſtructing of Chriſtian life, where the foundation is laid. Fourthly, What things are neceſſary to the erecting of this ſuperſtructure on this foundation already laid, whether in a particular Chriſtian, or eſpecially in a Church, or ſociety of ſuch.

Four branches of diſcourſe propoſed.

Sect. 2. The General way of defining what theſe fundamentals are, muſt in all reaſon be taken from the practice of the Apoſtles, as the interpreter of God's appointment, and judgment in this matter. For it being certain that the Apoſtles, which had Commiſſion from Chriſt to Preach, and admit diſciples over all the world, to bring impenitent Jews, and Idolatrous Gentiles to the obedience of Chriſt, were by him alſo directed in their way, counſelled in the choice of the fitteſt means of performing ſo great a work; the argument will be infallibly concluſive on both ſides, poſitively, and negatively, that whatever the Apoſtles joyntly agreed on, at their entrance on their ſeveral Provinces, to be the ſubject of their firſt Sermons in all their travails, that was by them (and conſequently by God himſelf) deemed fundamental, in our preſent ſence, and what ever was not by them thought thus neceſſary, muſt not by us be obtruded on, or forced into that Catalogue.

The general way of defining Fundamentals, by what the Apoſtles taught every where.

Sect. 3. For the clearing of this, it is firſt evident that there was in the Apoſtles times ſuch a foundation laid (θεμέλιος κείμενος) in every Church, as in that of Corinth, 1 Cor. 3. 11. ſtyled παραθήκη, 1 Tim. 6. 20. a good depoſitum or truſt, which Timothy had received from the Apoſtles, for the direction of his miniſtery, πίστις ἅπαξ παραδοθεῖσα, Jude 3. the faith once, or at once delivered to the Saints, ὑποτύπωσις ὑγιαινόντων λόγων, 2 Tim. 1. 13. a form, or breviate, or ſummary of wholſome words, or ſound doctrine, which he had heard from St. Paul, μία πίστις, one Faith, Eph. 4. 5. in proportion to which followeth there ἓν βάπτισμα, one baptiſm, wherein there was made profeſſion of that Faith, and to which none (of years and knowledge) was ever admitted, who had not been ſufficiently inſtructed by the Catechiſt in every part of this foundation, (which to that end the Catechiſt received from the Biſhop with his ſhort expoſition of it, ſee St. Ambroſe, Ep. 35. l. 5.) and being ſo inſtructed made open confeſſion of it, and moreover, by vow obliged himſelf there, to ſuperſtruct all Chriſtian practice upon it.

The Foundation laid, 1 Cor. 3. 11. 1 Tim. 6. 20. Jude 3. 2 Tim. 1. 13. Eph. 4. 5.

Sect. 4. Secondly, that this was approved of by them in common upon conſultation, (and ſo ſeemed good to the holy Ghoſt and to them, in order to their end, the bringing of Jews and Gentiles to repentance) and accordingly was left behind them, delivered down to the Biſhops of all Churches of their plantation, not only as a rule of faith, but as a ſymbolum, or badge of the Apoſtles having planted Chriſtianity among them. All which is clearly teſtified by Tertullian, Irenæus, and other the firſt writers; See Irenæus, l. 1. c. 11. and 19. l. 3. c. 4. Tertullian de virgin. veland. in the beginning, and de Præſcription. throughout.

Approved in common by the Apoſtles.

Sect. 5. Thirdly, that all that was neceſſary in order to that end (the μαθητεύσαι πάντα τὰ ἔθνη the diſcipling of all nations) was comprehended in this form or ſummary, it being certain that what God did not deem neceſſary, was not neceſſary, and that nothing that was ſo deemed by God, was omitted or left behind by them, whoſe office and care it was to declare the whole will of God, and to lead others, as themſelves had been led, into all neceſſary truth.

Comprehenſive of all neceſſaries—— to the planting of a Church; not to the conversion of every particular person.

Sect. 6.

Sect. 6. Fourthly, that what we thus affirm of the neceſſity of theſe things to the ſuperſtructing of Chriſtian practice, muſt not ſo be underſtood, that the hearing, and believing of each of them be thought abſolutely neceſſary in every ſingle Jew or heathen, that he may repent, and convert and live a Chriſtian life, or without which he cannot; but neceſſary to the diſcharge of the Apoſtolical office, which was to reap whole fields, to bring in whole cities, and nations to Chriſt.

Sect. 7. They that were to plant a Church, were to deal with men of ſeveral and diſtant affections, and tempers and intereſts, an heterogeneous body made up of a multitude of various inclinations, and of different habits of ſin, and degrees of radication of thoſe habits, and to each of theſe ſome proper application was to be made by thoſe that came on Chriſt's errand to cure their ſouls (as Hippocrates adviſes his Phyſician to have μαλαγμάτων γένια, mollifying preparations for all turns, and to carry them about with him) and ſo a whole Diſpenſatory was little enough to meet with, and ſuffice to all their wants, or at leaſt ſome Catholicon of a tranſcendent virtue, proportionable to the obſtinacy of any the moſt deſperate maladie: But this confuſion of diſeaſes and rapſodie of difficulties was not to be ſuppoſed in each ſingle ſinner, and conſequently there was not the ſame neceſſity of the whole tale of Fundamentals, for the converting or reducing of him.

Some Jews reduced to good life without this foundation.

Sect. 8. There is no doubt but there were reformed Jews before Chriſt's time, whom the pedagogie and rudiments, and imperfect documents of the Law, with thoſe influences, and aſſiſtances of God, which were then afforded, brought home unto God, and among them ſome צדיקים righteous, and ſome חסידים merciful men, which had arrived to the abundance of goodneſs, as they ſtyle it. And of this kind were the Eſſeni, who though they be not ordinarily conceived to have been Chriſtians, yet are deſcribed by Philo, under the name of θεραπευταὶ, ſo very like Chriſtians, that there is no reaſon to doubt, but that Chriſtian piety might be infuſed into ſome, without the explicite knowledge of all and every of thoſe articles, which yet, in general ſpeaking, or as it was to be planted through the world, are rightly deemed, and reſolved to be Fundamental.

Syneſius a Biſhop before he believed the Reſurrection.

Sect. 9. Thus 'tis affirm'd by Photius, and Evagrius, (and hath as much authority, as their names can give it) that Syneſius had embraced the whole Chriſtian Law, ſo far as to be advanced to the dignity of a Biſhop, without any clear acknowledging, or believing one main part of our Foundation, that of the Reſurrection of the body, and his own 105*th Epiſtle* (wherein he ſo induſtriouſly declines the Biſhoprick) hath theſe words, Τὴν καθωμιλωμένην ἀνάστασιν ἱερόν τι καὶ ἀπόῤῥητον ἡγοῦμαι, καὶ πολλοῦ δέω τῷ πλήθους ὑποπέσειν ὁμολογῆσαι, The reſurrection which you preach and publiſh, I account ſacred, and that which cannot be uttered; and I want much of conſenting to the perſwaſions of the multitude in this matter. And though the Biſhops, that thus advanced him, were queſtioned, ſaith Photius, for the fact, yet that is no prejudice to (what we now obſerve from this example, viz.) the poſſibility of the thing. Of which alſo thoſe Biſhops anſwer is a farther teſtimony, viz. that they ſaw ſuch excellent graces in him, that they could not imagine, that God would long defer to crown them with the addition of this eminent branch of Chriſtian faith, the clear belief and acknowledgment of the reſurrection; And as that fell out according to their expectation, ſo it is thereby evident, that that branch of belief was in in him ſupervenient to Chriſtian practice, and not all Chriſtian practice built on that.

Sect. 10. Nay ſuppoſing that he that hath not been inſtructed ſufficiently in all, and each branch of the Foundation, were yet with fewer helps brought to the ſincere undertaking of the whole Chriſtian obedience, as if a Catechumenus before every one of theſe articles were explained unto him, ſhould yet reſolve (upon reading the Sermon on the Mount) to live a life of the greateſt Chriſtian perfection, this perſon were not in any reaſon to ſuffer any diminution to be deemed the worſe, but rather the better for that, (as they, that having not the Law, do yet by nature the things of the Law, are far from being diſparaged by the Apoſtle, nay θαυμασοὶ τινὲς εἰσι, ſaith Theophylact, are lookt on as admirable perſons, ὅτι τῷ νόμῳ οὐκ ἐδεήθησαν, καὶ τὸν νόμον ἐπλήρωσαν, that they wanted not the Law, and yet fulfilled the Law; The danger being certainly very great to them, that by force of all the divine articles of our Faith are not reduced to Chriſtianity purity, and not to them, who on a weaker foundation do yet ſtand firmly rooted, and grounded in the love of Chriſt.

Sect. 11. And this is agreeable to what was premiſed of the nature of a foundation in a material building, that though a tabernacle or moveable building may, yet a Temple or ſtable edifice cannot be ſuppoſed to be built and ſtand firm without an entire foundation, and conſequently that this ſummarie of wholſom words is neceſſary to the Architects, in order to their ſuperſtructing a Pile, their planting a Church of Jews and Gentiles, though not abſolutely ſo, for the reducing of each ſingle perſon.

CHAP. III.

A particular view of Fundamentals, Jeſus Chriſt indefinitely.

Jeſus Chriſt the Foundation. 1 Cor. 3. 11.

Sect. 1. I Now proceed to a more particular view of this Foundation, which is ſometimes moſt compendiouſly ſet down in Scripture, either under the abbreviature of Jeſus Chriſt, or with the addition of his crucifixion or reſurrection, or other remarkable paſſages concerning him; Or elſe more largely and explicitely in the Creeds or Confeſſions of the Univerſal Church.

Sect. 2. For the more compendious, it is St. Paul's affirmation, 1 Cor. 3. 11. that Jeſus Chriſt is the one only Foundation, and no man can lay ἄλλον θεμέλιον any other, which is the interpretation of what is elſewhere ſaid, that Jeſus Chriſt himſelf is λίθῳ ἀκρογωνιαίῳ the chief corner-ſtone, or again the κεφαλὴ γωνίας, head of the corner, the principal ſupporter, on which the weight of the ſtructure reſts, the foundation of the foundation.

Sect. 3.

Sect. 3. In proportion to which it is that the deceivers, or false teachers, or Antichrists, 2 *Joh.*7. are expressed by this Character, they that confeß not Jesus Christ coming in the fleßh. This one being a comprehensive article that supposes and contains all others under it.

*Sect.*4. For besides that the Jews to whom the Gospel was first to be preached, and to some of whom this character of Antichrist was given, believed in the one Creator of the world already, and so that article concerning the Deity, and the Attributes thereof needed not be preached either to them, or to their proselytes from the Gentiles; It is farther manifest that the belief of Christ being founded on the testimony of the Father, *Mat.*3.17. and the doctrine of Christ containing in it the declaration and manifestation of the knowledge of the Father, so as he was never known to the world before this Son out of his bosome thus revealed him, the belief of Christ must necessarily suppose and pre-require the belief of the Father, and therefore it follows in Saint John, ver.9. that he which abides in the doctrine of Christ, ἔτος καὶ τὸν πατέρα καὶ τὸν υἱὸν ἔχει, he hath both the Father and the Son.

Sect. 5. So again the miracles which Christ did were done in his father's name, and thereby gave all that testimony to his doctrines of piety and reformation, which the Father's proclaiming them from heaven would have been able to do.

Sect. 6. And that being thus supposed of all in gross, and so giving a full authority to all that should be revealed by Christ, the several parts of the Revelations afforded us by him will soon be discerned to be extreamly conducible to this end of reforming men's lives, such as will answer all imaginable objections and exceptions of flesh and blood against it, and make it perfectly reasonable for any rational creature to undertake the service of Christ, and most extreamly irrational and unmanly to seek out or to continue in any other service.

Sect. 7. Such are Christ's promises, divine, unconceivable promises, a bliß to be enjoyed to all eternity, and that by way of return for a weak obedience of some few years; Such are his threatnings, most formidable menaces of endleß woe, to them that will still despise the riches of his goodneß, and forbearance; Such is the treaty which he negotiates with us, and offer and tender of a reconciliation, a πάρεσις, an act of oblivion, of all forepast sins, and of a new Covenant, on most moderate, easie terms of sincere (without unsinning) obedience for the future; And Lastly, such are his precepts, a sort of commandments, which are most agreeable, and grateful to our reasonable nature, and which tend, beyond all other means or instruments, to the improving and perfecting the most valuable part of us, that which alone denominates us men, and annexing incomprehensible rewards (an eternal weight of glory) to the bare practice of those things, which are at the very present, though they were not commanded, and if they should not be rewarded in another life (I mean abstractively from these enhaunsments of them) infinitely esteemable and preferrable before the Contraries, which must farther cost us so extreamly dear, if we will choose and pitch our design upon them, and resolve to go through with that unthrifty purchase.

Sect. 8. So that this one corner stone, Jesus Christ, is a most competent, ample foundation, on which to superstruct the largest pile of building, to erect a Church of pious livers, and to bring all rational men within the compass of it, and it is not imaginable what could have been added to this, or what method could probably have been effectual to any man, which is not wrought on by the concurrence of all these.

Sect. 9. This will more evidently appear, if we compare this one with all other ways which have been used at any time toward this end of inducing, and obliging, and engaging men to good life. The Christian foundation compared with the Natural.

Sect. 10. In the course of nature, (the first way of Oeconomy, under which the world was governed, by a Law written in men's hearts, naturale judicatorium, lumen super nos signatum, a natural judicatory, a light sealed upon us, in our first composure) though there were a competent revelation of our duty, and a double obligation to perform it, 1. that of piety to our maker, 2. that of reverence to our own souls, the ἡγεμονικὸν, the superiour ruling part of us, and these two improveable into many other, and thus actually advanced and improved by natural men, upon study and consideration, (and so all the heathen wisdom was the farther explaining of those obligations, their natural philosophy was but a kind of comment on the creation, and is therefore by the Jews entituled בראשית the first word of the Book of Genesis, that story of the creation, and that a most proper ground-work of obedience to that Almighty Creator; and their moral philosophy, especially that of Epicurus, a consideration of the most ravishing beauty and delight and joy, the result of the practice of every virtue, that of Socrates (which had the Oracle's Testimony and admiration) a comment on the γνῶθι σεαυτὸν, the knowledge of a man's self, that of Pythagoras on the αἰσχύνου σαυτὸν, the revering of a man's self, and that of Aristotle, the placing of all humane felicity in continued actions of virtue, and that also a foundation very fit to superstruct virtue upon) yet there were great defects and vacuities and imperfections in this Oeconomy.

Sect. 11. First, the prescribed duties wanted of their full stature, especially if compared with Christ's πλήρωσις his suppletories and superadditions.

Sect. 12. Secondly, there remained very advantageous accesses for temptations to enter and invade men, the fortifications being very slender to secure their resistance, little knowledge of the immortality of the soul, or any thing beyond this life, whether reward or punishment, no assurance that repentance would be admitted for any sin, an absolute desperation of any good without the help of purgatives, and a perfect ignorance of all means of purging, and many other such wants, which are all abundantly supplied in the Christians foundation, Jesus Christ.

Sect. 13. And upon that account the Apostle could safely challenge the wise men of the heathen world with his ποῦ σοφὸς; Where is the wise man of the World? 1 Cor. 1. 20. Let all the Philosophers, moralists or naturalists, bring forth their richest provisions, shew such engines of approach and battery, for the supplanting or beating down of vicious life, for the engaging men to reform, and live like men, as this foolishness of preaching, this despised, but saving doctrine of the Gospel hath afforded us.

Sect. 14. So likewise for the Judaical or Mosaical œconomy, though that brought many additions to the light of Nature, and was a σκιαγραφία, an obscure representation as of that Gospel, and promises of everlasting life, so of those precepts which are now most clearly revealed by Christ, yet was that obscurity a very great defect, the shadow was so extreamly dark, that the vices of men made advantage of it to shrowd and secure them in their sins. With the Judaical.

Sect. 15. The ceremony and Law of circumcision, &c. which was meant by God ſacramentally to impreſs the duty of ſtrict purity, to cut off the περιτομὴν καρδίας, the ſuperfluity of naughtineſs, all inordinate exceſſive luſts of the fleſh, was yet but a character impreſſed on the fleſh, and did not explicitely deſcend to the prohibiting of the deſires, but was on the contrary made advantage of by luſt, Rom. 7. 8. and the outward circumciſion in the body of a child of Abraham was thought to commute for all impurity.

Sect. 16. So again the Phylacteries on their wriſts and foreheads were look'd on as ſpells and charms, which would yield them impunity for their diſobedience; And the ſtrict ordinances againſt converſing with Gentiles, leſt they ſhould learn and joyn in their abominations, bred more of pride, and contempt, and uncharitableneſs to their perſons, than of alienation, or deteſtation of their ſins.

Sect. 17. And ſo that way of Oeconomy, in many reſpects, was not ἄμεμπτον & blameleſs; The clear commands and the explicite promiſes of Chriſt and the proclaimed neceſſity of real, ſubſtantial fruits of repentance, inſtead of the leaves, the arrogance, and hypocriſie of external performances, were a neceſſary ſuppletory to the Law of Moſes, and to that may belong alſo the Apoſtle's τῷ γεγραμμένῳ; τῷ ἀνυπάτῳ τῷ αἰῶνι τούτῳ; Let all the Scribes, or Doctors of the Law, the ſearchers or profound Interpreters of the Scriptures, bring forth ſuch evidences of their efficacy, or good ſucceſſes in the reforming and purifying of mens lives, as the Apoſtles had done by theſe ſo contemptible deſpicable means, the Goſpel of the Croſs of Chriſt.

Sect. 18. I might farther extend the compariſon to all poſſible pretenders, the Idolatrous heathens, the corrupters of the Law of Nature, and the Mahomedans, that have ſuperſtructed on, and added to the Law of Moſes; But both of theſe are ſo ſcandalouſly known to have laid grounds for all impurity, the former in their myſteries and devotions, the latter in their ſenſual carnal paradiſe; the one allowing it their votaries in the preſent poſſeſſion, the other promiſing it them in a reverſion, that I ſhall not need enlarge on ſo remote conſiderations, but conclude and ſhut up all that might be ſaid on this ſubject, with that judgment of an heathen Philoſopher paſt on this matter, Chalcidius in his comment on Plato's Timæus, whoſe Writings have come to us only in Latine, Ratio Dei (no queſtion in the Original λόγος Θεοῦ, in St. John's ſtyle) Deus eſt, humanis rebus conſulens, quæ cauſa eſt hominibus benè beatèque vivendi, ſi non conceſſum ſibi munus à Summo Deo negligant, The reaſon, or Word of God is God taking care of humane affairs, and is the cauſe unto men of their living well and happily, if they do not neglect that gift granted by the Supream God. A ſaying that contains in it the ſumme of our Chriſtian Goſpel, (which, it ſeems by this and other paſſages, he had gotten a ſight of, and underſtood in the ſimplicity of it) that Chriſt the eternal Word or reaſon of his Father, had two great deſigns in his proſpect, effects of his providence and care of mankind, the firſt to bring men to good life, to reformation of every evil courſe, ſubduing of paſſions, &c. the ſecond to render them happy here by ſo doing and bleſſed eternally, and this managed ſo powerfully, and effectually for them, that nothing, but their own ſtupid, and obſtinate negligence and contempt of this divine donative, can deprive them of theſe benefits of it.

with the heathen and Mahomedan.

CHAP. IV.

JESUS CHRIST Crucified.

Sect. 1. AND as Jeſus Chriſt indefinitely taken is ſet down to be this Foundation, ſo elſewhere is Jeſus Chriſt Crucified, 1 Cor. 1. 23. & 2. 2. and accordingly the whole Goſpel is ſtyled λόγος ὁ τοῦ σταυροῦ, the word which is of the Croſs of Chriſt, c. 1. 18. and that (ſuppoſing it be believed) ſufficient to ſuperſtruct on it the converſion of the whole world to a new and Chriſtian life, and accordingly it is there ſtyled τοῖς σωζομένοις ἡμῖν δύναμις θεοῦ, to thoſe that eſcape out of the deluge of infidelity, the very power of God, and ver. 24. the power of God, and the wiſdom of God, the powerfulleſt and wiſeſt method toward the accompliſhing of this work, which is farther explained, Rom. 1. 16. by δύναμις εἰς σωτηρίαν, the power of God to ſalvation to every one that believeth, to the Jew firſt, and alſo to the Gentile. If this doctrine of the Croſs be once received, there is no more wanting to engage and oblige all rational men to that renovation of their lives which is oft called σωτηρία ſaving or delivering them out of their evil ways, and will aſſuredly bring them to ſalvation, in the notion, wherein we vulgarly take it.

Chriſt crucified the Foundation.

Sect. 2. That the Croſs of Chriſt hath this propriety may appear by theſe five effects or branches of it, 1. It is the higheſt confirmation imaginable of the truth of all that he had delivered from his Father, He laid down his life for the teſtifying of it. 2. It is the exemplifying (and that is the moſt Rhetorical argument, the moſt powerful way of perſwading) the higheſt and hardeſt part of the Chriſtian's duty, that of laying down our lives for the truth, reſiſting unto blood in our τὰ πρὸς ψυχῆς Ὀλύμπια our ſpiritual Olympicks, our ſtriving againſt ſin. 3. It is a ſealing that Covenant betwixt God and us, which he came to preach, a Covenant of mercy, and pardon, and everlaſting ſalvation to all that perform the condition of it, and to none elſe, and that is of all others the greateſt and moſt effectual engagement to that performance. 4. It is the ſacrifice for the ſins of the whole world, the λύτρον or means of expiation, or pardon, upon our unfeigned return and change, and that is abſolutely neceſſary to found our hope, as that hope is neceſſary to excite our indeavours. 5. It was the ceremony of conſecrating Chriſt our high Prieſt, to his great Melchiſedekian office of bleſſing us, in which as his reſurrection inſtated him, ſo that was by way of reward to his ſufferings, Phil. 2. 9. and ſo all that ſufficiency of ſtrength which is required for the turning every one from iniquity, Acts 3. 26. being an effect of that bleſſing of his, the doctrine of his death, from the merit whereof this quickning power doth flow, is a foundation of all chearful attending on his ſervice, to which he is ſo ſure to afford his aſſiſtance.

What propriety the Croſs hath to this.

CHAP.

CHAP. V.

JESUS CHRIST raiſed, &c.

Sect. 1. ELſewhere this Foundation is determined to one other ſingle article, that of the reſurrection of Chriſt, Rom. 10. 9. which ſuppoſing and comprehending the crucifixion under it, and being viſibly and undeniably wrought by the immediate and omnipotent power of God, and not imputable to any other poſſible means, was a moſt illuſtrious Teſtimony, and conviction of the innocency of Chriſt, thus ſignally vindicated, and rewarded by God, and conſequently a confirmation of the truth of all that he had taught, and thus ſigned with the effuſion of his blood. Chriſt's Reſurrection the Foundation.

Sect. 2. Of this one article it is our Saviours affirmation that it was ſo full matter of conviction to all gainſayers, that they which ſhould not be wrought upon by that, were to expect no farther ſigns or miracles, and the deſign of the Holy Ghoſts coming upon the Apoſtles being to fit them for the great work (for which Chriſt had given them Commiſſion) the teſtifying and proclaiming his Reſurrection, from thence ariſes the aggravation and irremiſſibleneſs of the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, who had ſo abundantly convinced the World of Chriſt's Righteouſneſs by his ariſing and going to his Father. And accordingly in the preaching of Saint Peter, Acts 2. this was the doctrine that with ſuch an Emphaſis he inculcated upon them, ver. 22. Men of Iſrael, hear theſe words----Jeſus of Nazareth---- ye have nailed with wicked hands and killed, Whom God hath raiſed up, &c. and v. 24. this Jeſus hath God raiſed up, ἧ πάντες ἡμεῖς ἐσμὲν μάρτυρες, of which we all are witneſſes, or, whoſe witneſſes we all are, verſe 32. and ſo made him Lord and Chriſt, verſe 36. And when they heard this they were pricked at the heart, and ſaid, Men and Brethren, What ſhall we do? And upon this one foundation he immediately ſuperſtructs the exhortation to repentance, and coming in by baptiſm unto Chriſt, and three thouſand were that day wrought on by that method, verſe 41. an Argument of the greateſt conviction.

Sect. 3. Beſide this, the Reſurrection of Chriſt was a peculiar pawn and pledge of Gods raiſing up our bodies out of the grave, and (before that time comes) of his quickning our ſouls out of the moſt noiſome vaults, the habits and cuſtoms of ſin, wherein they lay putrified, this being an act of the ſame omnipotent Spirit, by which he raiſed up Jeſus from the dead, and without which it were as hopeleſs an attempt for ſinners to go about to riſe to new life, as it were for dead men to raiſe themſelves out of their graves. And conſequently the belief of this, was, in the former of theſe reſpects, of ſpecial importance to confirm our hopes of another life, on which ſo many branches of Chriſtian piety ſo immediately depend (that eſpecially of laying down our lives for Chriſt's ſake) that if our hope in Chriſt were only that of this life, we could never eſpouſe ſo cold a ſervice; And in the latter reſpect it was moſt proper to quicken our hopes, that upon our awaking at Chriſts call, and ariſing (like Lazarus) out of our graves of ſin, that Chriſt, which gives us life, would command us to be looſed from our grave-cloaths, reſcue us by the power of his Spirit from the bands and power of ſin, and enable us to live Chriſtianly; Which we could not hope to do without this power of his Spirit, to prevent and aſſiſt us, nor reaſonably attempt to do without this hope. A pawn of our Reſurrection Corporal, and Spiritual.

Sect. 4. Farther yet, the Reſurrection of Chriſt hath the power of a pattern to us, and is ſo made uſe of, and typified in baptiſm, as an engagement and obligation to us to tranſcribe that divine copy into our hearts, and to riſe to newneſs of life. And accordingly that ſeems to be the importance of the phraſe, Rom. 10. 9. believing in the heart that God raiſed Chriſt from the dead, there being no more neceſſary to the ſuperſtructing all piety on that one foundation, but to ſink down the belief of that one Article from the brain to the heart, to reduce it effectually to practice. An example of new life to us.

CHAP. VI.

Other Articles of Belief in Chriſt.

Sect. 1. BEſide theſe two, a whole catalogue, and climax of Articles we have ſet down, 1 Tim. 3. 16. made manifeſt in or by the fleſh, juſtified by the Spirit, ſeen of Angels, preached among the Gentiles, believed on in the World, received up with glory. And theſe all together ſeem to be that ἀλήθεια, truth, verſe 15. (as elſewhere Faith) of which the Church was στῦλος καὶ ἑδραίωμα, a pillar and eſtabliſhment, to ſuſtain and keep it (as a pillar firmly ſet upon the baſis ſuſtains and upholds the fabrick laid upon it) from ſinking or falling; For ſo this truth depoſited in the Church, or with the Governours thereof (ſuch as Timothy there) was to be conſerved and upheld by that means. And it is farther obſervable in that place, that it is called μέγα τῆς εὐσεβείας μυστήριον, the myſtery of Piety, and that a great one, ſignifying the price and value of theſe articles principally to conſiſt in this, that they tend mightily to the begetting of piety in our hearts, and ſo are the μυστήριον, the articles of our initiation, or of our religion into which we are initiated by Baptiſm, as the foundation on which all our Chriſtian practice (which alone deſerves the name of piety, and is oppoſed to ἀσέβεια impiety) is ſuperſtructed and built afterward. The Myſtery of Godlineſs. 1 Tim. 3. 16.

God made manifeſt by the Fleſh.

Sect. 2. This will be more viſible by ſurveying the ſeverals, [1. Θεὸς ἐφανερώθη ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ, God manifeſt by the fleſh.] God was ſo intent upon this work of revealing and declaring his will to men, in order to bringing home ſinners to repentance, ſo very deſirous that men ſhould reform and live, and not ſin and periſh eternally, that to inforce this on us at the greateſt poſſible advantage, he was pleaſed himſelf to aſſume, and manifeſt his will, in, or by our Fleſh, and ſo, not only God from heaven, but God viſible on earth, to preach reformation among us, and if this be not able to make impreſſion on us, it is not imaginable that all the preaching of men or Angels, that any inferiour method ſhould be of force to do it. From whence it was, that all the Devil's countermines in the firſt ages were deſigned purpoſely againſt this one Article, the Deity or God-head of Chriſt incarnate, making all that he did and ſuffered here an appearance, no reality, in oppoſition to which is the [ἀληθῶς] and [ὄντως] ſo oft repeated by Ignatius, the reality and verity of Chriſt's eating, and ſuffering, and riſing, &c. and every branch of ſuch hereſie took off (as far as it was believed) from the neceſſity of Chriſtian life, not only by implying him to be an Impoſtor, if he were not truly what he oft affirmed himſelf, and was by the Apoſtles affirmed to be, the Meſſias, i. e. the eternal ſon of God, and God bleſſed for ever, but by evacuating that great obligation, and engagement to reform our lives, taken from the authority and Godhead of him, that had ſought and ſolicited it ſo earneſtly, and came down from heaven and aſſumed our fleſh upon that one errand or embaſſie to reveal himſelf more convincingly among us.

Sect. 3. Had it been only a Prophet, though never ſo great and extraordinarily furniſhed with ſigns and wonders, he had been but a ſervant of God, and there were many experiences and precedents among their forefathers of the reſiſting of ſuch, but the perſonal deſcent of God himſelf, and his aſſumption of our fleſh to his divinity, more familiarly to inſinuate his pleaſure to us, to admoniſh, and invite, and denounce judgments, and even to weep over thoſe that would yet be obſtinate, was an enforcement beyond all the methods of wiſdom, that were ever made uſe of in the world.

Sect. 4. For God, I ſay, himſelf to do all this, and to deſcend ſo low, to ſo mean an eſtate, and to a much meaner uſage, a ſhameful contumelious death, to work this work moſt effectually upon men, was a wonderful act of grace and wiſdom, a ſecret, a myſtery indeed beyond all former ways, infinitely conſiderable towards this of turning from every evil.

The Arians doctrines againſt it.

Sect. 5. And upon this ſcore the doctrine of the antient and modern Arians and Photinians, which ſo induſtriouſly leſſens the divinity of Chriſt in pretence of zeal to God the Father, to whom they will not permit him to be equal, muſt conſequently take off extremely from this Myſtery of Piety, this foundation of a good life, laid in the eternal God's coming down to preach it to us: And as it is a direct contradiction to thoſe places, wherein Chriſt is called God, Acts 20. 28. Tit. 2. 13. wherein he and his Father are affirmed to be one, John 10. 30. and 1 John 5. 7. wherein the known title of the God of Iſrael (never named in their ſervices, but it was anſwered by all with ברוך שם εὐλογητὸς εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας, God bleſſed for ever) is by the Apoſtle attributed to Chriſt, Rom. 9. 5. (as alſo *Heb.*13.21. 1 *Pet.*4.11. & 5.11. 2 *Pet.*3.18. *Rev.*1.6.) and which, as Proclus ſaith, convinceth all the hereſies concerning Chriſt, De Fide. p 53. ᾧ ἀποτειχίζει, and walls up the newly invented ways of injury and contumely againſt him; So it is a great diminution and abatement of the force of that fundamental argument, whereon God thought fit, that the renovation of the world ſhould be ſuperſtructed, and how much ſoever the contrary hereticks the modern Socinians have pretended to the maintenance of Piety, 'tis certain they have by this taken out one principal ſtone from the foundation of it, the Θεὸς ἐφανερώθη ἐν σαρκὶ here, God made manifeſt by the fleſh, which could not be affirmed of Chriſt, if he were not firſt God, before he was thus made manifeſt by the means of his incarnation.

God juſtified by the Spirit.

Sect. 5. The next ſtone in this foundation is, Θεὸς ἐδικαιώθη ἐν πνεύματι, God's having been juſtified by the Spirit] i. e. the ſeveral ways of conviction, which were uſed in the world by the Spirit of God, to give authority to all that was revealed by Chriſt, as the will and commands of God. Such was 1. the viſible deſcent of the Spirit of God upon him at his baptiſm, *Matth.*3. which (as preparative to his entring on the exerciſe of his prophetick office, *Matth.*5.&c.) was the divine atteſtation given from heaven (by voice) to all that he ſhould ever teach.

Sect. 6. Secondly, Such was the Spirits leading him into the wilderneſs, Mat. ch.4. to ſubject him to the Devil's examination, and thereby to give grounds of conviction to him and thoſe infernal powers, that he was the ſon of God.

Sect. 7. Thirdly, Such was his power of doing miracles, works of that nature, as were by all acknowledged to be above the power of men or devils, and only works of the Spirit of God, Thus was his curing of Leproſie, of which the King of Iſrael ſaith, Am I a God, that this man ſends to me to recover a man of his Leproſie? 2 *King.*5.7. and which the Jews proverbially called the finger of God, and is therefore ſaid to be done εἰς μαρτύριον αὐτοῖς, for a teſtimony unto them, *Matth.*8.4. an evidence of his divinity; Thus the giving ſight to him that was born blind, which ſince the world began, had not been heard of to be done by any, John 9. 32. Thus the raiſing of Lazarus and others, and at laſt his own reſurrection from the grave; All which being wrought by the Spirit of God, and being not otherwiſe poſſible to be done by any, were the δικαίωσις or Judicial way of approving his Commiſſion from God, and his doctrine, againſt all gainſayers, and ſo moſt eminently tends to the impreſſing the neceſſity of that reformation, which he came to publiſh.

Sect. 8. Fourthly, Such was the deſcent of the Spirit on the Apoſtles, authorizing them witneſſes of the reſurrection, and preachers of all that truth and will of God, which Chriſt had in his life revealed to them, which conſequently gave an atteſtation to all that the Apoſtles ſhould teach, being thus led by the Spirit into all truth, and ſo was of ſpecial concernment to the planting of a Church, and enforcing that reformation of lives, which the Apoſtles preſſed on all that would not be ruined eternally.

God ſeen by Angels.

Sect. 9. The third branch of this myſterious divine way of working piety on earth, is the ὤφθη ἀγγέλοις his being ſeen by Angels, i. e. his divine power diſcerned and acknowledged and adored by Angels themſelves, both good and bad; by the good 1. at his birth, Luke 2.13. Secondly, when after his temptation and faſting they came and miniſtred unto him, *Matth.*4.11. Thirdly, in the trouble and agony of his his ſoul, before his death, Joh. 12.29. Luk. 22.43. Fourthly, at, and after his reſurrection, Matt 21. 8. And by the bad, both when he was tempted, and when he caſt them out of their poſſeſſions, obeying his command, dreading his power, and believing and confeſſing him the ſon of God moſt high, and when immediately upon his birth, the oracles, which had before ſo flouriſhed among the heathens, began to droop and decay, and from giving reſponſes in Verſe, deſcended to Proſe, and within a while were utterly ſilenced. Which as it was a moſt regular means to bring all ſorts of men, heathens as well as Jews, to reformation of all vices, thoſe eſpecially, which they were formerly taught in their Idolatrous worſhips, and were enſlaved to them unwillingly by the tyranny of thoſe falſe gods or devils, which required to be thus worſhipped, Rom. 8.20. and ſo continued to do till they were caſt out of their Temples; ſo was it an huge obligation on all men to receive and obey him, whom the very devils believed and trembled at, and a teſtimony of the greateſt force in the mouth of a whole Province of his greateſt enemies, that he was, what he aſſumed to be, the Meſſias of the world, who if he were not received by conſent and readily obeyed, would erect his kingdom in the deſtruction of thoſe enemies (an eſſay of which was thus ſhewn on the Prince of darkneſs) avenge and utterly conſume the adverſaries.

Sect. 10. The fourth is, the ἐκηρύχθη ἐν ἔθνεσιν, his being preached among the Gentiles, or Idolatrous nations of the world; The meſſage brought by him from Heaven was proclaimed not only to the Jews, but (both by himſelf and by the Apoſtles) to all the Gentiles, thoſe that till then had lived in all villany and impiety, and yet had now by Chriſt mercy tendred them upon Reformation, and thereby is all encouragement afforded to the greateſt ſinners, to forſake, and amend their lives, and by God's merciful pardon to the times of their ignorance, and forepaſt ſins, a paſſage opened to life, and eternity, for all that will make uſe of it, and this is the greateſt engagement to do ſo, and not to forfeit and loſe ſo pretious an opportunity. Preached among the Gentiles.

Sect. 11. The fifth branch is the ἐπιστεύθη ἐν κόσμῳ, his being believed on in the world; the faith of Chriſt received by many both Jews and Gentiles; Of that people of the Jews (a moſt ſtubborn obdurate people, that had killed the Prophets, and ſtoned them that were ſent) ſome conſiderable number repented and came in upon Chriſt's preaching, about three thouſand were added to the Faith at one ſermon, Acts 2. 41. before the Apoſtles going out from Jeruſalem (which wants but a ſeventh part of being ~~half the number of thoſe reſerved ones of the whole kingdom of the ten tribes~~, in Elijah's time, which had (ſecretly) kept out of that Idol-Baal-worſhip) and ſo proportionably at other ſermons, ſo that Acts 21.20. we hear of many myriads of believing Jews, and (taking out of theſe the Gnoſtick heretical party) an hundred forty four thouſand ſealed out of the twelve tribes as faithful ſervants of God, which had received the faith of Chriſt, and brought forth fruit accordingly, Revel. 7. and that, though but a ſmall number in proportion to the greater that remained obſtinate, yet above twenty times as many as they in Elijah's time; And when the greater multitude was ſo terribly deſtroyed, then the believers of that Nation were the only κατάλειμμα or remnant of it, and in a manner that whole people, by the converſion of ſome, and ſlaughter of the reſt, were ſoon after, though not at the time of the Apoſtles reſolving on this depoſitum, reduced to the Faith, and became Chriſtian. Believed on among men: The Jews.

Sect. 12. And for the Gentiles, they were contained in the number of thoſe which were preſent at that ſermon, Acts 2. 11. and no doubt ſome of them were wrought on by it, as even in Chriſt's time, the Gentiles faith is magnified for great, and above the ſize of what he had found in Iſrael, and they were peculiarly the violent that took the kingdom of heaven by force, whileſt the children of the Kingdom neglected, and were caſt out of it; And ſoon after the Apoſtles going out and preaching to all nations, they willingly received the Faith, and forſook their Idols, and within a while all Aſia, Acts 19. by St. Paul's preaching, and other whole nations by each of the other Apoſtles, and at length the whole Roman Empire became Chriſtian, and the kingdoms of the world became the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Chriſt, Revel. 11. 15. and the Kings of the earth and of the Nations brought their glory to the Lamb, Rev. 21. 24. 26. and to the ſame purpoſe, Revel. 17. 14. and 19. 16. and as among the Jews, ſo all the world over, thoſe that received not the commands of Chriſt, and his doctrines of purity and perſeverance, were ſignally deſtroyed, and they that did, were preſerved as a peculiar people unto him, to live, and continue in his obedience. The Gentiles.

Sect. 13. And this great ſucceſs on both ſides, among Jews and Gentiles over all the world, (part of it hiſtorically true at the compiling of theſe articles, and part of it prophetically true then, and fulfilled afterward, the ſubduing them either by the word of his mouth, the preaching of the Goſpel, or by the word of his power, the deſtructions which he ſent among them) was a moſt effectual argument, a ſoveraign method to give authority to this faith, which was thus prevailing, and becomes the greateſt inſtance of reproach to all libertine profeſſors, that they ſhould not purifie their hearts by the faith, when the moſt impure Idolaters were wrought on to do ſo, and a ſad certain abode to all ſuch (after the example of obſtinate Infidels and impure Gnoſticks) of both preſent and future deſtructions.

Sect. 14. The ſixth and laſt ſtone in this foundation is the ἀνελήφθη ἐν δόξῃ, his being received up in, or with, or into glory, Chriſt's aſcenſion or aſſumption to heaven being an irrefragable argument of conviction to the World, that he died an innocent perſon, John 16. 10. and conſequently that what he taught was the will of God and truth of heaven, to which he was aſſumed after his teſtification of it; To which when theſe two circumſtances are ſuperadded, firſt, that his aſſumption being in the ſight of many, was alſo ſolemnized by the preſence of Angels, and a voice from heaven, Acts 1.9, 10, 11. (and ſo ἐν δόξῃ in or with glory, after a glorious manner) and ſecondly, that it was attended with the exerciſe of divine power, both in the Church by the hands of the Apoſtles, and their ſucceſſors, whom Chriſt had authorized to ſucceed him on the earth, and in the world by executing viſible judgments on his crucifiers, &c. (and ſo ἐν δόξῃ into glory or regal power) this will be an article of great energy for the planting of Chriſtian faith, and purity in the world. Received up into glory.

CHAP. VII.

The Faith in Baptiſm.

The Father, Son, and holy Ghoſt.

Sect. 1. WHat hath thus been ſet down as ſo many branches of fundamental belief, and ſo of the myſtery of Godlineſs, the ground of initiating or entring men into Chriſtian life, is more ſummarily compriz'd in the form of baptiſm, the ceremony of this initiation inſtituted by Chriſt, wherein all that were to be baptized, were (if of age, firſt inſtructed in the doctrine, and then) received, In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the holy Ghoſt. Which are the abbreviature of the larger Catalogue of doctrinals formerly taught and explained by the Catechiſt, and thoſe, on which they that adminiſtred baptiſm, are commanded to ſuperſtruct all the duties of Chriſtian life, Matt. 28.20. teaching them to obſerve all things which I have commanded you; the authority of all and each the perſons of the Trinity being purpoſely engaged on this one great intereſt, and the gathering diſciples and receiving of Proſelytes over the World, being deſign'd to this one grand end, of introducing the practice of Chriſtian vertues among men, who do therefore in baptiſm ſacramentally and federally, i.e. under oath and ſolemneſt vow (as they believe any thing of theſe fundamental doctrines of God the Father, Son, and holy Ghoſt) undertake the performance thereof, and if they fail therein, are the moſt faithleſs, perjured perſons in the World. And certainly this method is in the deſign more probable, (how improſperous ſoever the wickedneſs of men hath rendred the ſucceſs of it) than any could have been invented to this end.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Creeds in general; and firſt of the Apoſtles Creed.

The Apoſtles Creed

Sect. 1. THE method now leads from the more compendious, to the larger and fuller view of this foundation, as it is ſet down in the Creeds of the Church, and firſt in that which is called ſymbolum Apoſtolicum, the Apoſtolick badge or mark, (a teſſera or token of the Apoſtles having planted the Faith in any Church) the known ſummary of that belief, which had been received from the Apoſtles.

proved to be the Apoſtles.

Sect. 2. For although in their Epiſtles, which were all written to them which were Chriſtians already, there is not to be expected any complete Catalogue of thoſe articles, which they had every where taught, becauſe they were ſuppoſed by them to be ſufficiently known, and might briefly be referred to, as ſuch, without any perfect enumeration; yet in any City or Region, where the Apoſtles came to plant the faith, it is the affirmation of the firſt writers of the Church, as frequently appears in Tertullian, Irenæus, &c. (and there is no reaſon of doubt of the truth of it) that all thoſe articles, which were thought fit to be laid, as the foundation of Chriſtian life, were by them diſtinctly delivered; And this being a matter of fact, of which (as of the Canon of Scripture, or of this or that book in it) only the records, and ſtories of the firſt times are competent judges, that Creed which is delivered down to us by the Antient Churches thus planted (I mean thoſe of the firſt three hundred years) and by them entituled to the name The Apoſtles, and expounded in the homilies of the Fathers, ſome extant, others mentioned by Ruffinus, illuſtres tractatores which had gone before him in that work, is in all reaſon to be deemed the ſumm of that Foundation. Of this if any farther evidence be neceſſary, it will be thus eaſily made up.

Sect. 3. The time of forming the Nicene Creed, and the occaſion of it, (by way of oppoſition to thoſe hereſies which had then broken into the Church) is known to every man. Now before this was formed, it is certain, that * all the Churches of the world, both Eaſtern and Weſtern had a form of confeſſion of Faith, which they had received from their immediate anceſtors, and they from the || Apoſtles themſelves.

* Eccleſia per univerſum orbem uſque ad fines terræ ſeminata, & ab Apoſtolis & à diſcipulis eorum accepit eam fidem quæ eſt in unum Deum patrem omnipotentem, &c. Iren. l. 1. c. 2. || Quid ſi neque Apoſtoli quidem ſcripturas reliquiſſent nobis, nonne oportebat Ordinem ſequi traditionis, quam tradiderunt iis, quibus conſtituebant Eccleſias? Cui ordinationi aſſentiunt multæ gentes barbarorum, quorum qui in Chriſtum credunt, ſine charta & atramento ſcriptum habentes in cordibus ſuis ſalutare, & veterem eruditionem diligenter cuſtodientes, in unum Deum credentes, &c. Iren. l. 3. c. 4.

Sect. 4. And of this there is no place of doubting, but that it was the very ſame which we now call the Apoſtles Creed, not only becauſe there was never any other aſſigned by any, or affirmed to have had that general reception, but becauſe the teſtimonies of the Antients are expreſly for this. Ruffinus and Vigilius cont. Eutychen teſtifie clearly for the Weſtern Church, and Ruffinus again, and Cyril of Jeruſalem for the Eaſtern.

Sect. 5. And Marcellus Biſhop of Ancyra in the Great Council of Nice, a famous ſupporter of the true Faith, (and a great ſufferer for it) againſt the Arians, at his taking his leave of Pope Julius, leaves behind him the Confeſſion of his faith, which, ſaith he, he had received παρὰ τῶν κατὰ θεὸν προγόνων from his his predeceſſors in the Lord, And this was the ſame with that which we now ſtile the Apoſtles Creed, as appears in that ſtory, ſet down by *Epiphanius har.*72. All which will receive yet farther force from that known obſervation of St. Auſtins, that what the Univerſal Church holds, and hath not been inſtituted by Councils, but always retain'd, is with all reaſon to be believ'd to have been delivered by tradition Apoſtolical, (there being no other ſo large an Original to which ſo univerſal an effect may be imputed) *l.*4. *de bapt. cont. Donat.*c.24. eſpecially when to that we add Tertullians words of this very matter l.de velandis virgin. Regula quidem fidei una omnino eſt, ſola immobilis & irreformabilis, Credendi ſcilicet in unicum Deum, omnipotentem, mundi Creatorem, & filium ejus Jeſum Chriſtum, natum ex virgine Maria, &c. The rule of faith is altogether one, and that alone immoveable, and unreformable, to wit of believing in one only God, omnipotent, Creator of the world, and in his ſon Jeſus Chriſt, born of the Virgin Mary, &c. Which being a ſummary reference to this Creed, and that reſolved to be one over all the World, and that unchangeable, muſt needs be imputed to that Apoſtolick original, which alone can pretend to that dignity, and accordingly he tells us contr. Prax. c. 2. hanc regulam ab initio Evangelii decurriſſe, that this Rule came down from the beginning of the Goſpel.

*Sect.*6. And that every branch thereof in ſeveral, was a fit and proper ground-work of Chriſtian obedience, where-ever it were planted, and altogether ſufficient to found the reformation of whole Cities, and Provinces at once, will be diſcernible by the moſt curſory ſurvey. The article thereof fundamental to good life.

Sect. 7. The Articles 1. of God the Father, the * Ruler and Creator of all the world, Secondly, of God the Son, both in his titles and offices, and in the paſſages of his ſtory, from the Aſſumption of our fleſh to his coming again from Heaven to be our Judge; and thirdly, of God the holy Ghoſt; being all amaſſed together, make up this plain ſence, that all the divine (and infinitely wiſe) ways of œconomy that God in heaven could think fit to uſe toward a rational creature, to oblige, and reduce mankind to that courſe of living, which is moſt perfectly agreeable to our nature, and by the mercy of God ordinable to eternal bliſs, all the moſt powerful methods of impreſſing our duty on us, the authority of the God of heaven, who hath ſoveraign dominion over all, of God the Son, made up of all humble and charitable ways of condeſcenſion, to invite, and yet of all power, and terrors, to conſtrain, and engage our obedience (to execute vengeance on thoſe that will not be wooed by him) and of God the holy Ghoſt, who hath ordained a ſucceſſion of men, from that time to the end of the World, continually to negotiate this one affair of reducing ſinners to repentance: All theſe, I ſay, have been ſo ſolemnly made uſe of, and impreſſed by him, that there wants nothing but care and conſideration of our own eternal weal, a tolerance or endurance of being made happy here, and bleſſed eternally, to bring all that have believed thoſe articles, to forſake their ſinful courſes, and ſincerely to apply themſelves to the obedience of Chriſt. * Παντοκράτωρ.

Sect. 8. The firſt ſtone of this foundation is the conſideration and acknowledgment of the one eternal God, under thoſe two great relations of a Father and a Prince, and both thoſe founded in his right to the creature by title of creation; And the one belief and acknowledgment of this intitles him, and engages us to a ready voluntary obedience to, and dependence on him, and prepares for ſuch an univerſal reception of all that ſhall ever be revealed to be his will, that every preſumptuous, known act of prevarication is no leſs than a Στομαχία, a rebellion like that of the old Giants, a fighting againſt God, a conteſting with heaven, a reſiſting his will and our own happineſs, and that may be one ſeaſonable degree toward the obliging us to piety. The article of God the Father.

Sect. 9. The ſecond, and that which brings along with it all the force and authority of the former (as the only Son bearing the perſon, and employed in the Embaſſy of the Father) is the acknowledgment of Jeſus Chriſt, who, by being ſent into the World to be our King or Lord, and by the divine miraculous way of his entrance into it, the powers and mighty works, and piety of his life, and the ſtupendious manner of his paſſage out of the World, to reſume, in his humane, as well as divine nature, that regal power in heaven, which from all eternity belonged to him as God, is fitly qualified, and prepared to take poſſeſſion of his inheritance, to rule and reign in our hearts by this faith, and ſo to recall and reduce immediately all, that cordially believe the true God (who now in this gracious pacifick manner comes to treat with them) and to convince all the blind worſhippers of Idol falſe gods, of the vanity and villany of their former courſes, and ſo to bring them back to their own peace. Of God the Son.

Sect. 10. Thirdly, the acknowledgment of the holy Ghoſt, in that great office of Paraclete, or Advocate of Chriſt, convincing the world of the truth, and divine authority of Chriſt's meſſage, and then commiſſionating and aſſiſting the Apoſtles, and their ſucceſſors in their continued never-ceaſing Embaſſie to us, to pray us in Chriſt's ſtead to lay down our weapons of hoſtility, and to be reconciled unto God, to live friendly and filially, i.e. obediently before him, What is it but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, reſounding for ever in our ears? as if it were minutely proclaimed in thunder from heaven, to give men no reſt in their ſins, no quiet from Chriſt's importunity, till they awake from the lethargick ſleep, and ariſe from ſo dead, ſo mortiferous a ſtate, and permit him to give them life. Of God the holy Ghoſt.

*Sect.*11. That which follows of the Holy Catholick Church, as it is (with the reſt) an attendant on this article of the holy Ghoſt, the end of whoſe deſcent was to gather a Church or ſociety of holy Chriſtian livers over the whole world, ſo is it the interpretation of thoſe two parts of the myſtery of piety formerly explicated [Chriſt's being preached among the Gentiles, and believed on in the world] of the ἐπισυναγωγὴ ἐπ' αὐτὸν, 2 *Theſſ.*2.1. the gathering together of a multitude over the world, among Gentiles, as well as Jews, to that banner ſet up by Chriſt, enrolling themſelves in his muſters, engaging their faithful obedience to him; And if we will not be made the mark, and aim of all his arrows, be lookt on as the profeſſed oppoſers of all his methods, and therein of all piety, and of our own ſouls, Of the Holy Catholick Church.

we muſt think our ſelves obliged to haſten into that number, and that in reſpect of the holineſs, as well as the aſſemblies, of the practice, as well as the profeſſion of Chriſtianity.

Sect. 12. And the conſideration and ſerious belief of this, that God hath taken ſuch care to anticipate, and prevent every man, to draw him early into his Church, there to inſtruct and oblige him to all Chriſtian performance, to give piety the prepoſſeſſion, before other competitors (home-bred luſts or vitious cuſtoms of the world) ſhould be able to pretend to him, and ſo to engage him in holineſs firſt, and then in bliſs, is another argument of great energy to work effectually on mankind, and recommend this obedience to them.

Of the Communion of Saints.

Sect. 13. So likewiſe the κοινωνία τῶν ἁγίων, which ſeems to me (and is elſewhere explicated) to belong to the communication, Acts 2. 42. as that ſignifies liberality of the Saints which firſt received the Faith of Chriſt, and as it is there explained by their having ἅπαντα κοινὰ all things common, ver. 44. and that again by ſelling their poſſeſſions, and diſtributing them to all, as every man had need, ver. 45. and again by αἰνοῦντες θεὸν καὶ ἔχοντες χάριν, praiſing God, and having, or exerciſing charity to all the people, ver. 47. (making their liberality a ſpecial branch of their Euchariſt, their bleſſing and worſhipping of God) as it is an evidence of the great force that the Goſpel of Chriſt had then upon mens ſouls, melting them into that liberal effuſion of all that they had, into an abſolute contempt of all that is moſt doted on in the World, κτήματα καὶ ὑπάρξεις, poſſeſſions of all kinds, and by parting with all indefinitely, throwing themſelves abſolutely upon God's minutely providence for the ſuſtaining of them (which is directly the Merchant's courſe in the Goſpel, ſelling all, and buying, at that vaſt price, the one hidden Jewel which he had found) ſo is it an engagement to all that will undertake this profeſſion, to come with preparations of mind ſome way proportionable to theſe examples, to exerciſe that charity to men, and dependance on God in the things of this World, which ſhall evidence their πολίτευμα ἐν οὐρανοῖς, that the joyes which they depend on are in another World, and that the either having or wanting here, is no otherwiſe conſiderable, than as it is the opportunity of exerciſing the ſeveral graces, which are the propereſt means to exalt and perfect our Nature, and the way to our immortality.

Sect. 14. As for the other larger notion of this κοινωνία ἁγίων, ſo as to import the ſpiritual Union of Faith and Love between all profeſſors of Chriſtianity, and, (as exerciſes of that) the Communication of the myſteries (ſo ordinarily ſtiled ἅγια) of Prayers, of Faſtings, of Tears, of Sufferings, of Rejoycings, of Thankſgivings, it muſt be taken in by analogie with this former, and will alſo fitly be comprehended under the former Article of the Church (and therefore it is, that the Nicene Creed ſets [the Holy Catholick Apoſtolick Church] in the place of both theſe) and therefore need not be farther inſiſted on here.

The forgiveneſs of ſins;

Sect. 15. The forgiveneſs of ſins which now follows, is, being rightly underſtood, the moſt eminent branch of this foundation, and the removal of an hindrance which might otherwiſe obſtruct all thought or deſign of reformation, but being miſunderſtood is rendred inſtrumental to the moſt preſumptuous obſtinate ſecurity in ſin.

Miſ-interpreted.

Sect. 16. Should it be miſtaken for an abſolute impunity promiſed freely by God, or abſolutely purchaſed by Chriſt either for all men indefinitely, or for ſome ſpecial favorites of heaven, without reſpect to their reformation or new obedience, it were the direct foundation of all impenitence, to all that either had, or believed themſelves to have their part in it, and might by all carnal men probably be made uſe of as ſuch.

Sect. 17. For to a carnal liver, which were once poſſeſſed of this perſwaſion, that all his ſins paſt and future were abſolutely forgiven by the tenure of the Goſpel, and that without any condition of change required of him, what imaginable motive is there to perſwade him to forſake any one ſin, to which he hath the ſlighteſt temptation? When God is once a favourer of his groſſeſt ſins, or of his perſon in deſpight of his ſins, all the other Articles of his belief will ſound nothing but mercy and promiſes to him, and accordingly thoſe that have imbibed this errour, have extended the influence thereof to the whole Goſpel, which they will not allow to contain any thing but promiſes, and ſo all the commands of Chriſt are at once out-dated.

Rightly underſtood.

Sect. 18. But when it is rightly underſtood, and confined within thoſe due limits, which the Goſpel every where aſſigns it, 1. to be the pardon of ſins paſt and forſaken (which belongs not either to future ſins, or to any that are not reformed.) Secondly, to be the admiſſion of ſinners to repentance, and ſo, and by no other means, to forgiveneſs, (and therefore John's ceremony of admitting Proſelytes is called the baptiſm of repentance for the remiſſion of ſins.) Thirdly, to extend no farther to any ſort of ſins continued in or unforſaken, than as they are reconcileable with ſincere endeavours (and uſe of the means) to forſake and get victory over them (which though it ſecure us of God's favour and pardon to our infirmities and ignorances, doth denounce his wrath againſt our wilful ſins) When it is taken with theſe reſtraints and conditions on one ſide, and is then extended (as the general promulgation extends it (to all the ſins of every ſinner in the world, who ſhall by repentance and ſincerity of change be rendred capable of it. When that which is miſtaken to be particular and abſolute, is duly underſtood to be general, but conditionate (and to belong to none, who ſhall not perform the condition, i. e. impartially, and ſincerely, and univerſally reform his ways according to the Rules delivered by Chriſt, his precepts of Chriſtian purity, extending to the very heart) then is there a ſure ground-work laid of renovation and care for our future lives, and all objections removed, that might probably obſtruct that ſuperſtructure.

Sect. 19.

Sect. 19. As long as we are guilty of any paſt ſin, and have no promiſe (the only due ground of hope) of remiſſion, whatever our future care be, this deſperation of ſucceſs chills all our induſtry, and we ſin on, becauſe we have ſinned, we caſt off the care of all future thrift, becauſe we are already bankrupted. The want of this to Renovation in a firſt,

Sect. 20. So again while we make no diſtinction of ſins, and deem every invincible infirmity or ignorance (from which we have no hope to be freed in this life) to be as dangerous and mortiferous as the moſt wilful act, or favoured habit of carnality, another face of the ſame deſperation affrights us, and admoniſheth us to provide for our eaſe, when we cannot for our ſecurity, deters from attempting what we cannot finiſh, and permits us to be careleſs, when we cannot hope to be proſperous in our care. a ſecond,

Sect. 21. Nay, when we undertake the baptiſmal vow, and enter on this new life, if, as that baptiſm cannot be repeated, ſo it were impoſſible that any groſſer fall after the firſt repentance could receive any cure or remedy; the experience of our own frailties, and the conſideration of the ſlippery place we ſtand on, of the watchfulneſs of the temper, and the advantage he hath from a falſe party within us, which is always ready to joyn with him, and betray us, and of the great difficulty, the moral, though not natural, impoſſibility, that in ſo long a work, we ſhould continue ſo vigilant, as to be obnoxious neither to ſurpriſe, nor fall, would be apt (like the news of the Anakims in the way) to diſcourage us from leaving the accuſtomed familiar wilderneſs, and undertaking the unknown voyage to that good land, invironed with ſo many difficulties: An opinion of the feebleneſs or ſucceſsfulneſs of the work being as neceſſary to found a purpoſe of undertaking it, as either the authority of commands, or the perſwaſiveneſs of promiſes, or pungency of menaces, or proſpect of miſchiefs upon neglect, can be imagined to be. a third reaſon,

Sect. 22. But when all theſe objections are anſwered, diſcouragements removed, difficulties provided for, (as they are by this Article of Remiſſion of ſins, duly explained, and ſuperadded to the former branches of the foundation) they to whom all this is revealed and received with an undoubting faith, if they do not preſently ſet about ſo eaſie, and ſo happy a task, which hath ſo many grains of equity and mercy allowed in the weighing it out unto us, if they will not be directed into a path ſo plained and ſmoothed, that the wayfaring men, though fools, ſhall not err therein (that weakneſs, or ignorance, or natural defects, or humane frailties, or any thing that includes not unſincerity and preſumptuous going on in ſin, ſhall be reconcileable with their hopes and God's acceptance) muſt needs acknowledge themſelves in the number of the blind people that have eyes; of the provokers that ſhall not, becauſe they will not, enter into God's reſt, of the ſinners that have no excuſe for their ſin. The neceſſity of it.

Sect. 23. In the next place the Reſurrection of the body, which includes and ſuppoſes a future ſtate of ſouls after that of this life (for to what purpoſe ſhould that world of vexed, carcaſſes, ariſe, if there were not as numerous a world of ſouls ready to animate them, and joyn with them in receiving rewards or puniſhments for all that the ſouls have acted by thoſe inſtruments in this life?) is moſt neceſſary to found, and inforce this Renovation; For, if there were nothing after this life, if in the death of a man there were no ἴασις, cure or remedy, Wiſd. 2. 1. if the premiſes of the Atheiſt in that Chapter had truth in them, his concluſion being founded on thoſe premiſes, it could not be ſtrange, or irrational for him to proceed, Come on therefore, let us enjoy the good things that are preſent, verſe 6. The belief of the Reſurrection of the Body.

Sect. 24. And if, ſuppoſing the immortality of the ſoul, the body were not aſcertain'd to return to that old aſſociate, if that ἐργαστήριον πνεύματος, that ſhop or work-houſe of the good or evil ſpirit, ſhould, with all that hath been wrought in it, be conſumed eternally, this would take it much out of the care of the ſoul, either to ſtop it in its Career of ſin, or to mortifie thoſe affections that are in this earthly part, or to ſpiritualize and repleniſh it with good works. Fundamental to Renovation.

Sect. 25. If the upper ſoul, that hopes to reign in another World, can ſo far preſerve that degree of ſuperiority and dignity of its nature, as to reprehend and check what is conſented to by the will or middle faculty, in complyance with the fleſh, that inferior and bruitiſh, (as it is, as oft as any ſin againſt conſcience is committed) and can then hope, that after a few years of ſenſuality, that importune rebellious ſervant ſhall be eternally caſt off, drop into a perpetual impoſſible nothing, take a long progreſs into a land where all things are forgotten (and conſequently the good which hath been acted in that fleſh, as well as the evil) this would be ſome colour for that novel perſwaſion (a fruitful principle of all carnality) that the man may be regenerate in the ſight of God, though he be ſold under ſin, led captive unto the law of ſin, which is in the members, meaning thereby the moſt conſtant compliance of the will (and actions) to all the motions of the fleſh, ſo long as the Law of God in the mind or upper ſoul diſlike, and diſſent from it, which it will ſeldom miſs to do, as long as we have any conſcience or knowledge of duty remaining in us. The want of it very hurtful.

Sect. 26. But when the prevarications and irregularities of the body, which are not ſubdued, as well as check'd, mortified as well as diſliked by the ſoul, ſhall receive their certain payment in the body (reunited on purpoſe to the ſoul, that that which hath merited by compliance, may be rewarded by ſympathy) when the flames (that by being inflicted on the body are experimented to afflict, and enter into the ſoul) ſhall demonſtrate to the ſoul her cloſe concernment in all that is permitted to come ſo near her, then it will appear to be every man's intereſt to joyn good performances to ſpiritual purpoſes and reſolutions, to act, as well as to deſign, to ſubdue and quell the exorbitances of the fleſh, as well as to continue the wouldings of the ſpirit; And this being abſolutely required to the ſincerity and reality of our repentance and renovation, which conſiſts not in the ſtrife, or wiſh, or purpoſe, but in the actual operations of good life, the belief of the Reſurrection of the body, which is ſo inſtrumental and preparative to this, muſt needs be fundamental to that, which is ſuperſtructed on it; and was therefore deemed fit to be firſt preached to all men, before ſtrict Chriſtian performances could reaſonably be required of them. The perſwaſion gainful.

Everlasting life.

Sect. 27. Lastly, the everlasting life both of body and soul in that future state, whether in bliss or woe, hath with all reason been added as the last stone to this foundation, and in it all the promises and terrors of the Gospel, to perswade and drive us to repentance.

The necessity of the belief of that.

Sect. 28. Were the state, wherein we expect our reward for the abstinencies, or riots of this present life, under the prejudices of short, or finite, as it hath the disadvantage of absence and futurity, the promises and threats of Christ would lose much of their vertue and energie, and being by their spiritual and invisible nature rendred so faint in the original, and yet (to make them more so) set to sollicite us at a distance, they would want a competent instrument to collect and convey their rays successfully, or so as to effect, or impress the species with any vigor on a dull, and withal prejudicate faculty. We know a life in reversion is not half so valuable, as that which may at present be entred on, and this not only in the opinion of fools, but of the most prudent purchasers; And unless there be somewhat in the duration to inhaunse the value, and to be offered in commutation, and to reward the patience of the present self-denial, Heaven it self would be look'd on jealously, as a project to deprive us of our present portions, to cheat us of our possessions; But when the loss of every present advantage to flesh and blood, is sure to be repaid in a far nobler coin, and to continue to be enjoy'd to all eternity, when beside the liberal harvest of satisfactions for any the most trivial loss or suffering, submitted to upon Christ's command or advice (the hundred fold more in this life) we are secured to reap in another world, everlasting unperishable felicities, and when to the empty, nauseous, afflicting pleasures of sin, for some one shortest moment, attended immediately with a far more durable shame, and then followed with an immortal, endless gnawing death (that is, all jaws, but no stomach) shall remain (by way of arrear) a sharp, yet sullen payment to all eternity, when every play or jest of sin, shall engage us in that perpetual earnest, and after the transitory joy is forgotten or loathed, the irreversible sentence of endless woe is expected, instantly and infallibly to come out, and with it an ἐσρράγισα ταμεῖα all the store-houses of ease or mercy sealed up, all drops to cool, or oceans to quench our misery; Then certainly upon this perswasion duly rooted (not in the brain but heart) an ordinary Orator may suffice to superstruct an admission of the precepts of Christ, and induce in a rational creature a willingness to be happy here (by a patient bearing of a gentle, desirable yoke) that so he may be blessed eternally.

Sect. 29. And so we have taken a cursory view of the several Articles of the most antient and shortest Creed, and therein exemplified the propriety of our definition of Fundamentals, and having the Apostles judgment in their preachings to confirm us in the truth, that the laying of so large a foundation was deemed necessary, to their design of planting the same fruits in all soils, piety, probity, and purity, in a nation of hypocritical Jews, and a world of Idolatrous polluted Gentiles, we have already shewed how unnecessary it is to enquire, whether any single sinner of either of those provinces might not possibly be reduced to Christian life, without some one of these explicitely and actually considered, and so have no temptation to inlarge this Chapter by any such consideration.

CHAP. IX.

Of the Nicene and Athanasian Creeds together; and severally of the Nicene.

Sect. 1. HAving view'd the Apostles Creed, and of it premised this one thing, that it was a complete Catalogue of all, that they (being directed by the Holy Ghost in their ministery) thought fit to lay the foundation of Christian obedience in every Church, and consequently that there was no more, in their opinion, necessary, in order to this end of working reformation in the World; It will from this datum demonstratively follow, either that there is in the two other Creeds, the Nicene, and Athanasian, nothing materially different from that which the Apostles Creed had contained (nothing really superadded to it) or else that that superaddition was not in the Apostles estimation, necessary to this end, and consequently that if (at the forming of them) it were by the following Church thought necessary to be thus made, or still continues to be so, this must arise from some fresh emergent, one, or more, which had been observable in the Church after the Apostles time.

The design of later Creeds.

Sect. 2. And which of these two is the truth, it will not be uneasie to define; For though the omission of some words, which had been retained in the Apostles Creed, do not signifie much, (for it is certain that they were (while retained in that) and are still, (now they are left out in following Creeds) eternally and unquestionably true, in the sence, wherein the Apostles and their successors understood them) nor indeed any more, than that they were virtually contained in other words still continued (as the descent to hades, under that of his suffering and burial, and not rising till the third day; and the communication of Saints, under the Catholick Church, with the Epithet of Apostolick added to it) or else that they were not necessary to be repeated, because already familiarly known and confessed, and not question'd by those Hereticks, against whom the variations were designed (as in the Athanasian Creed, the Articles of the Holy Ghost, so largely set down in four branches in the Nicene Creed, and the three Articles attending that of the Holy Ghost, in the Apostles Creed, are all omitted) yet those words which in the later Creeds were superadded to the former, were apparently designed by the Compilers for some special use, either by way of addition, or interpretation, to fence the Catholick orthodox Faith from the corruptions, and depravations, or else from the doubtings, and contradictions of Hereticks.

Defined.

Of the Nicene.

Sect. 3. Thus in the Nicene Creed, the two additions in the first Article, the [ἑνα, one] prefixed to [God] and the [καὶ πάντων τῶν ὁρατῶν καὶ ἀοράτων, and of all things visible and invisible] were, upon prudent prudent deliberation and considering, interposed, the first of them on occasion of the Arians, in one respect, and both of them, in another respect, by reason of the Gnostick and Valentinian, and such like following hereticks, whose heathen and Poetical Theology (taken from Hesiod, and Orpheus, and Philistion) had rendred them necessary. For that those Hereticks, beginning with their Simon and Helena, had introduced a plurality of Gods (and so made the Profession of the unity, part of the symbolum that should discriminate the Orthodox from them) and affirmed that their Æones or Angels were begotten by Helena (Simon's Πρώτη ἔννοια, first cogitation) and that the World was created by them, and that the God of the Jews was but one of those Angels (and a great deal of the like) appears by Irenæus, *l.*1.*c.*22. And these two interserions were clear explications of the Apostles old form, God the Father, Ruler of all, Maker of heaven and earth, which sufficiently contained an acknowledgment of the Unity (for how else could he be Monarch, or Ruler of all?) and also asserted him the Creator of all the Angels (who were certainly comprehended under the heaven and earth, the phrase of Scripture to denote the world) but yet was capable of more light, by these more explicite words (visible and invisible) to exclude the contradictions of hereticks.

One God.

Of all things visible, and invisible.

Sect. 4. And though the Creed in the antient Apostolick form were sufficient for any man to believe and profess, yet when the Church hath thought meet to erect that additional bulwark against hereticks, the rejecting (or denying the truth of) those their additions, may justly be deemed an interpretative siding with those antient, or a desire to introduce some new heresies; And though good life might have been founded without those additions, if on such occasions they had never been made, yet the pride or singularity (or heretical design) of opposing or questioning them (now they are framed) being themselves unreconcileable with Christian charity, and humility, are destructive of the fabrick directly, and interpretatively of the very foundation, and is therefore justly deemed criminous, and liable to Censures in the Church of God.

Sect. 5. So likewise the Oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ (as before of the Father) referring to the several hypostases in the one eternal, indivisible, divine nature, and the eternity of the Sons generation, and his co-eternity, and consubstantiality with the Father, when he came down from heaven, and was incarnate, &c. for us men peculiarly (not for Angels) and for our salvation; and lastly the perpetuity of his kingdom added in the close, all these are assertions equivalent to those, which had been before compriſed in the antient, more simple, uncompounded article, but were useful to be thus enlarged, and explicated, when the Arians opposed the Apostolick tradition, and by corrupting detorted the words of scripture to their sence.

One Lord Jesus Christ, &c.

Sect. 6. This is elsewhere more largely shewed (in the note on 1 John 5. 7.) And all that will opportunely here be added, is only this, that they which, according to the Apostles depositum, or doctrine in every Church, believed the descent, and incarnation of the eternal God, on purpose to rescue Mankind from all impurities, to reveal the whole divine will for the regulating mens lives, to attest it by his death, and evidence it by his resurrection, &c. and at last to come to judge the world, according to this determinate rule, had all those branches of Christian faith, which were required to qualifie Mankind to submit to Christ's reformation. And 'tis the wilful opposing these more explicite articles, the resisting them, when they are competently proposed from the definition of the Church (and not the not-believing them thus explicitely, when either they are not revealed, or not with that conviction, against which he cannot blamelesly and without pertinacy of his will hold out) that will bring danger of ruine on any.

Sect. 7. That which is added of the Holy Ghost [the Lord and giver of life, who proceedeth from the Father and the Son, (supposing with the Western Church, that the [Filióque] was found in the first Copies, and acts of that Council) who with the Father and the Son together is worshipped and glorified, who spake by the Prophets] is in like manner an enlargement, and explication of the more brief Apostolick form, and the substance thereof was compriſed formerly in that uncompounded stile (fitter then for the belief, and memory of all) but was afterward prudently enlarged for the repelling, and preventing the poyson of heretical invaders, the Montanists, and Macedonians, &c.

The Holy Ghost the Lord and giver of life, &c.

Sect. 8. And so likewise that addition of the one Baptism prefixt to the Remission of sins was on purpose design'd against the Novatians, whose pretensions were considered, and condemned in the Council of Nice; The practices of the Churches in receiving those that had fallen into gross sins after baptism, had been somewhat different, in some parts milder, as in the Church of Rome, in others more rigid; The Church of Rome had given some liberty for the great offenders, murtherers, adulterers, and such as had fallen to Idol-worship, in time of persecution, viz. that after many years penance they might be restored to the Communion, and peace of the Church, without any new baptism (such as was used in admitting heathens) only by imposition of hands, or absolution; extending the vertue of baptism formerly received, to the washing away of these sins committed after baptism, in case of sincere repentance and forsaking of them; This the Novatians disliked, and thereupon brake off, and made a schism in the Church. And the Council of Nice taking cognizance of the matter, judged against Novatus and his followers, that there was place for a second repentance, and not only for that first before Baptism, as appears by the Canons of that Council. And this was it, that was referred to, in this more enlarged passage of their Creed, and the use of it thought very considerable for the reducing of lapst Christians, as the Apostolical article of remission of sins indefinitely, had been for the attracting heathens. And this, and all the former additions, being thus setled by the Universal Church, were, and still are, in all reason, without disputing, to be received, and embraced by the present Church, and every meek member thereof, with that Reverence that is due to Apostolick truths, that thankfulness, which is our meet tribute to those sacred Champions for their seasonable and provident propugning of our faith, with such timely, and necessary application to practice, that the Holy Ghost, speaking to us now, under the times of the New Testament, by the Governours of the Christian Churches (Christ's mediate successors in the Prophetick, Pastoral, Episcopal office) as he had formerly spoken by the Prophets of the Old Testament, sent immediately by him, may find a cheerful audience, and receive all uniform submission from us.

One baptism for the Remission of sins.

Sect. 9. And this is all that is here necessary to be said of this second Creed.

CHAP. X.

Of the Athanaſian Creed.

Sect. 1. OF the Athanaſian Creed (as it is uſually called) two things will be briefly conſiderable; 1. The doctrine of it. 2. The curſes and damnation denounced againſt thoſe, who do not entirely maintain it, without the corruptions, and mixtures of the hereticks.

The Doctrine of the Athanaſian Creed.

Sect. 2. The Doctrine is (well-nigh all of it) the aſſerting the Unity of the Divine nature, and the Trinity of hypoſtaſes, whether ſubſiſtences, as the Greek Church called it, or as the Latine, perſonæ, perſons in it, and that in oppoſition to ſeveral novel propoſitions, which had by hereticks been introduced in the Church, and ſo, (as the vices of men ſuggeſt laws) occaſioned ſuch explications, and enlargements. And of theſe again (much more than of the Nicene ſuperadditions) it may be reaſonably affirmed, that being the explications of a Father of the Church, and not of a whole Univerſal Council, or of the Church repreſentative, they were neither neceſſary to be explicitely acknowledged, before they were convincingly revealed, nor ſimply and abſolutely impoſeable on any particular man, any farther than he was a member of ſome Church, which had actually received Athanaſius's explication (as it is apparent the Weſtern Churches did) or than it appeared concordant with the more authentick Univerſal Confeſſions, as every doctrinal propoſition of it will be found to do.

The Cenſures.

Sect. 3. As for the Cenſures annext, 1. in the beginning [that except a man keep the Catholick faith (of which this is ſet down, not as the entire form, but an explication, or interpretation of ſome parts of it) whole and undefiled, he ſhall doubtleſs periſh everlaſtingly] Secondly, in the middle [he that will be ſaved, muſt thus think] and [it is neceſſary to everlaſting ſalvation that he alſo believe rightly in the incarnation, &c.] and Thirdly, in the end [this is the Catholick Faith, which except a man believe faithfully he cannot be ſaved] I ſuppoſe they muſt be interpreted by their oppoſition to thoſe hereſies, that had invaded the Church, and which were acts of carnality in them that broached, and maintained them, againſt the Apoſtolick Doctrine, and contradictory to that foundation, which had been reſolved on, as neceſſary to bring the world to the obedience of Chriſt, and were therefore to be anathematized after this manner, and with deteſtation branded, and baniſhed out of the Church; Not that it was hereby defined to be a damnable ſin to fail in the underſtanding, or believing the full matter of any of thoſe explications, before they were propounded, and when it might more reaſonably be deemed not to be any fault of the will, to which this were imputable.

CHAP. XI.

Of the Superſtructure, and the particular branches thereof.

Sect. 1. HAving thus briefly taken a view of the Foundation, and therein alſo of the Superſtructure generally conſidered, together with the propriety that one of theſe hath toward the other, the doctrines of belief to the renewing of mens lives, I am now by courſe to proceed to a more particular view of this Superſtructure, and the ſeveral branches of it.

The general nature of the Superſtruction in five particulars.

Sect. 2. Where firſt it muſt be remembred, that the πλήρωσις or filling up, which Chriſt deſigned, contrary to the καθάλυσις diſſolving, or abrogating of the Law and the Prophets, is far from evacuating or annulling the obligation of any one ſubſtantial precept introduced by the Law of Nature or Moſes, but coming as an ἀπίνομις or ſuppletory to all former Laws, as a new and more perfect correct edition of the old Codex, as one general Law for the reforming and hightening of all Laws, is wholly deſigned, as may be moſt ordinable to this end.

Sect. 3. Firſt in filling up vacuities, turning out ſhadows and ceremonies, by explicite preſcription of the ſubſtantial duties, which thoſe ſhadows did obſcurely repreſent: 2. In binding ſome parts of the yoke cloſer than they were before thought fit to be bound upon men, extending the precepts farther than they were thought to extend: 3. In raiſing them to more elevated degrees of perfection, ſinking them deeper than the outward actions to the purity of the very heart: and 4. by promiſes of the moſt amiable divine, and terrors of the moſt diſmal unſupportable nature, confirming and binding them all upon us, and not allowing us liberty, or impunity in any indulgent tranſgreſſion of any branch of this Law thus reformed and improved by him.

Sect. 4. And this being the reſult of Chriſt's deſign, 1. the production of a καινὴ κτίσις, an entire new creature, a new modelling of the whole ſoul for the whole ſpace of the future life; and 2. the purpoſe being to People the whole world, i. e. a community of men (whoſe underſtandings are not generally deep, and ſo muſt be wrought on by means proportionable to them) with a colony of ſuch divine new creatures; and 3. the nature of man (as a rational and voluntary agent) requiring that all this be done by way of perſwaſion, not of violence, to preſerve their liberty, which alone could render them capable either of reward or puniſhment; and 4. the difficulty being ſo great, and the improbability of attempting this ſucceſsfully ſo great alſo, It was but reaſon that a large and a ſolid foundation ſhould be laid, upon which this ſo important and weighty a fabrick might probably be erected.

Sect.

Sect. 5. But though an uniform universal obedience to the commands of Christ, which contains every specialty under it (and is not reconcileable with our partiality, the προσωπολη\ψια, accepting, as it were, of the person of any sin or vertue, the preferring any one duty to the prejudice of any other) be that which alone can own the title of the Christian Superstructure, without which completely erected, no enumeration of particular duties will be sufficient, yet some specialties there are which have a greater propriety to this title, than some others, and to which our Christian institution gives us more peculiar obligations; And it will not be amiss to mention some of these. The specialties of it.

Sect. 6. First Piety (the Love, and Fear, and Obedience, and Faith, and Worship of the one true God) in opposition 1. to Idolatry, 2. to Formality, 3. to Hypocrisie, on one side; and then 1. to Sacrilege, 2. to Profaneness, or Impiety, on the other side.

Sect. 7. First Piety, or the worship of the true God, the Creator of the world, the God of Israel, as that is opposed to the Idol worship, whether of devils and souls of men (in the rites of whose religion many of the vilest sins of carnality and luxury were practised) and to the adoration of liveless, breathless pictures, and images, so it is the reforming of the vices, and sottishness that had long overspread the infatuated Gentile world, and so a prime branch of that design of Christ's coming, and of his sending his Disciples to all nations, to awake them out of this dead sleep, and Lethargy of soul, and by the knowledge of the true God, to bring to them the imitation of, and dependence on him. Piety in opposition to Idolatry.

Sect. 8. Secondly, as Piety is opposed to slight, negligent, external formal performances, so is it the necessary Christian vertue, proportioned adequately to the omniscience and spirituality of that infinite deity, the belief whereof is laid as a prime part of the Foundation. And though that inward warmth, if it be any whit intense, will necessarily extend it self to the outward man (as motion that begins in the centre, naturally diffuses it self, and affects uniformly, and shakes every part to the circumference) and consequently oblige the body to attend the soul in all reverences of address to that awful Majesty, who hath full title to the obediences of either (and this, in this conjunction, is far from meriting any unkind censure, or jealousie, the very bodily exercise being affirmed by St. Paul to be ἐπ' ὀλίγον ὠφέλιμος, profitable for a little, and the fasts, and austerities that were to attend the departure of the Bridegroom, being of this nature directly, and so the Publican's smiting on his breast being added to his prayer for mercy, on which Christ bestowed that Eulogie) Yet if, as insectile animals, for want of blood, run all out into legs, so the want or chilness of devotion, and not the intension of it, be that which casts the body into the solemn demure postures; if, as Julian reproacheth Christianity, the striking of the breast, and shaking of the head, the formal outward humiliations be all the zeal and piety of the Christian, this is no farther than Ahab's soft pace, no part of that reformation, that Christ came to work, none of that worship in the spirit, which is the tribute required in the days of the Messias, and that which the Spirituality of God, to whom the addresses are made, and of the promises, which are rewards proportioned to our spirits, most strictly exact from us. Piety in opposition to Formality.

Sect. 9. Thirdly, as Piety is opposed to hypocrisie and unsincerity, and all falseness or foulness of intentions, especially to that personated devotion, under which any kind of impiety, oppression, rapine, sedition, &c. is wont to be disguised, and put off more speciously, so is it a special part of this superstructure, and as the defining or opining Godliness to be gain, 1 Tim. 6. 5. hath the brand and reproach of an heresie, quite contrary to the Christian doctrine and practice, so certainly the designing our obedience to any part of Christ's precepts, as the means to gain our selves, and defraud others, to sin more securely before God, or unexpectedly before men, is of all things most unreconcileable with Christianity; And that so little of this sincere piety is to be met with in the world, the reason is clear, because Christianity is so far from having its perfect work upon mens hearts, our brains and our tongues being the only parts, that are ordinarily taken up and possessed with it. To Hypocrisie.

Sect. 10. Fourthly, the true Christian Piety looks upon sacrilege with a more perfect aversation, than any former religion hath done; The first efflux of men's piety after receiving of the Faith was the selling and consecrating their possessions, Act. 2. and the detaining of any such sacred portion is looked on (and punished severely) as the defrauding of the Spirit of God, c. 5. 3. And the zeal that is so exhausted, and laid out in animosity to Idols and Sabbath-breaking, that it can easily support, and put over the Golden wedge, and the Treasures of the Temple, and so likewise the ἀλλοτρία οὐσία, the cheap, chargeless piety, that brings no tribute to the offerings of God, (to which antiently it was a scandalous thing for any man to approach empty) that offers all its sacrifices to the Lord, of that which costs it nothing, is far from any semblance of the Christian reformation, is not ascended so far as the Natural, the Mosaical, the Heathen, the Mahomedan piety, and is a work of more than Ægyptian darkness, that the excess of light hath brought into the world. To Sacrilege.

Sect. 11. Fifthly, the Christian piety is, beyond all other things, diametrically opposed to Profaneness and Impiety of actions, that μεσημβρινὸν δαιμόνιον Noon-day Devil, that sins bare-fac'd and confident before the eye of heaven, that of the practical Atheists, the Ἄθεοι ἐν κόσμῳ τούτῳ, which though they acknowledge God in the Creed, yet reject and abandon him in their actions, and either as Jews, candidates of an earthy Canaan, or as Turks of a carnal Paradise, live as if there were never a God in this world, and never a life after it, whatsoever proportion of the foundation is laid in their brains, have none of the superstructure in their hearts. To Profaneness.

Sect. 12. A second specialty, which hath a considerable propriety to this title, is, obedience to superiours, which though founded in the Law of the first Creation, and afterward precisely commanded by Moses, hath this note of eminence (above what was formerly) set on it by Christianity; that it is πρώτη ἐντολή, a prime commandment, the very title bestowed by Christ on the love of God, Mat. 22. 38. Mar. 12. 30. and that with promise (for that it was not the first commandment with promise, is evident by the second of the Decalogue, which hath a promise annexed to it) and it is a compound of three of those vertues, to which the Beatitudes are peculiarly assigned by Christ, Matt. 5. of Meekness, and Peaceableness, and suffering for righteousness sake, and this bound indefinitely, not only on all under subjection, κἂν Ἀπόστολος, &c. saith St. Chrysostome, though they be Apostles, or Bishops, or any the most sacred persons; and extended as indefinitely ὑπερεχούσαις ἐξουσίαις, to the most heathen, provoking, oppressing, (as long as they be lawful) powers; and lastly, this duty is enlarged by Christ so as Obedience to Superiours.

to belong to Eccleſiaſtical (as well as to Civil) ſuperiours, who having the Keys committed to them by Chriſt, as to the œconomy or ſtewards of his family, though they be not armed with the ſecular ſword, or any carnal weapons of their warfare, yet obedience is a tribute that belongs to them, Heb. 13. ver. 17. as to thoſe that are to give account for mens ſouls, which they could not be ſuppoſed to do, if they had not authority over them: And therefore to make Religion a ſtratagem to undermine, or a banner under which to oppoſe and violate government, is a thing moſt contrary to this ſuperſtructure, moſt ſcandalous and reproachful to Chriſtianity.

Charity. Sect. 13. Thirdly, Charity to all ſorts, to all mankind, to neighbours, to ſtrangers, to our own, and even to God's enemies, Charity of all ſorts, of giving, of forgiving, of loving, bleſſing, praying for, of mercy to bodies, of relief to eſtates, but eſpecially of admonition, and reprehenſion to ſouls; Charity in oppoſition to injuſtice, covetting and defrauding others, to faction, diviſion, civil inteſtine broils, ſchiſms and ruptures in a Church (that ſpecial piece of carnality, 1 Cor. 3. 3.) to judging, anathematizing, damning, denying the peace of the Church to them that are qualified for it; and laſtly to all guilt and thirſt of blood, all capital puniſhing of any, but capital malefactors, is a third ſpecialty of this ſuperſtructure, as certain a badge of this ſinking down of Chriſtianity into the heart, as the Apoſtolical ſymbol is of the preaching the Faith among us.

Purity. Sect. 14. Fourthly, Purity is a ſpecial part of this ſuperſtructure, and the circumciſion of the heart, the regulating and reſtraining of all deſires of the fleſh within the known limits of conjugal or virginal Chaſtity; and this in oppoſition to πορνεία of all ſorts, the unnatural, inceſtuous, adulterous conjunctions, thoſe before marriage, or after divorce, and to the ſeveral degrees of theſe in the very eye (and all that is proportionable to that) Mat. 5. 28. but eſpecially in the heart, ver. 8. And whatſoever mens faith, or their patience, or perſeverance were, any remarkable indulgence to this ſin, the ſeduction of Balaam (in the matter of Peor) or the deeds of the Nicolaitans, Rev. 2. 15. were ſure to bring judgments and curſes upon thoſe firſt daughters of Chriſt's love, and if not timely repented of and reformed, will in all probability be revenged with the removal of the Candleſtick, plowing up the very foundation, the Profeſſion of the Chriſtian Faith in thoſe National Churches that are ſtill in any eminent manner guilty of it. The judgments of God, and utter deſtructions of many Nations, not only thoſe that were rooted out for the implanting of the Jews, but even of all the Monarchies which are mentioned either by way of ſtory, or prediction in the Scripture, are ſo ſignally diſcernible to have been the reward of this ſort of ſins, eſpecially of the unnatural Sodomitical impurities; and the honourableneſs of marriage in all (in order to the averting the ἄτιμα πάθη, diſhonourable affections, Rom. 1.) is ſo ſolemnly recommended in the New Teſtament (in oppoſition to the impure Gnoſtick hereſie, that was ſo unkind to marriage, as to make it a work of the Devil) that it may be a very opportune caution to all Chriſtian Churches, and Magiſtrates, not to impoſe celibacy on whole callings, and great multitudes of men or women, who cannot be diſcernible or ſuppoſeable to have the gift of continence; Nor yet by offering worldly rewards and advantages to all that ſhall deprive themſelves of that honourable remedy, to invite the raſheſt or the worſt of men into that ſtate of continual temptations, which hath cauſed the ſhipwrack of ſo many.

Contentedneſs. Sect. 15. Fifthly, Contentedneſs is moſt eminently one of theſe ſpecialties, and that both as it is oppoſed to ambition, covetouſneſs, injuſtice, uncontentedneſs, (each of which is a moſt unchriſtian ſin) and alſo as it is the maintaining and eſtabliſhing of Propriety in the world, which though it be not of any huge importance in reſpect of any conſiderable advantages, that wealth and honour can help a Chriſtian to, (who is, or ought to be, raiſed by Chriſt to a contempt, and ſuperiority over ſuch mean empty acquiſitions as theſe) yet, as the diſturbances which queſtions of right never fail to bring along with them, are very unhappy, and innumerable, and endleſs, ſo the ineſtimable benefit of peace, and quiet, and vacation for piety, and the inſtrumentalneſs of riches to works of charity (even above that more perfect way of abſolute deſpiſing of wealth, which by giving all at once, diſables for many thouſand future charities) have rendred it very politick and neceſſary in every Chriſtian Common-wealth, by Laws to ſettle, and ſecure Propriety, which he that hath learnt with St. Paul to be content in whatſoever eſtate, will never attempt to invade or violate.

Taking up the Croſs. Sect. 16. Many other branches of this ſuperſtructure there are which it cannot be neceſſary to mention here, but above all the taking up of the Croſs and following Chriſt with it on our ſhoulders: And the vigorous indeavour to caſt it off from our own ſhoulders, to faſten it on other mens, and to ſhake the foundations of Government, in order to any ſuch attempt, is moſt diametrically contrary to the true Chriſtian temper, an enmity to the Croſs of Chriſt.

CHAP. XII.

Of the Doctrines that hinder the ſuperſtructing of good life on the Chriſtian belief, firſt among the Romaniſts, a Catalogue of them, eſpecially that of the Infallibility of the Church; 2. Among others, 1. that of the Solifidian.

Sect. 1. I Come now to conſider what Doctrines there are, infuſed (diſcernibly) among Chriſtians, which are moſt apt to fruſtrate the forementioned method, to obſtruct, or intercept the cordial ſuperſtructing of Chriſtian life, or Renovation, where the Foundation is duly laid: For ſuppoſing the Articles of our Chriſtian Faith to be compleatly taught, and undoubtedly believed, and ſo the foundation to be purely laid according to the Apoſtles platform; And ſuppoſing farther that that the ſeveral forementioned branches of the ſuperſtructure be ſo far taught and believed alſo; as that they are not doubted to be the vertues preſcribed, and preached to men by Chriſt; It is yet poſſible, that after all this, ſome other Doctrines may inconveniently interpoſe, and intercept the uſes and aims, to which God hath deſigned the Faith, and at once obſtruct the ſuperſtructing of all Chriſtian life upon it.

Sect. 2. Of this ſort the Catalogue is (or ſoon may be) far larger, than will be fitly inſerted in this place. For upon this occaſion we might be engaged to enter on the examination of the Romiſh doctrines, 1. of Penances, 2. of Indulgences, 3. of the Treaſury of the Church, made up (beſide the blood of Chriſt) of the ſupererogating merits of ſome, and applied to the benefit and pardon of others, 4. of the Improvableneſs of Attrition into Contrition, by the Prieſts aid, without the ſinners change of life, 5. of Purgatory, 6. of Diſpenſableneſs of Oaths, 7. of Arts of Equivocation, 8. of Ceſſation of Allegiance in ſubjects to an heretical Prince, and ſome others the like; but eſpecially of the Infallibility, and inerrableneſs, which is aſſumed, and incloſed by the Romiſh Church, without any inerrable ground to build it on, and being taken for an unqueſtionable Principle, is (by the ſecurity it brings along with it) apt to betray men to the fouleſt whether ſins, or errors, whenſoever this pretended Infallible guide ſhall propoſe them; And ſeeing it is juſt with God to permit thoſe, which think they ſtand ſo ſurely, to fall moſt dangerouſly, and becauſe what ſome witty, and ſubtle men of this, and former ages have been experimented to fall into, may in the future poſſibly become the Romaniſts caſe, and becauſe the Aſſuming of Infallibility is by way of interpretation the preſuming, and affirming every thing to be infallibly true, and good, which they ſhall ever believe, or teach de fide, or pronounce to be duty (and there is nothing ſo falſe, or ſacrilegious, but it is poſſible they may thus reach, or pronounce of it) for theſe reaſons, I ſay, it will be impoſſible to free this Doctrine of theirs, which hath ſo vaſt, and comprehenſive an influence on the opinions and actions of all who have eſpouſed it, from the * guilt, of which now we ſpeak, that of hindring the ſuperſtructing of Chriſtian life, and the ſeveral branches thereof, on the Foundation.

Doctrine among the Romaniſts.

The Doctrine of Infallibility.

* Subditos illi (Papæ) ſimpliciter obligari ad credendum, adeò irrationabile & blaſphemiæ plenum eſt, ut etiam quacunque hæreſi peſtilentius inveniatur, that ſubjects ſhould be abſolutely and ſimply bound to believe the Pope, is ſo irrational and full of blaſphemy, that it is found more peſtilent than any hereſie whatſoever. Weſſelus Groningenſ. de dignit. & poteſt. Eccl. c. 1. (written about 200 years ſince.)

Valdè periclitaretur vita juſti ſi penderet ex vitâ Papæ. Weſſelus Groningenſ. de dignit. & poteſt. Eccl. c. 1. the life of a juſt man would be in very great hazard, if it depended on the life of the Pope.

Sect. 3. And if (as the Jeſuites define) this Infallibility of the Church be ſuppoſed to be ſeated in the perſons, or chair, or ſucceſſion of Popes, 'tis preſently obvious and clear, that as Almain, and Ocham have not thought it irreverent to averr that any ſuch perſon is * deviabilis, hæreticabilis, Apoſtatabilis, damnabilis, liable to errour, hereſie, Apoſtaſie, damnation it ſelf; So they that believe him an infallible guide, muſt in conſequence to their opinion, if they purſue it, follow him to all theſe dangers; And when Pope Stephen hath been by St. Cyprian accuſed of hereſie, Pope Liberius by St. Athanaſius, Pope Honorius by all Chriſtians, when the chairs of thoſe Biſhops, which have not ſecured their perſons from notorious impiety of living, that fouler guilt than hereſie, (Ἀθεΐας εἶδος, a ſpecies of Atheiſm, as ‖ Nilus truly ſaith on this occaſion) can with no more pretence, or colour of proof * ſecure them from defining of errors, or tolerating of ſins; and when the writers of their lives, Onufrius, and Platina, who have told us, how much more than poſſible the former is, (relating the inceſts, witchcrafts, cruelties of Alexander the ſixth, the Idolatrous ſacrifices of Marcellinus, Celeſtins applications to the Devil in purſuit of the Papacy, and his diſclaiming his part in heaven, ſo he might obtain that earthy dignity) have given us reaſon to foreſee the poſſibility alſo, and all the ill conſequences, and aboads of the latter; It cannot be temerarious or unreaſonable to affirm, that what hath been, may be, and in like manner, that the doctrines of any antient heretick may, in ſome new ſhape, be imbibed by a Cardinal, and being ſo, may not forſake him when he is made Pope, but beget a deſire very conſequent to his belief, an appetite of propagating his perſwaſions, and ſo that Practices may be allowed, and Articles taught by the Pope, moſt contrary to the deſign of this Foundation, and the Church that hath impoſed on her ſons the belief of her Infallibility, draw all that underſtand it in this ſence (for I ſee another is now affixt to it by ſome Romaniſts) and pay this ready obedience to it, into the ſame ſnare of Hereſie, or Impiety, or both.

Of the Pope.

* Summorum Pontificum plerique peſtilenter erraverunt, &c. Moſt of the Popes have erred peſtilently. Weſſelius Groning. de dign. & poteſt. Eccl. c. 1.

‖ de Primatu, p. 57.

* Πῶς ἱερεὺς ἐνδιάβλεται ἢ Πάπας ἀρνούμενος Θεὸν, λόγοις ἢ ἔργοις; What amulet hath the Pope to preſerve him from denying God in his words, who ſo oft doth it in his works? Nil. de Prim. p. 57.

Sect. 4. For of this we have too frequent experience, how hard it is to diſpoſſeſs a Romaniſt of any doctrine, or practice of that preſent Church, for which he hath no grounds either in Antiquity, or Scripture, or Rational deductions from either (but the contrary to all theſe) as long as he hath that one hold, or fortreſs, his perſwaſion of the Infallibility of that Church, which teacheth, or preſcribeth it. And indeed it were as unreaſonable for us to accuſe, or wonder at this conſtancy in particular ſuperſtructed errors, be they never ſo many, whilſt the αἴτιον ψεύδους, this firſt great comprehenſive falſity is maintained, as to diſclaim the concluſion, when the premiſes, that duly induce it, are embraced. And then that other errors, and guilts of the higheſt nature neither are, nor ſhall be entertained by thoſe, that are thus qualified for them, muſt ſure be a felicity to which this doctrine hath no way intitled them, and that for which they can have no ſecurity for one hour, but by renouncing that principle which equally obligeth to the belief of truths, and falſehoods, embracing of commendable, and vitious practices, (worſhipping of Chriſt in Heaven, and under the ſpecies of bread; of the ſon, and of the mother of God) when they are once received, and propoſed to them by that Church.

The ill effects of it.

Sect. 5. But inſtead of any fuller view of theſe, I ſhall mention ſome few of thoſe, which our cloſer, and latter experience hath made moſt familiar to us, and given us reaſon to look on with a quickneſs of ſenſe, and dread, but thoſe ſuch, as being not entred into the Confeſſions of any national Church, are not properly chargeable either on Papiſts, or Proteſtants, but on particular dogmatizers on both parties. From whom the doctrines being infuſable into all, it will be more neceſſary to forewarn all of the danger of them.

Sect. 6.

The perſwaſion of the Soliſidian.

Sect. 6. Such is firſt the perſwaſion of the Soliſidians, that all Religion conſiſts in believing aright, that the being of Orthodox (as that is oppoſed to erroneous) opinions, is all that is on our part required, to render our condition ſafe, and our perſons acceptable in the ſight of God.

Sect. 7. This is a perſwaſion frequently obſervable in thoſe that are forward to ſeparate from all, who differ in matters of Doctrine from them, who place ſanctity in their opinions (as generally hereticks do) and make the diſſents of other men, the characters of animal, carnal Goſpellers: and the influence of this on the matter in hand [the ſuperſtructing Chriſtian life upon our Faith] is moſt evident; for if we ſhould give that perſwaſion of theirs the greateſt advantage, and ſuppoſe the Doctrines in the belief of which they place ſo much efficacy, to be theſe very fundamental Doctrines, which this Diſcourſe hath defined and ſpecified, yet in caſe the believing of thoſe aright be conceived the one and only neceſſary to ſalvation, it is evident that the ſuperſtructing of good life (the thing to which thoſe doctrines relate, and in reſpect of which they are ſtyled Fundamental) is ipſo facto become unneceſſary.

Sect. 8. For when it ſhall be once reſolved that Orthodox opinions are able to ſecure men of God's favour, and (that being aſſumed as a principle) the ſearch of them, being a work of the brain, ſhall generally be diſcernible (as Ariſtotle obſerves of the ſtudy of the Mathematicks) to have nothing repugnant to paſſions in it, and when thoſe articles of belief are conveyed to us with ſuch evidence that we have no temptation to doubt of the truth of them, what argument is there remaining to any rational man, which can move him ſo ſuperfluouſly, and unneceſſarily to ſet upon that more laborious, and ungrateful task of mortifying luſts, of ſubduing of paſſions, of combating and overcoming the world, of offering violence to his importunate, vigorous, carnal appetites? If he that is to be baptized, might be admitted to that ſtate of juſtified Chriſtians, (and therein to a right of inheriting the Kingdom of Heaven) by a profeſſion of the Articles of his Creed, and an undoubted perſwaſion and belief of the truth of them, what an impertinent tyranny were it to increaſe his burthen, to refuſe and delay his admiſſion, till he ſhould undertake the whole vow, of forſaking the Devil and all his works, of keeping God's holy will and commandments, and walking in the ſame all the days of his life? What uſe even of Prayer, of the Sacraments, of Charity, of Faith it ſelf, in any other notion but that, wherein he conſiders it and thinks himſelf aſſuredly poſſeſſed of it?

Sect. 9. The iſſue is clear, the Soliſidian looks upon his Faith or Articles of his belief, as the intire ſtructure, not as the Rudiments or Foundation, as the utmoſt accompliſhment and end, and not only as the firſt elements of his task; and ſo this Perſwaſion of his moſt unhappily, but moſt regularly, obſtructs and intercepts the building any more upon it, which, if he conceived himſelf no farther advanced, than the laying a few ſtones, a bare Foundation, he would rationally think himſelf engaged and obliged to proſecute to a far greater perfection.

Sect. 10. Hitherto we have conſidered this perſwaſion of the Soliſidian at the beſt and faireſt advantage, and ſuppoſed the Opinions, on which he ſo relies, to be the true, Chriſtian Apoſtolical, and Fundamental Opinions; But if we ſhould proceed farther and conſider how many other Opinions there are abroad in the world, which being neither Fundamental, nor Apoſtolical, nor arrived ſo far as to any fair probability of truth, do yet pretend to be the only ſanctified neceſſary doctrines, and ſuch, as every man that believes them is a pure Chriſtian profeſſor, and whoſoever queſtions or examines the truth of them, is to be look'd on as a carnal Goſpeller (whoſe arguments, though never ſo unanſwerable, are to be reſiſted, as ſo many temptations) and many of theſe in their own nature (over and above this Phariſaical opinion of the ſanctity of them) very apt to intermit our watch, to ſlacken our diligence, to give a Superſedeas to induſtry, it would be moſt evident that the Soliſidian's perſwaſions do moſt directly and immediately reſiſt God's principal deſign in revealing his truths, obſtruct the ſuperſtructure of Chriſtian life on this Foundation.

Sect. 11. But I ſhall not enlarge on the mention of theſe, any farther than they are likely to fall under ſome other head of this enſuing diſcourſe. Mean while it is worth remembring, what Epiphanius obſerves of the Primitive times, that wickedneſs was the only hereſie, that ἀσέβεια and ἀνοσίωα, impious and pious living divided the whole Chriſtian world into erroneous and Orthodox, by which we are advertiſed, how far we are from performing the engagements of our Chriſtianity, if we inſiſt ſo paſſionately, or ſo intently on the truth of our beliefs, as not to proceed to as vigorous a purſuit of all juſt, ſober, and godly living, to a ſtrict uniform Regulation of our practice, according to the obligations of our moſt holy Faith.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the Fiduciarie.

The Doctrine of Faith being a full perſwaſion.

Sect. 1. THE ſecond obſtructive, which I ſhall mention, is that of the Fiduciarie, that having reſolved Faith to be the only inſtrument of his juſtification, and excluded good works from contributing any thing toward it, proceeds to define his Faith to be a full perſwaſion, that the promiſes of Chriſt belong to him, or an aſſurance of his particular Election; which he that doth, and ſeriouſly believes himſelf to conclude aright, that he is a true believer, or that the only thing which he is obliged to acquire and arrive to, is this kind of full aſſurance, as it excludes all fear or doubting of his eſtate, and yet farther aſſerts (as many do) the priority of it (in order of time) before repentance, and ſo obliges himſelf to be ſure of his election and ſalvation, before he repents or amends his life, is fortified and ſecured by this one deceit from all obligation that Chriſtian Religion can lay upon him to ſuperſtruct Chriſtian practice, or holy living upon his Faith.

Sect. 2.

Sect. 2. For 1. if assurance of his good estate be the ens necessary, then it is evident that good life, which is a thing formally distinct from that assurance, is not necessary: 2. If his estate be already safe (and if it be not, then his believing it, is the believing a lie, and God's command to believe is a command to believe a lie, and so one man is justified and saved meerly by giving credit to a falsity, and all others rejected and damned barely upon their not believing the like falsity) then it needs no assistance or supply from good life to make it a good estate, or give him grounds to believe it such; 3. If he be justified before he repents and amends his life, then nothing can hinder the continuance of his justified estate, in case he do not repent at present, nor intercept his salvation, in case he do never repent; and this, not only by force of that maxime generally received by these Fiduciaries, that he that is once justified can never be unjustified, nothing can separate him from the favour of God, or interscind his justified estate; but also without that auxiliary, by all rules of discourse and consequence, for he that is this day in a good estate without repentance, may be so to morrow by the same reason, and so on, to the last day and hour of his life; Repentance will be no more necessary to the continuance than to the inchoation of his good estate. Obstructive to good life.

Sect. 3. Or if amendment and good life be affirmed necessary in order to the approving of his faith or justification either to himself or others, though not to his justification it self, 1. this cannot be reconciled with the Fiduciaries doctrine. For his Faith being a full assurance, includes that approbation of his justification to himself, and so he that hath that already, needs not good life to help him to it, and for the approving it to others, that is perfectly extrinsecal, and unnecessary, and impertinent to his justification, either in the sight of God, or in his own eyes; for as God judgeth not as man judgeth, so neither can man's disapproving of any man, be a just reason to move him, who believeth he sins and renounces the faith, if he permit himself to doubt, to admit any the least beginning of doubt of the goodness of his estate, or truth of his justification, because of the disapproving of men. And Secondly, 'tis God's justification, God's pardon of sin, the promise or hope of which hath sufficient power to perswade carnal men to forsake sin, and enter the rules of Christian life, and not the approbation of men. The pretended use of good life to the justifying of our Faith, vain in four respects: The First. The second.

Sect. 4. Thirdly, In case the Fiduciary were in the right (as he must be supposed to think himself to be) the men that did not believe him justified, should be unrighteous judges, passing a judgment contrary to God's judgment, and why should the Fiduciary that supposeth himself to be approved of God without Repentance, take such pains to approve himself to man's judgment, which the Apostle disclaims being judged by, Rom. 8. 33. The third.

Sect. 5. Fourthly, How can it reasonably be said that good life is necessary to approve our justification or our Faith, when good life is acknowledged to have nothing to do in the matter of justification, and when Faith is so defined as it hath no connotation of repentance or good life? If Faith be a full perswasion of my being justified, the only humane way for me to approve this to others, i.e. to make others believe that I am thus perswaded, is to testifie it by word or oath, which is the one means agreed on betwixt men to make faith of the truth of any thing which no man knows but my self (and if man were supposed to know it, it would follow that I should not need means to induce that approbation.) The fourth,

Sect. 6. The one other imaginable means of approving it to man, were the testimony of God either by voice from heaven, or by some other like means of Revelation, or by my doing miracles in God's name, which might impress some image of divine authority and veracity upon me; And so still good life is not the proper means for that end of approving us to men, especially if others believe what the Fiduciary doth, that Faith may be without good works, and good works, as far as to the eye of man, without Faith, for that being granted it follows necessarily, that one cannot prove or approve the other.

Sect. 7. Thus did the Jew by saying and thinking that he had Abraham to his Father, perswading himself of his particular irrespective election, think it safe first, and consequently prudent to run into all foul sins, and no more to think himself obliged or concerned by John Baptist's, or Christ's, or his Apostles perswasions to bring forth fruits of amendment, immediately before the judgments of God came out against that people, than he had been all the time before; Nor could his belief of God, his expectation of another life (allowed by the Pharisees) his obscure belief in the Messiah promised, the Law, the Prophets, the descent of God from heaven, the raising Jesus from the dead, prevail or gain in upon him, as long as he continued to conceive these privileges of Abraham's sons to belong unto him. The Jew's premature persuasion of his good estate.

Sect. 8. And in like manner the Christian professor, who hath imbibed this Fiduciary doctrine, and is confident of his present and unperishable right in the favour of God, when he commits those sins against which the Gospel denounces, that they which do those things shall not inherit the Kingdom of God, he is, if he acknowledge that part of the Gospel, and retain the belief of his personal election, necessitated to believe those acts, when committed by him, to cease to be those sins which they would be, when another man committed them; And then what necessity soever lies on him that hath that guilt upon him to reform the sins that contract that guilt, he which is supposed not guilty, cannot be so obliged, and 'tis hard to imagine what possible consideration, what messenger from the dead should be able to perswade him to repent, till he hath deposited that premature perswasion of his being in Christ. The Christians.

Sect. 9. One special ground of the Fiduciaries mis-perswasion is the Doctrine of God's giving Christ for all the Elect, and for none but them, all others being supposed to be left by God in a state of absolute destitution, and dereliction, upon no other foreseen demerit, but only the guilt of Adam's sin imputed to them, and not removed by Christ. The Fiduciary's ground, Christ's dying for none but the Elect.

Sect. 10. And upon that Doctrine imbibed, 1. it is not unreasonable or difficult for him that is thus perswaded, that supposes his danger to flow from no real sin, or guilt of his own, but only that which being committed by another is imputed to him, to believe, that there is nothing required of him (neither repentance nor good works) but only a full assurance of his own being elected, and rescued in Christ, i. e. a believing his own wishes (an aerial, magical faith) to work his deliverance for him.

Sect. 11. Secondly, What should make it necessary for him to repent and amend; who either without respect to any degree of amendment, is supposed to be elected to eternal bliss, or without respect to sin, to be irreversibly reprobated, i. e. to any person thus considered, either as elect, or left, reprobate, and non-elect in the whole masse of lapst mankind?

Sect. 12. Nay, I might add, what obligation can lie on any man ſo much as to believe (whatſoever the notion of faith be, even to believe he ſhall be ſaved) when 'tis ſuppoſed by him to be certainly decreed that he ſhall be ſaved, without foreſight of, or reſpect unto this Faith of his?

Two farther obſtructions to good life.

Sect. 13. Upon theſe premiſes it cannot but be reaſonable to conclude, and uſeful farther to take notice in the next place, that theſe two Doctrines, 1. of Chriſt's dying for none but the Elect, 2. of God's abſolute irreſpective decrees of Election and Reprobation, are inconvenient interpoſitions, which are moſt apt to obſtruct and hinder the building of good life, even where the Foundation thereof is received entirely, and not queſtioned in any part thereof; Of which I ſhall therefore farther treat in the two next Chapters.

Sect. 14. Mean while, as an appendix to this Chapter, it will be juſt to take notice, that ſome men have thought it neceſſary, in the definition of Faith, to change the [Full aſſurance] into a milder ſtyle of [Reliance] which if it be not joyned with other changes in that Doctrine, as in that particular of the Priority of Faith before Repentance, 'tis certainly 1. as erroneous, 2. as liable to the charge of obſtructing good life, as that other doctrine of Aſſurance hath appeared to be.

Of Faiths being defined by Reliance.

The Error of it.

Sect. 15. For the firſt, where there is no divine Promiſe, on which to relie, (as to the unreformed ſinner remaining ſuch, the whole Bible affordeth none) there what is reliance, but preſumption, reliance on a broken reed, a building without a foundation? Whereas on the other ſide if any promiſe were producible, whereon it were ſafe to relie, what ſcruple could the Chriſtian there make againſt entertaining the fulleſt aſſurance? for that without queſtion will be ſupported abundantly by ſuch a promiſe.

The danger of obſtructing good life.

Sect. 16. For the ſecond, 'tis viſible, He that continues unreformed and impenitent in his courſe of ſin, and is by the Preacher induced to relie on Chriſt for his ſalvation, and is farther taught, that this Reliance is that Faith by which he is juſtified, and the one thing, that is required of him to his ſalvation, what neceſſity can be imagined to lie on that man to reform or amend any vice, or to do any thing, but relie on Chriſt for the pardon of it, for juſtification and ſalvation? 'Tis ſuperfluous to purſue this any farther, which ſo diſcernibly falls under the inconveniences that have been ſhewed to belong to Aſſurance, and are mention'd in the former part of this Chapter, too largely to be here repeated.

CHAP. XIV.

Of Chriſt's dying for none but the Elect.

Sect. 1. NOW for that Doctrine of Chriſt's dying for none but the Elect, i. e. (according to the opinion of thoſe which thus teach) for a ſmall remnant of the world, as it is aſſerted without any pretence or colour of Scripture-proof, nay in oppoſition to as plain diſtinct affirmations as can be produced for any Article in the Creed, ſo is it of very ill conſequence to the ſuperſtructing of good life.

Univerſal Redemption the doctrine of Scripture.

Sect. 2. That Chriſt's dying for all is the expreſs doctrine of the Scripture, is elſewhere manifeſted by the phraſes of the greateſt latitude, uſed in this matter, 1. κόσμος the world, which is a word of the wideſt extent, and although it be ſometimes uſed more reſtrainedly, yet never doth nor can in any reaſon be interpreted to ſignifie a far ſmaller diſproportionable part of the world: Secondly, All, which word, though it be ſometimes reſtrained by the matter, and doth not always ſignifie every perſon or thing, yet generally it muſt be extended as far as the matter is capable of, and muſt not be reſtrained without ſome conſiderable reaſon for doing ſo: Thirdly, Every man, a form of ſpeaking which excludes all exceptions, of which ſome general phraſes are oft capable: Fourthly, thoſe that periſh, thoſe that are damned, thoſe that deny Chriſt, and purchaſe to themſelves ſwift damnation, which being added to the number of thoſe which are ſaved by his death, and acknowledged by all oppoſers to be ſo, make up the whole unlimited number of all mankind: Fifthly, as many as are fallen in Adam and dead through him, which phraſe is by all, but Pelagius and his followers, ſuppoſed to comprehend every ſon of Adam, every branch of his progenie.

Of the Creeds. The Nicene.

Sect. 3. And accordingly, though the Apoſtles Creed make no other mention of this, than is contained in ſtyling Jeſus Chriſt, our Lord, i.e. the Lord (by title of Redemption) of us all indefinitely, and particularly of every perſon, who is appointed to make that confeſſion of his faith, i.e. every one that is admitted to baptiſm, yet the Nicene Creed hath inſerted ſome words for the farther explication of that Article, [Who for us men and for our ſalvation came down----] which ſignifie all mankind to have their intereſt in it.

The Apoſtolick.

Sect. 4. Nay if it be obſerved in the Apoſtles Creed, that the two firſt articles are correſponding and proportionable one to the other, (to [God] in the firſt Article, [Jeſus Chriſt] in the ſecond; to [Father almighty] in the firſt, [his only ſon] in the ſecond; to [maker of heaven and earth] in the firſt, [our Lord] in the ſecond) we ſhall have reaſon to infer that as [heaven and earth] in the firſt Article ſignifie in the greateſt latitude, all and every creature in the world to have been created by the Father, ſo the [Our] in the ſecond Article is ſet to denote all and every one of us, every man in the world, without any exception, to be redeemed by God the Son.

Of the Church of England in the Catechiſm.

Sect. 5. And accordingly the Catechiſm of the Church of England eſtabliſhed by Law, and preſerved in our Liturgie as a ſpecial part of it, expounds the Creed in this ſence, I believe in God the Father which made me and all the world; 2. In God the Son who redeemed me and all mankind; 3. In God the Holy Ghoſt who ſanctifieth me and all the elect people of God; Where, as Creation is common to more creatures than redemption, and redemption than ſanctification; ſo Mankind, to which Redemption belongs, as it is far narrower than the world, or the works of God's Creation, ſo it is far wider than the Catalogue of all the Elect people of God, to whom ſanctification belongs.

as

In the Communion ſervices.

Sect. 6. So in other parts of our Liturgie, in Conſecrating the Euchariſt, we have this form of prayer, Almighty God---which---didſt give thine only Son Jeſus Chriſt to ſuffer death upon the Croſs for our redemption, and made there (by his own oblation of himſelf once offered) a full, perfect and ſufficient ſacrifice, oblation and ſatisfaction for the ſins of the whole world; And accordingly in the adminiſtration of that Sacrament, the elements are delivered to every communicant in this form, *The body of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt which was given for thee---*and, The blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt which was ſhed for thee, preſerve thy body and ſoul into everlaſting life; Which ſuppoſeth it the doctrine of our Church, avowed and profeſſed, that Chriſt's death was not only ſufficient for all, if God would have ſo intended and deſigned it, but that he was actually deſigned and given for all, not only as many as come to that Sacrament (which yet is wider than the Elect) but us men, or mankind in general, whoſe ſalvation was ſought by God by this means.

In the Articles.

Sect. 7. So in our Articles alſo, Chriſt ſuffered for us---that he might be a ſacrifice not only for Original ſin, but alſo for all the actual ſins of men, Art. 2. And, by Chriſt who is the only mediator of God and men---eternal life is propoſed to mankind, Art. 7. And, Chriſt came as a Lamb---that by the offering of himſelf once made he might take away the ſins of the world, Art. 15. And, The oblation of Chriſt once made is a perfect redemption, propitiation, and ſatisfaction for all the ſins of the whole world, Ar. 31. All which I have thus largely ſet down to ſhew the perfect conſonancy of our perſecuted Church to the doctrine of Scripture and Antiquity in this point, whereon ſo much depends for the ſtating and determining other differences, which have alſo a ſpecial influence on practice.

The ill conſequences of the denying it.

Sect. 8. As for the ill conſequences toward the obſtructing of good life, which are conſiderable to attend this one doctrine of Chriſt's dying for none but the Elect, they will be moſt diſcernible by attempting the Reformation and change of any vitious Chriſtian that believes that doctrine, or the comfort of any diſconſolate deſpairing Chriſtian, that hath gotten into this hold, and remains fortified in the belief of it.

In the reducing a vitious Chriſtian.

Sect. 9. For the former, 'tis evident, and that which he is ſuppoſed to believe, if he believe the Foundation (as I preſume him now to do, when I ſet the caſe of a vitious Chriſtian) that there is no ſalvation to be had for any ſinner, but only by the ſufferings of Chriſt, and that redemption by him wrought for ſuch: If therefore a vitious liver, believing that Chriſt dyed for none but the Elect, ſhall have any attempt made on him to reform and amend his life, 'tis certain that one medium to induce him to it, muſt be a tender of mercy from Chriſt, of preſent pardon, and future bliß, upon his Reformation; But if he be able to reply, that that mercy belongs only to the Elect, and he is none of them, it neceſſarily follows that he that would reduce this ſtray ſheep, muſt either prove convincingly to him that he is one of the Elect, or elſe hath no farther to proceed in this attempt.

Sect. 10. And if he thus attempt to perſwade the vitious Chriſtian, that he is one of the Elect, then 1. the very attempt confeſſes to him that a vitious perſon, remaining ſuch, may be in the number of the Elect, and from thence he will preſently be able to infer, that then he needs not reformation of life to conſtitute him ſuch, and if ſo, then reformation of life is not the condition on which only bliß is to be expected, and without which it is not to be had, it being ſuppoſed and acknowledged by both parties, that all the Elect ſhall have it, and ſo the medium, which was thought neceſſary to perſwade his reformation (the tender of mercy from Chriſt upon reformation) is already vaniſhed, and conſequently 'tis to no purpoſe to perſwade him, that he is one of the Elect, which was uſeful only for the inforcing this medium; And ſo the very making this attempt is deſtructive to the only end of it.

Sect. 11. But if this were not the reſult of this attempt, yet Secondly, 'tis in the progreſs agreed to be neceſſary that he perſwade this perſon that he is one of the Elect, And what poſſible medium can he uſe to prove that to a vitious perſon? A priori, from any ſecret decree of God's, 'tis certain he cannot demonſtrate it, for he hath never entred into God's ſecrets, and 'tis ſure the Scripture hath revealed nothing of it, Whatſoever it ſaith of the Book of life, never affirming that particular man's name is written there; And then the one poſſible way of attempting it is à poſteriori, from the fruits of election, and thoſe are not ſuppoſeable in him who is ſuppoſed a vitious liver, who lives in that eſtate (and is by him acknowledged to do ſo, for otherwiſe why ſhould he think it neceſſary to reduce him?) wherein he that lives ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of God. For his proof, whatever it is, will eaſily be retorted, and the contrary proved, by interrogating, Shall the adulterer, the drunkard, the vitious Chriſtian, inherit the Kingdom of God? If he ſhall, what need I that am now exhorted to reform my life, reform it? If he ſhall not, then certainly I that am ſuch, am none of the Elect, for all that are elect ſhall certainly inherit the Kingdom of God.

Sect. 12. The only reſerve imaginable is, that this vitious Chriſtian be perſwaded to believe in Chriſt, and if he do ſo, he ſhall by that know that he is one of the Elect, and ſo that his ſins ſhall be pardoned, &c. But if this be the method made uſe of, then 1. this is not the attempting to reform, to work repentance (which was the thing propoſed in this firſt caſe) but to work faith in him, and with men of thoſe opinions theſe are two diſtinct things, faith and repentance, and the former muſt be before the other, & is reſolved to do the whole buſineſs without the other, and conſequently this is not the way to bring the ſinner to repentance, but rather to aſſure him that he hath no need of it, his buſineſs may be done without it.

Sect. 13. Secondly, This very attempt of perſwading him to believe in Chriſt (as that ſignifies the full perſwaſion that the promiſes of Chriſt belong to him) is, ſuppoſing that Chriſt died for none but the Elect, as deſperate an attempt as the former: For why ſhould he believe that Chriſt died for him, who died only for the Elect, when he hath no means to perſwade him that he is one of the Elect, but great and ſtrong preſumptions to the contrary? For to believe that Chriſt died for him, for whom he died not, is to believe a down-right faſity, and ſuch is the believing Chriſt died for him, who both believes that he died only for the Elect, and that he himſelf is none of that number.

Sect. 14. And in like manner the former inconvenience returns again, for if the vitious Christian be adviſed to believe that Chriſt died for him, remaining ſuch, (and that muſt be the caſe, if this faith muſt precede repentance) it is by that advice preſuppoſed and granted to him, that Chriſt, which died only for the Elect, who ſhall certainly inherit the Kingdom of God, died for this vitious perſon, of whom the Scripture ſaith, that he ſhall not inherit the Kingdom; And again, if he may believe, what he is adviſed to believe, that Chriſt died for him, as now he is, an unreformed Chriſtian, then what needs he reformation to make him capable of the benefits of his death? And ſo ſtill it is impoſſible, where this opinion is imbibed and unremoved, to found any convincing argument, to reform a vitious Chriſtian.

Sect. 15. But this hath no ſuch appearance of difficulty to him that hath received the doctrine of Univerſal, but conditional redemption, i. e. of Chriſt dying for all, if all will take care to perform the condition required by him, and to which his grace is ready to enable him. For then how great ſoever the ſins of any unreformed perſon are, 'tis evident that Chriſt died for him, becauſe he died for all; that he died for thoſe ſins of his, becauſe he died for all ſins; Only he muſt reform, and forſake his ſins, or elſe he ſhall never receive benefit of his death; And then, though there be that pleaſure in ſin, which the habitual ſinner cannot be perſwaded to part with, unleſs he muſt, (unleſs he diſcern the danger of retaining, and the advantage of parting with it) yet when he hath ſuch arguments as theſe propoſed to him, eternal bliſs in exchange for ſhort temporary pleaſures, aſſurance of this upon reformation, and an impoſſibility, and abſolute deſperation without it, the vitious Chriſtian, if he have advanced no farther than ſo, and if his habit of ſin have not corrupted his principles, may think it reaſonable to reform and amend upon ſuch terms as theſe, the Preacher may hope to ſuperſtruct good life upon ſuch a Foundation.

In comforting a diſconſolate Chriſtian.

Sect. 16. And the like inconveniences are found to be conſequent to this opinion of Chriſt's dying for none but the Elect, whenſoever any comfort is offered to a diſconſolate deſpairing Chriſtian; For it is not poſſible to give him any comfort, but by fetching it from Chriſt; And that he ſhall receive no benefit from Chriſt, is the affirmation, whereon all his deſpair is founded, and the one way of removing this diſmal apprehenſion, is, to convince him that Chriſts death and the benefits thereof, either do, or, if he perform the condition required of him, ſhall certainly belong to him.

Sect. 17. This upon the belief of univerſal Redemption is preſently ſo far done, that if he ſet induſtriouſly and ſincerely to perform the commands of Chriſt, he can have no ground or pretence of doubting, but it ſhall prove ſucceſsful to him, and ſo all that he hath to do, is to endeavour by prayer and uſe of the means, and by good hope (of which he hath ſuch clear grounds) to qualifie himſelf for this bleſſed condition, and in the mean time hath no excuſe to continue in this melancholy, mournful poſture, who hath ſo cheerful a proſpect before him.

Sect. 18. But to him that believes Chriſt died for none but the Elect, and whoſe comforter is of that opinion alſo, there is no poſſible reply to his objections, or ſatisfaction to his ſad abodings: For that no mercy doth or can belong to him, he is reſolved upon this ground, becauſe Chriſt died not for him, and the doctrine that Chriſt died for the Elect yields him no relief, becauſe he is verily perſwaded that he is none of the Elect; and when the number of the Elect is defined to be ſo ſmall and diſproportionable to the number of the reprobate, and ſo there is really all odds againſt him, that he is not of the number of the few, when his fears ſhall help to increaſe that odds, and make him leſs capable of believing, what is ſo much leſs probable, when his preſent deſpairs, being ſo contrary to that faith (aſſurance of his ſalvation) which alone can juſtifie, in his opinion, or bear witneſs to his Election, ſhall by neceſſary conſequence bear witneſs againſt him, and when the Scripture, that ſhould, and in this caſe alone can interpoſe for his relief, doth certainly affirm nothing of his particular Election; and laſtly, when what it ſaith of Chriſt's dying for all, is by him miſunderſtood to belong but to a few, 'tis not imaginable what can be ſaid to this man to perſwade him that his progreſs is not rational, that he doth not well to deſpair, who hath ſo ſlight grounds to build any hope, and ſo much weightier to comply with, and aſſiſt his fears in overwhelming him.

Sect. 20. And then as neceſſary as hope is to labour, encouragement to quickning of action, ſo neceſſary is the belief of Univerſal Redemption to the ſuperſtructing Chriſtian life, where the foundation of Chriſtian belief is already laid.

CHAP. XV.

Of the irreſpective decrees of Election and Reprobation.

Sect. 1. THE ſame is diſcernible alſo, and need not more largely be declared in that doctrine of God's decrees of ſalvation, and damnation, which hath been taken up by ſome both of the Romiſh and Reformed Churches, affixing them to mens particular entities, abſolutely conſidered, without any reſpect to all qualifications and demeanours; Which, whatſoever elſe be believed of God or Chriſt, is (as far as it is laid to heart, and permitted to have influence on carnal men's practice) a moſt viſible hindrance to the building of good life upon it.

The Article of our Church.

Sect. 2. The Church of England having not ſo much as named (but purpoſely avoided the mention of) any Decree of Reprobation, and for Election, or Predeſtination to life, having ſet it down in an admirable temper, in order to gratifying all, and not provoking any of the ſeveral perſwaſions, Art. 17. (as might more largely be made to appear, if it were here ſeaſonable) hath yet providently foreſeen the dangerous downfal that from this her doctrine (the affirming no more, nor no more particularly than ſhe doth) is to be expected to curious (as well as carnal) men, i. e. to thoſe that enter into farther farther ſpeculations herein, (which is the itch of curioſity) and content not themſelves with the ſimplicity of that doctrine, within which this Church hath contained her ſelf. And to prevent particularly all advantage, that might be taken from hence to the Doctrine of the irreſpective decrees, to which is inſeparably joyned the confining all the Promiſes to the Elect, The Article concludes with an earneſt expreſſion of care, and warning to the contrary, that we muſt receive God's promiſes in ſuch wiſe, as they are generally ſet forth to us in the Holy Scripture (as in our doing we are to follow that will of God, which we have expreſly declared to us in the Word of God) which one paſſage excludes, and barrs out that whole doctrine.

Sect. 3. As for the particularity of the dangers, and hindrances of good life, that are directly conſequent to this doctrine, they are preſently diſcerned; For if that ſalvation, which Chriſt came to purchaſe for a few, and in like manner that dereliction or reprobation that irreverſibly involves the far greater multitude, be not diſtributed according to the qualifications or performances of men, whether works, or love, or hope, or repentance, or the want of any, or all of theſe, but only by the abſolute irreſpective will of God, what rational argument can either from Chriſt's promiſes or threats, be produced in any time of temptation to any ſin, (which is the ſpecial ſeaſon for ſuch arguments to be offered to any) which may be of force to perſwade a reaſonable man, or Chriſtian profeſſor, to renounce that preſent pleaſure that comes in competition with duty? The doctrine of irreſpective decrees.

Sect. 4. Either the promiſes of Chriſt, or the terrors of the Lord, or the authority of the Commander, muſt be the Topick whence that argument is drawn, and all force of any of theſe is utterly taken off by this doctrine. Takes off the force

Sect. 5. Promiſes can be of no force, unleſs they be believed to be conditional promiſes, and unleſs that duty, which is propoſed to be inforced by thoſe promiſes, be acknowledged to be part of that condition, upon performance of which thoſe promiſes do, and upon neglect of which, thoſe promiſes ſhall not belong to any; And the promiſes being but a tranſcript of the will and decree of God, a revelation made by Chriſt of that myſtery, or ſecret, wrapt up before in God's eternal Counſels concerning us, ſuch as the decrees are ſuppoſed to have been, ſuch muſt the promiſes be concluded to be, If the decrees be believed to be abſolute, the promiſes muſt be abſolute too, and conſequently not conditional, which was the one qualification neceſſarily required to render them of any force to work on any, to reſtrain, or invite any that were drawn, or ſollicited another way. 1. Of Promiſes.

Sect. 6. For why ſhould a man perform an ungrateful duty, undertake a difficulty, hazard a danger or diminution, deny himſelf any pleaſurable enjoyment, upon a bare intuition of promiſes (which by being ſuch are repreſented with ſome diſadvantage, lie under a conſiderable prejudice, and are acknowledged and experimented to be of leſs energie or force to allure or perſwade, than preſent poſſeſſions) when he is all the while convinced that all the promiſes, that he can poſſibly have any part in, belong to him abſolutely and irreſpectively, and ſhall no more be ſecured to him upon the performance, than upon the neglect, and omiſſion of that duty?

Sect. 7. In like manner the Terrors and menaces of ſcripture are of as little force; For if they fall upon mens perſons, and not upon their ſins (omiſſions or commiſſions) if they are but the recitations and deſcriptions of God's decreed wrath, and thoſe decrees and that wrath have no reſpect to the actual ſins of men, but are terminated either in the innocent creature, or the child of lapſed Adam, i. e. either reſpect not ſin at all, or elſe none but Original ſin, (which is no part of the preſent deliberation, whether it ſhall be committed, and I guilty of it or no) then why ſhould terrors reſtrain me from any ſin, when there is any tender of preſent advantage to invite me to it? 2. Of Terrors.

Sect. 8. All my fear and trembling will regularly be terminated in the decree, on which all my miſery depends, and not in the ſin, which means me no ill, and conſequently the averſion and diſlike will naturally be faſtned on that ſevere Law, that hath bound me in fatal chains of darkneſs, before ever I ſaw light, and if it proceed any farther, may be likely to aſcend blaſphemouſly unto, and againſt that Judge, that hath taken pleaſure to enact that law (and ſo that doctrine may very probably take off from our love of God) but 'tis not imaginable which way this ſhould produce in me any averſion or hatred againſt Sin, which by this doctrine is cleared from being my enemy, from involving me into any miſchief, deſigning the leaſt treachery againſt me.

Sect. 9. And laſtly, for the authority of Gods Commands which forbid ſin, and command obedience, it can be no greater with any man toward the undertaking of good life, than that man believes the weight to be, which God lays on the performance of them; And if God heed that no more, than they that eſpouſe the doctrine of irreſpective decrees, muſt conſequently be ſuppoſed to believe him to do, if in his decreeing his eternal rewards of bliſs or woe, he reſpect not our obedience or diſobedience, but diſtribute both by a rule quite diſtant from that which is founded in his commands, or revealed will, it will never be thought any near concernment or intereſt of ours to regulate our actions according to thoſe commands, which have certainly much of ſtrictneſs in them, much of contrariety to fleſh and blood, but nothing of influence either on our weal or woe, as long as this doctrine is deemed to have any truth in it. 3. Of Commands.

Sect. 10. And ſo ſtill the virtue and force of every of theſe three, which are the common ſtanding inducements and engagements to obedience, is ſhrewdly allayed, if not wholly loſt by this means.

Sect. 11. And 'tis not the motive of gratitude (which is ſaid to be the only ſcore, on which the Elect perform their obedience) that can make any conſiderable difference in this matter, that can be ſufficient to perſwade him to abſtain from any tempting ſin, whom neither promiſes, nor terrors, nor precepts had been able to work upon. 4. Of Gratitude.

Sect. 12. 1. Becauſe Gratitude being but a return of love in him that hath a quick ſenſe of God's loving him firſt, cannot have any propriety to the producing of that effect in any, till he hath arrived to that ſenſe, nor can it continue to do it, when that ſenſe is loſt. And conſequently a great number of the ſuppoſed elect ſhall be uncapable of it, both they which are not yet come to this aſſurance, that they are of that number, and they that under any anguiſh of mind are returned to affrightments, or doubtings whether they have not been hypocrites, and ſo reprobates all this while; And as theſe two ſorts (according to their doctrine) comprehend a great and conſiderable number of the very elect,

(of

(of whom very few are arrived to that pitch of conſtant uninterrupted aſſurance of their election) ſo Gratitude, by being unuſeful to them that are not thus aſſured, muſt be acknowledged unuſeful to thoſe who have the greateſt want of it, and by being confined to the few, which have this aſſurance quick, and undiſturbed within them, is concluded to have a very narrow and ſlender province to work on, a very ſmall number of a very ſmall number, a remnant of a remnant, being acknowledged to be unappliable, and ſo conſequently uneffectual to all others.

Sect. 13. Secondly, Becauſe one other doctrine there is, which conſtantly accompanies the doctrine of irreſpective decrees, which ſuperſedes all farther diſpute in this matter, the doctrine of the irreſiſtibility of grace, in working whatſoever it works, which if it be once acknowledged, there is nothing to be affixt to Gratitude (or to any thing elſe in me) which whatſoever it works at any time works by way of perſwaſion, not violence, and cannot be ſaid ſo much as to contribute to the working of that, which is ſuppoſed to be irreſiſtibly wrought by the Spirit of God.

Sect. 14. Thirdly, If theſe two arguments, which are only ad homines, and conſider the Elect only in theſe mens notion of the word, had no kind of force in them, yet ſtill this of Gratitude, which is the one pretended reſerve, muſt needs be impertinently pretended in this matter.

Sect. 15. Firſt, becauſe the good life to which the foundation was laid by the Apoſtles preaching, is not that of a few perſons, choſen out of the maſs, but of all that receive the Chriſtian profeſſion, (for to all ſuch certainly their preaching was deſigned to pertain) of which number there being a large proportion, which (according to the tenure of this doctrine) muſt be ſuppoſed to be non-elect, there will not be that matter of thanksgiving to any of them, nor conſequently any account, upon which they can be perſwaded to make thoſe kind returns to God, which the Elect were more probably ſuppoſed to have engagement to do.

Sect. 16. And ſecondly, it being Chriſt's errand, and buſineſs into the World, to call not the righteous, or the juſtified, but the unreformed, or ſinners to repentance, to change them who need a change, and who, if they are by this doctrine ſuppoſeable to be already from all eternity elected, are not yet before their calling or converſion affirmed to be actually juſtified, or received into God's favour (any more than Saul was in the time of his journey to Damaſcus, when he breathed out threatnings and ſlaughters againſt the Church) the concluſion muſt be, that any ſuch unreformed ſinner will not be capable of being wrought on by any ſuch conſideration of gratitude, and ſo Chriſt, notwithſtanding this only reſerve, ſhall be wholly unſucceſsful in his aim towards thoſe, who were the principal deſigned perſons, to whom he came, and predeſtined the benefits of his coming.

Sect. 17. Thirdly, this of Gratitude being by thoſe that maintain this doctrine ſuppoſed to follow faith or aſſurance of their ſalvation, 'tis thereby acknowledged to have no force on thoſe who have not this faith, though they do believe all the articles of their Creed, and ſo it can be no proper expedient to remove the hindrances which the belief of the irreſpective decrees hath been ſaid to interpoſe in the matter in hand, or to adapt good life to be ſuperſtructed on this (whatſoever it is imaginable to be on any other) Foundation.

CHAP. XVI.

Of the Predetermination of all things.

The doctrine of God's predetermining all events.

Sect. 1. AND as the abſolute predeſtination of the perſons is able to evacuate all the force of theſe fundamentals, deſigned by God as motives of great energie to induce good life, ſo certainly is the opinion of God's predetermining and preordaining the means as well as the end, (i.e. all the acts of man's will, the evil as well as the good, and ſo all the moſt enormous ſins that are or ever ſhall be committed) moſt abundantly ſufficient to do it.

Sect. 2. I ſay not the doctrine of God's prediſpoſing or preordering, or of his predetermining or decreeing that he will ſo and ſo diſpoſe and order all things that come to paſs, whether good or bad, for that looks on the things as done, which are ſo diſpoſed, and conſequently includes not any influence or cauſality in the production of them, and ſo God, that brings light out of darkneſs, can diſpoſe of the worſt things, the fouleſt ſins, the very crucifying of Chriſt, ſo as to bring health and ſalvation out of them.

Of preordering.

Sect. 3. But betwixt this and predetermining that which is ſo diſpoſed, the difference is wide, as much as betwixt a bloody deſigners ſuborning his inſtrument to take away ſuch a man's life, and the Confeſſors repreſenting the horridneſs of the fact, and by that means bringing him to repentance; And though * Ordinare in Latin, and τάσσειν in Greek be equivocal, and capable of both theſe notions, yet ordaining and decreeing in our Engliſh uſe, is not thus liable to be miſtaken.

* vid. Junium ap. Strangium P. 555.

Sect. 4. Secondly, I ſay not the doctrine of God's predetermining his own will, but his predetermining the acts of our will, or our volitions; Great difference there is betwixt theſe two, as much as betwixt my willing a lawful thing my ſelf, and my inducing another man to do that which is unlawful.

Of God's predetermining his own will.

Sect. 5. For God doth predetermine his own will, as oft as he decrees to do this or that, which he might not have decreed to have done, or have decreed to have done the contrary; for when God's will is free to two things, to make or not to make a world, or ſuch a world, and the like, his decreeing to make it, and to make it ſuch, is the determining of his will. Thus when before all time God might have created man a neceſſary agent to will and to do every thing that he wills and doth, after the ſame manner as the fire burneth, i.e. ſo as he could not do otherwiſe, yet 'tis evident that God choſe to create him after the image of his own liberty, a voluntary free agent, that might deliberate and chooſe, and and either do, or not do, or do this or the contrary to it; And so in like manner God may determine his own will not to hinder, but permit what he sees man inclinable to do, when he might on the other side have chosen to hinder or not to permit; And thus he did when he decreed to permit the malice of the Jews, the covetousness of Judas, the popularity of Pilate, to joyn all together in the crucifying of Christ, upon which it is said, that his hand and his Counsel προώρισε γενέσθαι did predetermine this to be done, i. e. Christ to be crucified (which was done by God's predetermining to permit (or not hinder) them to do what they by the free act of their own wills resolved to do) no way intimating that God predetermined they should do it.

Sect. 6. And this predetermination of God's own will is so far from being the determining of ours, that it is distinctly and visibly the contrary, for supposing God to predetermine that I shall act freely, and that he will not determine my will to this or that object, 'tis certain from thence that my will is free in respect of God, and not predetermined by him; And therefore that ordinary position, that the predetermination of God's will hinders not the liberty of ours] which by being understood of God's will predetermining ours, is most grosly false, and implyes a contradiction, a predetermination and not a predetermination, a liberty and not a liberty to the same thing, is yet most evidently true of God's predetermining his own will, or his own will being predetermined, for that, as it respecteth not our will, (medleth not with it at all) so it is far from hindring or taking away the liberty of it, but on the contrary, it being one act of God's eternal will, and so a predetermination thereof, that man shall be a free agent, and another act of the same divine will, that this or that act of our will shall be permitted and not hindred by God, either or both these predeterminations of God's will, necessarily infers the liberty of ours, which cannot but be free, when God hath predetermined it shall be free.

Sect. 7. Thirdly, I say not the doctrine of God's presciencee, his eternal foresight of all that is ever done in the world. For that again supposeth or looketh on the thing as done, which is thus the object of his sight, and hath no kind of influence or causality in the production of it. Of God's Prescience.

Sect. 8. Some difficulty there is in conceiving a thing to be foreseen or foreknown by God, and yet to continue free to be done or not to be done. And the best way of explicating that difficulty will be, to suppose God's science to be infinitely extended in respect of time, as his presence in respect of place, and though speaking of infinity, we must acknowledge our understandings to be very imperfect, all the measures we have to conceive any thing, being finite, and so unequal and very unable to comprehend that which is infinite; Yet if we will but conceive God's sight or science before the creation of the World to be co-extended to all and every part of the World, seeing every thing as it is, that which is past as past, future as future, that which is by him predetermined, as necessary, and that which is left free as free, that which is done, and might have been otherwise, as done freely and contingently, and that which is not yet done, and may or may not be done, as that which is yet free and contingent, there will remain no difficulty in affirming that his prescience or foresight of any action of mine (or which is all one, his science or sight) from all eternity, lays no necessity on any thing to be, which is thus seen to come to pass, any more than my seeing the sun move, hath to do in the moving of it, it being certain, and necessary, and antecedent in order of nature, that that have a being, that hath a capacity of being seen, and only accidental and extrinsecal to it, to be seen, when it is, and so the seeing but an accessary, not a cause of its being; and it is most evident that God's foreseeing doth not include or connotate predetermining, any more than I decree with my intellect, or will with my apprehension, which is as if I should see with my ear or taste with my eye, i. e. confound the most distant faculties.

Sect. 9. To this may be added, that God being acknowledged to see or foresee every thing as it is, it is as impossible that any thing should be in any other manner than he foresees it to be, as that it should not come to pass, when he sees it doth, or foresees it will come to pass; and consequently that God's foreseeing those things come to pass contingently, which do come to pass contingently, is a most certain proof that there are some contingents in the World; So likewise when God foresees and foretels that Judas will freely and voluntarily, and against all engagements and obligations to the contrary, betray and sell Christ, that the Jews would not be gathered by Christ when he was most sollicitous and sedulous in gathering them, 'tis as certainly concludible from the argument of God's prescience, that they will voluntarily and freely do this, and obstinately resist their own good, as that they will do it at all, the manner being foreseen by God, who cannot be deceived, as truly as the thing is foreseen by him.

Sect. 10. And if there should yet be any doubt (as Socinus and his followers, men very well exercised, and skill'd in the κινῆν ἀκίνητα, removing of those things, which have continued immoveable in the Church, have more than doubted) whether God foresee any more than he determines, and consequently whether it may not safely be affirmed, that he doth not foresee all things, because he cannot be conceived to predetermine all things: It will presently appear, that as this is most irrational, so is it most false; irrational to grant an infiniteness of God's other attributes and powers, his omnipresence, omnipotence, &c. and to question the infinity of his science; and apparently false, if only God's predictions to the Prophets be considered. For there we see many things to be foretold, and consequently learn them to have been foreseen, which they that make this doubt, do truly resolve cannot be predetermined by God, and, rather than they will believe them predetermined by him, deny them to be foreseen, viz. the infidelity and * sins of men, which God cannot will or decree in their opinion, and which they must consequently acknowledge to have been both contingent and future, when they were foretold by him, and not to have lost their nature by being foretold by him.

* Εἰ θεοὶ τὰ ἀρρωνα διέχειν, οὐκ εἰσὶ θεοί. Eurip. in Bellerph.

Sect. 11. Having thus separated this doctrine of God's predetermining all events, from these three other things, which the haste of Disputers have sometimes confounded with it, It will now be presently discernible how noxious and obstructive this doctrine is to the superstructing all good life. For 1. that which is predetermined by God is absolutely necessary and unavoidable, no man hath or can resist any decree of his; The bounds which are placed to the Sea by a perpetual decree, Jer. 5. 22. are such as it cannot pass, and though the waves toss themselves, yet can they not prevail, though they roar, yet can they not pass over, and such is the nature of all decrees of God; And if the actions of men were under any such, The doctrine of Predetermination noxious to Practice.

(as firſt, by the expoſtulation there, and ſecondly, by the mention of their rebellious heart, verſe 23. and thirdly, by the oppoſition which is ſet betwixt the ſea, that cannot paſs the bounds, and the ſinner that can, it is moſt evident they are not) this would neceſſarily preclude all choice, and then, as Tertullian ſaith, lib. 2. contr. Marcion. Nec boni nec mali merces jure penſaretur ei, qui aut bonus aut malus neceſſitate fuiſſet inventus, non voluntate; There would be no reward of good or evil, if men were good or evil by neceſſity, and not by choice; and as Juſtin Martyr, Apol. 2. Ἐι μὲ προαιρέσει ἐλευθέρᾳ πρὸς τὸ φεύγειν τὰ αἰσχρὰ, καὶ αἱρεῖσθαι τὰ καλὰ δύναμιν ἔχει τὸ ἀνθρώπινον γένος, ἀναίτιόν ἐστι τῶν ὁπωσδήποτε πραττομένων. If mankind had no power to avoid ill or chooſe good by free deliberation, it ſhould never be guilty of any thing that was done. And as Tatianus to the ſame purpoſe, Ἐλευθερίᾳ δὲ προαιρέσεως----God therefore gave liberty of choice to men, that the wicked might be juſtly puniſhed, being wicked by his own fault, and the righteous commended, who by the ſame liberty hath taken care not to tranſgreſs the will of God. So certainly this doctrine muſt take away all guilt of an accuſing, and all ſolace of a quiet conſcience, and in like manner ſuperſede and ſlacken all induſtry and endeavour, which is the loweſt degree of that which hath promiſe to be accepted by Chriſt, and by faſtening all our actions as well as ends by a fatal decree at the foot of God's chair, leave nothing to us to deliberate or attempt, but only to obey our fate, to follow the duſt of the ſtars, or neceſſity of thoſe iron chains which we are born under.

Sect. 12. Secondly, There being little queſtion made by any, but that God both can and doth whatſoever he will both in heaven and earth, when any thing is acknowledged to be willed by God (as 'tis certain every thing is which is predetermined and preordained by him) it neceſſarily follows, that whenſoever that is done it is done by God, and conſequently if that be a ſin, God doth, i. e. committeth the ſin, and this without any ſo much as concurrence of any will of mine, but what is alſo predetermined by him; Which is evidently the defining God to be both the principal and acceſſary in the committing every ſin; which when it is once believed, then 1. What poſſible way is there for any man to be guilty of ſin, which we know is no farther ſin, then it was voluntary in him that did it, and he free to have abſtain'd, when he did commit it, or at leaſt to have prevented that degree of force or neceſſity, that is fallen upon him? And on the other ſide what poſſibility of abſtaining from ſin, when by God's predetermination of it, 'tis acknowledged inevitable? And when theſe two are taken away, the poſſibility of guilt, and the poſſibility of innocence, what reſtraint can the belief of all the Articles of the Creed lay upon any man to flie from evil, or purſue that which is good?

Revealed and ſecret will.

Sect. 13. Thirdly, The only way of defining of ſin, is, by the contrariety to the will of God (as of good by the accordance with that will) and if all things be preordained by God, and ſo demonſtrated to be will'd by him, it remains that there is no ſuch thing as ſin, nor any thing to be abſtain'd from, or avoided by us, nor difference betwixt good and evil, according to that meaſure of God's will, which by this doctrine is equally competible to both of them. And if the diſtinction of his ſecret and revealed will be here made uſe of, and only the latter of theſe conceived to be it, in contrariety to which ſin conſiſts, that ſo there may be a way of ſinning againſt that whilſt the ſecret will is obeyed and performed; Then, beſides the great abſurdity of affirming any thing of God's ſecret will, till by ſome means or other it be revealed, and then it ceaſeth to be (what it is pretended to be) ſecret, for if it be known it is not ſecret; and ſecondly, the ridiculouſneſs of making that God's will, which is ſuppoſed contrary to his will, for certainly that which is contrary to his will, is not his will, and therefore the ſecret being ſuppoſed contrary to the revealed, if the revealed will be his will, the ſecret is not his will, and if the ſecret be his will, then that which is revealed to be his will, is not his will; and thirdly, the impiety of oppoſing God's words to his thoughts, his revealed commands to his ſecret decrees, (which is as ill as could be ſaid of any man, and will never incline any to obey God, which hath ſuch an unhandſom opinion of him) beſides theſe inconveniences, I ſay, 'tis evident that intrinſick goodneſs conſiſts in accordance, and ſin in contrariety to the ſecret will of God, as well as to his revealed, or elſe God could not be defined infinitely good, or ſo far as his thoughts and ſecrets, but only ſuperficially good, as far as the outſide or appearing part of him, i. e. as far as he is pleaſed to reveal himſelf, which again is perfect blaſphemy to imagine, and that which equals God to the moſt formal and hypocritical profeſſor.

Sect. 14. Fourthly, This doctrine is deſtructive to all that is eſtabliſhed among men, to all that is moſt precious, 1. to humane nature, to the two faculties that denominate us men, underſtanding and will: For what uſe can we have of our underſtandings, if we cannot do what we know to be our duty? and if we act not voluntarily, what exerciſe have we of our wills?

Sect. 15. Secondly, To the end of our Creation, whether ſubordinate or ultimate; The ſubordinate end of our creation is, that we ſhould live vertuouſly and glorifie God in a voluntary and generous obedience, either of which other creatures, that act naturally, are not capable of, And God's predetermining all our actions deprives us of this honour and dignity of our nature, leaves no place of vertue, which is founded in voluntary action, and as Origen ſaith, cont. Celſ. l. 4. Ἀρετῆς ἂν ἀνέλῃς τὸ ἑκούσιον, ἀνῄρηκας αὐτῆς καὶ τὸ εἶναι. If you take from vertue the voluntarineſs, you take away the eſſence of it. And ſo this doctrin brings us down to the level of horſe and mule, whoſe mouths are forcibly holden with bit and bridle, when yet it is one of the commands of that God, that we ſhould not be like thoſe creatures: And ſo for the ultimate end, a reward and crown in another world, which no irrational creature is capable of, this of predetermination of all our actions, which renders us neceſſary not rational agents, renders us utterly uncapable of that.

Sect. 16. Thirdly, It is directly contrary to all God's ways, or manner of dealing with us, which is all by rational ways of perſwaſion, by propoſition of terrors and promiſes, the danger that we ſhall incur by our diſobedience, and the infinite advantages that we ſhall reap by our obedience; and to theſe is added the authority of the Commander, vindicated from our neglect by the interpoſition of the greateſt ſigns and wonders, in the hands of his Prophets and of his Son, ſuch as we cannot but wonder when we read them (as in the caſe of the Iſraelites coming out of Ægypt and in the wilderneſs) that they ſhould not prevail upon them, when yet they did not prevail; And what can be more contrary to rational motives, than predetermination? For as, if they had not that perſwaſive efficacy in them as to be able to move a rational man, they could not be denominated rational, ſo if they were backed with a violence, if they were propoſed to us in the name and power of an omnipotent immutable decree, they could never be ſaid motives or perſwaſives; And ſo ſtill God's gracious dealings with men being the aids and auxiliaries neceſſary to us in the purſuit of piety, and the one doctrine and perſwaſion of God's predetermination of all events, having ſuperſeded and caſſated all thoſe ways, we have no bottom left, on which to found the leaſt beginning or thought of piety as long as we continue poſſeſſed with that perſwaſion.

Sect. 17. Fourthly, This doctrine, if it were true, muſt neceſſarily take away all judgment to come, all reward and puniſhment, which are certainly apportioned to the voluntary actions, and choices of men (and therefore belong not to any but rational creatures) and can no more be awarded to thoſe actions which are predetermined by God, than to the aſcending of the flame, or deſcending of the ſtone, which by nature, and the providence of God are thus predetermined, and act by decree, and not by choice. And when all judgment to come is once vaniſhed, all reward to engage obedience, and all terror to reſtrain diſobedience is once removed, and ſo in effect the three laſt Articles of the Creed rejected alſo, what hope is there that the remaining Articles ſhould be ſufficient to do it?

Sect. 18. To theſe Chriſtian and Theological conſiderations it will not be amiſs to add what care the Writers of Politicks have had to warn us of the noxiouſneſs of this doctrine to all civil governments, which Chriſtian religion, rightly underſtood, is ſo very far from diſturbing, that beyond all other Aphoriſms Political, beyond the ſageſt proviſions of the Profoundeſt Lawgivers, it is (would men but live according to the rules of it) incomparably qualified to perpetuate publick weal and peace.

Sect. 19. But for the doctrine of thoſe, who ſo miſtake Chriſtian religion, as to think it is only a chain of fatal decrees, to deny all liberty of man's choice toward good or evil, and to affix all events to God's predetermination: This, ſay they, is utterly irreconcileable with the nature of civil government, with the foundation thereof laid in Laws, or with the puniſhments and rewards, which are thought neceſſary to the continuance thereof, and Campanella chooſeth to inſtance in Republicâ præſertim liberâ, in a Republick or free ſtate.

Sect. 20. For when the People, which think their liberty, of which they are very tender and jealous, to be retrench'd or impaired by the reſtraint of Laws, can farther anſwer their Rules, though but in the heart (without proceeding to farther boldneß) that they cannot obſerve their Laws, being led by irreſiſtible decrees to the tranſgreſſing of them, the conſequence is eaſie to foreſee, the deſpiſing and contemning of Laws, and hating and deteſting of thoſe who are obliged to puniſh them, when they have offended, which two are ſoon inflamed, beyond the rate of popular diſcontents, into actual ſeditions and tumults, as ſoon as opportunity ſhall favour, or opinion of their own ſtrength encourage them to it.

Sect. 21. That the Turkiſh Empire hath not yet found the noxious effects of this poyſon, ſo commonly received among them, will, I ſuppoſe, be objected againſt the truth of this; But 'tis viſible to what Antidotes this muſt be imputed, 1. to their ignorance and unimproveableneſs in matters of knowledge, and rational diſcourſe, being generally kept rude, and without all literature (which is the grindſtone to ſharpen the coulters, to whet their natural faculties, and to enable them to diſcourſe and deduce natural conſequences.) Secondly, To the manner obſerved in Governing them, by force, and not by obligation on conſcience, by violence, and not by laws; Which way of managery being ſomewhat proportionable to the opinion of fatal decrees, and agreeing with it in this, that it doth really leave nothing to men's choices, is withal as a contrary poyſon, a hot thrown after a cold, very proper to abate the energie of it, forcing them as fatally to abſtain, as they can deem themſelves forced, or impelled to commit any ſuch enormity.

Sect. 22. However, 'tis manifeſt that the force they are under is a real force, and that of their fate but an imaginary conceived one, the one but in their brains, the other on their ſhoulders, and it is not ſtrange if the iron chains are experimented to have more ſolidity, and ſo more efficacy in them, than the contemplative.

Sect. 23. Sed ſi Italos, ſay the Politick writers. But if this doctrine ſhould ever get among the Italians, whoſe wits are more acute (and ſure the Italians have not incloſed that excellency from all the reſt of Europe) it would preſently put all into confuſion, they would ſoon diſcern the conſequences, and utmoſt improvements of the opinion, and never ſtick to caſt all on God, as the author of all; and having reſolved, with him in Homer, of the

that all is chargeable on the ſuperiour cauſe, Jupiter and Fate, infer regularly with him, (ἐγὼ δ' ὐκ αἴτιός εἰμι) the blameleſneſs of the inferiour agent, and ſo there being no place left for ſin or law, immediately believe and follow their own wiſhes, turn Libertines, throw off all yoke of men as well as God. In intuition whereof I ſuppoſe it was that Plato would not permit in his Commonwealth any that ſhould affirm God to be the author of all the evils that were committed. And Proclus upon the Timæus ſets them down as a third degree of Atheiſts, who attribute to God the impreſſing on men's minds a neceſſity of doing whatſoever they do.

Sect. 24. 'Tis true where there is any remainder of natural piety, he that believes the doctrine of abſolute decrees, may be thereby reſtrained from actually making the concluſions, inferring ſuch impious horrid conſequences (be they never ſo obvious and regular) of making God the author of ſin, and the like; But we know thoſe natural dictates are by unnatural ſins effaced in many, and when that one reſtraint is removed, the concluſion will be as eaſily believed as the premiſes, and where neither boldneß nor skill are wanting to deduce it, that Concluſion will again turn Principle, and reduce all vitious enormous living, which Laws were deſigned to reſtrain, but will no longer do it, when themſelves are look'd on as impertinent invaders of liberty, deſpiſed firſt, and then hated.

Sect. 25. One farther conſideration hath been added to this former, that this doctrine being imbibed by Governours, is very apt to inſtill into them principles of tyranny, if it be but by imitating and tranſcribing from God the notions which they have received of him, by doing that themſelves which they believe of him, puniſhing their ſubjects by no other rule but of their wills, decreeing their deſtruction firſt without intuition of any voluntary crime of theirs, and then counting it a part of their glory to execute ſuch decrees. Thus when Suetonius deſcribes Tiberius as a profeſſed contemner of all Religion, and from thence ſoon improved into the moſt intolerable tyrant, he renders the original of it, that he believed all things to be wrought by a fatality. But theſe are popular conſiderations, yet not unfit alſo to be taken in as appendant to the former.

Sin is not nothing.

Sect. 26. Many artifices there are invented by the neceſſities of thoſe who have imbraced this doctrine, to intercept and avoid theſe conſequences of it; The two principal I ſhall name, 1. That ſin is a non-entity, a nothing, and ſo that all things may be predetermined by God and yet not ſin: 2. That though God be author of the act of ſin, yet he is not of the obliquity of it, as the Rider is cauſe of the horſes going, but not of his lameneſs, or halting, when he goes.

Sect. 27. For the former of theſe, which is a perfect phantaſie and ſchool notion, theſe things may be obſerved of it, that beſides that it would be, 1. very ſtrange that God ſhould damn a multitude of Angels and men for nothing; and 2. very ridiculous, that my ſwearing to a truth ſhould be an entity, and my ſwearing to a falſity, nothing; eating my own bread, enjoying my own wife, an entity, and eating another man's bread, enjoying another man's wife, nothing; and thirdly, that which would ſoon fall back into the grand inconvenience of obſtructing Chriſtian life (for why ſhould a Chriſtian be ſuch a fool, as to be afraid of nothing, to flie and avoid nothing?) beſides theſe, I ſay, it is apparent that they that thus teach, profeſs that ſins are predetermined, by name Adam's ſin, and Judas's ſin, and, if it be driven home, every ſin of every other man, as well as any other the moſt vertuous action. And yet farther, unleſs it could be gain'd that every vertuous action were nothing alſo, there would be little advantage in this matter, it being as contrary to judgment to come, to rewarding according to works, that one predetermined neceſſary action, which I could not but do, ſhould be rewarded, as that another ſhould be puniſhed, and as certain a prejudice to all diligence, or purſuit of Chriſtian life, that I cannot chooſe but do the good which I do, as that I cannot but commit the ill that I commit: For although it be very agreeable to the goodneſs of God to abound in giving grace and enabling to do good, to prepare, prevent, and aſſiſt, and contribute all that can be wanting to us, either to will, or do, (as it is not competible with it ſo much as to incline any man to do evil) and ſo there is a difference in that reſpect betwixt the good and the evil, yet to do all this irreſiſtibly, for a fatal decree of heaven to contrive every good action of my life, ſo as it is impoſſible for me not to will and act, as God would have me, this is quite contrary to the nature of a voluntary agent, a rational creature, and conſequently to that will and decree of God, whereby he predetermined man to be ſuch, and as unreconcileable with reward or crown, as puniſhment is with that which is as much, but no more neceſſary.

The diſtinction betwixt the act and the obliquity.

Sect. 28. As for the diſtinction betwixt the act and the obliquity, there is ſome truth in it, and uſe to be made of it, ſo far as to free God, who is author of all man's power to act, from being in any degree the author of his acting obliquely or crookedly, i. e. ſinfully.

Sect. 29. For as it is impoſſible for us to move either to good or evil, except he that gave us our firſt being and powers, continue them minutely unto us, ſo he having uſed all wiſe and efficacious methods to incline and engage us to make uſe of his gifts unto his ſervice, and having contributed nothing to our evil choices, but his decree of permitting or not hindring them (and if he ſhould violently hinder, that would make us no whit leſs guilty, he that would ſin, if he could, is as guilty as if he did; And without that permiſſion of evil, our good choices would neither be good, nor choices, and conſequently never be rewarded by him) it is moſt apparent that he is no author of the obliquities of our wills, but on the contrary that he doth as much to the ſtreightning of them, as without changing our natures (offering violence to our wills, which he hath decreed to remain free) he could prudently be imagined to do.

Sect. 30. But this is no way appliable to this matter of freeing God from being the author of that ſin, of which he is acknowledged to predetermine the act; For 1. though a free power of acting good or evil, be perfectly diſtinct and ſeparable from doing evil, and therefore God, that is the author of one, cannot thence be inferred to be the author of the other, yet the act of ſin is not ſeparable from the obliquity of that act, the act of blaſphemy from the obliquity or irregularity of blaſphemy, the leaſt evil thought or word againſt an infinite good God being as crooked as the rule is ſtreight, and conſequently he that predetermines the act, muſt needs predetermine the obliquity.

Sect. 31. Nay ſecondly, if there were any advantage to be made of this diſtinction in this matter, it would more truly be affirm'd on the contrary ſide, that God is the author of the obliquity, and man of the act: For God that gives the rule, in tranſgreſſing of which all obliquity conſiſts, doth contribute a great deal though not to the production of that act, which is freely committed againſt that rule, yet to the denominating it oblique, for if there were no Law, there would be no obliquity; God that gives the Law that a Jew ſhall be circumciſed, thereby conſtitutes uncircumciſion an obliquity, which, had he not given that Law, had never been ſuch; But for the act (as that differs from the powers on one ſide, and the obliquity on the other) it is evident that the man is the cauſe of that, 'tis man that circumciſeth, or chooſeth to be circumciſed, and ſo, that refuſeth to receive that ſign in the fleſh, and the act of killing Abel was as perfectly Cain's act, as the offering of his ſacrifice was, and ſo in all other acts, eſpecially of ſin, to which God doth not ſo much as incline, and the Devil can do no more than perſwade any man.

Sect. 32. To conclude, the obliquity of any act, ariſing, by way of reſultance, from the tranſgreſſing of the rule (i. e. doing contrary to God's command) as inequality ariſeth from the adding or ſubſtracting an unity from an even number, it neceſſarily follows, that he that firſt gives the law, and then predetermines the act of tranſgreſſing (the diſobedience, the doing contrary to) that Law, that firſt forbids eating of the tree of knowledge, and then predetermines Adam's will to chooſe, and eat what was forbidden, is by his decree guilty of the commiſſion of the act, and by his Law the cauſe of its being an obliquity; And indeed, if the obliquity, which renders the act a ſinful act, be it ſelf any thing, it muſt neceſſarily follow, that either God doth not predetermine all things, or that he predetermines the obliquity; And regularity bearing the ſame proportion of relation to any act of duty, as obliquity doth to ſin, it cannot be imagined that the author of the ſinful act, ſhould not be the author of the obliquity, as well as the author of the pious act is by the Diſputers acknowledged to be the author of the regularity of it.

Sect. 33. The complaint of the Gods in Homer will beſt ſhut up this;

Ὦ πόποι, οἷον δὴ νῶϊ θεοὶ βροτοὶ αἰτιόωνται, Odyſſ. a. Vid. Euſtath. in loc. p. 15.
Ἐξ ἡμέων γὰρ φασὶ κάκ' ἔμμεναι, οἱ δὲ καὶ αὐτοὶ
Σφῇσιν ἀτασθαλίῃσιν ὑπὲρ μόρον ἄλγε' ἔχουσιν.

O, how unjuſtly mortal men accuſe and charge the Gods, ſaying that their evils are from them, when the truth is, that they by their own wretchleſs courſes bring miſchiefs upon themſelves, above which their fate, or decree of the Gods can be deem'd to have brought upon them. And accordingly it is one of the excellent leſſons of the Pythagoreans in their golden verſes,

Γνώσῃ δ' ἀνθρώπους αὐθαίρετα πήματ' ἔχοντας,

This thou muſt know, that the evils that men fall under, are brought upon them by their own choices. On which even Chryſippus, the Stoick, and great aſſerter of fate, hath thus commented, ὡς τῶν κλαδῶν ἐκδοτοις παρ' αὐτοῖς γινομένων, καὶ καθ' ὁρμὴν αὐτῶν, ἁμαρτανόντων τι καὶ βλαπτομένων, καὶ κατὰ ἀυτῶν διάνοιαν καὶ πρόθεσιν, Evils, or miſchiefs come to every man from himſelf, it being certain that by their own incitation they both ſin, and ſuffer, and that according to their own mind and purpoſe. This being ſo far diſtant from the doctrine of fatality, it may well be wondred, how Chryſippus that aſſerted that, under the name of εἱμαρμένη and πεπρωμένη, the chain, and the decree, (and defined it, ſaith * Gellius, ſempiterna quædam, & indeclinabilis ſeries rerum & catena, volvens ſemetipſa ſeſe, & implicans per æternos conſequentiæ ordines, ex quibus apta connexáque eſt, an eternal and unavoidable ſeries and chain of things folding and involving it ſelf within it ſelf by eternal courſes of conſequence, by which it is framed and connected, Or in his own dialect, that it is φυσικὴ σύνταξις τῶν ὅλων ἐξ ἀϊδίου τῶν ἑτέρων τοῖς ἑτέροις ἐπακολουθόντων, a natural complication of all things from all eternal, one thing following another, καὶ ἀπαράλυτος ἥσης τοιαύτης συμπλοκῆς, that complication being ſuch as cannot be changed) could believe himſelf, or reconcile this Comment, or that Verſe, with his great principles; And indeed || Cicero hath paſt a right ſentence of it, Chryſippus æſtuans laboránſque quonam pacto explicet & fato fieri omnia, & eſſe aliquid in nobis, intricatur------Chryſippus contending and labouring how to reconcile theſe two propoſitions, that all things are done by fate, and yet that ſomething is in our own power, is intangled, and cannot extricate himſelf. This Maſter of the Stoicks was preſt, ſaith Gellius, with theſe inconvenient conſequences of his doctrine of decrees, that then the ſins of men were not to be charged on their wills, but to be imputed to a neceſſity and preſſing, which aroſe from fate, that it muſt be unjuſt to make laws for the puniſhing of offenders; To which he had nothing to ſay but this, that though, if you look upon the firſt cauſe, all is thus fatally decreed, and chain'd, yet the diſpoſitions of each man's mind are only ſo far ſubject to fate, as is agreeable to their own properties and qualities, as, ſaith he, when a man tumbles a cylinder or roller down an hill, 'tis certain that the man is the violent enforcer of the firſt motion of it, but when it is once a tumbling, the quality and propriety of the thing it ſelf continues, and conſummates it. In this witty reſemblance of that Stoick theſe three things muſt be conſider'd, Firſt, that the Cylinder (the inſtance that he thought fit to pitch on) is an inanimate, liveleſs trunk, which hath nothing of choice, or will in it; Secondly, that neither the weight of the matter, of which 'tis made, nor the round, voluble form of it (which two meeting with a precipice, or ſteep declivity do neceſſarily continue the motion of it) are any more imputable to that dead, choiceleſs creature, than the firſt motion of it was ſuppoſed to be; and therefore thirdly, that this cannot be a fit reſemblance to ſhew the reconcileableneſs of fate with choice, or the reaſonableneſs of charging on mens wills, what was inevitably produced by their fate, or of puniſhing them for thoſe acts, which they are neceſſarily driven to commit: To which purpoſe it may be remembred that neither is the Cylinder charged with ſin, whether by God, or men, nor any punitive law enacted by either againſt its rolling down the hill, nor indeed are ſuch charges, or ſuch laws ever brought in or enacted againſt any actions of any other creature, plant, or beaſt, till you aſcend to man, who is ſuppoſed to have a will, and not to be under ſuch inevitable, fatal laws, but to be, as that excellent man Pomponius Atticus was wont to ſay, the forger of his own fate, the framer of his fortune, which yet ſhould be as improper to be applyed to, or affirm'd of a man, as of any other creature, if all his actions were as irreverſibly predetermined, as the deſcent of heavy bodies, or the aſcending of light, i. e. if Chryſippus's Cylinder and the motion thereof were a commodious inſtance, or reſemblance of this matter. But the truth is, the man was acute, and dextrous, could ſay as much for the reconciling of contradictions, as another, and though this laſt age hath conſidered this queſtion very diligently, and had the advantages of the writings of the former ages to aſſiſt them, yet he that ſhall impartially make the compariſon, will find, that the ancient Philoſophers have written more ſubtilely in this matter, and are more worth our reading, than any of our modern Schools, (he that ſhall ſurvey Hierocles on the χρυσᾶ ἔπη, Ammonius on Ariſtotles περὶ ἑρμηνείας, in ſhewing the nature of contingent and neceſſary propoſitions, and the Chriſtian Philoſoper Boethius, lib. 2. de conſolatione philoſophiæ, and Aphrodiſæus περὶ εἱμαρμ. where he confutes, as abſurd, this compariſon of the Cylinder, will, I believe, be convinced of the truth of what I ſay) and when the Maſter of them Chryſippus was ſo unable to ſpeak intelligible ſence, or extricate himſelf in this buſineſs, 'twill be leſs matter of wonder to us, that they which have eſpouſed this πρόληψις, ſhould endeavour as improſperouſly to reconcile this with other notions of piety, and to extricate themſelves out of a Labyrinth not of fewer, but more difficulties (God having moſt clearly revealed to Chriſtians, that as he rewardeth every man according to his works, ſo he requireth of him according to what he hath in his power to do, and not according to what he hath not) as Chryſippus is by Cicero judged to have done.

* Noct. Att. l. 6. c. 2.

|| de Fato; l. 6. c. 2.

Sect. 34. All which being duly conſidered, and the abſurdities of that diſtinction (thus applyed) betwixt the act and the obliquity, as manifeſt, as thoſe of Chryſippus's expedient, in thoſe ſo many forementioned reſpects, and the contrary ſo wide from the truth of Scripture, the attributes of God, and common notions of piety written in men's hearts, and experimented in the government of the World, and laſtly, ſo noxious and poyſonous to good life, we may certainly conclude with Prosper, that great assertor of God's Grace, Resp. ad 14. Object. Vincent. Ad prævaricationem legis, ad neglectum religionis, ad corruptelam disciplinæ, ad desertionem fidei, ad perpetrationem qualiscunque peccati, nulla omnino est Prædestinatio Dei. To the forsaking the Law, to the neglecting Religion, to the corrupting Discipline, to deserting the Faith, to the perpetration of whatsoever sin, there is not at all any predestination of God. Si ergo in sanctitate vivitur------If we live in sanctity, grow in vertue and persevere in good purposes, the gift of God is manifest in all this: Si autem ab his receditur,-------But if we go back from these, if we pass over to vices and sins, here God sends no evil temptation, forsakes not the desertor, before he be forsaken, and very frequently keeps him that would depart from departing, and causeth him to return, though he be departed. To which may be added that of the Arausican Council, which was very careful to assert the necessity of Grace, and yet * pronounces an anathema against those who affirm any to be by God predetermined to sin.

* Aliquos ad malum divinâ potestate præordinatos esse non solum non credimus, sed etiam si sint qui tantum malum credere velint, cum omni detestatione in illos anathema dicimus, Syn. Arausi. Can. 25.

CHAP. XVII.

Of the Spirits acting all things within the man.

Sect. 1. WHat hath been said of the doctrine of God's decrees, fatally passed upon our persons, or our actions, will be farther extended to the pretensions of the Spirit, and the opinion, that of late begins to diffuse it self among some, that all that is designed or done by them, is the dictate & motion of the Spirit in them.

Sect. 2. Of this it is evident, that either that man, which thus pretends, never commits any act prohibited by the Word of God, and vulgarly called sin, after the minute of such pretension (and then that were a rare charm indeed to render him impeccable) or that this is the means of consecrating every sin of his, and so the opinion being imbibed by one that lives in rebellion, murther, adultery, pride, or schism, or any other (one or more) grossest sins, the effect must be, that he believe every one of these to be infusions of the Spirit of God, and so no more fit to be resisted before, nor repented for after the Commission of them, than the most eminent acts of piety should be; And when it is thus become impious to resist any temptation of our own flesh, which sollicits within us, or of Satan that suggests and whispers within us too, i.e. to omit the acting of any sin, that we are any way inclined to, what place can be left for exhortation to Christian life, as long as I have any temptation against it?

Sect. 3. This is a doctrine which a man would think should not find admission with any considerable sort of men, and therefore it will be less pertinent for this Discourse to take any larger notice of it; yet for the preventing and intercepting any farther growth of it, where it may unhappily have found any reception, It will not be amiss to add, and evidence these few things:

Concerning the descent of the Spirit.

Sect. 4. First, concerning the Spirit, which is thus pretended to, That the Descent of the Spirit of God was principally for three ends, 1. to give Testimony, that Christ was the Son of God, sent with authority to reveal his will, and to command our faith and obedience, and (consequently to this) to give the world assurance that the Apostles were sent by him, and to sign the Commission of preaching to all Nations, to propagate what he had taught. Secondly, to assure all men, that the Rules which Christ gave us, are absolutely necessary to be observed, to render us capable of those Promises made, those benefits purchased by him. And thirdly, that, we being so corrupt by nature, so far from prone, or inclinable in our Flesh, to obey those Rules; the Graces of his holy Spirit, accompanying the Revelation, or preaching of his will and word, should incline our corrupt hearts to keep his laws.

Gods method in his Church.

Sect. 5. Secondly, that after the mission of the Spirit, God was pleased, for posterity, otherwise to express his care, and love to mankind, viz. in giving, and consigning to them his written word for a Rule, and constant director of life, not leaving them to the duct of their own Inclinations.

Teachers and learners.

Sect. 6. Thirdly, That God hath made (and continued, through all ages, both of Jews and Christians) one sort of men to teach, another to learn; Among the Jews one to preserve knowledge in his lips, and with the same to dispense it, the other to enquire, and seek the Law at his mouth, and under the Gospel, Pastors and Teachers, and ἡγούμενοι Rulers set over men for their good; Which is a visible prejudice to the pretended guidance of the Spirit, For if that, by the voice within me, be the standing guide of all my actions, what use of foreign teachers, or guides, or necessity of obeying the Apostle when he commands me to obey those that are set over me?

All that comes out of the heart is not from God.

Sect. 7. Fourthly, that every thing that comes out of the heart of man, is not infused into it, or placed there by God. For besides that from thence proceed many aerial fictions, and phasmes, and Chimæraes, created by the vanity of our own hearts, or seduction of evil Spirits, and not planted in them by God or nature, or the duct of God's Spirit, motions and emissions of our phansie, and not of our reason, of our sensitive, not humane nature (and to this all the Idolatry of the antient heathens, and the new-phansiful divinity of some present Christians, and the whole Religion of the Mahomedans is visibly imputable) besides this, I say, it is affirmed by the Apostle, Jam. 3. 15, 17. that there is a wisdom (and that must signifie some Codex of directions for practice, some law in the members, opposite to that in the mind) that cometh not from above, as well as a wisdom that cometh from above, and in plain terms, that it is earthly, sensual, and devilish, as that Law in the members is said to lead the man into captivity to the law of sin which is in the members.

Jam. 3. 15, 17.

Sect.

Sect. 8. So again, ſaith Chriſt, out of the heart proceed all the things that defile a man, evil machinations, διαλογισμοὶ πονηροὶ, all the moſt miſchievous deſignments, by name, murthers, adulteries, fornications, (inceſtuous and unnatural commiſſions contained under the word πορνεία fornication, 1 Cor. 5. 1.) thefts, falſe-witneſſes, evil ſpeakings, i. e. (as by thoſe few inſtances is intimated and muſt be ſupplyed by parity of reaſon) all the contradictions to the ſeveral branches (and degrees of thoſe branches) of the divine or moral Law. Mat. 15. 18, 19.

Sect. 9. Fifthly, That to impoſe on our ſelves or others by this fallacy, to believe or pretend that whatever our own hearts incite us to do, what they ſuggeſt, or dictate, is the Spirit, or word, or revelation of the will of God within us, is the principle of all villany (the ſame that hath always acted in the children of diſobedience) inhaunſed and improved with circumſtances of greater boldneß and impudence, than ever the moſt abominable heathens were guilty of, either in their Oracles or in their Myſteries. The belief of it a very noxious errour.

Sect. 10. In their Oracles, though their Idol-prieſts (who had the incloſure of this cheat) gave reſponſes out of the Caverns of the earth, and ſet up the devil (by the advantage of his foreſeeing ſome things in their cauſes, and conjecturing at others) above the omniſcient God of heaven, yet they affixed not the anſwers of their devils to the true God. They worſhipped Idols, and diſclaimed any portion in the true God, turned all knowledge or profeſſion of him out of their hearts, according to that reaſonable propoſition of St. Paul, 2 Cor. 6. 14, 15. that there is no poſſible agreement to be had betwixt light and darkneß. But theſe by their refined pretenſion, do (in effect, and by way of neceſſary conſequence, and direct interpretation) turn the God of heaven into that accurſed Spirit, affix on him (receive and deliver as the effata and oracles of God.) whatſoever the devil, or their own luſt, or revenge, or pride, or ambition, or covetouſneß (ſo many αὐθαίρετοι δαίμονες, ſpontaneous devils) can infuſe into them, and out of their black hearts, as out of the moſt noyſome caverns and dens of the earth (holding intercourſe with Hell) breath out, and deliver to the world. Worſe than the fallacy of the heathen Oracles.

Sect. 11. So again in their myſteries, and moſt ſecret receſſes, and adyta of their Religion, their heathen Prieſts were wont to betray and lead their ſilly votaries into all the moſt horrid unnatural ſins, as into a ſpecial part of the devotions and worſhips required of them by the Gods, whom they had undertaken to ſerve; But yet never thought fit to let them out of the dark, out of the retirement, but by baniſhing the eyes of men gave witneſs againſt themſelves, accuſed thoſe facts, which were not able to bear the light (to which the Apoſtle ſeems to refer, Epheſ. 5. 13.) and ſo had the excuſe of ſome baſhfulneß and ſelf-accuſation, and care not to ſcandalize other men; whilſt theſe that make their own luſt, their own malice and revenge the voice of the true God, the Spirit within them, are thereby qualified to act the horrid'ſt ſins avowedly and ſhameleſly, and have no checks left, (no coldneß, but where they have no temptations) no diſlikes, no ſhame, no objections to any thing, but to tenderneß, to ſcrupuloſity, to fear of offending, to the doing what they do in bondage, as they call it, i. e. to all the reliques or embers of conſcience remaining in them, and if they can but utterly and finally caſt out this fear, they are hereby delivered up really to the evil ſpirit, while they moſt pretend to the guidance of the good. The pretended Spirit of God within them, by ſuggeſting ſins, gives a full confidence and ſecurity to commit them, and then Scripture and conſcience and temper, and a tolerable degree of good nature, any thing lower than the utmoſt evil, is the thing only to be mortified, the one piece of criminous carnality to be burnt up. Or Idolatrous Myſteries.

Sect. 12. Thus by turning one pin in the machine, the whole ſcene is ſhifted, and this voice (as of an ἐγγαστρίμυθος) that comes out of our own bellies, being miſtaken for the ſtill language, in which God was once heard, a congregation of Chriſtians may be ſoon inſpired into a legion of Demoniacks, and only one (but that a teeming fruitful) error be committed all this while, the miſtaking our own motions for the incitation of the Spirit of God, which till it be reformed or retracted, it muſt be a ſhortneß of diſcourſe to think ſtrange, and an injuſtice to charge of any new crime, the infallible conſequences of it, and ſuch are all the barefaced villanies in the world.

Sect. 13. For as he that is ſo ſure and confident of his particular election, as to reſolve he can never fall, if he commit thoſe acts, or live in thoſe habits, againſt which the words of Scripture are plain, that they that do them ſhall not inherit eternal life, muſt neceſſarily reſolve, that what were drunkenneß or adultery in another, is not ſo in him, and nothing but the removing his Fundamental error can reſcue him from the ſuperſtructive, be it never ſo groß. So to this one grand miſtake (the judging of God's will by the bent of our own ſpirits) all vitious enormous practices (even to the taking away of all differences between good and evil) are regularly conſequent, and cannot ſeem ſtrange to attend daily, where the other hath taken up the lodging.

CHAP. XVIII.

Of the Miſtakes concerning Repentance.

Sect. 1. ONE ſort of Doctrines more I cannot but annex here, though I have elſewhere already inſiſted on them, and thoſe are the miſtakes in the Doctrine of Repentance.

Sect. 2. Repentance, whatever that word ſignifies, (and that is certainly a ſincere change, and renovation of mind, a converſion of the ſinner to God in a new life, repentance from dead works, Heb. 6. 1.) is queſtionleſs it to which, on purpoſe, Chriſt came to call ſinners, His whole Embaſſy from his Fathers boſome was projected and deſigned for this grand work, & ſo certainly all the preachings Of Repentance.

of all the Apoſtles were of the ſame making, that the Goſpel tells us the firſt-fruits were, Repent, &c. And therefore it will concern us nearly, not to be miſlead in this matter; For ſhould we content our ſelves with ſomewhat elſe under the title, or diſguiſe of Repentance, which is either not repentance at all, or but an imperfect, unſufficient part of repentance, and by conſequence, perſwade our ſelves, that by performing of this, we ſhall have fully anſwered Chriſt's call, done all that he came from heaven to require of us,'tis viſible what an obſtacle this is to the rearing that ſuperſtructure which was deſigned to be erected on this foundation.

Dangerouſneſs of miſtakes in it.

Miſunderſtanding, Rom. 7.

Sect. 3. Now to this head will be referred thoſe that from the miſunderſtanding of Rom. 7. (not obſerving the cuſtome of that Apoſtle μεταχηματίζων εἰς ἑαυτὸν, figuratively to transfer to himſelf, in the firſt perſon, what belongs to others) have made it reconcileable with regeneration, or repentance (for thoſe two words certainly ſignifie one and the ſame thing in Scripture) to be in that ſtate which is there deſcribed, i. e. to do what a man allows not, but hates, v. 15. the evil which he would not, v. 19. to be brought into captivity to the law of ſin, the law in the members, warring againſt the law of the mind, v. 23. and, upon the ſame account, even to be carnal, and ſold under ſin, ver. 14. all which muſt equally belong to the perſon which is there repreſented, of whom equally in the firſt perſon they are all affirm'd.

Sect. 4. That that chapter is really a repreſentation of one, which hath only the knowledge, not practice of his duty, and conſequently, to the ſins, which he commits, hath the aggravation ſuperadded of committing them againſt knowledge, againſt conſcience, againſt ſight of the contrary law, is manifeſt from the context, and hath * elſewhere more ſeaſonably been evidenced. And of this I need not many words to declare, how far it is from being ſo much as any part of Repentance, any one of the ingredients in it (being indeed no more than either the work of natural conſcience, or, farther, of the mind inſtructed by the Law of Moſes, but that not of force to work the leaſt obedience in the man, but ſuppoſed in that text to be joyn'd with all cuſtomary diſobedience, and captivity to ſin) and conſequently if this be miſtaken, for that, which it is ſo far removed from being, (natural or legal knowledge of duty, deſpiſed and tranſgreſt, for ſincere obedience to all the commandments of God) and the former of theſe by ſo abſurd, irrational a conceſſion, be deemed ſufficient to render his eſtate ſafe, whoſoever hath arrived to this, this muſt needs annul, and caſſate all the force of all the Articles of the Creed (although never ſo firmly and explicitely believed) toward bringing forth good life, i. e. Repentance, truly underſtood, this ſuppoſititious no-repentance being once contentedly received, and eſpouſed in exchange for it.

* Annot. in Rom. 7.

Dangers of it.

Sect. 5. For who will ever take the pains to maintain a painful, ungrateful, perhaps bloody fight againſt the Law of ſin that is in his members (ὑπωπιάζειν and ἁιχμαλωτίζειν which are the works of the penitent, or neglect of which, the valianteſt combatant may prove a reprobate, 1 Cor. 9. 27.) if ſo much leſs than a συμμαχία or beating the air, ver. 26. a bare diſlike, or diſpleaſure of the law of the mind, without ever coming into the field, will ſerve the turn to ſecure him of the crown.

Wiſhes of repentance.

Sect. 6. So again, they that, like the popular Prince, are unwilling to diſmiſs any man without his requeſt, and therefore, when they find not a man penitent, if they can but obtain of him, to wiſh that he were penitent, or to grieve, that he cannot aſcend ſo high as that wiſh, are content to accept that wiſh, or that grief for that Repentance, which alone is the condition required by Chriſt to reſcue from periſhing, What do theſe again, but wilfully miſtake that for Repentance, which is not Repentance, nay is by them that affirm it is, preſumed and ſuppoſed not to be; For if there had been any thing, that could have approved it ſelf to be Repentance, they had never deſcended to thoſe low enquiries, after the wiſh, and the grief; Nay the wiſh they had Repentance, is founded in the preſumption they have it not, and the grief that they have not the wiſh, is again a conceſſion that they have not ſo much as that; And if they may be capable of comfort, (I mean true ſubſtantial comfort, aſſurance of God's pardon, and acceptance, in their preſent eſtate) who are yet ſo far from being true penitents, reform'd, new livers, that the utmoſt they are arrived to toward it, is but an empty, ineffectual wiſh that they were ſuch, without conſidering the price, that muſt be paid, the pleaſant eſpouſed ſins, that muſt be parted with, if their wiſh were granted, (and ſo without any ſincere reſolution of any real change) then what need all that Chriſtian life, thoſe many years of ſevere devotion, and profitable ſervice that the Apoſtles meant, and all Miniſters endeavour to ſuperſtruct on this foundation?

Sorrow that they do not wiſh.

Deferring Repentance to Death-bed.

Sect. 7. So that frequent practice though not doctrine of the many, of ſecure ſpending in ſin the youth, and riper age, and even all the remainder (till the forerunners of death and hell make their cloſe approaches to them) and never doubting but the whole condition required by Chriſt, the Repentance he came to preach, will in that laſt ſcene of their laſt act, immediately before the exit, be as opportunely and acceptably performed, as at any other point of their lives, What do theſe but evacuate the whole force of the Chriſtian Faith, and abſolutely reſolve againſt building of Chriſtian life upon it?

* Of Death-bed Repentance.

Sect. 8. The unreaſonableneſs, and preſumption, the danger, and deſperate inſecurity of thoſe, that thus project, and inſtead of that whole age of vital actions, which are all little enough be they never ſo liberally diſpenſed, and never ſo duly perform'd, (vaſtly diſproportionable to that eternal Crown, which we know is adjudged, a reward to every man according to his works) have not ſo much as a thought or deſign all their lives long (nor till thoſe laſt fearful ſummons extort it from them) to advance ſo far as attrition and contrition, ſorrow, and reſolution of amendment, and then have no means to ſecure them of the truth, and ſincerity of theſe; The unreaſonableneſs, I ſay, and danger of theſe is * elſewhere largely inſiſted on, but never ſufficiently lamented, being that which is the debauching all parts of the world, a preſumption, that engages in all ſin, and ruine, aſcertains the life to be wholly unprofitable, and hath the luck among all profeſſions of Chriſtians to have aids and offices diligent to offer it ſome encouragements; The Romaniſts have many, formerly named, and their extream Unction, adminiſtred as the dying mans viaticum (which Saint James mention'd as the ceremony of his recovery) may be added to the Catalogue; And others of ſeveral perſwaſions have made them other tenders of kindneſs, and being unwilling to diſcourage ſuch cunctators, always keep them up in good hope, that if they are not yet called (for that is the ſtyle to expreſs any impenitent, obdurate ſinner) they may yet with the thief be brought in at the laſt hour, and ſo (to omit the deſperate gulf they are by theſe vain hopes most sadly plunged in, if God shew not either the like miracle, as the thief met with a Saviour, upon the Cross, which is not to be hoped a second time, or some other mercy proportionable to, and as little to be depended on as that) are ascertain'd never to superstruct any vital action, on that Divine foundation, so fitly prepared for it.

hopes

Sect. 9. If there be any, that mistake sorrow for sin, μεταμέλεια, (which it is very ordinary to find in those who carry it to hell with them, and which continues in that state of woe, as Charity doth in heaven) and confound it with repentance μετάνοια, which is never less than a conversion, and change of mind, these by obtruding an unsufficient part for the whole, the beginning of a change for the entire work of new life, will fall under the former guilt of obstructing this superstructure; and so, in a word, will all they, that either through indulgence to others, or fondness to an sin in themselves, substitute for Repentance any thing that is less, than a sincere, uniform Resolution of New obedience, attended with faithful endeavour, and καρποὶ ἄξιοι, meet, proportionable, worthy fruits of this change for ever after. The severals of such possible, or real mistakes in the retail, are not here proper to be insisted on. Mistake of Sorrow for Repentance.

CHAP. XIX.

Of the necessaries to the superstructing of good life on this Foundation.

Sect. 1. THere is still a fourth branch of Discourse behind, which by the laws of the designed method, must now briefly be consider'd, What things are necessary to the erecting of this superstructure on this Foundation, whether in a particular Christian, or especially in a Church, or society of such.

Sect. 2. Where by [necessary] I mean not the supernatural necessaries, the preventing, and assisting, and renewing grace of God, which we suppose God ready to annex to the Revelation of his will, in the hearts of all that with obedient humble spirits receive, and sincerely imbrace it; Nor Secondly, in the Physical notion of necessity, that without which the work cannot possibly be done, the building be erected, for in this sence, as was said, it cannot be affirmed of all the Articles of the Creed that they are thus absolutely necessary, i. e. that no man can be imagined to reform his life, so as to be acceptable to God, but he to whom every of those Articles hath been intelligibly revealed; (For of many plain, yet pious Christians, 'tis not certain, that that can truly be now affirmed, and of the pious Jews before Christ's time, it is not so much as pretended.) Three kinds of necessaries.

Sect. 3. But by [necessary] I mean that which is morally necessary to this end, i. e. very useful and helpful to advance it, and make it most probable to be attained, among men of those tempers, which we are commonly to look for in the world; Meaning also by the end to which these means are ordinable, not only the first act of change, resolution of reforming, but withall the continuance and perseverance in such resolutions, and the bringing forth meet fruits of repentance, and that again, not in a single person only, but in a community or multitude of men. Morally necessary to this end.

Sect. 4. And in passing our judgment on this kind of Necessaries, it will not be modestly nor soberly done, if any of our own wisdom intrude or interpose or be willing to make additions to what Christ and his Apostles have designed, and the Universal practice of the Church hath successfully used, and recommended to us in this kind; And therefore all that we have farther to do, is, to recollect, what things there are which are thus brought down unto us. What the Universal Church of Christ hath thought thus Necessary.

Sect. 5. And that will appear to be a methodical successive observation of these severals, as degrees and steps, preparative the one to the other, and all together, thus orderly used, sufficient through the blessing of God (and more probable than any course we could likely have pitched on) to attain the designed end successfully.

Sect. 6. First, A solemn admission of Proselytes, all that either, being of age, desire that admission for themselves, or that, in infancy, are by others presented to that charity of the Church, with the desires of the parents, and intercession of sureties, that they may be thus early admitted by baptism, the Ceremony of initiating Proselytes, of entring disciples into the school of Christ. 1. Baptism.

Sect. 7. If the persons thus admitted be of years of understanding, then some competent degree of instruction is reasonably to prepare for it, which if they be baptized in infancy, is timely to attend it, and security to be taken for the present, that they shall be brought to the Church in due time, where that is presumed to be ready for them; And because in an established Church, where that instruction is secured on all hands, and so is reasonably presumed to attend baptism, the practice of the Church hath always been (transcribed from the Apostles) to bring infant children to baptism, we have all reason to adhere to that practice, and to acknowledge with thankfulness the several advantages, which it contributes, toward the end of redeeming us from all iniquity, and purifying a peculiar people unto Christ. Of Infants. Benefits of that;

Sect. 8. First, on God's part, it secures to the Infant a non-imputation of Adam's transgression, seals unto him an assurance of God's not proceeding with him according to the strict Covenant first made with man, of a perfect unsinning obedience, by which we could have no hope to be justified, and on the contrary receives him into a Covenant of Grace, where there is pardon reached out to all (truly penitent) sinners, and assistance promised and engaged (and bestowed upon very easie conditions, humility and prayer and affiance in him) and this, in a degree proportionable to what now is required of us, as far as is truly sufficient, and can reasonably be desired by a rational agent, and as is reconcileable with that liberty, which is necessary to be reserved to the will of man, to make him capable of vertue and vice, and consequently of reward and punishment; And this is a needful expedient The first.

pedient to deliver from the encumbrance and weight of fears, and to beget a lively and a quickning hope, and ſo 'tis in it ſelf one excellent principle of action, (which ſlackneth for want of encouragement, and cannot chooſe but be inlivened by ſuch pregnant grounds of it) and thus it muſt needs appear to be, whenſoever the Infant attains to years and means of underſtanding it.

The Second. Sect. 9. Secondly, It is the entring the Infant into the Church, where the means of knowledge of duty dwells, and where it is early communicated to all, and ſo to this Infant as ſoon as he is capable of receiving it; And the advantage hereof is ineſtimable, to be thus early taken up and prepoſſeſſed by Chriſt before any other Competitor hath made his claim, or gotten admiſſion or hold or intereſt in him.

The Third. Sect. 10. Thirdly, It is the impoſing a band and ſacramental obligation upon him, an oath, a vow, which being the condition, upon the conſtant performance whereof all the promiſes of endleſs bliſs are made over to him by God, it is not poſſible for one that prizeth his own good, to wiſh it had not been made, or deliberately to reſcind or diſclaim the ſtanding obliged by it; And by this means it lays an abſolute neceſſity (the greateſt we have to ſecure all humane affairs) on every one that hath been baptized, to undertake the performance of Chriſt's condition, i.e. of a pious and Chriſtian life.

The Fourth. Sect. 11. Fourthly, It is ſolemnized with the prayers and benedictions of the Church, which are always of great efficacy to bring down that which is prayed for, but are eſpecially ſo, when they are annexed to an Inſtitution of Chriſt (ſuch as Baptiſm is known to be) and the effect of thoſe benedictions being the preventions, and illuminations, and aſſiſtances, and inſpirations of God's good Spirit, the heavenly auxiliaries, and ſecret hand, by which God hath promiſed to fight againſt Amalek, againſt ſin for ever, this together with the former advantages is very inſtrumental toward the beginning of this courſe, and ingaging the Infant betimes to a conſtant perſeverance in it. And accordingly baptiſm in the Scripture, and the reſt of the particulars which are to attend it, as in ſome reſpect they are to be looked on, as privileges, and advantages afforded us by Chriſt (for ſuch beyond all other things are thoſe that effectually induce reformation, or Chriſtian life) ſo are they moſt frequently conſidered as bands and obligations, and ſeals of the Chriſtian's Covenant with Chriſt, whereby he ingages his ſoul to a faithful performance of his part of the Covenant, and cannot now without Perjury and Apoſtaſie wilfully receed from it.

Catechizing. Sect. 12. After Baptiſm (when that is in infancy received, as now in a Chriſtian Church we ſuppoſe it to be) ſucceeds in the next place Inſtruction and inſtitution in the nature and ſeveral branches of that vow which was made at the Font, and this in ſuch a ſhort, perſpicuous, intelligible manner, and in ſo particular addreſs and application to every ſingle perſon (which, with the narrow-mouthed bottle in Quintilian, will not probably be filled with throwing whole buckets of water over it (to which preaching is moſt fit to be compared) and therefore requires to be taken ſingle in the hand, and to have that which is needful, warily and with care infuſed into it) that it is hardly imaginable how a more provident courſe ſhould be taken, than is by the Church appointed to be uſed, to convince every young perſon of his obligation, and to qualifie him judiciouſly and warily to take that oath in his own perſon, which was by proxies formerly taken for him, and what greater band can lie on any to undertake the duties of Chriſtian life, than the thus ſurveying and renewing of that oath?

Confirmation. Sect. 13. And what is thus prepared for in Catechizing is in the third place performed by Confirmation, a moſt profitable uſage of the Church tranſcribed from the practice of the Apoſtles, which conſiſts of two parts, the child's undertaking in his own name every part of the baptiſmal vow (having firſt approved himſelf to underſtand it) and to that purpoſe, that he may more ſolemnly enter this obligation, bringing ſome God-father with him, not now (as in baptiſm) as his Procurator to undertake for him, but as a witneſs to teſtifie his entring this obligation, which one thing being heedfully and pioufly performed, is the greateſt ingagement imaginable to the performance of the matter of the vow (in which all Chriſtian belief and practice is folded up) conſidering that every act of preſumptuous ſin, which ſhall ever be committed againſt that vow, brings the guilt of formal down-right perjury along with it, together with the puniſhment that belongs to that great and criminous guilt, and the forfeiture of his right and claim to all thoſe mercies, which either in Baptiſm or Confirmation are made over to him by Chriſt.

The firſt part thereof.

The ſecond. Sect. 14. The ſecond part of Confirmation is the prayer and benediction of the Biſhop, the ſucceſſor of the Apoſtles in this office, and that made more ſolemn by the Ceremony of Impoſition of hands, a cuſtom indeed of the Jewiſh parents in bleſſing their children, but taken up by the Apoſtles themſelves, in ſtead of that Divine Inſufflation, which Chriſt had uſed to them in conferring the Holy Ghoſt upon them, Joh. 20. 22. as an outward ſign of the ſame, as for holy Orders, Act. 6. 6. ſo for Confirmation of believers after baptiſm, Act. 8. 18. And the matter of this benediction, and petition, being the ſtrength of Chriſt, the daily increaſe of the manifold gifts of grace, the Spirit of wiſdom, underſtanding, counſel and ghoſtly ſtrength, of knowledge and true godlineſs and holy fear, as the beſtowing of theſe upon the child is both the ſtrengthning and ingaging him to all piety, ſo the Biſhop's prayer being thus, by vertue of his office, offered up, and having the ſuffrages of the whole congregation to joyn with it, and being commenced to God for that boon (the Spirit) which he hath promiſed to grant to our importunity, it may moſt reaſonably be preſumed to be of force and efficacy with God to bring down that grace which may inable to will and to do, on all that come duly qualified to receive it.

Sect. 15. To which I may add, that this being deſigned by the Church to certifie thoſe that are thus confirmed of God's favour and gracious goodneſs toward them, it hath all the advantages that either hope of acceptance and reward, or a grateful ſenſe of mercies received can add to it, to engage and oblige us to a conſtant obedience to him.

The Lord's Supper. In five conſiderations. Sect. 16. Fourthly, Thoſe which are thus confirmed, are thereby ſuppoſed to be fit for admiſſion to that other ſacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt, inſtituted in the cloſe of his laſt ſupper: And that, whether it be conſidered, 1. as an inſtitution of Chriſt for the ſolemn commemorating of his death; or 2. as a ſacrifice Euchariſtical performed by the Chriſtian to God; or 3. as the koinonia communication of the Body and blood of Chriſt, the means of conveying all the benefits of the crucified Saviour unto all that come fitly prepared, and qualified for them; or whether, 4. as a federal rite betwixt the ſoul and Chriſt, eating and drinking at his table, and thereby engaging our obedience to him; or laſtly, as an emblem of the moſt perfect divine charity to be obſerved among all Chriſtians; In all and every of theſe reſpects, I ſay, it is doubtleſs an inſtrument of great vertue, that hath a peculiar propriety to engage the receiver to perſevere in all piety. And that yet farther improved by the frequent iteration, and repetition of that ſacrament.

or

Sect. 17. 1. As it is the commemorating the death of Chriſt, ſo it is the profeſſing our ſelves the diſciples of the crucified Saviour, and that ingageth us to take up his Croſs and follow him, and not to fall off from him for any temptations, or terrors of death it ſelf, but to reſiſt to blood (as Chriſt did) in our ſpiritual ἀγῶνες, our Olympicks or combates againſt ſin. The firſt.

Sect. 18. Secondly, As it is the Euchariſtical Chriſtian ſacrifice, ſo it is formally the practiſing of ſeveral acts of Chriſtian vertue, 1. of prayer, of thanksgiving, of all kind of piety towards God; 2. of charity to our brethren, both that ſpiritual, of interceding for all men, for Kings, &c. 1 Tim. 2. 1. and corporal, in the offertory, for the relief of thoſe that want; and 3. the offering up and ſo conſecrating our ſelves, our ſouls and bodies to be a holy, lively, acceptable ſacrifice to God, the devoting our ſelves to his ſervice all our days; And this laſt a large comprehenſive act of piety, which contains all particular branches under it, and is again the repeating of the baptiſmal vow, and the yet cloſer binding of this engagement on us. The ſecond.

Sect. 19. Thirdly, As it is by God deſigned, and, as an inſtitution of his, bleſſed and conſecrated by him into a ſacrament, a holy rite, a means of conveying and communicating to the worthy receiver the benefits of the body and blood of Chriſt, that pardon of ſin and ſufficience of ſtrength and grace, which were purchaſed by his death and typified and conſigned to us by the ſacramental elements, ſo 'tis again the ridding us of all our diſcouraging fears, and the animating and obliging of us to make uſe of that grace, which will carry us (if we do not wilfully betray our ſuccours) victoriouſly through all difficulties. The third.

Sect. 20. Fourthly, As it is a federal rite betwixt God and us (as eating and drinking both among the Jews and heathens was wont to be) ſo 'tis on our part the ſolemn undertaking of the condition required of us to make us capable of the benefit of God's new Evangelical Covenant, and that is ſincere performance of all duties preſcribed the Chriſtian by Chriſt, And he that doth no longer expect good from God than he performs that condition, is ipſo facto deveſted of all thoſe fallacious flattering hopes, which pretended to make purifying unneceſſary, and muſt now either live purely and piouſly, or elſe diſclaim ever ſeeing of God. The fourth.

Sect. 21. Laſtly, As this ſupper of the Lord is a token and engagement of charity among the diſciples of Chriſt, ſo it is the ſupplanting of all the moſt Diabolical ſins, the filthineſs of the ſpirit, the hatred, variance, emulation, ſtrife, revenge, faction, ſchiſm, that have been the tearing and rending of the Church of God (oft-times upon pretence of the greateſt piety) but were by Chriſt, of all other things, moſt paſſionately diſclaimed, and caſt out of his Temple; And if by the admonitions, which this Emblem is ready to afford us, we can think our ſelves obliged to return to that charity and peaceable-mindedneſs, which Chriſt ſo frequently and vehemently recommends to us, we have his own promiſe that the whole body ſhall be full of light, Matth. 6. that all other Chriſtian vertues will by way of concomitance or annexation, accompany or attend them in our hearts.

Sect. 22. And the ſeveral happy influences of all and each theſe conſiderations, eſpecially when they are ſuperadded to the three former grand inſtruments, and frequently, every month at leaſt, and every great Feſtivity, called in to reinforce our watch, to remand us to our ſcrutiny (the examination and ſearch of our hearts and purging out all impurity, that hath been contracted in thoſe intervals) and to renew our vows of temper and vigilance, may very reaſonably be allowed to have ſome conſiderable vertue and efficacy in them, to advance that work, for which Chriſt came out from the boſome of his Father, to ſuperſtruct the practice of all vertue, where the Faith of Chriſt is once planted. The frequency of receiving it.

Sect. 23. After theſe four, which are thus ſubordinate and preparative the one to the other, the later ſtill bringing with it an addition of weight to the former, Two more there are which are ſeveral from, and yet being of continual uſe, are interweaved and mixt with every of theſe, and having their diſtinct energie proper to themſelves, when they are in conjunction with the former, or added to them, they muſt needs accumulate and ſuperadd a conſiderable weight unto them.

Sect. 24. The firſt is the uſe of Liturgie, the ſecond the word of exhortation among the Jews, and in the Apoſtles times, and proportionable to that the ſermons or homilies of the Church. The uſe of Liturgie.

Sect. 25. The Liturgie as it contains the whole daily office, conſiſting of Confeſſion, prayers, Pſalms, hymns, reading of the ſcripture of both Teſtaments, Creeds, ſupplications, interceſſions, thankſgivings, injunctions of Geſtures and of Ceremonies, and of Holy-days, is both the exerciſe of many parts of Piety, and the conſervatory of the Foundation, on which all Piety together is regularly built, and a means of heightning devotion and infuſing zeal into it; And the diligent, worthy, continual (inſtead of the negligent, formal, rarer) uſe of it, and the unanimous accord of whole ſocieties and multitudes herein, would certainly be very efficacious advancers of all Chriſtian vertue, of piety, of charity, of purity, over the world, of the two former directly, and of the later by way of diverſion, the frequent performance of ſuch offices, obſtructing and ſealing up the fountains of impurity, and intercepting that leiſure, which is neceſſary to the entertaining the beginnings of it. The uſe of Liturgie.

Sect. 26. So for Preaching or exhorting the People by way of Homily, it appears to have been received from the Jewiſh by the Chriſtian Church, and by the phraſe, by which it is expreſſed in the Acts [a word of exhortation to the people] it appears to have been generally imployed in reprehenſion of vices and exhortation to vertuous living. And if we ſurvey the Homilies of the Antient Church (ſuch are thoſe of St. Chryſoſtome moſt eminently) we ſhall diſcern that as upon Feſtival days, the ſubject of the Homily was conſtantly the buſineſs of the Day, the clearing the myſtery, the incarnation of Chriſt, &c. and the recommending the actions or ſufferings of the Saints, and raiſing mens hearts to acknowledge the goodneſs of God in ſetting up ſuch exemplary patterns and guides before us, So upon other days, after ſome ſhort literal explication of ſome place of ſcripture, the cuſtome was not to raiſe doctrinal points, according to every Preachers judgment or phanſie, but preſently to fall off to exhortation to, temperance, continence, patience, and the like Chriſtian vertues, which either the Of Preaching.

propriety of the Text, or the wants and ſins of the auditory, or the times ſuggeſted to them. And this ſo far from being a fault in their method of preaching, that it was an eminent exemplary piece of Chriſtian prudence, obſervable and imitable in them, as a means of keeping falſe or unneceſſary definitions out of the Church, which tend to the increaſe of diſputes and contentions, and whilſt they do ſo, are not to the edification and benefit, but to the deſtruction and miſchief of the hearers.

Sect. 27. Of this uſage of the Church it is moſt viſible, if it be but by the ill uſes which are made of it many times in ſtirring up ſeditions, rebellions, murthers, hatreds, animoſities, calumnies, revilings of ſuperiors, &c. in diſſeminating of hereſies, infuſing of prejudices, &c. what advantage may be had toward the advancement of all parts of Chriſtian life by a due performance of it, 'Tis very much in the power of a popular Orator to repreſent vices in ſo formidable, yet juſt appearances, and to ſet out each vertue in ſo amiable a form, and to apply this ſo particularly to thoſe that are concerned to be thus wrought on, that the Covetous perſon ſhall flie from, and ſcatter (moſt liberally) his beloved Idol-wealth, the rageful perſon ſhall find a calm, the luſtful a coldneſs inſenſibly diffuſed upon his breaſt, and the auditor's phanſie and ſenſitive affections being called in to joyn with his reaſon and the Spirit of God, it will by the bleſſing of that Spirit be in the power of meditation, to radicate theſe ſeeds, to fix this tranſient gleam of light and warmth, to confirm inclinations and reſolutions of Good (received in at the ear) and give them a durable conſiſtence in the ſoul.

Viſitation of the Sick.

Sect. 28. Next to this is the ſpiritual perſons being called for (and obeying the ſummons) to viſit the ſick, Jam. 5. 14. to aſſiſt him in the great work of diſcuſſing and examining his conſcience; of making his ſearch as particular as it can, whether it be any ſin either unreformed, or unſufficiently mortified, which may have laid him under God's preſent diſpleaſure, and brought that diſeaſe, as a piece of diſcipline, upon him. In this condition the rod of God hath a voice to be heard, and he whoſe office it is in publick to explain the oracles of God for the uſe of the Church, and to apply them to each man's wants, is now to preach on this new text, and expound to the ſick man (as far as by the cloſeſt inſpection he can judge) the particular meaning of the voice, the interpretation of God's meſſage to him, And if he be not able, like Daniel to interpret Nebuchadnezzar's dream, or Belſhazzar's hand-writing on the wall, which was the work of a Prophet extraordinarily inſpired, yet he may without the ſpirit of divination, diſcern that affinity and dependence betwixt the man's unreformed ſins, and God's hand of puniſhment, which may be ſufficient ground of ſuperſtructing Daniel's exhortation of breaking off his ſins by repentance, and ſhewing mercy to the poor, by humiliation, ſincere reſolution and vow of new life, and by meet fruits of ſuch reformation, the higheſt works of charity and piety, that the patient is capable of. And beſides that this method may receive ſome force (and probably prove ſucceſsful) by aſſiſtance of thoſe impreſſions, that the deſire of recovering the former health may have upon the patient (when he conſiders the pardon of ſins, which ordinarily introduced Chriſt's corporal cures, and prudently judgeth how improbable it is, that God, which for any ſin committed hath inflicted this diſeaſe, ſhould remove it before reformation, or if he doth, muſt do it as an act of higher wrath and puniſhment) Beſides this, I ſay the time of ſickneſs, or any other affliction, is like the cool of the day to Adam, a ſeaſon of peculiar propriety for the voice of God to be heard in the mouth of his meſſengers, and ſo may, by the aſſiſtance of united prayers for God's bleſſing on his own inſtruments, be improved into a very advantageous opportunity of begetting or increaſing ſpiritual life in the ſoul, and cannot without great guilt of unkindneſs and treachery to that moſt precious part be neglected or omitted by us.

Spiritual Conference.

Sect. 29. And the analogie holds, though not in the ſame degree, yet in the proportion, to every other ſeaſon or perſon, who is under the power of any unreformed ſin, or is doubtful of the ſincerity of the kind, or ſufficience of the degree of his change, and is not ſo fit or competent a judge of his own eſtate (if upon no other ſcore but becauſe his own) as any other fellow Chriſtian of no deeper judgment than himſelf, or as the ſpiritual perſon, whoſe Office it is to watch for his ſoul, and is probably furniſhed with more skill, fidelity and zeal toward the doing of it, may be deemed to be. And in this caſe the uſe of ſpiritual conference (which is at all times very profitable, yea and pleaſant to every diligent humble Chriſtian) is unimaginable and unſpeakable, eſpecially if it be free and unreſtrained, having all the advantages of the divineſt friendſhip, and withall the contentments and ſatisfactions of it (which are exceedingly great, and agreeable to rational ingenuous natures) and bearing an image and lively reſemblance of that converſation which is among Angels and beatified Saints, a communication and conjunction of ſouls, deſigned to our higheſt intereſts and concernments, the countermining and eradicating of ſin, mortifying this or that paſſion, rage, or other ſenſual deſire, and contending for the higheſt exaltation and improvement of our natures, all growth in grace, and the practical knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

Sect. 30. Many inhaunſments of this ſpiritual uſeful, though more private exerciſe, might be farther noted, and rules for the more advantageous practice of it, eſpecially that there were ſome eminent perſons, of known abilities, experience, judgment, gravity, fidelity, zeal to all Chriſtian vertue and the good of ſouls ſet apart to this one office of ſpiritual conference, in every Province, and all men rationally convinced of the great benefits that might be reaped by a frequent reſort to them in all poſſible times of need, and of the no kind of detriment or diſadvantage, that they can ſuffer by it.

The power of the Keys.

Sect. 31. But beyond all theſe there is another very efficacious method ſtill behind, of which the Apoſtle ſaith, that it was not carnal or weak, but mighty to God, or very powerful, for the bringing down of ſtrong holds, for the ſubduing of the moſt obſtinate, contumacious ſinner, and bringing him into the obedience of the faith of Chriſt, and that is the power and exerciſe of the Keys committed to the Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors by Chriſt, the weapons of their warfare, as Saint Paul calls them, the means of diſcharging their office to the good of ſouls.

Sect. 32. For when any baptized, inſtructed, confirmed, communicated Chriſtian, which hath participated of the Liturgie and Sermons of the Church, ſhall in deſpight of all theſe obligations (very competent and ſufficient to have reſtrain'd him) break out into any known wilful ſcandalous ſin, this courſe is then ready at hand, to be ſent as an officer to arreſt and reduce him; Firſt the admonitions, fraternal or paternal, of his fellow Christians, or of the Governors of the Church, then more publick reprehensions and increpations, and upon the unsuccessfulness of all these milder medicaments, the use of that stronger Physick, the Censures of the Church, either πρὸς ὥραν for a determinate, shorter space, or else indefinitely, usque ad reformationem, until he reform and return, and then when he doth so, the admitting him to penance, to approve the sincerity of his change by meet fruits of repentance, and then, and not till then, allowing him the benefit of absolution.

Sect. 33. The efficacy and usefulness of this last method hath elsewhere been shewn at large (in a Tract on that subject) especially upon the score of shame, when he that will live the life of a heathen, goes on unreformed in any open sin, shall not be allowed the honour of a Christian name, of an ordinary good reputation among men, but be banished and interdicted the enjoyment of those sacred privileges, which the meanest of Christ's flock is allowed by him. What these losses are, is sufficiently known, and set off by the Apostles style, expressing them by καθαίρεσις and ἀπώλεια, destruction and excision, and the like; As for that other of shame, the efficacy that belongs to it, may be discerned by that antient Apophthegm of * Cleobulus, the fifth of the Sages of Greece, Μάλιστα σωφροσύνῃ δῆμον, ὅταν ὁ φόβος μᾶλλον οἱ πολίζωνομενοι δεδοίκασιν, ἢ ὁ νόμος, that that people are composed to the greatest sobriety, among whom the Citizens stand in more fear of disprаise, than of law; supposing that state to be best qualified, where vertue, and every part of good living, which laws are wont to prescribe, hath acquired so great a credit, and reputation among all, that without fear of punishment from laws, or Magistrates, the very dread of shame and disgrace shall be able to contain all men within the bounds of exact living, and awe them from admitting any thing which is foul, or sinful. To which purpose also is that of ‖ Hippodamus the Pythagorean, that there be three causes of vertue (φόβος, ἀπιθυμία, αἰδὼς) and shame is the last of them, of which, saith he, (τὰ ἤθεα δυνατὰ ἐστὶ ἐμπαραστενάζειν, &c.) good customs are able to infuse a dread into all men, that are καλῶς ἠσκημένοις well cultivated, and make them αἰδεῖσθαι τὰ αἰσχρὰ πράσσειν, to have a reverence, or pudicitious, chaste fear of doing any thing which is ill. And according to this prudential notion of these wise men of the world, is this piece of Christian discipline instituted by our Saviour, to deprive vice of its greatest temptation, the praise of men, to exalt and set up vertue the only creditable thing, and brand sin as infamous; And if this of shame superadded to the former of loss (and both being met together, as the sinners portion here, perfectly prefiguring the two saddest ingredients in hell, deprivation of the blissful vision, and confusion of face) cannot prove efficacious and successful to the mortifying of unprofitable vice, the Church doth then give over the patient as desperate; pretends not to any farther methods of working on such obdurate sinners.

* Stobæus, ser. 41. p. 268.

‖ Li. de Repubi.

Sect. 34. Nor indeed is it reasonable it should, when beside the Foundation (consisting of so many stones, each of them elect and precious, chosen by the wisdom of heaven for this admirable work of reforming the most obdurate Jew or heathen) this series and succession of so many powerful methods being farther prescribed by God and administred by the Church, have found so discouraging a reception, that nothing but the violence of storming or battery (the course which God is forced to take for the destroying, but cannot without changing the course of nature, for the converting of sinners) can hope or pretend to prove successful on them.

This the last Ecclesiastical means.

Sect. 35. What hath been said of the wise disposition of God in preparing and instituting this series of necessaries for the effecting this great work, the reformation of mens lives (the latter annext to the former, each to add weight and authority, and to vindicate the contempts of the former) might more largely be insisted on yet, on a farther design, to give us a just value of that sacred office, which Christ fixed in the Church in his Apostles and the Bishops their successors, and honoured it and them in this especially, that he hath put these weapons into their hands, intrusted to, and invested in them the Power of dispensing all these, and by that means rendred them necessary to the planting and supporting a Church of vital Christians, to the maintaining of pious practice in any community of Professors. But this would soon swell this discourse beyond the limits designed to it.

The necessity of Governors in the Church.

Sect. 36. All that is behind will be by way of Comment on that part of the Church of England's charity, which hath constantly called to God, that he will inspire continually the Universal Church with the Spirit of truth, unity, and concord, and grant that all they that do confess his holy name, may agree in the truth of his holy word, and live in unity and godly love.

The Conclusion.

A Prayer.

A Prayer. O Moſt gracious Lord God, the Creator of all things, but of Men and all Mankind a tender compaſſionate Father in Jeſus Chriſt, thou that haſt enlarged thy deſigns and purpoſes of grace and mercy, as the bowels and blood-ſhedding of thy Son, with an earneſt deſire that every weak or ſinful man ſhould partake of that abyſs, that infinite treaſure of thy bounty; Thou that haſt bequeathed to us that Legacy and example of a ſacred inviolate Peace, a large diffuſive charity, we meekly beſeech thee to overſhadow with thy heavenly grace the ſouls of all men over all the world, O Lord, thou lover of ſouls, to bring home to the acknowledgment and embraces of thy Son all that are yet ſtrangers to that profeſſion, and in whatſoever any of us, who have already received that mercy from thee, may be any way uſeful or inſtrumental to that ſo glorious end, to direct and incline our hearts toward it, to work in us all an holy zeal to thy name, and tender bowels to all thoſe whoſe eternity is concerned in it. O give us a true ſerious full comprehenſion and value of that one great intereſt of others, as well as our ſelves, ſhew us the meaneſt of us, ſome way to contribute toward it, if it be but our daily affectionate prayers for the enlarging of thy Kingdom, and the care of approving all our actions ſo, as may moſt effectually attract all to this profeſſion. And for all thoſe that have already that glorious name of thy Son called upon them, bleſſed Lord, that they may at length, according to the many engagements of their profeſſion, depart from iniquity, that that holy City, that new Jeruſalem may at length according to thy promiſe deſcend from heaven, prepared as a Bride adorned for the husband Chriſt, that that tabernacle of God with men may be illuſtriouſly viſible among us, that we may be a peculiar people, and thou our God inhabiting in power among us, that we which have ſo long profeſſed thee, and been inſtructed by thee, may no longer content our ſelves with that form of knowledge, which ſo often engenders ſtrife, contentions, animoſities, ſeparating, and condemning one another; and that moſt unchriſtian deteſtable guilt of blood, but endeavour and earneſtly contend for the uniform effectual practice of all the precepts of thy Son, the fruits and power of all Godlineſs, that all the Princes and People of Chriſtendom, the Paſtors and the Sheep of thy Fold may at length in ſome degree walk worthy of that light and that warmth, that knowledge and thoſe graces, that the ſun of righteouſneſs with healing in his wings hath ſo long poured out upon us. Lord purge and powerfully work out of all hearts that profaneneſs and Atheiſticalneſs, thoſe ſacrilegious thirſts and enormous violations of all that is holy, thoſe unpeaceable, rebellious, mutinous, and withal tyrannizing cruel ſpirits, thoſe prides and haughtineſſes, judging and condemning, defaming and deſpiſing of others, thoſe unlimited ambitions and covetings, joyned with the invaſion and violation of others rights, thoſe moſt reproachful exceſſes and abominable impurities, which to the ſhame of our unreformed obdurate hearts, do ſtill remain unmortified, unſubdued among us, but above all, thoſe infamous hypocriſies of ſuborning Religion to be the engine of advancing our ſecular deſigns, or the diſguiſe to conceal the fouleſt intentions, of bringing down that moſt ſacred name whereby we ſhould be ſaved, to be the vileſt inſtrument of all carnality; and by the power of thy convincing Spirit, Lord humble and ſubdue all that exalts it ſelf againſt the obedience of Chriſt. And when thou haſt caſt out ſo many evil ſpirits, be pleaſed thy ſelf to poſſeſs and inrich our ſouls, to plant and root and confirm and ſecure in us all thoſe precious fruits of piety, and faith, and obedience, and zeal towards thee; of purity and meekneſs, and ſimplicity, and contentedneſs, and ſobriety, in our ſelves; of juſtice, and charity, and peaceableneſs, and bowels of mercy, and compaſſion toward all others; that having ſeriouſly, and induſtriouſly, as our holy vocation ingages us, uſed all diligence to add unto our faith, vertue; and to vertue, patience, and perſeverance in all Chriſtian practice, we may adorn that profeſſion, which we have ſo long depraved, and having had our fruit unto holineſs, we may obtain our end everlaſting life, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. Amen.

CHAP. I.

An Introduction, the danger, and ſin of Schiſm.

Sect. 1. TWO wiſhes rather than hopes there are, wherein all Chriſtians are very much concerned; Firſt, That all that have given up their names to that holy profeſſion, would ſincerely betake themſelves to the diſcharge of all thoſe duties (as well more common, one towards another, as more particular, of each ſingle man toward God, and toward himſelf) which Chriſt came on purpoſe to plant in, or reduce into the world: The Second, That the Faith of Chriſt might gain an amicable, univerſal reception in the hearts of all men over the whole world, and that all mankind (by an uniform obedience to thoſe divine precepts which are moſt agreeable to our rational, i. e. humane nature, and which are able to advance us to the higheſt pitch of moral excellency and dignity, that any created ſubſtance is capable of) might attain the great end of our creation, a paradiſe, or bliſsfull being here in this world, onely with the mixture of ſome allays to that bliſs (and thoſe neceſſary both to the exerciſe of ſome moſt eminent vertues, and ſuch as the Angels are not, for want of paſſible bodies, capable of, and alſo to the inhaunſing of our crown) and then a ſtate of infinite reward, and uncompounded felicity hereafter.

Two concernments of all Chriſtians. Practice of Chriſtianity. Propagating of it.

Sect. 2. That the latter of theſe may in God's good time be effectually attempted by all Chriſtian Kings, and Biſhops, and advance more ſucceſsfully, than of late it hath done, ought to be the endeavour of all thoſe, whoſe eminency in the world hath given them capacities, or qualifications to contribute ſome conſiderable degree of aſſiſtence to ſo glorious a work. And for others, whoſe inferiority of condition or ſphere of motion, and the improbability, conſequent to that, of advancing ſo magnificent a deſign, is their juſt excuſe for not entertaining any ſuch hopeleſs thoughts, it is yet their certain duty by conſtant, fervent prayers to ſolicite the good hand of God, who alone can accompliſh ſo divine a work, and by the diligent ſtrict obſervance of all Chriſt's precepts to exemplifie to all others the power, and real energie of the faith of Chriſt, where it is admitted into the heart, thereby to attract all others to the imbracing of that, which hath ſuch admirable vertues in it.

What is to be done toward the latter.

Sect. 3. As for the former, That is (in proportion to his condition) the known duty of every ſingle Chriſtian, much more of every congregation, and community of ſuch; who are therefore aſſociated into one body, that each ſupplying the defects, and infirmities of others, they may by ſo advantageous an inſtrument, as union of forces is, be enabled to doe what without it they are juſtly ſuppoſable to want means, or ſtrength to doe, and ſo are deprived of all excuſe, if they be found culpable.

The chief branches of the former, conſidered in ſociety.

Sect. 4. In this kind, 1. The duty of Charity, and peace to all: 2. of ready, and filial obedience of thoſe under authority to their lawfull authorized ſuperiours: and 3. of charitative paternal exerciſe of their power, in all thoſe that are inveſted with it by Chriſt, may be juſtly looked on as vertues of the firſt magnitude, which have the moſt lively characters, and impreſſes of the Law-giver, Chriſt's image, and ſuperſcription upon them, and accordingly deſerve the firſt fruits of our care and diligence that they be moſt diligently conſerved, where they are, and induſtriouſly reduced, where by the malignity, or infelicity of the times, they are torn, or eſcaped from us.

Charity. Obedience. Paternal exerciſe of Eccleſiaſtical power.

Sect. 5. For that malices, and rancours, and animoſities among ſingle Chriſtians, but eſpecially ſeditious, mutinous ſpirits; that diviſions, and ſchiſms, and ruptures, and preparative thereto, cauſeleſs anathematizing, and tyrannizing over the faith of Chriſt's flock, are moſt ſcandalouſly contrary to Chriſt's platform, to the prophecy of the plough-ſhares, and pruning-hooks, the happy exchange for the ſanguinary, hoſtile inſtruments, is a truth ſo eminently and ſignally viſible in the practice, and doctrine of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, that it cannot be doubted, or queſtioned on either ſide. And agreeably, there is no one vice, which hath fallen under ſo much of the diſpleaſure, and correption, and ſevereſt diſcipline of the holy Fathers of the Ancient Church, as this of Schiſm, and the ingredients and preparatives to it, have done.

The contrariety of Schiſm to the Doctrine of Chriſt.

The Fathers Cenſures of it.

Sect. 6. It is but a ſmall part of the character thereof, that from Saint Paul, and Saint Jude they tell us, that it is a ſpecial piece of (a) carnality; an (b) excommunicating and condemning, i. e. voluntary inflicting of that puniſhment on ones ſelf, which the Governours of the Church uſe to inflict on the moſt ſcandalous ſinners; that (c) they that ſo divide on their own preſumption, may not at their own will return to the Church, and communicate again with the Biſhop, and his Chriſtian people; that (d) it is contrary to the faith, (e) even when it hath not, in reſpect of doctrinal points, any hereſie joyned with it; (f) Contrary to charity, yea to all the (g) advantages that belong to a member of the Church, the (h) benefits of prayers and ſacraments; that it is (i) as bad as hereſie; that (k) there was never any hereſie in the Church, which was not founded in it; and (l) that it is conſtantly forced, in its own defence, to conclude in ſome hereſie or other; (all of which being put together will be ſufficient to keep men from being in love with the guilt, or company of ſchiſmaticks:) but it is farther branded with theſe ſuperadditions of terrour, that (m) there is ſcarce any crime ſo great as ſchiſm, not (n) idolatry, (o) ſacrilege, parricide; that it hath been under peculiar marks of God's indignation, in the ſtory of the Jewiſh Church, as in the (p) caſe of the ten Tribes, and of the (q) Samaritans, who are ranked with the Gentiles, Matth. 10. 5. (r) and ſo in the ſtory of Core, &c. that it is the (ſ) Antichriſtianiſm mentioned by Saint John, the (t) worſhipping or ſerving the Devil, and, in a word, ſo great a crime, that it is not (u) expiable by Martyrdom to him that continues in, and hath not repented, and returned from it.

Sect. 7. Much more of this ſubject is every where to be met with in the Ancient monuments, and nothing of alleviation to be had for any, who have not the (x) excuſe of involuntary ſeduction, of errour, or ſimplicity to plead for them, and the ſureſt way to doe that effectually, to qualifie them for that plea, is to forſake their courſe, to get out of ſo dangerous a ſnare.

Sect. 8. Nay 'tis farther obſervable, how unſafe it hath been deemed by theſe, for (y) light, and inconſiderable cauſes to break this unity, it being in their opinion very (z) hard, if not impoſſible to receive an injury, or provocation from the Governours of the Church, as may make a rupture, or ſeparation excuſable. And for the Univerſal, or truly Catholick Church of Chriſt, it is not, in (a) Saint Auguſtin's opinion, poſſible that there ſhould be any juſt cauſe for any to ſeparate from it, nor conſequently, Apology to be made for thoſe, that on any, whether true, or pretended cauſe whatſoever, have really incurred this guilt.

(z) Nulla ab eis tanta poteſt fieri correptio, quanta eſt ſchiſmatis pernicies. Irenæus l. 4. c. 62. Dionyſ. Alex. Ep. ad Novat. ap. Euſeb. l. 5. c. 28.

(a) Si poſſunt aliqui (quod fieri non poteſt) habere cauſam juſtam quo communionem ſeparent à communione Orbis terrarum. Aug. Ep. 48.

Sect. 9. From theſe premiſſes thus acknowledged and undeniable, the concluſion follows irrefragably, that it is not the examination of the occaſion, or cauſe, or motive of any man's ſchiſm, that is worth the producing or heeding in this matter; The one thing that is of force, and moment, and, by conſequent, pertinent to be enquired into, is the truth of the matter of fact, whether this charge be ſufficiently proved or confeſſed, i. e. whether he that is thus accuſed, ſtands really guilty of ſeparation from the Church of Chriſt; And this will be a means of ſhortning our method, and giving very moderate bounds to our enſuing diſcourſe, which will now be regularly finiſhed by making theſe two inquiries.

Sect. 11. 2. What Evidences are producible againſt the Church of England, whereby it may be thought liable to this guilt, and withall how it may be cleared from all force of theſe evidences.
Sect. 12. Which when we have done, we ſhall not from the office of Advocates proceed to that of the Accuſer, or Judge, but leave all others, that are under the ſame charge, to their proper tribunal, to ſtand or fall, as they ſhall appear able, or not able, upon firm grounds, to maintain, and vindicate their innocence.

CHAP. II.

What Schiſm is, together with ſome general conſiderations thereon.

Sect. 1. OUR firſt enquiry muſt be what Schiſm is, in the ſtrict and proper notion (as (a) diſtinguiſhed from Hereſie, the (b) introducing of ſome falſe doctrine into the Church.) And herein there will be no difficulty, the Origination, and univerſal uſe of the word, according and conſenting exactly, to give us the importance of it.

(a) Non attendiſti inter ſchiſmaticos & hæreticos quàm ſit magna diſtantia. Optat. l. 1. p. 13.

(b) Inter hæreſim & ſchiſma hoc intereſſe arbitramur, quòd hæreſis perverſum dogma habeat, ſchiſma propter Epiſcopalem diſſenſionem ab Eccleſia pariter ſeparet. Hieron. ad Tit. c. 3.

Sect. 2. In the origination of it from σχίζω, ſcindi, it ſignifies literally ſciſſure, or diviſion, which being a figurative, and withall a relative word, referring to ſome body, which is thus cut or divided, but that no natural, but political body, the Church, or Congregation of Chriſtians, the literal notation of the word in the Eccleſiaſtical uſe, will be ἡ ἑνότητος διαίρεσις, a diviſion in or from the Unity of the Church of Chriſt. Onely the form and termination of the word muſt be farther noted, which being not σχίσις from the active σχίζω, but σχίσμα from the paſſive σχίζομαι, the uſe of ſuch paſſives is obſervable, being of the nature (and for want of conjugations, deſigned to ſupply the place) of the Hebrew Hithpael, and ſo noting reciprocal action or paſſion, where the paſſion is from, and on himſelf, and is moſt fully expreſſed by the Latine Neutrals, which partake both of active and paſſive, but are ſtrictly neither of them. This might be largely exemplified in the uſe of other words, but the advantage of the obſervation will not be proportionable to the length of ſuch a diverſion, being no more than this, that the diſtinct notion of the word [Schiſm] is a voluntary dividing, or, in the neutral expreſſion, which the Fathers familiarly uſe, a ſeparating, or receding of any member from the unity of the body, i. e. the Church of Chriſt, and ſo that the ſchiſmatick is he that * divides himſelf from the Church of God, not that is cut off, or ſeparated, he that (c) goes out, or (d) withdraws, or recedes of his own accord, not he that is caſt out by the Governours of the Church. For whatever blame, and vengeance may juſtly light on ſuch, who are by the righteous, and charitative Cenſures of the Church, cut off from communion, in caſe they do not by humiliation, confeſſion and reformation, and meet fruits of repentance, prepare and qualifie themſelves for readmiſſion to that Communion, yet certainly this puniſhment of Excommunication is very diſparate and diſtant from the crime of ſchiſm, the Judge, i. e. Biſhop or Governour of the Church, being the onely actour in the one, (and that ex officio, an act of duty in him, when duly executed) but in the other, the offender, or guilty perſon, who is therefore ſaid to (e) accuſe, to caſt, to (f) condemn himſelf, throwing himſelf, by his voluntary receſſion from the Church, into that very condition, into which the adulterer, and obſtinate offender is caſt by the Cenſures of it.

The Original of the word Schiſm.

Reciprocal paſſion noted by the word.

Schiſm a voluntary receſſion.

(f) Propriæ conſcientiæ videtur eſſe damnatio, cùm quiſpiam ſuo arbitrio ab Eccleſia receſſerit. Hieron. Αὐτὸς καθ' ἑαυτὸν ὁ καταδικὴς ἑαυτῷ ἐπιφωνήσει κρίσιν. Cod. Can. Afric. Can. 22.

Sect. 3. This is ſo evident a truth, that this puniſhment, and ſo judicial act, of the Governour, cannot be the guilt of him that is puniſhed, and though it be ſuppoſed to be founded in ſome offence, is not yet in any propriety of ſpeech the offence it ſelf, much leſs the ſin of ſchiſm, eſpecially when he is puniſhed for hereſie, or ſome other crime, and not for ſchiſm, that I need not farther inſiſt on it. Onely, as beſide the formal καθαίρεσις, there is alſo an interpretative excommunication, when he that is not under the Cenſures of the Church, is yet refuſed admiſſion, or reception unto it, unleſs he will ſubmit to ſuch and ſuch conditions, indiſpenſably propoſed to him, and becauſe both in the one, and the other, in the formal, and in the interpretative excommunication, the Governours, being men, may poſſibly err, and conſequently cenſure, and excommunicate the innocent, and in like manner propoſe thoſe conditions of communion which are not lawfull for that man to ſubmit unto, ſo it is poſſible in both caſes, that the perſon excluded may be abſolutely innocent, free not onely from that of ſchiſm, but from all other guilt, ſo that he which is excommunicated may not be obliged to regain the peace, nor he that is barred out, to force his paſſage into the communion of the Church, and ſo both ſorts of theſe, continuing out of the actual communion, neither the one nor the other be guilty of ſchiſm in the leaſt degree by ſo continuing.

Interpretative Excommunication.

Continuance out of actual Communion, without Schiſm.

Sect. 4. He that is excommunicated unjuſtly, cannot be rendred criminous by that misfortune, nor concluded culpable by that argument, upon which he is ſuppoſed innocent. Our Saviour hath pronounced of the anathema's of the Jews, of their bittereſt execrations, their πᾶν πονηρὸν ῥῆμα, their ſharpeſt cenſures nay the ἀποσυναγωγία, caſting men out of the Synagogue, falſely or unjuſtly, that it is to be looked on as a moſt auſpicious token, a matter of the greateſt rejoicing to them which fell under it, one of the principal ingredients dients in, and forerunners of their bliſs; (and accordingly the Apoſtles when they were thus caſt out, and contumeliouſly uſed, went out of the Temple rejoicing that they were thought worthy to ſuffer ſhame for Chriſt's name.) To which purpoſe is that of Photius Patriarch of Conſtantinople to Michael Metropolitan of Mitylene, Ep. 116. Ὥσπερ τοὺ τὴν διαβόητα μαθητὰς τὸ μισοχρίστον ἐκεῖνο Ἰουδαίων συνέδριον ἀποσυναγώγους ποιήσαντες, ἐκείνους μᾶλλον τῷ διδασκάλῳ καὶ δεσπότῃ προσηνέωσαν, ἑαυτοὺ δὲ τέλεον τῆς θείας μυσταγωγίας καὶ τῶν ἁγίων βασιλείας ἀλλοτριώσαν, ὅπου καὶ νῦν, &c. The excommunication of the Jewiſh Sanhedrim ſent out againſt Chriſt's diſciples brought them ſo much nearer to their Lord and Maſter, and alien'd the Jews themſelves, removed them ſo much farther from the kingdom of heaven, and ſo doth all unjuſt excommunication now unite us to the Apoſtles by this conformity with and participation of their ſufferings. And I ſuppoſe the arguments, and teſtimonies produced by the Chancellour of Paris are (and, when they were firſt publiſhed, were ſo deemed by thoſe of the Romiſh communion) unanſwerable to this matter; And accordingly that of Thomas de Curſelis in the Council of Baſil, that it was [a] ſaid by Chriſt to the Pope, Whatſoever thou ſhalt bind on earth ſhall be bound, not whatſoever thou ſhalt affirm to be bound,] hath with it the evidence of undeniable truth, equally applicable to him and all Biſhops in that and in all future ages.

Unjuſt excommunication hurts no man.

[a] Papæ à Chriſto dictum, Quicquid ligaveris ſuper terram, erit ligatum, non quicquid dixeris eſſe ligatum. Jacob. Angularis in Ep. ad Weſſelum ap. Goldaſt. l. 1. p. 575.

Which holds in the Interpretative Excommunication.

Sect. 5. And then certainly what hath thus been ſaid of the Formal, will with the ſame evidence be extended alſo to the Interpretative excommunication, whenſoever the conditions of the communion contain in them any ſin, and ſo become as the former cenſures were ſuppoſed to be; For in that caſe certainly it is no act of Schiſm from any Church, for any member to be, or to continue thus excluded from it. For how deſirable and valuable ſoever an intire, inviolate peace with all Chriſtians, with all men, (together with the approbation of our willing, chearfull obedience, and ſubmiſſion of our judgments and practices, to our ſuperiours) muſt for ever be deemed by all true diſciples of Chriſt, Yet muſt not the purchaſe of this treaſure be attempted by the admiſſion of any ſin, any more than the glory of God might be projected by the Apoſtle's lie. The leaſt tranſgreſſion of God's Law muſt not be adventured on upon any the moſt Chriſtian deſign, or conſideration; The peaceable living with all men, which is ſo often exhorted to, and inculcated, is yet no farther recommended, than εἰ δυνατὸν and ὅσον ἐφ' ὑμῖν, if it be poſſible, and as much as in us lies, and that, we know, muſt be interpreted of a moral and legal poſſibility, by which we are pronounced able to doe that (and no more) which we can doe lawfully: and ſo when the Apoſtle 1 Theſſ. 4. 11. exhorts to the moſt earneſt purſuit of this bliſsfull ſtate, (this eaſe, and reſt, and quiet from the labours, and toils and hell of the factious, turbulent ſpirit) it is in a ſtyle, which ſuppoſes this reſerve, we muſt, ſaith he, φιλοτιμεῖσθαι ἡσυχάζειν, have an ambition, and emulation, and contention to live peaceably, and quietly, obliging us to uſe all means that would be allowed to the ambitious perſon in his warmeſt purſuit, i. e. the utmoſt lawfull, but not the loweſt unlawfull means.

Mr. Knots conceſſion in this matter. c. 7. p. 471, 472.

Sect. 6. In which matter it is remarkable what courſe hath been taken by the late authour of Infidelity unmasked, in his diſcourſe of the Schiſm of Proteſtants, where having acknowledged how perfectly unlawfull it is to diſſemble, equivocate, or lie in the matters of faith——and withall urging from all antiquity, that to forſake the external communion of God's viſible Church is the ſin of ſchiſm, he makes a ſhift to conclude (as a natural conſequence) from hence, that therefore the Church (I ſuppoſe he means, of Rome) is infallible, and not ſubject to errour, becauſe otherwiſe men might forſake her communion——where though the conſequence be very ſtrange, that we may forſake the Churches communion, in caſe ſhe be fallible or ſubject to errour, (for this ſuppoſes it lawfull, 1. to forſake the communion of any erroneous Church, which is much more than we would deſire to be granted us, and 2. to forſake all that are fallible, though they be not actually in errour, which is in effect to forſake the communion of all but Saints, and Angels, and God in heaven, for they onely have the privilege of impeccable and infallible) yet it abſolutely acknowledges that it would be lawfull to ſeparate from, and forſake the (even univerſal) Church of Chriſt, in caſe, or on ſuppoſition that we could not be permitted to communicate with it, without lying, and diſſembling, and equivocating in matters of faith, which he there acknowledges to be the denying God on earth.

Severe conditions of ſome Churches Communion.

Sect. 7. Now (to return to our preſent conſideration) of this there is no queſtion, but that, as it is ſaid to be cuſtomary among the Kings of the Hunnes (as ſoon as they have any children, and ſo no need of their brethrens aſſiſtence) to baniſh all their brethren out of their dominions, and not to admit them again without putting out their eyes, (ἐκ ἔτι ἄλλως ἢ ὅτι τὰ χῶρας διατεῖλαι αὐτοῖς ξυγχωρεῖν, ἀλλ' ἢ τὰς ὄψεις ἐκκαυθῆναι, ſaith Cinnamus, Hiſt. l. 1.) ſo it is poſſible (I wiſh it were not juſtly ſuppoſable) for a particular Church ſo to fence, and limit, to guard, and reſtrain their communion, to require ſuch ſevere conditions of all whom they will admit, or tolerate within their Church, that ſome men cannot without putting out their eyes, or wilfull acknowledgment of untruths, others without committing ſin againſt conſcience, undergo the conditions thus required, nor conſequently be admitted to communion with it. As in caſe any unſound or untrue poſition be entred into the Confeſſion, or Catechiſm of any Church, and all the members of that communion be explicitely required to believe, and acknowledge the truth of every branch of that Confeſſion, and ſo that confeſſion be really the condition, and accordingly in the reputation of men eſteemed the teſſera or ſymbol of that communion, then he that ſhall enter this communion thus conditionated, muſt certainly either actualy ſubſcribe, or (which, as to the ſcandal of the action, is equivalent) be reaſonably ſuppoſed to acknowledge that untruth; and if in ſome perſons blameleſs ignorance may be ſuppoſed ſufficient for the excuſing, or alleviating that fault, yet 1. he that hath means of diſcovering that untruth, and criminouſly neglects to make uſe of thoſe means, and 2. he that hath diſcovered the truth, and yet profeſſeth himſelf to believe the contrary, will not be thus excuſable; And it is not here ſufficient to object the ſuppoſable levity of the errour, or intellectual falſity, For how light, and inconſiderable (and extrinſecal to the foundation) ſoever the errour be ſuppoſed to be, yet if there be obſtinacy in continuing in it againſt light and conviction, or if there be falſeneſs in profeſſing, or ſubſcribing, contrary to preſent perſwaſions, or ſcandal and ill example, temptation and ſnare to others, in ſeeming to doe ſo; theſe certainly are ſins, and neither light nor inconſiderable, nor reconcileable with that fabrick of Chriſtian practice, which ought to be ſuperſtructed on that foundation.

Make Communion with them impoſſible. Such are preſcribing ſubſcription of errours.

Sect. 8. Nay, if the errours be really on the other ſide, if the doctrines ſo propoſed, as the condition of the communion of any Church, be indeed agreeable to truth, but yet be really apprehended by him, to whom they are thus propoſed, to be falſe, and diſagreeable, it will even in that caſe be hard to affirm that that man may lawfully thus ſubſcribe, contrary to his preſent perſwaſions; For though it be certain, that he that thus errs, be obliged to uſe all probable means to reform, and depoſite his errour, and, as long as he remains in it, is ſo far guilty of ſin, as he wants the excuſe of invincible ignorance, and being obliged to charity and peace, as far as it is poſſible, and in him lies, he cannot be freed from offending againſt that obligation, if he do not communicate with thoſe, the condition of whoſe communion contains nothing really erroneous, or ſinfull; and ſo though ſuch a man, on that ſide, be, or may be in ſeveral reſpects criminous, yet it is as evident on the other ſide, that he that profeſſes to believe, what he really doth not believe, that ſubſcribes with his hand, what he rejects in his heart, or that doeth that which is under the ſcandal of doing ſo, is far from being guiltleſs, he certainly offends againſt the precept of ſincerity and veracity (yea and of charity to his brethren, in reſpect of the ſcandal) hath added hypocriſie to his errour, and ſo which way ſoever he turns, he is ſure to ſin (the worſt and moſt unhappy kind of ſtrait) he remains in errour, and ſchiſm on the one ſide, and by flying from that, he advances to lying and hypocriſie on the other, and the deſire of avoiding one of theſe, cannot juſtifie the other. or Profeſſion againſt Conſcience.

Sect. 9. This I ſay, in caſe the errour be really on the man's, not on the Churches ſide; But if (as in the caſe propoſed) the errours be ſuppoſed to be wholly on the Churches ſide, and withall indiſpenſably required to be ſubſcribed by all, and ſo the conditions of that communion being exacted of him, who cannot without ſin undertake them, be to him really, and unexcuſably unlawfull, then certainly to that man in that caſe it is no crime not to communicate (when he is thus excluded from communicating) with that Church, but a crime, and a great one, thus (by teſtifying againſt the truth and his own conſcience) to qualifie himſelf for that communion. The admiſſion of ſuch guilts as theſe, hypocriſie, and lying againſt conſcience, and due grounds of conviction, is too high a price to be paid even for peace, or communion it ſelf.

Sect. 10. A meek ſon of the Church of Chriſt will certainly be content to ſacrifice a great deal for the making of this purchaſe, and when the fundamentals of the Faith, and ſuperſtructures of Chriſtian practice are not concerned in the conceſſions, he will chearfully expreſs his readineſs to ſubmit, or depoſite his own judgment in reverence and deference to his ſuperiours in the Church where his lot is fallen. But when this proves inſufficient, when peace with the brethren on earth will not be had at a cheaper rate than this of a voluntary offending againſt our father which is in heaven; in this caſe, the Chriſtian muſt be content to live without it, and though he would rejoice to ſell all that he hath to purchaſe that jewel, yet his conſcience, the health and peace of that (which is interrupted by every wilfull ſin) is a commodity, that muſt not be parted with, whatſoever the acquiſition be, which is in his view and thus offers it ſelf in exchange for it.

Sect. 11. The evidence of which is, I conceive, ſo demonſtrative and irreſiſtible, that it will be juſtly extended much farther than the preſent caſe of the Church of England gives me any temptation to extend it; For in caſe our Anceſtours had unjuſtly and criminouſly made a ſeparation from the Church of Rome (which it ſhall anon appear that they have not) and we their ſucceſſours in that ſchiſm ſhould unfeignedly confeſs, and repent, and deſire to reform that ſin, and uprightly diſcharge our conſcience in neglecting no means, that patience, humility, charity could ſuggeſt to us in order to obtaining our reconciliation, yet if that cannot be obtained by all theſe ſubmiſſions without that harder condition of renouncing, or profeſſing, or ſeeming (in common reputation of men) to renounce any part of Divine truth, or Chriſtian practice, which we verily believe to be the truth, and our duty, it would not be our guilt, but onely our unhappineſs, that we were thus forced to continue in that ſeparation. The reaſon is evident from the former grounds, we muſt not ſin, that we may give glory to God (ſuch is confeſſion, and fruits of repentance, Joſ. 7. 19.) a penitent thief muſt not lie, to enable himſelf to make reſtitution, nor the contrite ſchiſmatick commit any new ſin (ſuch certainly is hypocriſie, lying, profeſſing contrary to preſent perſwaſion) to complete his repentance for the old. Application to the Church of Rome; in relation to the preſent Church of England.

Sect. 12. If this laſt be conceived (as it is not the preſent caſe of the Church of England, ſo) to be an impoſſible, unſuppoſable caſe, not onely upon the Romaniſts grounds, who I preſume will not acknowledge any ſuch hard condition (as is the profeſſion of an untruth) to be required to any man's reconciliation, and readmiſſion to their communion, but upon this other ſcore, becauſe if any falſe profeſſion be now required to our readmiſſion, the ſame was formerly required to our continuance in their communion, and conſequently our Anceſtours departure then could not be ſuppoſed (as in this laſt fiction of caſe it is) a ſchiſmatical departure: I ſhall not need to give any more diſtinct anſwer to this, than 1. That we that acknowledge not the Church of Rome to be infallible, may be allowed to make a ſuppoſition, which is founded in the poſſibility of her inſerting ſome errour in her Confeſſions, and making the explicite acknowledgment of that the peremptory indiſpenſable condition of her communion; 2. That it is poſſible alſo (though not by us pretended) that ſhe ſhould ſince that ſuppoſed departure of our Anceſtours, introduce ſome new doctrines, and conſequently ſome new errours, and thoſe now be ſuppoſable to lie in the way to our return, though they had no part (before their birth) in driving us from them; 3. That that may be by the Church of Rome permitted, and allowed to thoſe that have always remained in their communion, which to them that have departed, and either in their perſons, or poſterity, deſire to return to it, will not be permitted by them; It being more ordinary to indulge liberties to ſons, that have always continued in the family, than to grant them to offenders, and ſuppliants, that expect favours, and graces, and reſtauration to privileges; 4. That thoſe which have had their education out of the Communion of the Church of Rome, may very poſſibly and probably come to diſcern that, which in that communion would never have been (for want of repreſentation) diſcerned by them, and conſequently may obſerve ſome errours in her doctrine or practice, which their Anceſtours at their very departure from them had not diſcerned, and then though thoſe errours ſubſcribed to by them, had the Lenitive, or Antidote of blameleſs ignorance, yet becauſe thoſe that now really diſcern that truth, which their Anceſtours diſcerned not, cannot lawfully profeſs not to diſcern it, or profeſs againſt conſcience to believe what they do not believe, it is therefore neceſſarily conſequent, that the return of ſuch to the peace of the Roman Church may by this means be rendred impoſſible though their Anceſtours continuance there, lying under no ſuch prejudice, their ſeparation were acknowledged unlawfull.

CHAP. III.

The ſeveral ſorts of Schiſm.

Sect. 1. THus much hath been neceſſarily premiſed for the true notion of Schiſm, taken from the origination of the word, as that includes, in the neuter ſenſe, a receſſion, or departure; in the reciprocal, a ſeparating, or dividing himſelf.

Sect. 2. It is now time to proceed and inquire how many ſorts there are of this ſchiſm in the Eccleſiaſtical ſenſe, or by how many ways the guilt of this ſin of the fleſh may be contracted.

Unity Eccleſiaſtical wherein it conſiſts.

Sect. 3. In which inquiry it will be firſt neceſſary to conſider, wherein Eccleſiaſtical unity conſiſts, viz. in the preſerving all thoſe relations, wherein each member of the whole Church of Chriſt is concerned one towards another: Theſe relations are either of ſubordination (paternal on one ſide, and filial on the other,) or of equality (fraternal.) The unity of thoſe members that are ſubordinate one to the other, conſiſts in the conſtant due ſubjection, and obedience of all inferiours to all their lawfull ſuperiours, and in due exerciſe of authority in the ſuperiours toward all committed to their charge: And the unity of the fellow brethren, in the performance of all mutual duties of juſtice and charity toward one another.

Unity of Members ſubordinate.

Of fellow brethren.

Sect. 4. Of the former ſort is the πείθεσθε ἡγουμένοις, obedience to the Rulers of the Church, Heb. 13. 17. and back again the ποιμάνατε, due feeding, i. e. governing the flock of God among them, 1 Pet. 5. 2. And becauſe there be (under the King or Emperour, or ſupreme power, to whom all are ſubject in any his dominions) many poſſible links in that ſubordination, Patriarchs, Metropolitans, Biſhops, Presbyters, Deacons, and the brethren, or congregation, the unity muſt be made up of the due ſubordination, and Chriſtian, i. e. charitative exerciſe of power in all theſe.

The later.

Sect. 5. Of the later ſort there are as many branches, as there are varieties of equalities. The brethren or believers in every congregation, i. e. all beſide the Governours of the Church (however unequal in other reſpects) are in this reſpect equalized, and comprehended all under the one title of νεώτεροι the younger, 1 Pet. 5. 5. And this whether we reſpect all other fellow-members of the ſame, or whether of any other congregation, whether Pariſh or City, or Dioceſe, or Province, or Nation, of the Weſt, of the Eaſt, of the whole Chriſtian world, as far as each member is qualified to exerciſe any fraternal duty toward them. So again the ſeveral Deacons or Presbyters of any Dioceſe, the ſeveral Biſhops of any Province, the ſeveral Metropolitans of any Nation, the ſeveral Primates or Patriarchs one with another (as the ſeveral Apoſtles) over the whole world, are each of them to be looked on as equals to all others of the ſame ſort; And proportionably (and together with the Paſtours) the flocks, the ſeveral communities, or congregations of Chriſtian men conſidered in complexo, the Pariſhes, Dioceſes, Provinces, Nations, Climes of the whole Chriſtian world. And according to theſe ſo many equalities, there are, or ought to be ſo many ſorts of unities, ſo many Relations of that mutual fraternal charity, which Chriſt came to plant in his Church.

Communion.

Sect. 6. Having ſeen what the unity is (to which Communion ſuperadds no more but the relation of external aſſociation, whether by aſſembling for the worſhip of God in the ſame place, where the matter is capable of it, or whether by letters communicatory, by which we may maintain external communion with thoſe which are moſt diſtant from us) it will be eaſie to diſcern what Schiſm is, viz. the breach of that Unity (and Communion) and what be the ſorts or ſpecies of it, either thoſe that offend againſt the ſubordination which Chriſt hath by himſelf, and his Apoſtles, ſettled in his Church, or thoſe that offend againſt the mutual charity, which he left among his diſciples.

The branches of Schiſm as it is an offence againſt Subordination.

Schiſm againſt the Deacons or Presbyters.

Sect. 7. For the firſt of theſe, thoſe that offend againſt the due ſubordination, they are poſſibly of as many ſorts as there be diſtinct links in the ſubordination. As firſt thoſe brethren or people, which reject the miniſtery of the Deacons, or Presbyters in any thing wherein they are ordained, and appointed by the Biſhop, (and as long as they continue in obedience to him) and of their own accord break off, and ſeparate from them, refuſe to live regularly under them, they are by the Ancient Church of Chriſt adjudged and looked on as Schiſmaticks; So Ignatius the holy Biſhop, (and Apoſtolical perſon) and Martyr of Antioch, in Ep. ad Trall. admoniſhing them to beware of the poiſon of ſeducers, i. e. the Schiſmaticks of thoſe times, he directs them this one way to doe it. Τοῦτο ἔστω ὑμῖν μὴ φυσιοῦσθαι, καὶ ἦτε ἀκέραιοι ἀπὸ Θεοῦ, Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, καὶ τοῦ Ἐπισκόπου——Ὁ ἐντὸς θυσιαστηρίου ὢν καθαρός ἐστιν, τουτ' ἔστιν, ὁ χωρὶς Ἐπισκόπου καὶ πρεσβυτερίου καὶ διακόνων ποιέων τι, οὗτος ἁγνὸς οὐκ ἔστι τῇ συνειδήσει, This ye ſhall doe, ſaith he, if ye be not puffed up, and if ye be not ſeparated from God, from Chriſt, from the Biſhop——He that continues within the ſept is pure, He that doeth ought without the Biſhop and Presbytery and Deacon, is not of a pure conſcience, accounting all that live out of this obedience to be ſo far infected and defiled with ſchiſm. So again in the former part of the ſame Epiſtle, Πάντες ἐντρεπέσθωσαν τοὺς διακόνους ὡς Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ὡς καὶ τὸν Ἐπίσκοπον ὡς Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ὄντα υἱὸν τοῦ παλεός, τοὺς δὲ πρεσβυτέρους ὡς Συνέδριον Θεοῦ, καὶ ὡς Συνδρομὴν Ἀποστόλων, χωρὶς τούτων Ἐκκλησία οὐ καλεῖται, Let all revere the Deacons as the Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt, and in like manner the Biſhop as Jeſus Chriſt the ſon of the Father, the Presbyters as the Senate of God and College of Apoſtles, without theſe it is not called a Church. Where every particular Church being adminiſtred by theſe, no man is farther deemed a member of the Church, than he lives regularly within this obedience: And the ſame is the importance of his exhortation to the Philippians, Τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ προσέχετε, καὶ τῷ πρεσβυτερίῳ, καὶ διακόνοις, Obſerve the Biſhop, and the Presbyters, and the Deacons, intimating this to be the onely way of preſerving unity againſt ſchiſm, as appears by that which had gone before, Εἷς θυσιαστήριον, ὡς εἷς ἐπίσκοπος, ἅμα τῷ πρεσβυτερίῳ, καὶ διακόνοις——ἵνα ὃ ἐὰν ποιῆτε κατὰ Θεὸν πράσσητε, There is one altar (or ſept) as there is one Biſhop together with his Presbyters and Deacons, and the living in union with, obedience to thoſe, is the onely way to doe, whatſoever ye doe, according to the will of God. Where this ſubordination being looked on, as that which is placed in the Church by God, it is both ſchiſm and impiety not to continue regularly under it; And ſo in the inſcription of that Epiſtle, ἣν ἁγιάζομαι ἐν αἵματι Χριστοῦ, μάλιστα ἐὰν ὦσιν ἑνὶ ὄντες, σὺν τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ καὶ τοῖς σὺν αὐτῷ πρεσβυτέροις βυτίεσθε ἐν ἑνὶ σώματι Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, He salutes them in the blood of Christ, especially if they be at one with their Bishop, and the Presbyters with him, as also the Deacons designed by the appointment of Jesus Christ, looking upon all as Schismaticks, that were not so. Thus again in his Epistle to the Ephesians, he admonisheth them to obey the Bishop, and Presbyters ἀδιασπάστῳ διανοίᾳ with an undivided mind, making the disobedience an act of schism or division in any; And so generally throughout all those Epistles.

Sect. 8. In like manner; if we ascend to the next higher link, that of the Bishop, to whom both Presbyters and Deacons, as well as the brethren, or people, are obliged to live in obedience, the withdrawing or denying this obedience in any of these will certainly fall under this guilt. So the same holy Ignatius in Ep. ad Smyr. Μηδεὶς χωρὶς τοῦ ἐπισκόπου τι τῶν ἀναγκόντων εἰς ἐκκλησίαν, Let no man without the Bishop doe any of those things which belong to the Church. Ὅπου ἂν φανῇ ὁ ἐπίσκοπος, ἐκεῖ τὸ πλῆθος ἔστω, Wherever the Bishop appears, there let the multitude be, ὁ λάθρα ἐπισκόπου τι πράσσων, τῷ διαβόλῳ λατρεύει, he that doeth any thing without the privity of the Bishop serves the Devil; the title by which those foul Gnostick hereticks and schismaticks (the κατατομή, the troublers and dividers of the Church) were signified. So in the process of that Epistle, having mentioned obedience to their Bishop, as a necessary requisite to their sanctification, supposing the contrary to be an act of pollution, i. e. of the poyson of the schismaticks, and again admonishing them as of their duty (πρέπει οὖν ζωπυρεῖν τῇ ἐπισκόπου γνώμῃ) to concur with the sentence of their Bishop, he adds, that he that doth not so (expressed by not being within the altar or sept) ὑστερεῖται τοῦ ἄρτου τοῦ Θεοῦ, falls short of the bread of God, is an excommunicate person, being rendred such by this act of division from the Bishop. So in the Epistle to the Magnesians, speaking of those that act without the Bishop (χωρὶς αὐτοῦ πάντα πράσσουσι) εἰ πιστοί, saith he, οὐκ εὐσυνείδητοί μοι εἶσι) συνάγονται μὴ ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ κατὰ ἐντολήν ζωοποιοῦσαν, these seem not to him to be men of a good conscience (the phrase by which he oft expresses Schismaticks, whose mind and conscience was defiled by the poyson of the Gnosticks at that time) because they assembled not according to that order and establishment which was settled in the Church. And again, as Christ did nothing without his Father (ἡνωμένος ὢν) being united to him, or all one with his Father, ἵνα μηδὲν ὑμεῖς ἄνευ ἐπισκόπου ——— so neither must ye doe any thing without the Bishop, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ μία προσευχὴ, but assemble together and have but one prayer common to you all, where the living out of this regular obedience to the Bishop, is the contrary to union and communion, and so is formally schism. And to the Philadelphians, ὅσοι θεοῦ εἰσιν καὶ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ἅτινα μετὰ τοῦ ἐπισκόπου εἰσίν, as many as are God's and Christ's, are with the Bishop, excluding them from the unity of Christ's body who are thus separated from the Bishop; And in the same Epistle speaking of the repentance of schismaticks, and hereticks, and God's pardon offered to such, the [a] condition of that pardon, and κριτήριον of the sincerity of that repentance, is, ἐὰν μετανοήσουσιν εἰς ἑνότητα Θεοῦ καὶ συνέδριον τοῦ ἐπισκόπου, if they return to the unity of God and Senate of the Bishop. So frequently in Saint Cyprian, the schism especially of the five Presbyters of Faliciſſimus his faction, Ep. 40. appears to consist in their disobedience to, and breaking off from their [b] proper Bishop, and causing others to do so; and De Unit. Eccl. the schismatick is described to be filius impius qui contemptis Episcopis & Dei Sacerdotibus derelictis, constituere audet aliud altare, an impious son, which having contemned the Bishops, and (which is all one) forsaken the Priests of God, dares constitute another altar; and Ep. 76. qui schisma faciunt & relicto Episcopo alium sibi foris Pseudo-episcopum constituunt, the schismaticks are they that having left their Bishop set up for themselves abroad another false Bishop, and all their adherents are involved in the same guilt, qui se schismaticis contra Præpositos & Sacerdotes irreligiosâ temeritate miscuerunt, who joyn with the schismaticks against their Bishops, and Ep. 65. Hi sunt conatus schismaticorum ——— ut sibi placeant, ut Præpositum superbo tumore contemnant, These are the endeavours of schismaticks, that they may please themselves, and proudly contemn their Bishop, and Ep. 69. Unum scire debes ——— si quis cum Episcopo non sit, in Ecclesiâ non esse, One thing you are to know, that he that is not with the Bishop, is not in the Church, the Church being there by him defined plebs Sacerdoti adunata & Pastori suo grex adhærens, the people united to the Bishop, and the flock to their Pastour.

Against the Bishop.

[a] Πᾶσιν μετανοοῦσιν δῴη ὁ Κύριος.

[b] Contra Episcopatum meum, &c. Ep. 40. Hi tribuebant, ne concordarent cum Episcopo suo. Ibid. contra Sacerdotium Dei portionem ruptæ fraternitatis armare voluisse. And so Optatus, of Parmenian the Donatist, &c. Quia collegium Episcopale nolunt habere nobiscum commune, non sint collegæ si nolunt. l. 1.

Sect. 9. And as this disobedience may be of two sorts, either of a lower, or of a higher kind, the denying obedience in any particular lawfull command of the superiour, or the casting off all obedience together, dethroning them or setting up our selves either in their steads, or in opposition to them (the first parallel to the contumacy of the Levites, the sons of Eliab, Num. 16. 12. 14. which said, We will not come up; the second, to their rebellion, levelling and equalling themselves to Moses and Aaron, ver. 3. and both together subjecting them first to that curse, of God's not accepting their sacrifice, ver. 15. and then to that sudden exemplary destruction, ver. 31.) so will the schism be also a lighter, and a grosser separation, a defection from the Bishop, and a rebellion against him, the former ordinarily called σχίσμα schism, the latter στάσις sedition, the latter adding very much to the guilt of the former, and uncapable of the alleviating excuses of ignorance or mistake (in thinking the commands unlawfull, and consequently the obedience) which may be pretended in the former.

This of a lighter and a grosser sort.

Sect. 10. From this of Bishops we may farther ascend to the higher dignity, and authority of Metropolitans, over Bishops themselves, which what it is, will be fit to be examined a while.

Against the Metropolitan.

Sect. 11. And the first rise may be taken from Scripture it self, where the Commission which is given to Titus by S. Paul, to ordain Elders, Tit. 1. 5. (that is Bishops, ver. 7.) in every City of Crete, demonstrates him to have had Metropolitical authority bestowed on him; so saith S. Chrysostome (on Tit. 1. Hom. 1.) of Titus, εἰ μὴ δόκιμος ἦν, οὐκ ἂν αὐτῷ τὸ νῆσον ὁλόκληρον ἐπέτρεψεν, οὐκ ἂν τὰ ἐλλιπῆ ἐᾶτα ἀναπληρῶσαι προσέταξεν, οὐκ ἂν τοσούτων ἐπισκόπων κεῖσιν ἐπέτρεψεν, If he had not been an approved person, in whom the Apostle had perfect confidence, he would never have committed a whole Island to him, never have appointed him to perfect what he had left imperfect, never have intrusted to him the jurisdiction over so many Bishops: And Theodoret in Arg. Ep. ad Tit. That Titus was ordained by S. Paul, Τῆς Κρήτης μητρόπολις ὕστις τοῦ τότε αὐτὸν ἐπισκόπους χειροτονῆσαι, to ordain Bishops under him for the governing of that whole Province, being a very great one; and * Eusebius τὸν ὅλη Κρήτης ἐκκλησιῶν ἐπισκοπὴν εἰληχέναι, That Titus had the inspection of all the Churches in Crete, of which that there was an hundred in number, and Gortyna the Metropolis of them all, appears by Dionysius Bishop of Corinth about the year of Christ 175. who inscribes an Epistle τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ παροικούσῃ Γορτύναν, ἅμα τῇ λοιπῇ πάσῃ Κρήτῃ ἐκκλησίαις, to the Church about Gortyna, together with the rest of the Dioceses in Crete, of all which he mentions and com-

In Timothy. Sect. 12. What hath been thus ſaid of Titus, is with the ſame evidence of the Text affirmable of Timothy, when being placed by S. Paul at Epheſus the chief Metropolis of Aſia, he had by that means the Hom. 15. in 1 Tim. 3. 15. inſpection of all the Biſhops there, and conſequently is directed both for the ordaining (1 Tim. 3. 2.) and exerciſing juriſdiction over them c. 5. 1. 19. and ſo ſaith S. Chryſoſtome, Ἁπλῶν δὴ ὁπλήσεως λοιπὸν ἦν ἐμπιπραμένος Τιμόθεος, ἢ καὶ ἔστι ὁλόκληρον τὸ τῆς Ἀσίας, ἀλλὰ καὶ σφοδρότερον αὐτῷ διαλέγεται, 'Tis manifeſt that Timothy was intruſted with more Churches than one, even with a whole Nation, that of Aſia, and therefore S. Photii lib. num. 254.

Eccl. Hiſt. l. 4. 5.

In James, &c. Sect. 13. The ſame might be ſhew'd of James Biſhop of Jeruſalem, who by that means was evidently Metropolitan of all the Cities of all Judæa; And even of Syria and Cilicia alſo, if we may argue concludently from the ſending of that Canon to thoſe Regions, Acts 15. 23. It is likewiſe the affirmation of Agrippa (in Philo) of Jeruſalem, Μητρόπολις ἡ οὐ μιᾶς χώρας Ἰουδαίας ἀλλὰ καὶ διὰ πλειόνων διὰ τὰς ἀποικίας ἃς ἔπεμψεν, that it was the Metropolis, not onely of one Region Judæa, but of many more, becauſe of the Colonies it had ſent out, naming Συρίας, Κιλικίας, Syria and Cilicia among others. And thereto agrees again (as far as Syria) what we find in the Letters of Commiſſion, which Saul had received from the Sanhedrim at Jeruſalem, to the Synagogues of Damaſcus, a City of Syria, as being ſuppoſed under that Metropolis of Judæa, Acts 9. 1, 2. And accordingly after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, Tiberias had this privilege, as appears both by the Imperial Code, tit. de Jud. & Cælic. and by Epiphanius, in the hereſie of the Ebionites, who refers all Syria and Cilicia to that Metropolis, in the ſame manner as the Synagogues in Aſſyria and Media to the Sanhedrim in Bagdat, and in all Ægypt to that in Alexandria; But all this doth rather belong to the Jewiſh Form among themſelves and the Juriſdiction of that Great Sanhedrim over their Colonies thus far diffuſed, and is not ſo appliable to the Chriſtian Church at Jeruſalem, it being affirmed by Joſeph. de bel. Jud. l. 3. c. 7. that Antioch was Metropolis of all Syria; But this by the way.

Epiſt. 247. Sect. 14. Thus Philippi appears to have been the Metropolis of one part of Macedonia (as Theſſalonica another) πρώτη τῆς μερίδος Μακεδονίας πόλις, the prime City of a portion, or diviſion, or Province of Macedonia, Acts 16. 12. and is accordingly ſo ſtyled by Photius the Patriarch of Conſtantinople Ἡ Φιλίππων πόλις τῆς Μακεδόνων Ἐπαρχίας Μητρόπολις οὖσα, the City of Philippi being a Metropolis of a Province of the Macedonians, and ſo Epaphroditus their Biſhop in Saint Paul's time (as [c] Theodoret and others reſolve from his being called Ἀπόστολος ὑμῶν, their Apoſtle, Phil. 2. 25.) had under him many Biſhops, who are accordingly named in the plural, Phil. 1. 1. and all theſe ſubordinate to him as their Metropolitan.

d In Arg. Ep. ad Eph. Sect. 15. So of the ſeven Churches of Aſia, Revel. 2. and 3. it appears (what hath been elſewhere proved) that they were all Metropoles; Of Epheſus it hath been already clear, and Saint [d] Chryſoſtome is expreſs. Ἔφεσος δὲ μὲν ἡ Ἀσίας Μητρόπολις, Epheſus is a Metropolis of Aſia, and Theod. in Ep. ad Dioſcor. τὴν Ἐφεσίων Μητρόπολιν τῆς Ἀσίας, and in Photius, the Ancient writer of the Martyrdom of Timothy (bib. num. 254.) ſaith of Saint John, that being returned from his baniſhment τὴν Ἐφεσίων ὑπὲρ Μητροπόλεως, he reſided at the Metropolis of the Epheſians. And in Ulpian, the Proconſul under Antoninus being to go to Aſia, was to touch upon τὴν Μητροπόλεων Ἔφεσον, Epheſus one and the chief of the Metropoles of Aſia: and accordingly, Acts 19. 38. it is ſaid of that City, Ἀνθύπατοί εἰσι καὶ Ἀγορᾶιοι ἄγονται, the Proconſuls were there, and the Aſſiſes, as in the chief City of that Province; and in Euſebius, Antoninus Pius his Epiſtle concerning the Chriſtians is ſaid to have been read and proclaimed at Epheſus, ἐν τῷ κοινῷ τῆς Ἀσίας, in the common Council or conſeſſus of Aſia, and in Ariſtides it is ſtyled ταμεῖον κοινὸν τῆς Ἀσίας, the common Magazine of Aſia, καὶ τῆς χρείας καταφυγὴ, whither they applied themſelves for all their wants. All which are evidences that it was a Metropolis (and the chief) of Aſia.

Geog. l. 5. c. 2. Act. 5. Sect. 16. So of Thyatira, ſaith Ptolomy, Θυάτειρα Μητρόπολις that it was a Metropolis. Of Philadelphia the Council of Conſtantinople ſub Mena, Ἐπίσκοπος τῆς Φιλαδελφείας Μητροπόλεως τῆς Λυδῶν Ἐπαρχίας, the Biſhop of the Metropolis of the Philadelphians of the Province of the Lydians, i. e. in this Lydian or Proconſular Aſia. So Laodicea, Sardis and Smyrna (together with Epheſus) are ſet down by Pliny as Cities in which the Roman Proconſuls kept their Aſſiſes, and diſpenſed juſtice to all the neighbouring Cities, which is the character of a Metropolis in the civil notion, and the ſame he alſo affirms elſewhere of Pergamus: And thus the whole number of the ſeven Churches appear each of them, to have been Metropoles, and accordingly by Ignatius his Epiſtles to the Trallians and Magneſians, (the Chriſtians of two neighbour Cities of Lydia on the Banks of Meander, and ſo of this Aſia) and by the mention of their Biſhops Damas and Polybius, it is evident that there were other Epiſcopal Sees in that Aſia, beſide thoſe ſeven named in the Revelation, and thoſe afterward appear to have been ſubject to the Metropolis of Epheſus, which alone of all the ſeven continued till Conſtantine's time, the reſt being deſtroyed.

In Ignatius. Sect. 17. From theſe manifeſt footſteps of Metropolitical power in Scripture, it is eaſie to deſcend through the firſt times, and find the like; As when Ignatius the Archbiſhop of Antioch (the Primitive Martyr) in his Epiſtle to the Romans ſtyleth himſelf τῆς ἐν Συρίᾳ ἐκκλησίας ποιμένα, Paſtour of the Church which was in Syria, that whole Region belonging then to that Metropolis of Antioch: Agreeable to which is that of the authour of the Epiſtle to the Antiocheni (whoſoever it was) inſcribing it, Ἐκκλησίᾳ Θεοῦ Πατρικιάσῃ ἐν Συρίᾳ τῇ ἐν Ἀντιοχείᾳ, to the Church of God in Syria, that belongs as a Province to that of Antioch: So the Epiſtle to the Romans is inſcribed, Ἐκκλησίᾳ ἥτις προκάθηται ἐν τόπῳ χωρίου Ῥωμαίων, to the Church which hath the Preſidency in the place of the Region or Province of the Romans, which gives the Biſhop of Rome a Metropolitical power over all other the Biſhops of that Province, the Urbicarian Region, as it was ſtyled, and

[a] distinguished from the Province of Italy properly so called, confined to the seven Provinces of the civil jurisdiction of the Vicarius Italiæ, and the Ecclesiastical of the Archbishop of Milan the chief Metropolis thereof. Of the circuit or compass of this Province of the Bishop of Rome, many learned men have discoursed excellently out of the Ancient Surveys of the Provinces, particularly that very learned Frenchman so rarely skilled, and judicious in Antiquity, Jacobus Leschaserius, in his little Tract de Region. Suburbicar. but none with more evidence of conviction, than our Modest Countryman Mr. Brerewood, who thus describes the ancient jurisdiction of the Bishop of Rome, "That it contained all those Provinces of the Diocese of Italy, which the old Lawyers term Sub-" urbicarias, of which there were ten, three Islands, Sicily, Sardinia and Corsica, and the other seven in the firm " land of Italy, taking up in a manner all the narrow part of it, viz. all Italy Eastward, but on the West no farther " extended than to the River Magra (the limit of Tuscany) toward the Tyrrhene sea, and to the River Esino (an-" ciently Asius) toward the Adriatick sea. For at that River Esino met both the Picenum Suburbicarium, and Annonarium, the former of which belonged to the Prefecture of Rome, of which that City was the Metropolis, And the latter, with all the other Provinces in the broader part of Italy (seven of them in all) to the Diocese of Italy, of which Milan was the Metropolis. Thus Ruffinus in his Paraphrase rather than Translation of the Nicene Canon saith, that the Bishop of Rome was thereby authorized Suburbicariarum Ecclesiarum Solicitudinem gerere, to take and manage the care of the suburbicarian Churches; and there is no reason to doubt but that he that lived so near after that Council, and was of Italy, knew competently what he affirmed of that matter. And it being evident that in all other places the [f] ecclesiastical Jurisdictions were proportioned to the temporal of the Lieutenants, and that the suburbicarian Region, and the so many and no more Provinces in them, pertain'd to the Prefecture of the City of Rome, It must follow that these were the limits of the ecclesiastical Jurisdiction of that Bishop also. But this by the way, in passing.

Sect. 18. So when of Saint Mark it is affirm'd out of the ancient Records by Eusebius, that he Ἐκκλησίας πρῶτον Ἀλεξανδρείας συνέστησατο, first constituted Churches (in the plural) in Alexandria, and under the title of ἡ ἐν Ἀλεξανδρείᾳ Παροικίας, the Province of Alexandria, put them all into the hands of Anianus in the 8th. of Nero, it is evident that Alexandria was a Metropolitical, or Patriarchal See to which all Ægypt did belong.

In Alexandria. Eccl. Hist. l. 2. c. 16. Ibid. c. 24.

Sect. 19. So Saint Cyprian the Bishop of Carthage, to which the whole Province of Africk pertained, is by the Council of Constantinople in Trullo, Can. 2. called Ἀρχιεπίσκοπος τῆς Λιβύων χώρας, the Archbishop of the Region of Africk, And accordingly he often mentions the many Bishops in his Province, Universis vel in nostra Provincia——to all the Bishops in our Province——Ep. 40. And Latiùs fusa est nostra Provincia, habet etiam Numidiam & Mauritanias duas sibi cohærentes, Our Province is extended farther, hath Numidia and the two Mauritania's annexed to it, Ep. 45. in each of which there being a Church, and consequently a Bishop in every City (as κατ' Ἐκκλησίαν, Acts 14. 23. is all one with κατὰ πόλιν in every City, Acts 16. 4.) they were all subject to this Metropolitan.

In S. Cyprian.

Sect. 20. By all this, and much more which might be added, it is manifest, that as the several Bishops had Prefecture over their several Churches, and the Presbyters, Deacons, and people under them, such as could not be cast off by any without the guilt and brand of Schism; So the Bishops themselves of the ordinary, inferiour Cities (for the preserving of unity, and many other good uses) were subjected to the higher power of Archbishops or Metropolitans.

The subjection of Bishops to Archbishops.

Sect. 21. Nay we must yet ascend one degree higher from this of Archbishops or Metropolitans, to that supreme of Primates or Patriarchs, the division of which is thus cleared in the division and Notitia of the Roman Empire. Constantine the Great instituted four Præfecti Prætorio, two in the East, and as many in the West; Of the Western, one at Rome, another at Triers, this last then called Præfectus Prætorio Galliarum. These Prefects had their several Vicarii, who in their power and name judged the Provinces: As for example, The Præfectus Prætorio placed at Triers had three Vicarii, or Lieutenants, one placed at Triers, a second at Lions, a third at Vienna, from the greatness of whose authority, and the resort of all other Cities and Provinces to them for justice sprang the splendour, and dignity of those Cities where they resided, and the dependence of large Provinces and many other Cities on each of them. This whole circuit which was thus subject to, or dependent on any such Lieutenant, was by the Greeks called ἐξαρχία, διοίκησις, παροικία, and the style devolving from the Civil to the Ecclesiastical divisions, as the former both of Cities, and of Territories, and of Metropoles or Mother Cities (the chief in every Province) had done, the Bishop being answerable to the Defensor Civitatis, and the Archbishop to the President in every Province, from thence it came that every such Metropolis which was the seat of any Vicarius or Lieutenant General, was (over and above Μητρόπολις) called Ἐξαρχία and Παπεξαρχία, and the Bishop thereof Primas, Ἔξαρχος, Patriarcha, a Primate, Exarch, or Patriarch, and all that διοίκησις (which is larger than a Province, the joynt administration of many Provinces, with the several Metropoles, and Metropolitans contained in it) was subjected to him. Thus Saint Irenæus being Bishop of Lyons, is by Eusebius affirm'd τοῦ κατὰ Γαλλίαν Παροικίας Ἐπισκοπεῖν, to have the oversight or Government of the Provinces of France, either those onely that were under that Primate, or perhaps of all France, of which Lyons was then in the Ecclesiastical account the first Exarchate; for so the same Eusebius, ἧς Μητρόπολις ἐτύγχανον, ἡ δηλονότι τῶν ἄλλων κατ' αὐτὸν διαφέρουσι βεβούλευται Λούγδουνος καὶ Βίεννα, Lyons, and Vienna (but first, Lyons) were famously known to be beyond all others in those parts, the principal Metropoles of France. And again αἳ τῇδε διαφανέστεραι, these were the most splendid illustrious Churches there. To which first times I conceive belongs that verse of Guiliehmus Brito in Philippeide,

Of Archbishops to Primates, &c. (Original of Primates.)

Et Lugdunensis, quo Gallia tota solebat,
Ut fama est, Primate regi——

placing all France under the Primate of Lyons, or affirming it from tradition (ut fama est) that it was wont anciently to be so placed, which was not well understood or taken notice of by the learned Jos. Scaliger, when he affirms it nuperum & novitium, & ex beneficio Romani Pontificis indultum, a privilege lately granted to the Bishop of Lyons by the Pope, quod Primatem sese vocari gaudeat, that he calls himself Primate, which privilege, if not title, did so long since belong to Irenæus the Bishop of that Diocese.

In Notit. Galliæ p. 882.

Sect. 22. I ſhall not need inlarge on this ſubject, or ſet down the ſeveral Primates and Dioceſes belonging to them. It is known in the ancient notitiæ of the Church, that beſide the three Patriarchs of Rome, Alexandria and Antioch (to which title afterward Conſtantinople, and Jeruſalem were advanced) there were eleven Primates more, there being fourteen Dioceſes, or joynt adminiſtrations of many Provinces (for ſo the word anciently ſignified, not in the modern ſenſe of it, one City and the territory, the juriſdiction of an ordinary Biſhop, for which they then uſed παροικία) ſeven in the Eaſt, and the Prefecture of the City of Rome, and ſix more in the Weſt, into which the whole Empire was divided. And though the Patriarchs had in Councils the precedence, or deference in reſpect of place, whether becauſe theſe three Cities had the honour to diſperſe Chriſtianity in a moſt eminent manner to other Cities and Nations, or rather from the great dignity of the Cities themſelves, (g Rome being the ſeat and firſt City of the Empire, and thereupon thus dignified ſaith the Council of Chalcedon: and Alexandria by h Dio Chryſoſtome, and others affirmed to be the ſecond, and Antioch the third, ſaith Joſephus) yet it is certain that the power and juriſdiction of Primates, was as great as of Patriarchs, and the Office the ſame (ſee Anacletus Epiſt. ad Epiſc. Ital. and Gratian Diſt. 99.) and many times in Authours the very titles confounded, as appears by Juſtinian, who commonly gives Primates the names of Patriarchs of the Dioceſes. And if it be now demanded whether there were not anciently ſome Summum Genus, ſome one Supreme either of, or over theſe Patriarchs, I anſwer, that if we reſpect order, or priority of place again, then the Biſhop of Rome had it among the Patriarchs, as the Patriarchs among the Primates, that City of Rome being Lady of the World, and the ſeat of the Empire; But if we reſpect power, or authority, there was none anciently in the Church over that of Primates, and Patriarchs, but onely that of the Emperour in the whole Chriſtian World (as of every Sovereign Prince in his Dominions) as may appear by the ancient power, and practice of congregating, or convoking of Councils, Provincial by the Metropolitan, Patriarchal by the Patriarch, or Primate, National by the Prince, for the firſt 1000 years, through the whole Weſt, and General by the i Emperour, when for the conſerving the unity, or taking care for the neceſſities of the Church, thoſe laſt remedies appeared ſeaſonable. But this of General Councils being extraordinary, and ſuch as the Church was without them for the firſt three hundred years, and are now morally impoſſible to be had, we need not farther to aſcend to theſe, but content our ſelves with thoſe ſtanding powers in the Church, the uppermoſt of which are Archbiſhops, Primates and Patriarchs, to whom the Biſhops themſelves are in many things appointed to be ſubject, and this power and ſubjection, defined, and aſſerted, by the Ancient Canons, and the moſt ancient, even immemorial Apoſtolical Tradition, and Cuſtome avouched for it, as may appear Concil. Nicen. 1. Can. 4. 6. Concil. Antioch. c. 9. 20. Concil. Chalced. c. 19. In the ſixth Nicene Canon, where the juriſdiction of all Ægypt, Lybia and Pentapolis is affirmed to belong to the Patriarch of Alexandria, and order is taken that the πρεσβεῖα or privileges of eminency which belong to the Biſhop of Rome, of Antioch, and Metropolitans of all other Provinces, ſhall be conſerved intire to them, the Introduction is made in theſe words, Τὰ ἀρχαῖα ἔθη κρατείτω, Let the Ancient cuſtoms be in force, The very form which Saint Ignatius uſeth concerning Apoſtolical cuſtoms which were to be ſolicitouſly retained in the Church, and ſeems there particularly to refer to thoſe orders, which Saint Mark had left in Ægypt, Lybia and Pentapolis, ſubjecting all the Biſhops there to the Patriarch by him conſtituted in Alexandria.

Sect. 23. So in the ninth Canon of the Council of Antioch, where ὁ ἐν τῇ Μητροπόλει πρεσβύτερος Ἐπίσκοπος, the Biſhop preſiding in the Metropolis, is appointed τὴν ὀφειλὴν ἀναλήψεσθαι πάσης τῆς ἐπαρχίας, to undertake the care of the whole Province (and all the inferiour Cities, and Biſhops in them) and the Biſhops commanded μηδὲν πρᾶττειν πρεσβύτερον ἄνευ αὐτοῦ, it is ſtreight added κατὰ τὸν ἀρχαῖον κρατήσαντα τῆς Πατέρων ἡμῶν Κανόνα, according to the ancient Canon of the Fathers, which hath continued in force (from the firſt times alſo, unto that Council.) Where if it be demanded what is the importance of μηδὲν πρᾶττειν, I conceive the word to be beſt explained by Heſychius, πρᾶτα, πρᾶσσει, πράττει, πράττοι, (it ſhould doubtleſs be πράττοι) and ſo the meaning of the Canon to be, agreeably to the expreſs words of other Canons, that as any ordinary Biſhop hath full power in his own Church, which he may in all things, wherein that alone is concerned, exerciſe independently from the commands or directions of any; So in any thing of a more foreign nature, wherein any other Church is concerned equally with that, and ſo falls not under the ſole cognizance or judgment of either, there the Biſhop of that Church is to doe nothing without directions from the Metropolitan, and that is the meaning of πρᾶττειν, as that is all one with πράττοιν——that no Biſhop muſt doe any thing but what belongs particularly to him ratione officii (any thing that another is concerned in, as well as he) without the Metropolitan.

Act. 15. Can. 9.

Sect. 24. So in the Council of Chalcedon the direction is given for appeals in this order, from the Biſhop to the Metropolitan, from the Metropolitan to the Ἐξάρχῳ or Primate of the Dioceſe or Province, as where there are more Metropolitans than one (as was ſhewed of Epheſus in Aſia, and elſewhere frequently) there ſome one is Primate or Patriarch among them, and to him lies the appeal in the laſt reſort, and from him to no other, ſee Juſtinian Novel. 123. c. 22. and Cod. l. 1. tit. 4. leg. 29. who ſpeaking of this calls it an ancient decree.

Sect. 25. That which we find in the eighth Canon of the great Council of Epheſus, ſhall conclude this matter; When upon ſome claim of the Patriarch of Antioch for an intereſt in the ordaining of the Patriarch of Cyprus, the Biſhops of Cyprus deny his claim, and deduce their privilege of αὐτοκεφαλία or independence from any foreign Biſhop, from the very Apoſtles times, A ſanctis Apoſtolis, ſay they, nunquam poſſunt oſtendere, quòd adfuerit Antiochenus & ordinaverit, vel communicaverit unquam inſulæ ordinationis gratiam, neque alius quiſquam, From the very Apoſtles times they can never ſhew that the Patriarch of Antioch or any other was preſent and ordained, or (being abſent) ſent the grace of ordination to this Iſland, but that the Biſhops of Conſtantia, the Metropolis of that Iſland, by name Troilus, Sabinus, and Epiphanius, and all the orthodox Biſhops from the Apoſtles times, ab his qui in Cypro conſtituti ſunt, have been conſtituted and ordained by their own Biſhops of the Iſland, and accordingly they required that they might continue in the ſame manner, Sicut initio à temporibus Apoſtolorum—— lorum —— permansit Cyprierum Synodus, as they had done from the times of the very Apostles, still appealing εἰς τὸ ἀρχαῖον ἔθος, ἀρχαίαν συνήθειαν, τὰ ἐξ ἀρχῆς ἄνωθεν δίκαια, to the ancient manner, the ancient custome, the privileges, which from their first plantation they had enjoyed, and that from the Apostles themselves: And accordingly that Council condemned the pretension of the Patriarch of Antioch, as that which was πρᾶγμα ξένον παρὰ ἐκκλησιαστικοὺς θεσμοὺς καὶ παρὰ κανόνας τῶν ἁγίων πατέρων καινοτομούμενον, an innovation against the Ecclesiastical Laws and Canons of the holy Fathers, and orders not onely in behalf of the Cypriots that the Bishops of their Churches ἔχειν τὰ ἀνυπόβλητον καὶ ἀβίαστον ——— shall continue to enjoy their right inviolate according to the ancient custome, but extended their sentence to all othre Dioceses in these words, Τόδε αὐτὸ καὶ ὅπῃ τῶν ἄλλων διοικήσεων καὶ τῶν κατὰ παντὸς ἐπαρχιῶν ὁπωσδήποτε ἁρπάζειν ἐπιχειρήσει, ὥστε μηδένα τῶν θεοφιλεστάτων ὁποσωνοῦν ἐπαρχίαν ἐπίσκοπον ἐπιβάλλειν, ἢ ἔσται ἄνωθεν καὶ ἐξ ἀρχῆς οὕτω τῷ αὐτῷ, ἤγουν τῶν περὶ αὐτὸν χεῖρα, κεκρατηκέναι, The same shall be observed in all other Dioceses and Provinces whereseever, that no Bishop shall lay hold of another Province, which hath not been formerly and from the beginning under their or their ancestours power. And again Ἔδοξε τῇ ἁγίᾳ καὶ οἰκουμενικῇ συνόδῳ σώζεσθαι ἑκάστῃ ἐπαρχίᾳ κατὰ καὶ οὐσίας τὰ αὐτῇ προσόντα ἐξ ἀρχῆς ἄνωθεν καὶ τὸ πάλαι κρατήσαντα ἔθος, This holy and Oecumenical Synod hath decreed, that the privileges and rights of every Province shall be conserved pure and inviolate, as they have enjoyed them from the beginning, according to the custome that hath anciently been in force. All deducing this power of Primates over their own Bishops, (and together excluding all foreign pretenders) from the Apostles and first planters of the Churches, and requiring all to remain, as they were first thus constituted. Wherein as there be many things of usefull observation, which will be more fitly appliable in the progress of this discourse, so that which is alone pertinent to this place is onely this, that there may be a disobedience, and irregularity, and so a Schism, even in the Bishops in respect of their Metropolitans, and of the authority which they have by Canon and Primitive custome over them, which was therefore to be added to the several Species of Schism set down in the former Chapters.

CHAP. IV.

The pretended evidences of the Romanist against the Church of England examined, and first that from the Bishop of Rome's Supremacy by Christ's donation to St. Peter.

Sect. 1. THE Scene being thus prepared, and the nature and sorts of Schism defined and summarily enumerated, our method now leads us to inquire impartially, what evidences are producible against the Church of England, whereby it may be thought liable to this guilt of Schism, and these pretended evidences may be of several sorts, according to the several Species of this sort of Schism described, and acknowledged by us.

Sect. 2. The first evidence that is offered against us is taken from a presumed Supremacy of the Bishop of Rome, as Successour to St. Peter, over all Churches in the world, which being in the days of Henry VIII. renounced, and disclaimed, first by both Universities, and most of the greatest and famous Monasteries of this Kingdom (in their negative answer and determination of this question, An aliquid Authoritatis in hoc Regno Angliæ Pontifici Romano de jure competat plusquam alii cuiquam Episcopo extero? Whether the Pope of Rome have of right any authority in the Realm of England, more than any other foreign Bishop hath) and that determination of theirs testified under their hands and seals, and after by Act of Convocation subscribed by the Bishops and Clergy, and confirmed by their corporal oaths, and at last the like imposed by Act of Parliament, 35 Hen. VIII. c. 1. all this is looked on, and condemn'd, as an Act of Schism in this Church and Nation, in renouncing that power of Saint Peter's Successours placed over all Christians by Christ. The first charge against us, Our casting out the Pope's Supremacy.

Sect. 3. This objection against us consisting of many branches, every of which must be manifested or granted to have truth in it, or else the objection will be of no force, 1. the matter of fact, that thus it was in England; 2. the consequence of that fact, that it were Schism, supposing these Successours of Saint Peter were thus set over all Christians by Christ; 3. the matter of fact again, that Saint Peter's Successours were thus constituted Universal Pastours by Christ; This again of two branches, 1. that Saint Peter was so constituted, 2. that the power instated on Saint Peter devolved on the Bishops of Rome; I shall endeavour to expedite this matter by granting, and not requiring the pretenders farther to prove the two first branches, and leave the issue of the debate to their manifesting the truth, or our manifesting the falshood of (the last mentioned, but indeed) the principal fundamental part of the contention, as it consists of two branches, one as it respects Saint Peter, the other as it respects his Successour in the See of Rome; wherein if the Romanists pretensions shall appear to have truth in them, we must be acknowledged by breaking off from our submission to that See, to be formally Schismaticks, according to the grounds already laid, and acknowledged by us; But on the other side, if their pretensions herein shall appear to be false, or unsufficiently proved and manifested, there is no other branch of the argument, be it never so true, which can give the conclusion any authority with any pondering rational man, it being in the power of any weak link to destroy the usefulness of the whole chain, and consequent to the falseness, or inevidence of any one proposition, that the conclusion shall not be inferred by that arguing.

Sect. 4. And first for the pretension as far it respecteth Saint Peter, and must be managed by evidences, and so concluded either on one side or the other, I shall begin with offering my evidences for the Negative. The supremacy of Saint Peter examined.

Sect. 5. And first it is evident by Scripture, that this Apostle was the Apostle of the Circumcision, or Jews, exclusively to the uncircumcision, or Gentiles, which were generally another's Province; By Apostle here I under- Evidences against it: First from his being Apoſtle of the Circumciſion peculiarly.

I underſtand a Commiſſioner of Chriſt's, endued with authority by him, and this Commiſſion given to him, as to all the other Apoſtles, indefinitely, and unlimitedly, not reſtrained by Chriſt's words to any particular Province, but extending equally to the whole world; what therefore is done in this kind is by ſubſequent act of the Apoſtles themſelves, who are teſtified to have done that, which it had been very unskilfull, and improvident, and conſequently unreaſonable not to have done, viz. diſtributed their Univerſal great Province into ſeveral κλήρους ἀποστολῆς, Acts 1. 25. diſtributions, or Lots, or leſſer Provinces, one or more to go one way, the other another, which is there called by Saint Peter πορεύθῆναι εἰς τὸν τόπον τὸν ἴδιον, to go to his own, or proper place, or aſſignation, for the witneſſing the Reſurrection, and proclaiming the faith or Doctrine of Chriſt to the world.

Sect. 6. Now if the circumciſion, or Jewiſh Chriſtians were peculiarly Saint Peter's Province, the lot, or diviſion aſſigned unto him, (agreeable unto which it is, that both his preaching in the Acts is to the Jews in Judæa and Samaria, and his Epiſtles are both of them addreſſed to the Jews of the diſperſion, and none elſe) then it is not imaginable, how he ſhould be the Univerſal, or ſupreme Paſtour, or Biſhop of the whole world: For the Chriſtians of that age of the World being either Jews or Gentiles, the Jews again either thoſe that remained in their Country, or thoſe that were diſperſed in other Regions, there was but one portion of one of theſe, which can reaſonably be placed under Saint Peter's jurisdiction. The Jews that were in Judæa were all immediately ſubject to the ſeveral Biſhops in each City, and all they to their Metropolitan, James the Biſhop of Jeruſalem; Of this James the brother (or near kinſman) of Chriſt, many [a] of the Ancients affirm, that he was by Chriſt after his reſurrection conſtituted Biſhop there; [b] others that it was done by Chriſt and his Apoſtles; [c] others the more ancient, that the Apoſtles conſtituted him in that See, Saint Peter, Saint James, and Saint John, the three moſt honoured by Chriſt, conferring this honour upon him, whereupon in this his See he is named before Peter and John, Gal. 2. 9. and hath the principal place in the Council at Jeruſalem, where Saint Peter is preſent, and accordingly gives the Sentence, Act. 15. 19. upon which the Reſcript is grounded, ver. 22. From all which as it appeareth, that the Juriſdiction in that Metropolis (which had extended very far among the Jews, not onely to all Judæa, but even to Syria and Cilicia and other regions, ſaith Agrippa in [d] Philo, as hath formerly been mentioned) belonged to James the Juſt, and not to Saint Peter; ſo it is as evident, that it was not by Saint Peter alone intruſted to him (which might conclude ſome peculiar tranſcendent power of Saint Peter there) but by Saint James and Saint John together with Saint Peter, which quite takes off all pretenſion of his to the ſingular Supremacy there.

The Gentiles were not St. Peter's Province.

Sect. 7. So again for the uncircumciſion or Gentile Chriſtians, they were not Saint Peter's Province but peculiarly Saint Paul's (by Saint Peter's own confeſſion and acknowledgment, Gal. 2, 9.) who is therefore ſtyled the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, Rom. 11. 13. and that without any commiſſion received, or conſequently, dependence from Saint Peter, as he declares and conteſts it, Gal. 1. 12, 17. having his aſſignation immediately from Chriſt, ver. 16. Accordingly whenſoever thoſe two great Apoſtles came to the ſame City, the one conſtantly applied himſelf to the Jews, received diſciples of ſuch, formed them into a Church, left them, when he departed that region, to be governed by ſome Biſhop of his aſſignation: and the other in like manner did the ſame to the Gentiles.

Sect. 8. This we know it was at Antioch, where Saint Peter converted the Jews, and Saint Paul the Gentiles (and certainly Saint Paul no way Subordinate, or dependent on him, as appears by his behaviour toward him avowed, Gal. 2. 11.) and accordingly in Ignatius his Epiſtle to the Magneſians we reade of the Church of Antioch, that it was τεθεμελιωμένη founded by Saint Peter and Saint Paul, not by one, or other, but by both; and in the ancient, if not Ignatian Epiſtle to the Antiochians, You, ſaith he, Πέτρε καὶ Παύλου μαθηταὶ γεγόνατε, have been the diſciples of Peter and Paul, i. e. converted and ruled by them, the Jewiſh part by one, and the Gentile by the other, and the Church of the Gentiles at Antioch, and Syria (of which Antioch was the chief City) and Cilicia, is it, to which peculiarly the decrees of the Council at Jeruſalem are ſent, Act. 15. 23. and inſcribed [τοῖς κατ' Ἀντόχειαν——ἀδελφοῖς τοῖς ἐξ ἐθνῶν, To the brethren at Antioch——thoſe of the Gentiles] and that ſeparately from the Jewiſh Church in that City or Region, as is evident both by the contents of that Reſcript, or Decretal Epiſtle, in which onely the Gentiles were concerned, v. 28, 29. and alſo by that which we reade of Saint Peter, and the Jewiſh proſelytes, Gal. 2. 11. that they withdrew from all communion and ſociety with the Gentile Chriſtians, upon which Saint Paul reproved him publickly, ver. 12. According to this condition of diſparate, not ſubordinate Churches at Antioch, it is, that the writer of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions tells us, that Euodius and Ignatius at the ſame time ſate Biſhops of Antioch, one ſucceeding Saint Peter, the other Saint Paul, one in the Jewiſh, the other in the Gentile Congregation, and ſo continued a while, till both the Churches (the wall of Separation being by compliance and Chriſtian Charity removed) joyned, and united together under Ignatius, who therefore as by * Origen and [f] Euſebius he is called the Second, ſo by Saint Hierome is called the third Biſhop of Antioch, and yet as truly by [g] Athanaſius, μετὰ τοὺς Ἀποστόλους καταξιωθεὶς ὀθισκόπου ſaid to be conſtituted Biſhop after the Apoſtles, and by [h] Saint Chryſoſtome to the ſame purpoſe (αἱ τῶν μακαρίων Ἀποστόλων χεῖρες——) that the bleſſed Apoſtles hands were laid upon him, whilſt yet Theodoret (ὑπὸ τῶν μεγάλου Πέτρου λαξάτων) affirms him to have received the Archiſacerdotal honour from the hands of Saint Peter.

Sect. 9. The ſame is as evident at Rome where theſe two great Apoſtles met again, and each of them erected and managed a Church, Saint Peter of Jews, Saint Paul of Gentiles. So ſaith [i] Saint Ireneus, θεμελιώσαντες καὶ οἰκοδομήσαντες οἱ μακάριοι Ἀπόστολοι τὴν ἐκκλησίαν——the bleſſed Apoſtles founded and built the Church there; there; and [k] Epiphanius more expresly, ἐν Ῥώμῃ γεγόνασι Πέτρος καὶ Παῦλος, οἱ Ἀπόστολοι αὐτοὶ καὶ ἐπίσκοποι, Peter and Paul were Apostles and Bishops in Rome: So the Inscription on their Tombs, which, saith [l] Eusebius, continued to his time, mentions them both as founders of that Church. So Gaius an Ecclesiastick writer of great antiquity, contemporaneous to Pope Zephyrinus, speaking of the monuments of Saint Peter and Saint Paul, calls them [m] τρόπαια τῶν τὴν τοιαύτην ἱδρυσαμένων ἐκκλησίαν, the monuments of them that founded that Church.

[i] l. 3. c. 3. Euſeb. l. 4. c. 6.

Sect. 10. So Dionysius the Bishop of Corinth, who lived about twenty years after their death, affirms both of the Church of Rome and of Corinth, [n] τὴν ὑπὸ Πέτρου καὶ Παύλου φυτείαν γεγενῆσθαι, that it was (each of them) the plantation of Peter and Paul; And [o] Prosper, Petrus & Paulus Apostoli in urbe Roma—Peter and Paul the Apostles consecrated or constituted a Church in the City of Rome. And the very Seals of Popes are an irrefragable evidence of the same, as they are set down by Matthew Paris in the year of our Lord 1237. In bulla Domini Papæ, saith he, stat imago Pauli à dextris crucis in medio bullæ figuratæ, & Petri à sinistris; In the bull of the Pope stands the Image of Saint Paul on the right hand of the Cross, which is graven in the midst of the Seal, and the Image of Saint Peter on the left hand; and this onely account given for Saint Paul's having the nobler place, Quia Paulus credidit in Christum quem non vidit, à dextris figuratur, because he believed on Christ without seeing him (here on earth.) And all this very agreeable to the story of Scripture, which as (according to the brevity of the relations there made) it onely sets down Saint Peter to be the Apostle of the Circumcision (and of his being so at Rome we make no question,) So it affirms of Saint Paul, that he preached at Rome in his own hired house, receiving them which came unto him, Acts 28. 30. which will most fitly be applied to the Gentiles of that City, the Jews having solemnly departed from him, v. 29.

[n] Euseb. Ibid.
[o] Dimid. Temp. c. 5.

Sect. 11. Accordingly in Ignatius, Ep. ad Trall. we reade of Linus and Clemens, that one was Saint Paul's, the other Saint Peter's Deacon, both which afterwards succeeded them in the Episcopal Chair, Linus being constituted Bishop of the Gentile, Clemens of the Jewish Christians there; And hence grows (unquestionably) that variety, or difference observed among Writers, some making Saint Peter, others Saint Paul the founder of that Church, but others (as hath been shewed) both of them; some making Clemens, others Linus the first Bishop after the Apostles, both affirmers speaking the truth, with this Scholion to interpret them: Linus was the first Bishop of the Gentile Christians, after Saint Paul; Clemens the first of the Jewish after Saint Peter; and after Linus his death, Cletus (or Anacletus) succeeding him, and dying also, both Congregations were at length joyned in one, under Clemens; by which one clew I suppose it easie to extricate the Reader out of the mazes, into which the ancient writers may lead him, in rehearsing the first Bishops of Rome so very diversly, but this is not a place to insist on it.

Sect. 12. By all which it appears that even in those Churches, whereof Saint Peter is acknowledged the founder, as that of Rome, and the like, yet he cannot be deemed the sole founder, but coequal to him Saint Paul of the Gentile, as he of the Jewish Proselytes: and if the sole government of that Church be devolved to the original, it will be found to have begun in Clemens, in whom the union of the Jewish and Gentile congregations there was first made, and not in Saint Peter.

Sect. 13. But then for another great part of the Christian world, it is manifest that Saint Peter had never to doe either mediately, or immediately in the planting, or governing of it, and consequently that from him that power can never descend to any other. Not to mention the travels and labours, and plantations of the other Apostles; which certainly had each their κλῆρος and ἴδιος λαὸς, and consequently their Provinces by Apostolical joynt consent assigned them, Act. 1. (though that short History written by Saint Luke, Saint Paul's attendant, mention them not) I shall onely insist on the beloved Disciple his fellow-Apostle of the Circumcision, and that abundant Labourer Saint Paul.

Sect. 14. For Saint John, who had the favour of Christ, and the dignity of place before all others in Christ's life time, even before Saint Peter himself (which is the plain meaning of his style of the beloved Disciple, and of the ἀνάκειτο ἐν τῷ κόλπῳ ἐπὶ τὸ στῆθος αὐτοῦ, leaning on his breast at supper, Joh. 21. 20. his having the πρωτοκλισία, the first place next to Christ, as being in Abraham's bosome plainly signifies being in dignity of place next to the father of the faithfull) 'tis evident that he is one of those that by agreement went to the Circumcision, was assigned the Jews for his Province, as well as Saint Peter, and consequently he had the converting, and the governing of all the converted Jews of that Lydian Asia, and placing Bishops over them, as [p] Clemens Alexandrinus, and [q] Eusebius, and [r] Prosper, and others tell us; and the † Authour of the Martyrdom of Timothy saith of him, that being returned from his banishment by Nerva's decree, τὴν Ἐφεσίων ὑπέστη Μητρόπολιν καὶ αὐτὸς δι' ἑαυτοῦ ἐπὶ συμπαρόντων ἐπισκόπων τὴν Ἐφεσίων ἀπελάμβανεν Μητρόπολιν——he placed his seat of residence in Ephesus, and having seven Bishops with him he undertook the care of that Metropolis, that is in effect, or by interpretation, of all Asia, which was under that prime Metropolis, as far as extended to the Jewish Christians there.

Not all the Circumcision.
Not the Jews of Asia,

[p] Ὅτου ἐπισκοπὴν κατέστησεν—— Ὅτου δὴ καὶ κλῆρον ἔσχε τινα κληρώσων. ap. Euseb. l. 3. c. 23.

15. But then as before was said of the several Churches and Bishops in the same place, one of the dispersed Jews, the other of the Gentiles; so it is evident that through all this Asia (the Lydian or Proconsular) the faith was by Saint Paul planted among the Gentile part, and by him Saint Timothy constituted Bishop there: and so saith Saint Chrysostome, ὅτι ὁλόκληρον τὸ τῆς Ἀσίας ἔθνος ἐπιστεύθη, a whole intire Nation, that of Asia, was intrusted to him.

As neither the Gentiles there,

Hom. 3. in 1 Tim. 5. 19.

Sect. 16. Where I shall demand of any man of the Romish pretensions, or perswasion, what can be said, in any degree probably, for Saint Peter's Universal Pastourship, whilst he lived, over this Asia, whose seven Metropoles (and sure there were inferiour Churches, or Episcopal Sees under them) are so early famous, being honoured with Christ's Epistle to them in the Revelation; was Saint Peter the supreme Pastour of these Churches? had he any, or did he ever exercise, or pretend any jurisdiction over them? was not all the Jewish part of that Province ultimately under Saint John? and the Gentile part under Saint Paul, and Saint Timothy constituted, and commissionated by him? Doth not Saint Paul give him full instructions (and such as no other Apostle could countermand, or interpose in them) leaving no other appeal or place of application for farther directions, save onely to himself, when he shall come to him, 1 Tim. 3. 14, 15. Did not Saint Paul by his own single power delegate that Province to him, and seat him there? (as appears by the παρεκάλεσα πορεύθηναι, I exhorted or appointed thee, when I went to Macedonia, 1 Tim. 1. 3.) and may it not as reasonably be said that Saint Peter was with him in his journey to Macedonia, as that he joyned with him in giving that Commission to Timothy?

παρεκάλεσα

Nor in Crete,

Sect. 17. And so likewise of Titus in Crete, was he not by Saint Paul peculiarly left in Crete, and constituted Primate there? Is it imaginable that under Christ there could be any head of that Church of that whole Island, save onely Saint Paul?

Nor in Britany.

Sect. 18. The same may certainly be said of all the Gentile Churches in all other Islands, and parts of the world, and consequently in this of Britany, wherein our present debate is terminated: And therefore if that of [t] Simon Metaphrastes should be thought to have truth in it, that Saint Peter was in Britany some time, and baptized many into the faith of Christ, and constituted Churches, ordaining Bishops and Presbyters and Deacons in the twelfth of Nero, in all reason it must be extended no farther than Saint Peter's line, as he was the Apostle of the Circumcision, i. e. to the Jews that might at that time be dispersed here, and so not prejudge the other more authentick relations of Joseph of Arimathæa or Simon Zelotes having planted the Faith in this Island.

[t] de Petr. & Paul. ad diem 29. Junii. Ἐπιμένει ἐν Βρεττανίᾳ ἡμέρας τινὰς, ἵνα πολλοὺς τῷ λόγῳ φωτίσας τῷ χάριτι ἐκκλησίας τινὰς συστήσηται, ἐπισκόπους τε καὶ πρεσβυτέρους καὶ διακόνους χειροτονήσας, διαδεξάμενος ἔτει τῷ Νέωνος.

Sect. 19. This I suppose is one competent proof of the Negative, as it respects the person of Saint Peter, that he was not (could not be, as things stood with him) Universal Pastour of the whole Church, constituted by Christ. And accordingly we see in Prosper disputing against hereticks, which divide from the Church, he expresses it by relictâ pace communionis, & panis unius Dei & Apostolorum, that they leave the communion of Christ and his Apostles in the plural, and adds, cum in ipsa Hierusalem Jacobus — Joannes apud Ephesum, Andreas & cæteri per totam Asiam, Petrus & Paulus Apostoli in urbe Roma, Gentium Ecclesiam pactam undmque posteris tradentes, ex Dominica pactione sacrârunt, that James in Jerusalem, John at Ephesus, Andrew and the rest through all Asia, Peter and Paul at Rome consecrated the Church of the Nations. Where as the Church had the several Apostles for the founders (and those independent one from the other) so the unity from which hereticks, and schismaticks depart, is said to have been founded equally in each of them, in John and James and Andrew and others, as well as in Saint Peter, nay at Rome, not in Saint Peter alone, but in him and Saint Paul together.

Dimid. Temp. c. 5. Prosper's testimony to this matter.

A second evidence against St. Peter's supremacy from the donation of the keys.

Sect. 20. In the next place another evidence we may have of this (in reference again to Saint Peter's person) from that which is visible in the donation of the power of the Keys set down in Scripture. This power, Matt. 16. 19. is promised to Saint Peter, [I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven —] But to him that from hence pretends this Donative and consequent power, as a peculiarity and inclosure of Saint Peter's, these considerations will be of force to supersede his conclusion, 1. That these words here set down by Saint Matthew, c. 16. are not the Instrument of Christ's conveyance, the words of his commission, but those other, Joh. 20. 21. As my Father hath sent me, so send I you, upon which words it is added, he breathed on them, and said, Receive the holy Ghost, Whose sins ye remit, they are remitted — And these (as also those, Matt. 28. 19. which are a repetition much to the same purpose) are delivered in common, and equally to all, and every of the eleven Apostles, as is evident by the plural style throughout that Commission.

Power of the keys given to all and each.

Sect. 21. Secondly, the words, Matt. 16. are onely a promise in the future, what Christ will afterward doe, and so the donation there set down onely by way of προλήψις, or anticipation, and if the making this promise to him peculiarly, seem to make any thing for him, then the repetition of that promise, Matt. 18. 18. which is made to all the Apostles indefinitely will take off that appearance, where it is λέγω ὑμῖν, and ὅσα ἐὰν δήσητε, I say unto you (to all of them equally and without any peculiarity of restriction) whatsoever ye shall bind, &c. The applying the words particularly to Saint Peter hath one special energie in it, and concludes that the Ecclesiastical power of œconomy or stewardship in Christ's house (of which the keys are the token, Isa. 22. 21.) belongs to single persons, such as Saint Peter was, and not onely to Consistories, or Assemblies, that whatsoever Saint Peter acted by virtue of Christ's power thus promised, he should be fully able to act himself, without the conjunction of any other, and that what he thus did (clave non errante) no one (or more men) on earth could rescind without him, which is a just ground of placing the power Ecclesiastical in Single persons, and not in Communities, in the Prelate of each Church, and not in the Presbytery. But still this is no confining of this power to Saint Peter, any more than to any other single Apostle, who had this power as distinctly promised to each of them, as here Saint Peter is pretended, and acknowledged to have; To which purpose, as the words of Scripture are most clear, Matt. 18. 18. (and accordingly, Matt. 19. the promise is again made of twelve thrones for each Apostle to sit on one, to judge, i. e. to rule, or preside in the Church, and when that promise was finally performed in the descent of the Spirit, Act. 2. the fire that represented that Spirit was divided, and ἐκάθισε sate upon every one of them, without any peculiar mark allowed Saint Peter, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and so this promise equally performed, as it was made, to all) so is this exactly the notion, which the ancient Fathers of the Church appear to have had of them; Thus Theophylact according to Saint Chrysostom's sense, Εἰ δὲ καὶ πρὸς Πέτρον μόνον εἴρηται, τὸ, [Δώσω σοι,] ἀλλὰ καὶ πᾶσι πᾶσι τοῖς Ἀποστόλοις δέδοται, Though the words [I will give thee] were delivered to Saint Peter alone, yet the power hath been conferred on all the Apostles. Saint Cyprian hath an eminent place to this purpose, Dominus noster — Episcopi honorem & Ecclesiæ suæ rationem disponens in Evangelio loquitur, & dicit Petro, Ego tibi dico, Quia tu es Petrus, & tibi dabo claves — Inde per temporum & successionum vices Episcoporum ordinatio & Ecclesiæ ratio decurrit, ut Ecclesia super Episcopos constituatur, & omnis actus Ecclesiæ per eosdem gubernetur, Christ meaning to set down the way of ordering his Church, saith unto Peter I will give thee the keys — From this promise of his, the ordination of Bishops and course of the Church hath continued by all successions and vicissitudes, So that the Church is built upon Bishops (in the plural) and every Ecclesiastick act is governed by them. So Saint Ambrose, Claves illius regni cœlorum in beato Petro cuncti suscepimus Sacerdotes, All we Bishops have in Saint Peter received those keys of the kingdom of heaven. And accordingly Saint Athanasius mentions the office of Bishop as one of those things ἃ ὁ κύριος διὰ τῶν Ἀποστόλων τετύπωκε, which Christ effigiated or formed in or by the Apostles; And Saint Basil the great calls Episcopacy προεδρείαν τῶν Ἀποστόλων, the Presidency of the Apostles, the very same that Christ bestowed upon all, and not onely on one of them.

in Matt. 28.

Epist. 27.

De Dign. Sacerd. c. 5. & 6. Ep. ad Dracont.

Sect. 22.

Sect. 22. By all which it is evident again, that the power which Christ's Commiſſion inſtated on Saint Peter, was in like manner intruſted to every other ſingle Apoſtle, as well as to him, and conſequently that this of univerſal Paſtour was no perſonal privilege or peculiarity of Saint Peter's.

Sect. 23. Thirdly, that argument which is taken by learned Romaniſts from the name of Peter [πέτρος Rock or foundation ſtone] beſtowed on him by Chriſt, as if that were ſufficient to found this pretended Supremacy, is preſently evacuated, and retorted on the pretenders, when 'tis remembred 1. that πέτρος, and πέτρα, directly the ſame, ſignifies vulgarly a ſtone (μυλοειδὴς πέτρη, in Homer's Iliad. ϛ.) and of it ſelf denotes no more, but by the context, Matt. 16. 18. being applied to a building muſt needs ſignifie a foundation ſtone; and then 2. that all the twelve Apoſtles are in like manner (and not he onely, or above any other) ſtyled δωδεκα θεμελιοι, twelve foundations, Apoc. 21. 14. each of which ſtones having the name of an Apoſtle on it, in reſpect of the power and dignity that belonged to every one, is ſeverally compared to a pretious ſtone; And it being there in viſion apparent, that the wall of the City, i. e. of the Church, being meaſured exactly, was found to be an hundred forty four, i. e. twelve times twelve cubits, 'tis evident that that menſuration aſſigns an equal proportion whether of power or province to all and every of the Apoſtles, which is again a prejudice to the univerſal Paſtourſhip of any one of them.

The Romaniſts argument from Tu es Petrus evacuated.

CHAP. V.

The Evidences from the Biſhop of Rome ſucceeding S. Peter examined.

Sect. 1. FRom this argument of the pretenders as it reſpects S. Peter's perſon, and hath been thus manifeſted to be utterly incompetent to infer the deſigned concluſion, It is now very eaſie, but withall very unneceſſary to proceed to the other part of it, as it concerns S. Peter's ſucceſſours in his Epiſcopal, or (which is all one as to this matter) his Apoſtolical ſeat, and power at Rome, For certainly what he had not himſelf, he cannot devolve to any of his ſucceſſours upon that one ſcore of ſucceeding him, and therefore as this of S. Peter's perſonal power, and eminence is the principal, So it is in effect the onely ground of the Romaniſts pretenſion, this other of derivative power in his ſucceſſour, being like water that flows from a ſpring, apt to aſcend no higher, than the fountain ſtood, and therefore I again think fit to remind the Romaniſt, and peremptorily to inſiſt on this exception, that if he cannot make good S. Peter's Oecumenical power, and Paſtourſhip over all the reſt of the Apoſtles, from the donation of Chriſt (which I ſuppoſe hath been evidenced he cannot do, and for any proofs made uſe of by any to that purpoſe, and drawn either from Feed my ſheep, and lambs, or from the mention of the two ſwords, or from Thou art Peter—they have ſo little appearance of ſtrength in them, and have ſo often been anſwered by thoſe of our perſwaſion, that I cannot think it uſefull, or ſeaſonable to deſcend to any farther ſurvey of them) his other pretenſions are at an end for the Univerſal Paſtourſhip of the Pope, his ſucceſſour, whoſe power, and authority over all other Biſhops cannot farther be extended (upon this account of ſucceſſion) than S. Peter's was over all other Apoſtles, the ſeveral Biſhops of the world holding from (as ſucceeding) ſome Apoſtle or other, as certainly as the Biſhop of Rome can by any be ſuppoſed to ſucceed S. Peter, according to that of * Tertullian, Sicut Smyrnæorum Eccleſia Polycarpum à Joanne collocatum refert, Sicut Romanorum Clementem à Petro ordinatum edit, perinde utique & cæteræ exhibent quos ab Apoſtolis in Epiſcopatum conſtitutos Apoſtolici ſeminis traduces habent, As the records of the Church of Smyrna deduce Polycarp their Biſhop from Saint John, and as the Church of Rome relates that Clement (their Biſhop) was ordained by Saint Peter, in like manner the reſt of the Churches ſhew us the Biſhops which they have had conſtituted by the Apoſtles, and who have brought down and derived the Apoſtolick Seed unto them.

No privilege by ſucceſſion from S. Peter, but as S. Peter is proved to have himſelf.

* De Præſcript. c. 32.

Sect. 2. What therefore I ſhall now add in return to the ſecond branch of this argument, concerning the power of S. Peter's ſucceſſour, as ſuch, will be perfectly ex abundanti, more than needs, and ſo I deſire it may be looked on by the reader, whoſe curioſity perhaps may require farther ſatisfaction, when his reaſon doth not; and in compliance therewith I ſhall propoſe theſe few conſiderations. Firſt, whether S. Peter did not as truly plant a Church of Jewiſh believers at Antioch, and leave a ſucceſſour Biſhop there, as at Rome he is ſuppoſed to have done? 2. Whether this were not done by him, before ever he came to Rome? 3. Whether the Conceſſion of theſe two unqueſtioned matters of fact, do not devolve all power, and juriſdiction on the Biſhop of Antioch S. Peter's ſucceſſour there, which by that tenure and claim of ſucceſſion from S. Peter can be pretended to by the Biſhop of Rome, S. Peter's ſucceſſour alſo? Nay, Whether the right of Primogeniture be not ſo much more conſiderable on this ſide, than any circumſtance on the other ſide, which can be offered to counterbalance it, that he which ſucceeded him in his firſt ſeat (Antioch) is, if there be force in the argument of ſucceſſion, to be looked on as the chief of his ſtrength, partaker of more power by virtue of that ſucceſſion, than he that afterward ſucceeded him at Rome?

The privileges attending S. Peter's ſucceſſour belonging rather to the Biſhop of Antioch than of Rome.

Sect. 3. This we know, that anciently there were three Patriarchates, and Antioch was one of them, as Rome was another; and though I, who lay not that weight on the argument of ſucceſſion from S. Peter, am not engaged to affirm that Antioch was the chief of theſe, yet this I contend, that there is much leſs reaſon, that any precedence, which is afforded Rome by the ancient Canons, ſhould be deemed imputable to this ſucceſſion from S. Peter, when 'tis evident that claim belongs to Antioch, as well as to Rome, and firſt to Antioch, and afterwards to Rome, and no otherwiſe to Rome, than as it was firſt competible to Antioch.

Sect. 4. Of Rome it is confeſſed that the primacy of dignity or order belonged to that, the next place to Alexandria, the third to Antioch, which is an evidence that the ſucceſſion from S. Peter was not conſidered in this matter, for then Alexandria, which held onely from S. Mark, muſt needs have yielded to Antioch which held from S. Peter. The original of this precedence, or dignity of the Biſhop of Rome is ſure much

The Primacy belonged to Rome upon another ſcore.

Can. penult. more fitly deduced by the fourth General Council holden at Chalcedon, confirming the decree of the Council of Conſtantinople, that that See ſhall have ἴσα πρεσβεῖα, equal privileges, and dignities, and advantages with Rome, upon this account, that Conſtantinople was New Rome, and the ſeat of the Empire at that time; which, ſay they, was the reaſon (and not any donation of Chriſt's to S. Peter, or ſucceſſion of that Biſhop from him) that Rome enjoyed ſuch privileges (Καὶ διὰ τοῦτο τὰ πρεσβεῖα τοῖς Ῥώμης διὰ τὸ βασιλεύειν τὴν πόλιν ἐκείνην οἱ πατέρες εἰκότως ἀπέδωκαν τῷ πρεσβείᾳ) and therefore τῷ αὐτῷ σκοπῷ κινούμενοι, The Fathers at Conſtantinople being moved with the ſame reaſons had rightly judged that now the ſame privileges ſhould belong to that Church or City, Καὶ ἐν τοῖς ἐκκλησιαστικοῖς ὡς ἐκείνην μεγαλύνεσθαι πράγμασι βάδην μετ' ἐκείνην ὑπάρχουσαν, and that this being next to Old Rome ſhould in all Eccleſiaſtical affairs have the ſame dignity, or greatneſs that Old Rome had. Where, as the Original of the dignity of that See is duly ſet down, and (which is obſervable) in the whole conteſt never ſo much as quarrelled at by the Legates, viz. the reſidence of the Imperial Majeſty there (a thing very remarkable in the ſeveral degrees of dignity in the Church, that of Patriarchs, Primates, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, which generally obſerved their proportions with the Civil ſtate, as hath been ſhewed) ſo is the nature of it alſo, no ſupremacy of power over all the Biſhops of the world (for that Monarchical power is not at once competible to two equals or rivals) and withall the movableneſs or communicableneſs of that dignity, as that which may follow the Imperial ſeat, whitherſoever it is removable, and is not fixed at Rome by any commiſſion of Chriſt or ſucceſſion from S. Peter.

The Canon of the Council of Chalcedon rejected by the Romaniſts.

Sect. 5. But becauſe I ſhall ſuppoſe that a Canon, though of an Univerſal Council, when it is found thus derogatory to the height which Rome now pretends to, ſhall not by the Romaniſt be acknowledged to be authentick, as wanting that which the Romaniſt makes abſolutely neceſſary to the validity of Councils or Canons, the ſuffrage of the Biſhop of Rome and conſent of his Legates; and becauſe I mean not here to go out of my way to vindicate (which I could very readily do) the authority of that Canon, or to ſhew the ſtrangeneſs of this dealing, not to admit any teſtimony againſt them, but wherein they have given their own ſuffrage (a method of ſecurity beyond all amulets, if no man ſhall be believed againſt me, till I have joyned with him to accuſe and condemn my ſelf) I ſhall therefore lay no more weight on this, than will, without this ſupport, be otherwiſe upheld, and is in ſome meaſure evident by the Romaniſts rejecting this Canon, and adding that the Church of Antioch rejected it alſo; which argues that that which the Church of Conſtantinople was willing to acquire by this decree, was as derogatory to the dignity of Antioch as of Rome. And as that concludes that Antioch had profeſſedly the ἴσα πρεσβεῖα, equal privileges with Rome, the dignity of a Patriarchate, and the attendants and pomps of that, So it proceeds on a conceſſion, that all that Conſtantinople wanted, or in which this New came ſhort of the Old Rome, was onely the dignity of a Patriarchate, without any ordinary juriſdiction over other Churches. Which again ſhews us what was the nature of the preeminence of the Roman See at that time; no ſupreme authoritative power over other Primates, but onely a precedence, or priority of place in Councils, an eminence in reſpect of dignity, which is perfectly reconcileable with the αὐτοκεφαλία and independence, the no-ſubordination or ſubjection of others Primates.

The dignity of Patriarchs reconcileable with the independency of Primates.

The Canon of Epheſus againſt incroaching on any others Province.

Sect. 6. This hath formerly been manifeſted, when we diſcourſed of the original, and power, and dignity of Primates, and Patriarchs, and is put beyond all controll by that Canon of the Council of Epheſus in the cauſe of the Archbiſhop of Cyprus, over whom the Patriarch of Antioch, though Patriarch of all the Orient, was adjudged to have no manner of power. And this independency of Cyprus, not onely from the Patriarch of Antioch, but from all others whomſoever, was conteſted then, as from the Apoſtles times, and aſſerted, and vindicated by that Council, and order given indefinitely againſt all invaſions from time to come, in whatever Dioceſe, that no Biſhop ſhall incroach upon anothers Province, or uſurp a power, where from the Apoſtles times he had not enjoyed it; which how directly it (is applicable to, and) prejudgeth the pretenſions of Rome, as well as of Antioch, is ſo manifeſt, that it cannot need farther demonſtrating.

Inſtances of Independent power in Archbiſhops.

Sect. 7. Of the ſame kind, two farther inſtances I ſhall here add; firſt of the Archbiſhop of Carthage, who being the chief Primate, or Metropolitan (for theſe two words in the African ſtyle different from the uſage of other Churches, are obſervable to ſignifie the ſame thing) in Africk, i. e. in one of the thirteen Dioceſes of the Empire, appears to have been independent from all other power, an abſolute Primate, ſubject to no ſuperiour, or Patriarch, whether of Alexandria, or Rome. This is evident by Juſtinian in the 131. Novel, where the Emperour gives the ſame privileges to the Archbiſhop of * Carthage, which he had formerly given to the Biſhop of Juſtiniana Prima; which being the ſecond example I meant to mention, I ſhall briefly ſhew what that Prerogative was, which equally belonged to theſe two.

* Καὶ τὸ ὅμοιον πρέπον τὸ δίκαιον τῷ Ἀρχιεροσύνῃ τῷ τῆς ὁσιοτάτης ἐκκλησίας Καρχηδόνος τῆς Ἀφρικῆς διοικήσεως πάσης, ἐξ ὧν ὁ θεὸς ταύτῃ ἡμῖν ἐποικτίσατο φυλάττεσθαι κελεύομεν.

Sect. 8. Juſtiniana Prima was the head of [a] Dacia the new; a Dioceſe (as that ſignifies more than a Province, a [b] Primate's, a Patriarch's dominion) erected by Juſtinian the Emperour; and that City thus dignified, as the [c] place where he had been born, the Archbiſhop thereof made Primate of all that Dioceſe. This is thus expreſſed in the Imperial Conſtitutions, Nov. 11. that he ſhall have omnem cenſuram Eccleſiaſticam, ſummum Sacerdotium, ſummum faſtigium, ſummam dignitatem, all power of Eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction, the ſupreme Prieſthood, ſupreme honour and dignity; And in the Conſtitutions ſet out by Gothofred out of an old MS. Copy, Tu & omnes Juſtinianæ Primæ Antiſtites, quicquid oriatur inter eos diſcrimen, ipſi hoc dirimant, & finem eis imponant, & nec ad alium quendam eatur, ſed ſuum agnoſcant Archiepiſcopum omnes prædictæ Provinciæ — that all the Provinces ſhall in their laſt reſort make their appeal to him for all controverſies. And Nov. 131. c. 3. that in all that Dioceſe he ſhall have locum Apoſtolicæ ſedis, the place or dignity of the Apoſtolical ſeat; which gave Nicephorus occaſion (in his relation of this matter) to affirm that the Emperour made it a free City, and αὐτοκέφαλον an head unto it ſelf, with full power independent from all others: And though the firſt Biſhop thereof was conſecrated by Vigilius

Biſhop

Bishop of Rome, as by some Bishop it is certain he must, yet that is of no force against the conclusion, to which I design this instance, it being evident that being consecrated, he was absolute, and depended not on any, and his [d] successours were to be ordained by his Council of Metropolitans, and not by the Pope.

[d] Quando autem te ab hac luce decedere contigerit, pro tempore Archiepiscopum ejus à venerabili suo Concilio Metropolitanorum ordinari sancimus, quemadmodum decet Archiepiscopum omnibus honoratum Ecclesiis provehi. Ibid. Αὐτῷδε ἐπὶ τ οἰκείας ζωῆδε χειροτονεῖσθ. Νεαρ. ρλα.

Sect. 9. Which as it makes a second instance of the point in hand, so when it is remembred, that all this independent absolute power was conferred upon this City (the Emperour's favourite) onely by his making it a Primate's, or chief Metropolitan's See, and that Carthage's being the Prime Metropolis of Africk is expressed by having the same privileges, that Justiniana Prima had, It will follow (what is most certain, and might otherwise be testified by innumerable evidences,) that every Primate, or chief Metropolitan was absolute within his own circuit, neither subject nor subordinate to any foreign Superiour, whether Pope or Patriarch; And that was all which was usefull (much more than was necessary) to be here demonstrated. And being so, there remains to the See of Rome no farther claim to the subjection of this Island, nor appearance of proof of the charge of schism, in casting off that yoke, upon this first score of S. Peter's, or his successours right to the Universal Pastourship.

Sect. 10. Upon this head of discourse depends also all that is, or can be said for the confining the Catholick Church to the number of those, who live in obedience to the Roman Church, or Bishop. For if there have been from the Apostles times, an independent power vested in each Primate, or chief Metropolitan (as hath been evidently shewn) then how can it be necessary to the being of a member of the Catholick Church, to be subject to that one Primate? 'Tis certainly sufficient to the conservation of the unity of the whole Church, that every one pay an obedience, where an obedience is due, and no way usefull to that end, that those that are born free, should resign up, devest themselves of that privilege, and become αὐθαίρετοι δοῦλοι servants or subjects of their own making. But I shall not enlarge on this matter, but conclude with that of our Bishops in Convocation, Anno Chr. 1537. in their Book intituled, [The Institution of a Christian man:] that it was many hundred years before the Bishop of Rome could acquire any power of a Primate over any other Bishops, which were not within his Province in Italy, And that the Bishops of Rome do now transgress their own profession made in their Creation, For all the Bishops of Rome always when they be consecrated and made Bishops of that See, do make a * solemn profession and vow, that they shall inviolably observe all the Ordinances made in the eight first General Councils, among which it is especially provided, that all causes shall be determined within the Province, where they be begun, and that by the Bishops of the same Province; which absolutely excludes all Papal, i. e. foreign power out of these Realms.

The unreasonableness of confining the Catholick Church to the number of those that live in the Roman subjection.

* In Diurn. lib. Profess. Rom. Pont. vid. Corp. Jur. Decret. par. 1. distinct. 16. c. 8.

CHAP. VI.

Their second plea, from the Bishop of Rome having planted Christianity among us.

Sect. 1. THE next part of the Romanist's arguing against us, is taken from a peculiar right, or claim, that the Bishop or See of Rome hath to our obedience, upon the score of having planted Christianity among us.

Sect. 2. But before I proceed to shew the invalidity of this plea, I desire it may first be observed, that the pleading of this, as the title by which the Bishop of Rome hath right to our subjection, is absolutely unreconcileable with his former pretensions founded in his œcumenical Pastourship by succession to S. Peter; For certainly he that is supposed (in gross) to have that original title to all power over all Churches, cannot be imagined to acquire it afterward (by way of retail) over any particular Church. He that claims a reward, as of his own labour and travel, must be supposed to disclaim Donation, which is antecedent to, and exclusive of the other, as the title of descent is to that of Conquest, And it is a very great prejudice to the justice of his pretensions, who finds it necessary to mix things that are so incompetible.

The plea from planting the Faith unreconcileable with the former.

Sect. 3. And therefore I am obliged to offer this Dilemma to the Romanist in this place, and to demand, Which is the Pope's true title to the subjection of this Island? the Donation of Christ, or conversion wrought by Augustine the Monk? If the latter be affirmed to be it, then it must be granted by him, both that this Island before the time of Pope Gregory was no way subjected to the Romish See, and withall that no Christian Nation is at this day thus subject, but such as doth appear to have been converted by Rome, as the Saxons here are supposed to have been; And then this concession will lose more subjects to the Apostolick See, than the return of these Islands to the desired subjection would ever be able to countervail, or recompense; and therefore it is reasonable to insist on the terms of this bargain, and not to yield the one, till the other be yielded to us, But if the former be affirmed to be it, and that indeed the commmission from Christ to S. Peter be still the fundamental hold, by which our subjection is, and always hath been due to his successours, then is that other of the conversion by Augustine but a fallacious pretense, a non causa pro causa, to amuse us, and need not farther be answered, or invalidated, than by this confession.

A Dilemma to the Romanist.

Sect. 4. But then passing by this advantage, and taking the objection as it lies by it self, these farther considerations will take off all force from it. 1. That this Island was converted to the Faith of Christ, long before Augustine's preaching to the Saxons, either in, or very near the Apostles times, in Tiberius his reign, saith Gildas, and long before Tertullian's and Origen's time, as by them appears, Tertul. in Apol. and Orig. in Ezech. Hom. 4. To this I shall not need to add the testimony of Eleutherius the Bishop of Rome, in the vulgar Epistle to our Lucius, the first Christian King of the world, styling him, Vicarium Dei in Regno suo, God's Vicegerent in his own Kingdom, because, as there is some doubt of the authentickness of that Epistle,

The Faith planted here before Augustine the Monk.

so the * onely thing that we have now need to conclude from it, is otherwise evident, viz. that the Nation was in his time converted, and so long before Augustine's coming. And though by Diocletian's persecution, Christianity were here shrewdly shaken, yet I suppose, that will not be thought argumentative, both because it might be of ill example against other Nations, where the faith was as bloudily persecuted in that, or other times, and possibly at some point of time against Rome it self, where S. Peter's Chair was not always amulet sufficient to avoid the like destructions, and especially because it is evident, that the British Church survived that calamity, and began to flourish again, saith Bede, l. 1. c. 8. their Churches, saith he, were rebuilt, holy-days celebrated, the memories of their Martyrs erected, and the offices of the Church duly performed, which farther appears by authentick testimonies, three of our Bishops being ten years after that, present (and their names subscribed, Eborius of York, Restitutus of London, and Adelfius Coloniæ Londinensium) at the Council of Arles, eleven years before the first Council of Nice. So likewise at the time of that Nicene Council it appears, that as Britany was one of the six Dioceses of the West Empire (see Notitia Provinc. Occident.) so there were in it three Metropolitans, the Bishop of York (his Province Maxima Cæsariensis) the Bishop of London (his Province Britania prima) the Bishop of Caeruske (his Province Britania secunda) in Monmouthshire, [a] which after in King Arthur's time was translated to Saint David's, where it continued an Archbishoprick till King Henry I. who subjected it to Canterbury, and [b] all this space of about 500 years after Augustine's coming, the Bishops thereof, eleven in number, were all consecrated by the suffragan Bishops of that Province, without any profession, or subjection to any other Church, as the Annals there affirm.

* Suscepistis nuper in Regno Britania legem & fidem Christi.

And not quite destroyed by Diocletian.

[b] A Samsone usque tempus Henrici primi, sederunt Meneviæ undecim Episcopi, & usque ad hoc tempus Episcopi Meneviæ à suis suffraganeis Wallensibus ibidem fuerunt consecrati, nullâ penitus professione vel subjectione fallâ alteri Ecclesiæ. Ibid.

Sect. 5. To the same purpose is it, that when Augustine required subjection to the Pope and Church of Rome, the Abbot of Bangor is recorded to have returned him this answer, Notum sit vobis quòd nos omnes sumus—— Be it known unto you, that we are all subject, and obedient to the Church of God, and the Pope of Rome, but so as we are also to every pious and good Christian, viz. to love every one in his degree and place, in perfect Charity, and to help every one by word and deed to attain to be the sons of God; * Et aliam obedientiam quàm istam non scio debitam ei quem vos nominatis esse Papam, nec esse Patrem Patrum vendicari & postulari, And for any other obedience I know none due to him whom you call the Pope, and as little do I know by what right he can challenge to be Father of Fathers, Bishop of Bishops or Universal Bishop. Præterea nos sumus sub gubernatione Episcopi Caerlegionensis super Osca—— As for us, we are under the rule of the Bishop of Caerlegion upon Usk, who is to overlook and govern us under God.

The Britains rejection of the Bishop of Rome.

* Concil. Anglic. p. 108.

Sect. 6. From hence the result is clear, that whatever is pretended from Augustine the Monk, or supposed to have been then pressed by him, for the advancing of the Pope's interest in this Island, and concluding us guilty of Schism in casting off that yoke, yet the British Bishops still holding out against this pretension, and that with all reason on their side, if the title of conversion, which the Romanist pleads for our subjection, may be of any validity with him, it must needs follow, that the whole Island cannot upon this score of Augustine's conversion, be now deemed schismatical, it being certain, that the whole Island, and particularly the Dominion of Wales, was not thus converted by Augustine, nor formerly by any sent from Rome, or that observed the Roman Order (as appears by the observation of Easter, contrary to the usage received at Rome) but either by Joseph of Arimathea, or Simon Zelotes, as our Annals tell us most probably. And this in the first place must needs be yielded to by those that expect to receive any advantage to their cause by this argument; And if they will still extend their title equally, to those parts of Britany, which Augustine did not, as to those which he did convert, to Wales, as well as to Kent, it is evident they must doe it upon some other score (whatsoever the pretense be) and not upon this of conversion.

The invalidity of the argument from conversion, when the Britains were certainly not converted by Augustine.

Sect. 7. But then secondly, for as much of this Island, as was really converted to the Faith by the coming of Augustine, there is no title for their subjection, and the perpetual subjection of their posterity from this.

No title from conversion for subjection.

Sect. 8. To examine this a while by other known practices of the Christian world, S. Paul by himself or his Apostles, or Procuratours, was the great Converter of the Gentiles; Concerning him I shall demand, whether all those Nations converted by him and his ministers, are to all ages obliged to be subject to that Chair, where S. Paul sate (whether in the Church at Antioch, or Rome, or the like) at the time of his sending out, or going himself to convert them; If so, then 1. there cannot be a greater prejudice imaginable to S. Peter's Universal Pastourship; And 2. it will in the story of the fact appear to have no degree of truth in it; Timothy that was placed over Asia in Ephesus, and Titus over Crete, being (as hath formerly appeared) supreme in those Provinces, and independent from any other See. And generally that is the nature of Primates or Patriarchs, to have no superiour either to ordain, or exercise jurisdiction over them, but themselves to be absolute within their Province, and their successours to be ordained by the suffragan Bishops under them; which could not be, if every such Church, where such a Primate was placed, were subject to that Church, from which they received the Faith.

The power of Kings to erect Patriarchates.

Sect. 9. To put this whole matter out of controversie, It is, and hath always been in the power of Christian Emperours, and Princes within their Dominions to erect Patriarchates, or to translate them from one City to another, and therefore whatever title is supposable to be acquired by the Pope in this Island upon the first planting of the Gospel here, this cannot so oblige the Kings of England ever since, but that they may freely remove that power from Rome to Canterbury, and subject all the Christians of this Island to the spiritual power of that Archbishop or Primate independently from any foreign Bishop.

[c] Examples, in Justiniana Prima, c. 5. sect. 8.

Sect. 10. For the erection of Primacies or Patriarchates, that of Justiniana Prima [c] forementioned, and set down at large, is an evident proof, Justinian erecting that (long after the rest of the Primates seats in the Empire) to be an Archiepiscopal See absolute and independent, and subjecting all Dacia the new to it; And though the Pope Vigilius was by the Emperour appointed to ordain the first Bishop there, yet were his successours to be ordained by his own Metropolitans, and the Bishops under him not to appeal to any others, as hath in each particular formerly been evidenced.

Sect. 11.

Sect. 11. The same also hath in like manner been shewn of Carthage, which was by the same Justinian (not originally dignified, but) [d] after the rescuing it out of the Vandals hands, restored to a state of Primacy, after the pattern or image of Justiniana Prima, and two Provinces more annexed, than had anciently belonged to that Bishop's jurisdiction. Carthage. [d] ἐξ ὅπερ ἐπὶ τοῦτο ἦλθε καὶ τύχην. Διάταξις 131.

Sect. 12. Before either of these, the Emperour Valentinian the Third, Anno Christi, 432. by his Rescript constituted Ravenna a Patriarchal seat; And from his time, * that held the Patriarchate without any dependence on the Bishop of Rome to the time of Constantinus Pogonatus; And though at that time the Greek Emperour's Vicarii or Exarchs being not able to support the Bishop of Ravenna against the Longobards, he was fain to flie for support to the Bishop of Rome, and so submitted himself unto him, and after Reparatus, the next Bishop Theodorus did the like to Pope Agatho, whether upon the score of great friendship with him, or in despite to his own Clergy (with whom he had variance) saith Sabellicus, yet the people of Ravenna thought themselves injured hereby, and joyned with their next Bishop Fœlix to maintain their privilege, though Pope Constantine stirring up Justinian Ῥινότμητον against them, they were worsted, and defeated in their attempt. Ravenna. * r. it

Sect. 13. Other examples there are of this kind; * Balsamon points at some which from the [f] Emperour's Charter had this privilege, not to be subject to the Patriarch of Constantinople, calling them αὐτοκέφαλοι Ἀρχιεπίσκοποι, which were Archbishops independent: So under Phocas, the Patriarchate of Grado in Italy was erected, saith [g] Warnefridus de gestis Longobard. Others, as Eginartus, Chancellour to Charles the Great, and who wrote his Life, say it was done by Charles the Great. And so doth Rhegino, who lived in the next age. And accordingly in Duarenus de Benef. lib. 1. cap. 9. among the Minorum Gentium Patriarchatus, that of Grado is reckoned for one, and joyned with Aquileia, Canterbury and Bourges. * De privileg. Patriar. [f] ἀπὸ τῆς φιλοτιμίας βασιλικῆς ἰδιαίτερον τοῦτο τὸ δίκαιον λαβόντες. [g] l. 4. c. 34. Grado.

Sect. 14. And that it was a frequent usage in the East may appear by the twelfth Canon of the Council of Chalcedon, where we find mention of πόλεις διὰ γραμμάτων βασιλικῶν τὸ τῆς μητροπόλεως ὄνομα καὶ ἀξίωσιν, Cities honoured by Letters Patents from the Kings or Emperours with the name and dignity of Metropoles, and where the Council represses the ambition of Bishops, which sought those privileges διὰ ἀναγραπτῶν, by Rescripts from the Emperours, and censures it, (in them that so sought it) as ἔξω τοῦ ἐκκλησιαστικοῦ διατάγματος, not agreeable to the Ecclesiastical Canons, repressing the ambition of the Bishops, but not cassating the Rescripts, nor withdrawing the honour from the Metropolis so erected; Of this Canon Balsamon saith, that when it was made, many Emperours had erected many Metropolitans, and naming three, adds, καὶ ἄλλαι ὁπόσαι ἐτιμήθησαν, that other Bishopricks were thus honoured, and that the Emperours did it, κατὰ τὴν δοθεῖσαν αὐτοῖς ἐξουσίαν, according to the power that was given them. Where it is farther to be observed, 1. that this Council was within 20 years after that grant of Valentinian, and consequently, if Balsamon say right, (that at that time many Emperours had erected many) there must needs be others before Valentinian. 2. that the seventeenth Canon of the Council of Chalcedon doth more expresly attribute this power to the Prince, Εἰ δὲ καί τις ἐκ βασιλικῆς ἐξουσίας ἀναγνισθεῖσα πόλις, ἢ αὖθις καινισθεῖσα, τοῖς πολιτικοῖς καὶ δημοσίοις τύποις, καὶ τὴν ἐκκλησιαστικῶν παροικιῶν ἡ τάξις ἀκολουθείτω, If a City be built or restored by the King's power, let the Ecclesiastical order follow the Political. And the same power is acknowledged to belong to the Prince by the Council in Trullo Can. 38. And then 3. that these two last Canons are reconciled with that twelfth of Chalcedon, by the Law of Alexius Comnenus, and assented to by the Synod under him, See Balsam. in Can. 38. Concil. in Trullo, who concludes that the King might doe it, αὐθορμήτου γενόμενος, upon his own incitation or motion, but it should not be lawfull for any by base solicitation to seek or obtain it, adding that in that case, upon any such Rescript of the Emperour for such erection, it might be lawfull for the Patriarch to suspend the confirmation of the Charter, untill he represented to the Emperour what the Canons were in that case, and understood if the Emperour did it οἰκόθεν from his own motion, which appearing, the Patriarch was to admit thereof. Frequent in the East.

And accordingly the same Balsamon (on Concil. Carthag. Can. 16.) doth upon that Canon professedly found the authority of Princes, Ἐπισκοπὴν εἰς μητρόπολιν ἄγειν —— καὶ ὁπόταν νῦν ὁπόσαι καὶ μητροπόλεις γεγόνασιν, to advance an Episcopal See into a Metropolis, and anew to constitute Bishops and Metropolitans.

Sect. 15. As for the transplanting it also from one City to another, besides that the power of doing that is consequent to the former, the examples of this practice are ancient, and frequent in this Kingdom; The passage set down out of the Annals of Gisburn may be sufficient, From Caeruske the Metropolitan seat was translated to Saint David's by King Arthur, where it continued till Henry I. and then was reduced to Canterbury. So also to translate. Examples in England. Concil. Angl. p. 26.

Sect. 16. In like manner 'tis evident that the Kings of England have divided Bishopricks, and erected new ones; About the year 630. Kinigilsa King of the West-Saxons, and Oswald of the Northumbers, erected an Episcopal See at Dorchester, and placed Birinus in it, so saith Guil. Malmesb. de Gest. Pontif. Angl. l. 2. About the year, 660, Kenewalch King of the West-Saxons divided this Bishoprick, and left part to Dorchester, and assigned the western part to be the Diocese of the new Bishop, which he constituted at Winchester, so saith Hen. Huntingd. Hist. l. 3. Then Winchester was subdivided in the time of King Ina, who also erected a new Bishoprick at Sherburne, and gave it to Aldelme, so Henr. Huntingd. l. 4. and Guil. Malm. de Reg. Angl. l. 1. c. 2. And after the Norman Conquest, Henry I. divided Cambridgeshire from the See of Lincoln, and erected the Bishoprick of Ely, so saith Guiliel. Malm. de Gest. Pontif. Angl. l. 4. and Florentius Wigorn. Anno 1109. who lived at that time. So also saith Eadmer with some variation, Regi, Archiepiscopo, cæterisque Principibus Regni visum fuit de ipsa Parochia (Lincolniæ) sumendum, quo fieret alter Episcopatus, cujus Cathedra Principatus poneretur in Abbatia de Eli, It seemed good to the King, the Archbishop, and the rest of the Princes of the Kingdom to take as much out of the Diocese of Lincoln, as would make another Bishoprick, the Chair whereof should be set up in the Abbacy of Ely. Adding indeed that Anselme (a zealous promoter of the Papal authority, as the authour Eadmer was a disciple and admirer of Anselme) wrote to Pope Paschalis, desiring his consent to it, as a thing fit to be done, and yet to which he assures him he would not give his consent, but salvâ authoritate Papæ, reserving the rights of the Pope; Which though it doth suppose the Pope's pretensions to that authority at that time, and Anselm's yielding it to him, yet it proves also this right of our Kings to have been even then adhered to, preserved, and exercised by them, as the former authours had set it down.

Sect. 17.

So to exempt from Episcopal Jurisdiction.

Sect. 17. Of this nature also is the authority of Kings in exempting any Ecclesiastical person from the Bishop's jurisdiction and granting Episcopal jurisdiction to such person, which is largely asserted and exemplified in Cawdry's Case 5. Report. 14. One instance of this will serve for all, that of William the Conquerour, who exempted Battel Abbey in Sussex from the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Chichester, and gave the Abbat Episcopal jurisdiction in his Territories, and the words of the Charter are produced by Mr. Selden on Eadmer, Hoc regali authoritate & Episcoporum ac Baronum meorum attestatione constituo, I appoint this by my royal authority by the attestation of my Bishops and Barons.

Kings founders of Bishopricks and Patrons.

Sect. 18. Add unto this, that even the Western Princes (in those parts where the Bishops of Rome have much heightned their power, ever since the Kings were Christians) the German Emperours, the Kings of France and England, always claimed to be founders of all Bishopricks in their Dominions, Patrons of them to bestow them by investiture, that the Kings of France and England often claimed and were acknowledged to have right, that no Legate from Rome might come into the Land, and use jurisdiction without their leave; All which put together are a foundation for this power of the Princes to erect or translate a Patriarchate, It being withall acknowledged that our Kings have the same authority in their Territories, that the Roman Emperour had in the Empire.

The reason of all, supreme power of Kings.

Sect. 19. And the reason of all this is clear, not onely from the supreme authority of Kings in all sorts of causes, even those of the [h] Church, as well as Civil (as might be proved at large, if here it were needfull, and cannot be reasonably so confined, as not to belong to a matter of this nature) but peculiarly from that which hath been already noted (and expresly ordered, Can. 17. of the Council of Chalcedon even now cited) of the Ecclesiastical division of Provinces, &c. following the Civil. For, 1. it being certainly in the power of the King to place his Prætoria or Courts of Assises, where he please; and, 2. it being the known original of Metropoles, and divisions of Provinces (as Strabo saith, Geogr. l. 17. Αἱ ἐπαρχίαι διήρηνται ἄλλοτε ἄλλως, Provinces are variously distributed, διὰ τὸ τοὺς Ῥωμαίους μὴ κατὰ φύλα διελεῖν αὐτὰς, ἀλλ' ἕτερον τρόπον διατάξαι διοικήσεις ἐν αἷς τὰς ἀρχαίους ποιοῦνται καὶ δικαιοδοσίας, because the Romans divide them not by tribes or families, but after another manner in relation to the Cities, where they set up their Courts of Assises——) and again it being most reasonable, that as any new accident raises one City to a greater populousness, or depresses another, so for the convenience of the people one should be made the seat of Judicature, the other cease to be so, (and no man so fit to pass the judgment when this should be, as the King;) and, 3. the very same reasons of convenience moving in the Church, as in the State, the Bishops, and over them Metropolitans and Primates having their Judicatures, and Audiences, which in all reason must be so disposed of, as may be most for the convenience of administration, that they and all under them may doe their duties with most facility, and to greatest advantage; and lastly, there being no obstacle imaginable from any contrary constitution either of Christ or his Apostles, against which the Prince can be said to offend either directly or interpretatively (as I suppose is already clear from the refutation of the plea from S. Peter's Universal Pastourship) whensoever he shall think fit to make such changes, the Conclusion is rational, as well as evident; just that it should be so, as well as clear, that elsewhere it hath oft been so de facto, (and appointed by the Canon of Chalcedon de jure) that the King may erect a Primacy when he please (and so it is certain that King Ethelbert at the time of Augustine's planting the faith, did at Canterbury, the seat of his Kingdom, Imperii sui totius Metropolis saith Bede l. 1. c. 25.) and consequently remove it from any other place at his pleasure: Had it not been for this, there is no reason assignable, why, this Nation being in Constantine's time under three Metropolitans, the Archbishop of York (and the Primacy belonging to that City, as being then the Emperour's seat, where Septimius Severus, and Constantius Chlorus died, and the Prætorium of the Diocese of Britany) the Archbishop of London, and the Archbishop of Caerusk in Monmouthshire, either 1. there should be (as there was) an addition of two Provinces more, Valentia, and Flavia Cæsariensis, or 2. the Metropolitical power should be removed from London to Canterbury (as also from Caerusk to S. David's, as hath been said) and the Primacy from York to Canterbury.

[h] Ὁ Βασιλεὺς οἷα κοινὸς τῆς ἐκκλησίας ἐπισκοπεύσεως καὶ ὢν καὶ ὀνομάζεσθαι θέλει, the King is as it were the common directer and Ruler of the Church, both in title and reality. Demetrii Chomateni Resp. ad Const. Cab. Jur. Græc. Rom. l. 5. Ἡμεῖς μὲν τῆς ἔξω ἐκκλησίας, ἐγὼ καὶ τῆς ἐντὸς ὑπὸ θεοῦ καθεσταμένοι ἐπισκόπου ἐσμὲν ἂν εἴην. Euseb. de Vit. Const. l. 4. f. 150. Ye are Bishops of the Church for those things which are celebrated within it, but for external things, I am constituted overseer or Bishop by God, saith Constantine the Great in an assembly of Bishops. Ἐγὼ Βασιλεὺς καὶ ἱερεύς εἰμι, I am King and Priest, saith Leo Isaurus to Gregory the Second, Nec tamen eo nomine à Pontifice reprehenditur, and was not for this reprehended by the Pope, see J. C. de Lib. Eccl. ap. Goldast. Monarch. t. 1. p. 686. So Socrates the Historian, of the Emperours in general, after their receiving the faith of Christ, τὰ τῆς ἐκκλησίας πράγματα ἤρτητο ἐξ αὐτῶν, the affairs of the Church depended on them, in Proœm. l. 5. And by Optatus l. 3. it is noted, and censured as a Schismatical piece of language in the Donatists, Quid enim Imperatori cum Ecclesia? And all this according to the principles of civil policy acknowledged by Aristotle, Pol. 3. Βασιλέα δεῖ πρὸς τοὺς θεοὺς εἶναι κύριον εἶναι, the King hath power of those things that belong to the Gods; and by Diogenes in Stobæus Ser. 46. that a perfect King ought to be both a good Captain, and a Judge, καὶ ἱερέα, yea and a Priest also; And accordingly among the ancient Roman regal Laws, this is one, Sacrorum omnium potestas sub Regibus esto, Let the power of all sacred things be under the Kings, and so in the practice, Caius Cæsar in Suetonius c. 13. was both Augur and Summus Pontifex. Galba tres Pontificatus gerebat. Ibid. Gal. c. 8. Claudius is by Josephus called, Ἀρχιερεὺς μέγιστος, the greatest High-priest, and Tacitus makes it his observation, Deum nunc munere summum Pontificem summum hominem esse. Annal. l. 3. The same appears among the Jewish Kings in Scripture, David ordering the courses of the Priests, Solomon consecrating the Temple, Hezekiah 2 Chron. 29. 2 Kings 18. and Josiah 2 Kings 22. ordering many things belonging to it. And so Saint Paul appealed from the judgment of the chief Priests to the tribunal of Cæsar, see G. de Heimburg. de usurp. Pap. so in the Βασιλικὰ, the whole third Book is made up of Justinians, i. e. the Emperours Constitutions, de Episcopis, Clericis & Sacris, concerning Bishops, Clergy-men and sacred Offices. And the Canons of Councils have mostly been set out (and received their authority) by the Emperours, and accordingly in the Theodosian Code we shall find many of those which are now called Papal Decrees.

This power of Kings if taken away by foreign Laws, &c. resumable.

Sect. 20. Now what is thus vested in the Regal power, cannot be taken away by foreign Laws, or by prescription be so alienated, but that it remains perfectly lawfull for the Prince to resume it.

Sect. 21. That Laws made at Rome do not take away the liberty of another national Church to make contrary Laws thereunto, and that by such obviation no Schism is incurred, we find delivered in the Council of Carthage (Can. 71. according to Balsamon's division) And though the Canon be not set down by Binius, yet both he and Baronius acknowledge, that what was contain'd in that particular Canon, was the main occasion of the Synod; And the antiquity thereof is considerable, those Canons being made, say Baronius and Binius, An. 401.

Sect. 22. So likewise that a Law (though made by a General Council, and with the consent of all Christian Princes, yet) if it have respect to a civil right, may, in this or that Nation, be repealed, is the judgment of Roger Widrington (or Father Preston) in his last rejoynder to Fitsherbert, c. 11. sect. 44. and c. 8. he conhe confirms it by the doctrine of Suarez, l. 2. de Leg. c. 19. and the reason of Suarez is, because such a Law made at a general meeting of Princes, is intrinsecally a civil Law; and hath not force by virtue of the Law to bind the subjects of any particular Kingdom, or Commonwealth, any otherwise than as it is enacted, or received by the Governours and subjects of that Kingdom.

Sect. 23. And this is affirmed, and extended by Balsamon to all Canons in general, as the judgment of learned men, in his notes on that sixteenth Canon of the Council of Carthage before cited.

Sect. 24. And for the matter of prescription, the decision of [1] Sayr is worth observing, that in such cases as these, Cum præscriptio sit tantùm de jure Civili & Canonico, When the prescription is neither of the law of Nature, nor the Divine law, nor the Law of Nations, but onely of the civil and Canon law, there non plus se extendit quàm unusquisque Supremus Princeps in suo Regno eam suis legibus extensam esse velit, it extends no farther than every supreme Prince in his Realm by his laws is supposed to will that it shall be extended, which, saith he, cannot be supposed, in matters of this nature, of exempting subjects from making their appeal to their King, for, saith he, non est de mente alicujus Principis ut quispiam subditorum possit præscribere quòd ad Principem ab eo non appelletur, aut quòd eum coercere non possit, quando ratio & justitia postulat, It is not imaginable to be the mind of any Prince, that any of his subjects should be able to prescribe that he is not to appeal to his Prince (but to some other) or that his Prince may not punish him when reason and justice requires. It were easie to apply this distinctly to the confirming of all, that I here pretend, but I shall not thus expatiate.

So if alienated by prescription. [1] Clav. Reg. l. 9. c. 12.

CHAP. VII.

Their third evidence from our casting off Obedience to the Bishop of Rome at the Reformation.

Sect. 1. UPON that one ground laid in the former Chapter, the power of Kings in general, and particularly ad hunc actum to remove Patriarchates; whatsoever can be pretended against the lawfulness of the Reformation in these Kingdoms, will easily be answered. And therefore supposing the third, and last objection to lie against our Reformation, that it was founded in the casting off that obedience to the Bishop of Rome, which was formerly paid him by our Bishops, and people under them, I shall now briefly descend to that, first laying down the matter of fact, as it lies visible in our Records, and then vindicating it from all blame of schism, which according to the premisses can any way be thought to adhere to it.

Sect. 2. And first for the matter of fact, it is acknowledged, that in the Reign of King Henry VIII. the Papal (and with it all foreign) power in Ecclesiastical affairs was both by Acts of Convocation of the Clergy, and by Statutes or Acts of Parliament, cast out of this Kingdom. The first step or degree hereof was the Clergy's synodical recognizing the King, singularem Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ Protectorem, unicum & supremum Dominum——the singular Protectour, the onely and supreme Head of the Church of England. Upon this were built the Statutes of 24 Hen. VIII. prohibiting all appeals to Rome, and for the determining all Ecclesiastical suits, and controversies within the Kingdom; The Statute of 25 Hen. VIII. for the manner of electing and consecrating of Archbishops and Bishops, and another, in the same year, prohibiting the payment of all impositions to the Court of Rome, and for the obtaining of all such dispensations from the See of Canterbury, which were formerly procured from the Popes of Rome, and that of 26 Hen. VIII. declaring the King to be the supreme Head (which in Queen Elizabeth's Reign was, to avoid mistakes, changed into supreme Governour) of the Church of England, and to have all honours and preeminences, which were annexed to that title.

The history of what was done against the Bishop of Rome in the Reformation.

Sect. 3. This was in the next place attended with the submission of the Clergy to the King, agreed on, first in Convocation, and afterward in 25 Hen. VIII. enacted by Parliament, to this purpose, that as it was by the Clergy acknowledged that the Convocation of the Clergy then was, always had been, and ought to be assembled by the King's Writ, and as they submitting themselves to the King's Majesty had promised in verbo Sacerdotis, that they would never from thenceforth presume to attempt, alledge, claim, or put in ure, enact, promulge, or exercise any new Canons, Constitutions, Ordinances Provincial or other——unless the King's most royal assent may to them be had to make, promulge and execute the same——so it was now enacted that none of the Clergy should enact, promulge, or execute any such Canons, Constitutions and Ordinances Provincial or Synodical, without assent and authority received from the King, upon pain of imprisonment, and fine at the King's pleasure.

Sect. 4. The third and last step of this began with the debate of the Universities, and most eminent Monasteries in the Kingdom, An aliquid authoritatis in hoc Regno Angliæ Pontifici Romano de jure competat, plusquam alii cuiquam Episcopo extero? Whether any authority did of right belong to the Bishop of Rome in the Kingdom of England more than to any other foreign Bishop? And upon agitation, it was generally defined in the negative, and so returned testified under their hands and seals. The like was soon after concluded, and resolved by the Convocation of the Bishops, and all the Clergy, and subscribed and confirmed by their corporal oaths: And at that time was written and printed the Tract de vera differentia Regiæ & Ecclesiasticæ potestatis, set out by the Prelates, the chief composers of which were, John Stokesly, Bishop of London; Cuthbert Tunstall, Bishop of Durham; Stephen Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester; and D. Thirlby afterward Bishop; where from the practice of the Saxon, and first Norman Kings they evidence the truth of that Negative out of story. And what was thus concluded by the Clergy was soon turned into an Act of Parliament also 28 Hen. VIII. called An Act extinguishing the authority of the Bishop of Rome, and prescribing an oath to all Officers Ecclesiastical, and Lay, of renouncing the said Bishop and his authority.

Sect. 5. By these three degrees it is acknowledged, that the Bishops and Clergy first, then the King confirming the Acts of the Convocation, and after making Acts of Parliament to the same purposes, renounced the the authority of the Roman See, and caſt it out of this Iſland; and though the firſt Act of the Clergy in this were ſo induced, that it is eaſie to believe that nothing but the apprehenſion of dangers which hung over them (by a Præmunire incurred by them) could probably have inclined them to it, and therefore I ſhall not pretend that it was perfectly an act of their firſt will, and choice, but that which the neceſſity of affairs recommended to them, yet the matter of right being upon that occaſion taken into their moſt ſerious debate in a ſynodical way, and at laſt a fit and commodious expreſſion uniformly pitch'd upon by joint conſent of both Houſes of the Convocation, there is no reaſon to doubt, but that they did believe what they did profeſs, the fear being the occaſion of their debates, but the reaſons or arguments offered in debate, the cauſes (as in all charity we are to judge) of their deciſion.

The Præmunire.

Sect. 6. But I ſhall not lay much weight on that judgment of charity, becauſe if that which was thus determined by King and Biſhops were falſly determined, then the voluntarineſs, or freeneſs of the determination will not be able to juſtifie it, and on the other ſide, if the determination were juſt, then was there truth in it, antecedent to, and abſtracted from the determination, and it was their duty ſo to determine, and crime that they were unwilling to doe it. And therefore the whole difficulty devolves to this one enquiry, Whether at that time of the Reign of Henry VIII. the Biſhop of Rome were ſupreme Head, or Governour of this Church of England, or had any real authority here, which the King might not lawfully remove from him to ſome other, viz. to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, if he pleaſed.

The right of the Biſhop of Rome conſidered.

Sect. 7. And this is preſently determined upon the grounds which have been formerly laid, and confirmed to have truth in them. For the pretenſions for the Pope's ſupremacy of power among us being by the aſſerters thereof founded in one of theſe three, either in his right (as S. Peter's ſucceſſour) to the Univerſal Paſtourſhip, that including his power over England, as a member of the whole; or 2. by the paternal right which by Auguſtine's planting the Goſpel among the Saxons is thought to belong to the Pope (and his ſucceſſours) that ſent him; or 3. in the voluntary conceſſion of ſome Kings; the two former of theſe have been largely diſproved already, Chap. 4, 5, and 6. in diſcourſes purpoſely, and diſtinctly applied to thoſe pretenſions. And for the third, that will appear to have received its determination alſo, 1. by the abſoluteneſs of the power of our Princes, (to which purpoſe I ſhall mention but one paſſage, that of [a] G. de Heimburg, ſome two hundred years ſince in the laſt words of his Tract de Injuſt. Uſurp. Pap. where ſpeaking of the Emperour's making oath to the Pope, he ſaith, that this is a ſubmiſſion in him, and a patience above what any other ſuffers, and proves it by this argument, Nam eximius Rex Angliæ, Franciæ, Dux, Marchio, non aſtringitur Papæ quocunque juramento: factus Imperator jurare tenetur ſecundum Decretales eorum fabuloſè fictas, ita ut ſupremus Monarcha magis ſervilis conditionis, quàm quilibet ejus inferior fieri cenſeatur, The King of England and France, any Duke or Marqueſs of that Kingdom is not bound to the Pope by any oath, yet the Emperour at his creation is thus bound to ſwear according to the Pope's Decretals fabulouſly invented, ſo that the ſupreme Monarch is made to be of a more ſervile condition than any his inferiour Prince———) And 2. by the rights of Kings to remove or erect Patriarchates, and will be farther confirmed in the Negative, if anſwer be firſt given to this Dilemma.

The conceſſion of Kings.

[a] In Goldaſt. de Mon.

A Dilemma againſt the plea drawn from that.

Sect. 8. The authority of the Pope in this Kingdom, which is pretended to be held by the conceſſion of our Kings, was either ſo originally veſted in our Kings, that they might lawfully grant it, to whom they pleaſed, and ſo did lawfully grant it to the Pope; or it was not thus originally veſted in our Kings; If it were not, then was that grant an invalid, null grant, for ſuch are all conceſſions of that which is not ours to give, preſumptions, invaſions, robberies in the giver, which devolve no right to the receiver, and then this is a pitifull claim which is thus founded: But if that authority were ſo veſted in the Kings of England, that they might lawfully grant it to whom they pleaſed, (which is the onely way by which the Pope can pretend to hold any thing by this title of regal conceſſion) then certainly the ſame power remains ſtill veſted in the King to diſpoſe it from him to ſome other as freely, as the ſame King may upon good cauſes remove his Chancellour, or any other of his Officers from his place, and commit it to another (this way of arguing is made uſe of by the Biſhops in Convocation, Anno Chr. 1537. in the Book by them intituled [The Inſtitution of a Chriſtian man]) Or if the ſame power do not ſtill remain in the King, then is the King's power diminiſhed, and he conſequently by this his act, of which we treat, become leſs a King, than formerly he was, And then we know that ſuch acts which make him ſo, are invalid acts, it being acknowledged to be above the power of the King himſelf, to deveſt himſelf and his ſucceſſours of any part of his regal power.

Two ſorts of gifts.

Sect. 9. To which purpoſe it muſt be obſerved, 1. that ſome things are ſo ours, that we may freely uſe them, but cannot freely part with them, as all thoſe things, wherein our propriety is not confined to our perſons, but intailed on our poſterity, and ſuch the regal power is ſuppoſed to be; 2. that as ſome things which are part of our perſonal proprieties, are ſo freely ours to give, that when they are given, they are departed out of our ſelves, and cannot juſtly be by us reſumed again (in which caſe that Maxime of the civil Law ſtands good, data, eo ipſo quo dantur, fiunt accipientis, what is given, by the very act of being given, becomes the goods of the receiver) ſo other things are given to others, ſo as we do not part with them our ſelves; they are as truly, and properly ours, after, as before the conceſſion.

Some revocable.

Sect. 10. Thus the Sun communicates his beams, and with them his warmth and influences, and yet retains all which it thus communicates, and accordingly withdraweth them again. And God the ſpring of all life, and grace, doth ſo communicate each of theſe, that he may, and doth freely withdraw them again, and when he taketh away our breath we dye——— And thus certainly the King, being the fountain of all power and authority, as he is free to communicate this power to one, ſo is he equally free to recall, and communicate it to another, And therefore may as freely beſtow the power of Primate, and chief Metropolitan of England, or (which is all one) of a Patriarch, on the Biſhop of Canterbury, having formerly thought fit to grant it to the Biſhop of Rome, as he or any of his Anceſtours can be deemed to have granted it to the Biſhop of Rome; And then as this being by this means evidenced to be no more than an act of regal power (which the King might lawfully exerciſe) takes off all obligation of obedience in the Biſhops to the Pope, at the firſt minute, that he is by the King deveſted of that power, or declared not to have had it de jure, but onely to have aſſumed it formerly (which freedom from that obedience immediately clears the whole buſineſs of ſchiſm, as that is a departure from the obedience of the lawfull Superiour) ſo will there not want many weighty reaſons, deducible deducible from the ancient Canons, as well as the maximes of civil Government, why the King who may freely place the Primacy, where he pleaſe, ſhould chuſe to place it in a Biſhop and ſubject of his own Nation, rather than in a foreign Biſhop far removed, and him not onely independent from that King, but himſelf enjoying a Principality, or Territory, which is too apparent how willing he is to enlarge unlimitedly, and to improve the conceſſions, which are either acknowledged, or pretended to be made him, to that purpoſe. The reaſonableneſs of revoking it.

Sect. 11. And here it is not amiſs to obſerve, in the Reign of Queen Mary, who was no way favourable to the Reformation in points of Doctrine and Liturgy, and made all ſpeed to repeal what had been done in King Edward's time in that matter, yet 1. that ſhe left not the title of Supreme Head, till the third Parliament of her Reign; and 2. that in the ſecond Parliament, authority is granted her to make, and preſcribe to all ſuch Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, as were erected by Henry the VIII. ſuch Statutes and Orders as ſhould ſeem good to her, and that Statute never repealed but expired: 3. that in her third Parliament it was with much difficulty obtained, that the ſupremacy of the Pope ſhould be acknowledged, the matter being urged by her, as that which concerned the eſtabliſhing the Matrimony of her Mother, and her legitimation, which depended upon the abſolute power of the Pope: 4. that in the fourth year of her Reign, when the Pope ſent Cardinal Petow to be his Legate in England, and to be Biſhop of Sarisbury, ſhe would not permit him to come into the Land, neither could he have that Biſhoprick, which as it was ſome check to the Pope's abſolute ſupremacy, and an aſſertion and vindication of the Regal power, ſo being added to the former it will be leſs ſtrange, that this ſupreme power of the Popes ſhould be by the Biſhops in the Reign of Henry VIII. diſclaimed, and ejected. Title and power of Supreme Head of the Church retained by Q. Mary.

Sect. 12. Upon this bottom the foundation of Reformation being laid in England, the ſuperſtructure was accordingly erected by the King and Biſhops and Clergy in Convocation, but this not all at once, but by diſtinct ſteps and degrees. Somewhat in the Reign of this Henry the VIII. as in the number of the Sacraments, the uſe of the Lord's Prayer, &c. in the Engliſh Tongue, and the tranſlation of the Bible, all reſolved on in Synod, the King which duly aſſembled it, preſiding in it by his Vicar General.

Sect. 13. This was much farther advanced in the time of his Son Edward the VI. who being a Child, and the Laws and Conſtitutions of this Realm committing the exerciſe of the ſupreme power in that caſe, into the hands of a Protectour, what was thus regularly done by that Protectour, cannot be doubted to be of the ſame force, and validity, as if the King had been of age, and done it himſelf; Or if it ſhould, it would be an unanſwerable objection againſt all hereditary, ſucceſſive Monarchy, a maim in that form of Government, which could no way be repaired, there being no amulet in the Crown, which ſecures the life of each King, till his ſucceſſour be of age, nor promiſe from heaven that the Children of ſuch Princes ſhall, by ſucceeding to the Crown, advance by miracle to the years, and abilities of their Parents, So irrational is the ſcoff, and exception of ſome, that what was done in King Edward's days being the Acts of a Child is as ſuch to be vilified and deſpiſed. The advance of the Reformation in King Edward's days.

Sect. 14. In the Reign of this Prince, many Changes were made in the Church, and Receſſions from the Doctrines, and practices of Rome; Beſide that of Images, the lawfulneſs of the marriage of the Clergy was aſſerted, a body of an Engliſh Liturgy formed, and ſettled for publick uſe, the Euchariſt appointed to be adminiſtred to the people in both kinds, &c. and though Biſhop Gardner of Wincheſter, and Biſhop Bonner of London made oppoſition againſt theſe changes, and for ſome misbehaviours herein were impriſon'd, (and two more moderate, learned men, Biſhop Tunſtal of Durham, and Biſhop Day of Chicheſter, upon another ſcore) yet Archbiſhop Cranmer, and the reſt of the Biſhops making up the far greater number, joyned with the Supreme power in the Reformation. And as it is no great marvel, that there ſhould be ſome (ſo few) diſſenters, ſo the puniſhment inflicted on them will not be deemed exceſſive by any, that ſhall compare it with the far ſeverer executions, the fire, and fagot, which were ſoon after in Queen Mary's days inflicted on Archbiſhop Cranmer, Biſhop Ridley, and Biſhop Latimer, as the reward of their diſputing in the Synod againſt Tranſubſtantiation, (and the like cruelties on multitudes more) and the Exiles, and deprivations, which befell ſo many others in her Reign; However this can be no prejudice to the regularity of the Reformation in the Reign of King Edward, wrought, as hath been ſaid, by the Supreme power, with the conſent of the major part of Biſhops.

Sect. 15. That which afterward followed in the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, may be thought more diſtant, and leſs reconcileable to our pretenſions, (not that of her ſex, her being a woman, for ſo was Queen Mary before, which acted ſo vigorouſly for the contrary way; and the conſtitution of our Monarchy inveſts equally either ſex in the plenitude of Regal power, in ſacred, as well as civil affairs, and it was but to raiſe envy againſt the Reformation, that Queen Elizabeth's ſex, as before King Edward's non-age, hath by ſome been thought fit to be mention'd, and cannot by any ſober judgment be admitted to have any force in it) but becauſe, as it is from our Hiſtories more pertinently objected, moſt of the Biſhops were by her deveſted of their dignities, and new created in their ſtead; To this therefore in the laſt place, I muſt apply my ſelf to give ſatisfaction. And 1. In Queen Elizabeth's.

Sect. 16. In this matter, as much as concerns the Ordination of thoſe new Biſhops, that it was performed regularly, according to the Ancient Canons, each by the Impoſition of the hands of three Biſhops, hath been evidently ſet down out of the Records, and vindicated by Mr. Maſon in his Book de Miniſt. Angl. and may there be view'd at large, if the Reader want ſatisfaction in that point.

Sect. 17. As for the ſecond remaining part of the objection which alone is pertinent to this place, it will receive anſwer by theſe degrees, Firſt that the death of Cardinal Pool Archbiſhop of Canterbury, falling near upon the death of her Predeceſſour Queen Mary, it was very regular for Queen Elizabeth to aſſign a ſucceſſour to that See, then vacant, Archbiſhop Parker; ſecondly, that thoſe Biſhops, which in Queen Mary's days had been exiled, and deprived, and had ſurvived that calamity, were with all juſtice reſtored to their dignities; thirdly, that the Biſhops by her deprived, and deveſted of their dignities, were ſo dealt with, for refuſing to take the Oath of Supremacy, formed and enjoyned in the days of Henry the VIII. and in the firſt Parliament of this Queen revived, and the Statutes concerning it reſtored to full force, before it was thus impoſed on them. So that for the juſtice of the cauſe of their deprivation, it depends Immediately upon the Right and power of the Supreme Magiſtrate to make Laws, to impoſe Oaths for the ſecuring his The Creation of new Biſhops in Queen Elizabeth's time, vindicated.

Government, and to inflict the punishments, prescribed by those Laws, on the disobedient; but Originally upon the truth of that decision of the Bishops, and Clergy, and Universities, in the Reign of Henry the VIII. that no authority belonged in this Kingdom of England to the Bishop of Rome, more than to any other foreign Bishop. The former of these I shall be confident to look on as an undoubted truth, in the maintenance of which all Government is concerned, and hath nothing, peculiar to our pretensions, which should suggest a vindication of it in this place, And the second hath, I suppose, been sufficiently cleared in the former Chapters of this discourse, which have examined all the Bishop of Rome's claims to this Supremacy, And both these grounds being acknowledged (or, till they be invalidated, or disproved, supposed) to have truth and force in them, the conclusion will be sufficiently induced, that there was no injustice in that Act of the Queen's, which devested those Bishops, and thus refused to secure her Government, or to approve their fidelity to their lawfull Sovereign.

Sect. 18. Fourthly, that those Bishops being thus deprived, it was most Regular, and Necessary, and that against which no objection is imaginable (that of their due Ordination being formerly cleared) that other Bishops should be nominated, and advanced to those vacant Sees, and that what should be for the future acted by those new Bishops in Convocation was regular, Synodical, and valid beyond all exception in respect of the formality of it.

Sect. 19. Fifthly, that as by the Uniform and joynt consent of these Bishops thus constituted a Declaration of certain Principal Articles of Religion was agreed on, and set out by Order of both Archbishops, Metropolitans, and the rest of the Bishops, for the Unity of Doctrine, to be taught, and holden of all Parsons, Vicars and Curates, &c. and this not before the third of that Queen's Reign, So before this time there had not been, as far as appears, any debate in any former Convocation of that Queen's Reign concerning Religion (onely an offer of a disputation betwixt eight Clergy-men on each side, which came to nothing) but all done by the Parliament's restoring what had been debated, and concluded by former Synods, in the Reigns of King Henry the eighth, and Edward the sixth, without any new deliberation in any present Synod. By this means were revived the Statutes for the Regal Supremacy, as also of the Book of Common-prayer, as it was in the time of Edward the sixth, (with few alterations) which included the abolition of the Romish Missals. And so all this again, as far as it concerned Queen Elizabeth's part in the Reformation, is regularly superstructed on the forementioned foundation of Regal Supremacy (with the concurrence, and advice of Synods) which hath been in the former part of this discourse (I hope, sufficiently) vindicated.

Sect. 20. And that being granted, it cannot be here necessary, or pertinent to descend to the consideration of each several matter of the Change thus wrought in this Church, either as branches of the Reformation, or under the name, or title of it. For our present enquiry being no farther extended, than this, whether the true Church of England, as it stands by Laws established, have in Reforming been guilty of Schism, as that signifies in the first place a recession, and departure from the obedience of our lawfull Superiours, and this being cleared in the Negative, by this one evidence, that all was done by those, to whom, and to whom onely, the rightfull power legally pertained, viz. the King, and Bishops of this Nation, supposing (as now regularly we may, having competently proved it, and answered all the colours, that have been offered against it) that the Pope had no right to our obedience, and consequently that our departure from him is not a departure from our obedience to our superiours, it is presently visible, that all other matters will belong to some other heads of Discourse, and consequently must be debated upon other principles, All variation from the Church of Rome in point of Doctrine if it should (as I believe it will never) be proved to be unjust, falling under the head of Heresie, not of Schism; and for acts of sacrilege, and the like impieties (as certainly Henry the eighth, and some others, cannot be freed from such) they are by us as freely charged upon the actours, as by any Romanist they can be, But yet sacrilege is no more schism, than it is adultery, and the Church, on which one sin hath been committed, cannot be from thence proved to be guilty of every other.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the Second sort of Schism, as that is an Offence against mutual Charity; This divided into three species, and the first here examined.

Sect. 1. BUT beside that first species of Schism, as it is an offence against the subordination, which Christ hath by himself and his Apostles settled in the Church, (from the guilt of which I have hitherto endeavoured to vindicate our Church) another was taken notice of, as it signifies an offence against the mutual unity, and peace, and charity, which Christ left among his Disciples; And to that I must now proceed, as far as the Accusations of the Romanist give us occasion to vindicate our innocence.

Three branches of the second sort of Schism.

Sect. 2. And for method's sake, this branch of Schism may be subdivided into three species. The first is a breach in the Doctrines, or Traditions, a departure from the unity of the Faith, which was once delivered to the Saints; under that head also comprehending the institutions of Christ, of his Apostles, and of the Universal Church of the first and purest ages, whether in Government, or other the like observances and practices: The second is an offence against external peace and Communion Ecclesiastical: The third and last is the want of that charity, which is due from every Christian to every Christian. Beside these I cannot foresee any other species of Schism, and therefore the vindicating our Reformation from all grounds of charge of any of these three, will be the absolving the whole task undertaken in these sheets.

1. A departure from the Unity of Doctrines, or

Sect. 3. For the first it may be considered either in the Bullion, or in the Coin, in the gross, or in the retail, either as it is a departure from those rules appointed by Christ for the founding and upholding his truth in the in the Church, this unity of Doctrine, &c. or else as it is the asserting any particular branch of Doctrine, contrary to Christ's, and the (Apostolical, pure) Churches establishment. Traditions Apostolical.

Sect. 4. And here it is first suggested by the Romanist, that by casting out the authority of the Bishop of Rome, we have cast off the head of all Christian Unity, and so must needs be guilty of Schism, in this first respect. To which the answer is obvious, 1. that the Bishop of Rome was never appointed by Christ to be the head of all Christian Unity, or that Church to be the conservatory (for ever) of all Christian truth, any more than any other Bishop, or Church of the Apostles ordaining, or planting; and whatever can be pretended for the contrary will be easily answered from the grounds already laid, and cleared in the former part of this discourse, concerning the Universal Pastourship of S. Peter's successours, which must not be here so unnecessarily repeated. Our Church vindicated from this, in two branches. In the first, Christ's Rules for upholding the truth.

Sect. 5. Secondly, That the way provided by Christ, and his Apostles for the preserving the unity of the faith, &c. in the Church is fully acknowledged by us, and no way supplanted by our Reformation. That way is made up of two acts of Apostolical providence. First their resolving upon some few heads of special force and efficacy to the planting of Christian life through the World, and preaching, and depositing them in every Church of their plantation. 2. Their establishing an excellent subordination of all inferiour Officers of the Church to the Bishop in every City, of the Bishops in every Province to their Metropolitans, of the Metropolitans in every Region or Διοικησις to Patriarchs, or Primates, allowing also among these such a Primacy of Order, or dignity, as might be proportionable to the Πρῶτος Σίμων in the Scripture, and agreeable to what is by the ancient Canons allowed to the Bishop of Rome; And this standing subordination sufficient for all ordinary uses, and when there should be need of extraordinary remedies, there was then a supply to be had by congregating Councils, Provincial, Patriarchal, General, as hath formerly been shewed. And all this, is most certain, asserted, and acknowledged by every true Son of the Church of England, as zealously, as is pretended by any Romanist. And from hence, by the way, that speech of the learned and excellent Hugo Grotius (which I discern to be made use of by the Romanists, and look'd on with jealousie by others) will, I suppose, receive its due importance, and interpretation, in his Rivet. Apologet. Discuss. p. 255. Restitutionem Christianorum in unum idémque corpus, &c.

Sect. 6. As for the subjection (and dependence) of this Church to the Monarchick power of the Bishop of Rome, this will never be likely to tend to the unity of the whole body, unless first all other Churches of Christians paid that subjection too, and were obliged, and so by duty morally ascertain'd always to continue it (which it is evident the Eastern Churches had not done long before the time of our pretended departure) and 2. unless the Bishop of Rome were in probability able to administer that vast Province, so as would be most to the advantage of the whole body, For which whether he be fitly qualified or no, as it is not demonstrable in the causes, so is it to be looked on, as a Politick Probleme, the truth of which belongs to prudent persons, and such as are by God intrusted with the Flock to judge of, i. e. to the Princes, the nursing Fathers of every Church, who are prudentially, and fatherly to determine for themselves and those that are under them, what is most ordinable to that end, and cannot be obliged to conclude, farther than the motives or premisses will bear, to decree what they do not reasonably, and cordially believe.

Sect. 7. Lastly, for the particular Doctrines wherein we are affirmed by the Romanists to depart from the Unity of the Faith, and so by departing from the unity, to be schismatical, as heretical by departing from the faith, this must be contested by a strict survey of the particular Doctrines, wherein as we make no doubt to approve our selves to any that will judge of the Apostolical Doctrine and Traditions by the Scriptures, and consent of the first 300 years, or the four General Councils, (the most competent witnesses of Apostolical Traditions) so we shall secure our selves of our innocence in this behalf, by that principle acknowledged in our Church, and owned, as the rule by which we are concluded in any debate, or controversie: That whatever is contrary to the doctrine, or practices of those first and purest ages, shall by us (as soon as it thus appears) be renounced, and disclaimed also. Which resolution of rulines, and obedience, will, I suppose, conserve us in the unity of the Faith, and render us approvable to God, though our ignorance (thus unaffected) should betray us to some misunderstandings of those first times, and be an instrument much more probable to lead us into all truth, than the supposed infallibility of the Church of Rome can be imagined to be, which as it leaves the proudest presumer really as liable to errour, as him that acknowledgeth himself most fallible, so it ascertains him to persevere incorrigible whether in the least, or greatest errour, which by fault, or frailty he shall be guilty of. In the second, Particular Doctrines. The Church of England's temper in respect of particular Doctrines.

Sect. 8. This consideration of the humble, docible temper of our Church (together with our professed appeal to those first and purest times, to stand or fall, as by those evidences we shall be adjudged) as it necessarily renders it our infelicity, not our crime, if in judging of Christ's truth, we should be deemed to err, so may it reasonably supersede that larger trouble of the Reader, in this place, which the view and examination of the severals would cost him, it being thus far evident, that it is our avowed wish and our care (should it be denied to be our lot) a special mark of the Church of England's Reformation, to preserve the Unity of the Apostolical Faith and Primitive Practices, as intire, as we would have done Christ's body or garment, and the probability being not weak on our side, that the fact of the crucifying souldiers, which hath so much of our abhorrence and detestation, shall never be our choice, our known, or wilfull guilt, or if it be, that we so far recede from our Profession.

CHAP. IX.

The Second ſpecies of this Schiſm examined, as it is an offence againſt external Peace, or Communion Eccleſiaſtical.

This Church free from breach of Communion Eccleſiaſtical. As appears by ſix Conſiderations. The firſt. The ſecond. The third.

Sect. 1. NOW for the ſecond branch of this ſecond ſort of Schiſm, as it is an offence againſt external Peace, or Communion Eccleſiaſtical; This cannot with any colour be charged on us, of whom theſe ſix things are manifeſt, and that by the tenure of our Reformation, 1. that we have always retained the form of Government in, and under which the Apoſtles founded Eccleſiaſtical Aſſemblies, or Communion, viz. that of the Biſhop, and his inferiour Officers in every Church, and ſo in that reſpect are, in Ignatius his phraſe, ἐντὸς θυσιαστηρίου, within the altar, have no part of that breach of Eccleſiaſtical Communion upon us, which conſiſts in caſting out that Order. 2. That as we maintain that Order, ſo we regularly ſubmit to the exerciſe of it, acknowledge the due authority of theſe Governours, profeſs Canonical Obedience to them, ſubmit to their Cenſures, and Decrees, and give our ſelves up to be ruled by them in all things that belong to their cognizance ſecundum Deum, according to God. 3. That the circumſtances which are neceſſary to the ἐπουσιωσία the aſſembling our ſelves together for the publick worſhip, whether 1. that of place, (our Churches conſecrated to thoſe Offices) or 2. that of time, (the Lord's day, and other primitive Feſtivals and Faſts, and, in their degree every day of the week) or 3. that of forms of Prayer, and Praiſes, celebration of Sacraments, and ſacramentals, Preaching, Catechiſing, &c. or 4. that of Ceremonies, ſuch as the practice of the Primitive Church hath ſent down recommended to us, or laſtly, that of Diſcipline to bind all theſe performances upon every member of the Church in his office, or place, are all entred into our Confeſſions, ſettled by Article, as part of our eſtabliſhment, and ſo the want of either, or all of thoſe are not imputable to our Reformation.

The fourth.

Sect. 2. Fourthly, That in every of theſe three, whatſoever the Romaniſt requires us to add farther to that which we voluntarily, and profeſſedly receive, (1. the ſupreme, tranſcendent, monarchick power of the Pope, 2. the acknowledgment of, and obedience to his ſupremacy, 3. the uſe of more Ceremonies, Feſtivals, &c.) is uſurpation, or impoſition of the preſent Romaniſts, abſolutely without Authority, or precedent from the ancient, Primitive Church, from whom we are ſo unwilling to divide in any thing, that we chuſe a conformity with them, rather than with any later model, and if by receding from the Ordo Romanus in any particular, we do not approve our ſelves to come nearer to the firſt, and pureſt times, it is the avow'd profeſſion of our Church, the wiſh, and purpoſe of it, which I may juſtly ſtyle part of our eſtabliſhment, to reduce, and reſtore that, (whatſoever it is) which is moſt pure, and Primitive inſtead of it.

The fifth.

Sect. 3. Fifthly, That as we exclude no Chriſtian from our Communion, that will either filially, or fraternally embrace it with us, being ready to admit any to our aſſemblies, that acknowledge the Foundation laid by Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, ſo we as earneſtly deſire to be admitted to the like freedom of external Communion with all the members of all other Chriſtian Churches, as oft as occaſion makes us capable of that bleſſing of the one heart, and one lip, and would moſt willingly, by the uſe of the ancient method of literæ Communicatoriæ, maintain this Communion with thoſe, with whom we cannot corporally aſſemble, and particularly with thoſe which live in obedience to the Church of Rome.

The ſixth.

Sect. 4. Sixthly, That the onely hindrances that interpoſe and obſtruct this deſired freedom of external Communion, are wholly imputable to the Romaniſts.

Sect. 5. Firſt, their excommunicating and ſeparating from their aſſemblies all that maintain communion with the Church of England, which we know was done by Bull from the Pope about the tenth year of Q. Elizabeth (before which time thoſe Engliſh, which had not joyned in our Reformation, might, and did come to our aſſemblies, and were never after rejected by us, but upon their avowed contumacy againſt the orders of our Church, which conſequently brought the cenſures on them) and to that it is viſibly conſequent, that we that were caſt out, cannot be ſaid to ſeparate, as in the former part of this diſcourſe hath been demonſtrated.

Sect. 6. Secondly, their impoſing ſuch conditions on their Communion (belief of doctrines, and approbation of practices, which we neither believe, nor approve of, and are ready to conteſt and maintain our Negatives, by grounds that all good Chriſtians ought to be concluded by) that we cannot without ſinning, or ſeeming to ſin againſt conſcience, without wilfull falling on one ſide, or diſſembling and unſound confeſſion on the other ſide, or at leaſt the ſcandal of one of theſe, accept of their communion upon ſuch conditions, as hath formerly been demonſtrated alſo.

A conſideration concerning our Church.

Sect. 7. And in this matter it were very well worthy our conſidering, how far the Articles of our Church of England proceed in accord with the preſent Roman doctrines and practices, and in what particulars ἐπέχομεν, we cannot perſwade our ſelves to conſent to them, and then to offer it to the Umpirage of any rational arbitratour, whether we that unfeignedly profeſs to believe ſo much and no more, nor to be convinced by all the reaſons, and authorities, proofs from Scripture, or the firſt Chriſtian writers (thoſe of the firſt three hundred years) or the four General Councils, produced by them (being in full inclination and deſire of mind, ready to ſubmit upon conviction) are in any reaſon, or equity, or according to any example, or precept of Chriſt, or his Apoſtles, or the ancient, Primitive Church, to be required to offer violence to our minds, and to make an unſound profeſſion, or elſe (for that one guilt of not doing ſo) to be rejected as hereticks, and denied the benefit of Chriſtian Communion, which we heartily deſire to extend and propagate to them which deny it to us. All this thus put together, and applyed to this preſent matter, will certainly vindicate us from all appearance of guilt of this ſecond branch of the ſecond ſort of Schiſm.

CHAP.

CHAP. X.

The third ſpecies of this Schiſm, as an offence againſt that Charity due from every Chriſtian to every Chriſtian examined.

Sect. 1. LAſtly, as Schiſm is an offence againſt that Charity, which is due from every Chriſtian to every Chriſtian, ſo it will be beſt diſtributed (according to what we ſee noted by the Apoſtle, Rom. 14. in the Jewiſh and Gentile Chriſtians) into the judging, and deſpiſing of others, either of which was, if not formally Schiſm, yet ſoon improvable into it, when it would not be repreſſed by the Apoſtles admonitions; The Jewiſh Chriſtians we know judged, and damned all that would not obſerve the Moſaical Law, and would not aſſociate, or communicate with the Gentiles; and the like height Diotrephes, and ſome of the Gentiles believers, who began with the other branch, that of vilifying the weak Jew, at laſt arrived to, not receiving, forbidding to receive, and caſting out the brethren, 3 Joh. 10. And whether the Romaniſts or we, are thus guilty, will ſoon be diſcernible.

Contrary to Charity due from all to all.

1. Judging.
2. Deſpiſing.
Separating the effect of both.

Sect. 2. For the former, that of judging, and ſo ſeparating from their brethren (if yet we may be allowed that title) it is evident by their own acknowledgment, how guilty they are, and how guiltleſs we.

Of judging and ſeparating the Romaniſts guilty ex profeſſo.

Sect. 3. It hath been a ſpecial motive, and argument to gain proſelytes to their party for ſome years, that by our Confeſſion there is ſalvation to be had among them, but in their judgment no poſſible hope of it for us. This weapon of theirs uſed ſo ſtudiouſly againſt us, to anticipate and prejudice, in general, whatſoever can be particularly ſaid to aſſert our doctrines, and practices, will certainly be as uſefull in our hands, as Goliah's ſword in David's to give this wound (I wiſh it may not prove as fatal) to our vaunting enemies; For certainly, if there be any truth in that motive, then are they profeſſedly the men, that judge their brethren, and as confeſſedly we the men, that do not judge them. And if Saint Cyprian's rule be true (who had as well conſidered the nature of Schiſm, and as diligently armed the Chriſtians of his age againſt it, and given us as ſure rules to judge by, in this matter, as any) that they that maintain any difference in opinion againſt other Chriſtians, muſt, if they will avoid the evil of Schiſm, manage it with this temper (neminem damnantes, neminem à communione noſtrâ arcentes) never condemn any, or forbid them our communion, then is the Schiſm (becauſe the uncharitableneſs) on their parts, not on ours. And it is not the ſaying, we are Hereticks, and ſo certainly excluded ſalvation, Schiſmaticks, and ſo out of the Church, the way to ſalvation, that can give this ſanguinary judgment any meeker a title; For that we are ſuch, being as much denied, as any thing, and that negative offered to be proved, and vindicated by all thoſe evidences, by which any matter of Doctrine, (from whence this queſtion depends) can duly be cleared, this unproved affirmation, that we are ſuch, is certainly a petitio principii, a begging of the queſtion, a ſuppoſing that in the debate, which they know we are as far from confeſſing, as they from having proved, and that is the moſt certain proof, that ſuch judging is uncharitable; I wiſh there were not ſo many other as pregnant indications of it.

Sect. 4. And for that of deſpiſing or ſetting at nought the brother, which is the Apoſtle's argument alſo that they walk not charitably, and the effect whereof evident, the caſting them out of the Church, if the cauſe may be concluded by the effect, the guilt lies on the Romaniſts ſide, not on ours (as hath formerly appeared) And truly we are ſo ſenſible of the many prepoſſeſſions, and ſtrong prejudices, which by the advantage of education, the preſcribed credulity to all that the Church ſhall propoſe, the Doctrine of Infallibility, the ſhutting up the Scriptures in an unknown language, the impoſſibility, that the multitude ſhould ſearch, or examine tradition with their own eyes, the proſperous flouriſhing eſtate of the Roman Church (and the perſecutions, and calamities, and expreſſions of God's diſpleaſure on the Church of England) the literal ſound of [Hoc eſt corpus meum] for their principal (eſpouſed) Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, and ſome other the like means, are infuſed into the multitude of men and women, that are brought up without any knowledge of ours, in a firm belief of all their pretenſions, that we are as far from ſetting them at nought, or deſpiſing them, as from that (which by their doing it firſt is made impoſſible for us to be guilty of) the caſting them out of the Church.

Of deſpiſing. We are guiltleſs of it.

Sect. 5. I foreſee not any objection, which may give me temptation, or excuſe farther to enlarge on this matter, And profeſs not to know any other branch of Schiſm, or colour of faſtening that guilt upon our Church made uſe of by any, which hath not been either prevented in the grounds of this diſcourſe, or diſtinctly taken notice of, and competently vindicated, as far as the deſign'd brevity would permit.

CHAP.

CHAP. XI.

Concerning the preſent Perſecution of the Church of England, and the advantages, ſought from thence.

The Romaniſts argument from our preſent condition of Perſecution.

Sect. 1. OUR Eſtabliſhment being thus freed from Schiſm, I ſhall not now entertain my ſelf with any fear, that the Perſecution, which we are under, will involve us in it. Yet can I not but take notice of the ſtyle, that ſome Romaniſts have in theſe laſt years, on this occaſion, choſen to make uſe of, calling us [the late Church of England] The interpretation whereof is to my underſtanding this, that the calamities, under which now we ſuffer, have made us ceaſe to be a Church: And therefore having learned, and abundantly experimented, what ſcandal the Croſs hath always carried along with it, how willing enemies are to take advantage, and ground arguments on afflictions, and how ordinary it is for friends, to take impreſſions from ſuch ſenſible, carnal motives, and being ſecured by the ſtory of the ancient Gnoſticks, that it is neither ſcandalous exceſs of fear, nor want of charity, to think it poſſible, that this, as other ancient hereſies, may now as in a Platonick year (if not carefully warded) return on us, as in a revolution, I ſhall therefore conclude this paper with an attempt to remove this prejudice; The utmoſt whereof being formed into an objection, is this, that it is abſolutely neceſſary to communicate with ſome one viſible Church, that now the Church of England is not ſuch, and conſequently that it muſt be caſt off, and the Roman Church ſo illuſtriouſly viſible, be taken up inſtead of it.

Anſwered.

Sect. 2. To this reſerve I ſhall make my returns by theſe degrees, Firſt, that by the making this objection, or drawing any argument againſt any member of the Church of England from the preſent occaſions, or improſperous circumſtances of affairs, It muſt be ſuppoſed, that twenty years ſince, this perſon, the ſuppoſed ſubject of diſcourſe, living regularly in this Church, under his ſuperiours, was not then chargeable with this crime of not communicating with a viſible Church.

Sect. 3. This conſequent I ſhall not be ſo much my own flatterer as to think it will be allowed me by the Romaniſt, who will, I know, at another time accuſe the whole Church of England (ever ſince the Reformation) of Schiſm from the Catholick Church, and make the communicating with it twenty years ſince, as dangerous as now the not communicating with any: But the reaſon of my laying this foundation is, to ſhew the vanity of the preſent objection, For if the Church of England twenty years ſince, were not a Church, but a ſociety of Schiſmaticks, not a particular Church (which, if ſo, muſt be a part, or member of the Univerſal, and ſuch it is not, if it be truly ſeparated from that body, in the unity of which it is obliged to remain) but a ſeparated, and torn off, and ſo a liveleſs ejected branch, then whatſoever hath now befallen us, and the conſequence of that, the ſuppoſed impoſſibility of communicating with the Church of England, will but leave us where we were, the impoſſibility of communicating with a ſchiſmatical ſociety, being not chargeable on us, as a crime, by them, who make the communicating with all ſuch ſocieties ſo damnable; And therefore I ſay, to the making this any objection, 'tis neceſſary, that that be ſuppoſed, which I have for that cauſe laid as my foundation, that twenty years ſince a member of the Engliſh Church was not under this guilt of not communicating with ſome one viſible Church; And if then he were not, (or, for diſcourſe ſake, be by the objectour ſuppoſed not to have been) then it infallibly, and irrefragably follows (which is the ſecond propoſition) that he that twenty years ſince was not under this guilt of not communicating —— is either not guilty of it now, or elſe hath voluntary committed or omitted ſomewhat, which commiſſion or omiſſion hath been the contracting of this guilt. For that ſomewhat, which hath not been his choice, ſhall become his crime, that what hath been his ſaddeſt part of infelicity, the evil againſt which he hath moſt induſtriouſly contended, ſhould be accounted his offence, when it is his puniſhment, I ſhall not fear will be affirmed by any.

Sect. 4. Thirdly then, the buſineſs is brought to this iſſue, that that perſon, which is the ſubject of our diſcourſe (he that twenty years ſince was a member of the Church of England) be now proved by ſome commiſſion or omiſſion of his, voluntarily to have contracted this guilt, or elſe be abſolved, and freed from it; If he have contracted it, it muſt be by ſome irregularity of actions, contrary to the ſtanding rule and Canons of this Church; or by diſobedience to ſome commands of his Eccleſiaſtical Superiours; And as in neither of theſe I ſhall excuſe any that hath been guilty, ſo if, being not fallen under the actual Cenſures of the Church for it, he now timely and ſincerely return with contrition, and reformation, I ſhall hope it will not be imputed to him; But however this cannot be inſiſted on by the objectour, becauſe I ſpeak, and ſo muſt he, of him that hath lived regularly (not of him that hath not) And of him 'tis apparent, that all that he hath done, is, to adhere to his former principles, when others have not, to have teſtified his conſtancy with (not onely venturing but) actually loſing either poſſeſſions, or liberty (and the benefit of Eccleſiaſtical aſſemblies) rather than he would joyn, or appear to joyn with Schiſmaticks, when others have made all worldly advantages by the rupture; In a word, that he hath been patient, and not fainted; and never departed from his rule, though it have coſt him dear to ſtick faſt to it; And I hope no body will be ſo uncharitable, as to grieve, and gall him, whom God hath thus ſuffered to be chaſtiſed, upon no other provocation, but this, his having been thus afflicted and perſecuted. This is too clear a truth to need confirming, and yet this is the utmoſt, that it can be driven to ſuppoſing the moſt that the objection can be imagined to ſuppoſe, viz. that the Church of England is now inviſible.

Sect. 5. But then in the fourth place, it muſt be added, that as yet, Bleſſed be God, the Church of England is not inviſible; It is ſtill preſerved in Biſhops and Presbyters rightly ordained, and multitudes rightly baptized, none of which have fallen off from their profeſſion; And the onely thing imaginable to be objected in this point, being this, that the ſchiſm hath ſo far been extended by the force, that many, if not moſt

Churches

Churches Parochial are filled by thoſe, who have ſet up a new, or a no-form of worſhip, and ſo that many men cannot any otherwiſe, than in private families, ſerve God, after the Church-way, that ſure will be of little weight, when the Romaniſts are remembred to be the objectours, who cannot but know, that this is the onely way, that they have had of ſerving God in this Kingdom, theſe many years, and that the night-meetings of the Primitive Chriſtians in dens and caves are as pertinent to the juſtifying of our condition, as they can be of any, and when 'tis certain, that the ἐγκατάλειψις τῆς ἐπισυναγωγῆς, the forſaking of the aſſemblies, Heb. 10. 25. is not ἑκούσιον, our wilfull fault, ver. 26. but onely our unhappy lot, who are forced either not to frequent the aſſemblies, or elſe to incourage (and incur the ſcandal of ſeeming to approve) the practices of thoſe that have departed from the Church. That we do not decline order, or publick communion, and conſequently are not to be charged for not enjoying thoſe benefits of it, which we vehemently thirſt after, is evident by the extenſive nature of our perſecution, the ſame tempeſt having with us thrown out all order, and form, Biſhops, and Liturgy together, and to that curſtneſs of theirs, and not to any obſtinateneſs or unreconcileableneſs of ours (which alone were the guilt of non-communion) is all that unhappineſs of the conſtant ſons of the preſent Engliſh Church to be imputed, in which alone this whole objection is founded.

Sect. 6. I cannot diſcern any farther appearance of difficulty in this matter, and therefore ſhall no farther lengthen this Appendage, than by offering it to the conſideration of the indifferent Reader, whether this objection can ever in future times be improvable into a charge againſt us, or our poſterity, as long as either Biſhops ſtand, and continue to ordain among us, or it is not our faults that they do not ſtand. To which purpoſe it may be remembred, what befell the Jews whether under the Zelots fury, or the Romans yoke; The former threw out the lawfull ſucceſſive High Prieſts, and Prieſts of the ſons of Aaron, and put into thoſe ſacred offices the moſt ignorant ruſticks, ſome ſo void of all degree of knowledge, ſaith Joſephus, that they knew not what the very word [Prieſt] ſignified. The Roman Conquerours by their Procuratours put in annually whom they pleaſed to chuſe (without conſideration of the Aaronical line) into the Chief Prieſts Office; I ſhall here demand of any, Whether (ſuppoſing and granting it as undeniable, that the Zelots were formally Schiſmaticks, or with ſome improvement, in Joſephus his ſtyle στασιασταὶ, ſeditious) there can be any ground of reaſon, or equity, to involve, or conclude under the ſame guilt thoſe that lived under thoſe impoſed, uſurping High Prieſts, ſuppoſing thoſe inferiours to have been as far from conſenting to the continuance, as to the beginning of ſuch uſurpation, and that the circumſtances were ſuch, that they lay not under the appearance of doing, what they did not, and ſo had not the ſcandal, any more, than the reality of that guilt. The Reader, I ſuppoſe, will be able to anſwer this Quere to himſelf, and ſuperſede all neceſſity of making up the Parallel.

What this may come to in the future.

Sect. 7. And then I have at this time no farther exerciſe for him, but that he will joyn in ardent prayers with me, that God will reſtore that which is loſt, reduce that heavenly grace, and incomparable bleſſing of Chriſtian peace and holy communion among all that have received the honour of being called by his name, that we may all mind the ſame thing, fix the ſame common deſigns, love, and aid, and promote one anothers good, unanimouſly glorifie him here with one tongue, and heart, that we may all be glorified with him, and ſing joynt Hoſannahs, and Hallelujahs to him to all eternity. Amen.

OR,

Seaſonable Exhortatory to all true Sons of the Church of England.

CHAP. I.

An Introductive reflexion on our preſent condition.

Sect. 1. IN this ſad conjuncture of affairs, when thoſe whoſe Office it is to ſpeak to the People from God, and to God from the People, are ſolemnly forbidden all publick diſcharge of theſe, and all other Branches of that Sacred Function ſo uſefull to make up the breach, to reconcile the enmity betwixt an angry God, and a ſinfull Land; It may not, I preſume, and I hope it will not, be deemed by any, either impertinent or unſeaſonable, to make ſome attempt to ſupply thoſe wants, and remove thoſe preſſures, which may otherwiſe lie too heavily unſupportable on thoſe our weak Brethren's Souls, towards whom the example of Chriſt's bowels, and bloudſhedding may reaſonably expect to be anſwered with our utmoſt compaſſion.

Sect. 2. In obedience therefore to opportunity, which may poſſibly be a duty incumbent on us, (ſince, Rom. 12. 11. the Greek Copies of greateſt authority reade καιρῷ δουλεύειν ſerving the ſeaſon, inſtead of κυρίῳ the Lord) I ſhall now, though the unworthieſt of all my many Brethren, aſſume this venerable Office of being a Remembrancer to the people of God, even to all thoſe who have been brought forth unto Chriſt by our pretious dear perſecuted Mother, the Church of England, and remain ſtill conſtant to that faith, which from her breaſts they have ſuckt, and are not yet ſcandalized in her.

Sect. 3. And for the firſt ſtep of my addreſs, it cannot be more regular, than by beholding and repreſenting a while the peculiarity of our preſent condition, conſidered onely in the ſad matter of it (without any unkind reflexion on the inflicters) that no one of us may miſs to diſcern the nature of that judgment, that by God's juſt vengeance, and all-wiſe Providence, is permitted to fall, and lie upon us, even the ſaddeſt addition to the former weight that our unparallel'd ſins and provocations could ſolicite God to tolerate, or ſuggeſt to others to inflict, or to the patients to fear, or expect in this life.

Sect. 4. Some images we have of it in ſacred Writ. As firſt the expulſing of our firſt Parents, and in them of all God's people, at one interdict, out of the Garden of God, that lively embleme of a pure Reformed Church; and a flaming ſword, ſent to back that interdict, to guard the way of the tree of life, to keep thoſe, who moſt deſired, from taſting of it: And the ſad poſitive penalties, which attended that, the ſweat and agony of their combat with the Briers and Thorns, were nothing in compariſon with the vaſt diſmal privation, and interciſion of thoſe bleſſed advantages, all which were deſigned the daily fruits and enjoyments of that Paradiſe.

Sect. 5. Add to this the captive Ark, with Ichabod inſcribed on it, the departure of the Schechina, the Majeſtick preſence of the Lord, and with it the glory from Iſrael; the very news whereof was, in God's own judgment, ſuch, as that the ears of every one that heard it ſhould tingle, and the effect yet more direfull to old Eli, whoſe but mildneſs and want of due ſeverity had ſomewhat contributed toward it: The greatneſs of which puniſhment to the diſcomfited Iſraelites, is much more agreeable, and uſefull matter of meditation to us at this time, than the inauſpicious conſequents thereof to thoſe who took it captive, the Emerods and the ruinous proſtration of their Dagon, and the weight of God's hand on the men of Aſhdod, and Gath, and Ekron, who were any way guilty of taking, or acceſſory to the withholding it.

Sect. 6. Beſide theſe, the Prophets both of the Old and New Teſtament have yielded many diſmal adumbrations, their Pencils advancing as high as to the Sun's being turned into darkneſs and the Moon into bloud, the caſting down of the Hoſt, and of the Stars to the ground; ſome in calmer ſtyle to repreſent the deportation of the worſhippers into a ſtrange Country, from the Garden of Eden into a deſolate Wilderneſs, from Sion unto Babylon; others in the ſharper accent of the threefold woe in [a] Joſephus and the [b] Apocalyps, to ſet out the captivity of the very worſhip and Temple it ſelf; deſtroying the Sanctuary, cauſing the Sacrifice and Oblation to ceaſe, baniſhing even their eyes and thoughts from the wonted joy and delight of both (the καλὴ ἁγία, the holy convocation, and the beauty of that holineſs) and of this the concluſion is but equitable, this is a lamentation, and it ſhall be for a lamentation.

[a] See Euſeb. l. 3. c. 13.
[b] Rev. 8. 13.

Sect. 7. Laſtly, to come nearer home, to the moſt flouriſhing, once pureſt, Chriſtian Aſſemblies, we have in viſion from S. John in his exile, predictions of Churches, and their Angels, both threatned a deportation, of removing Epheſus her Candleſtick out of the place, putting the Lamp thereof (fitly qualified to have inlightned the whole room) under the narrow bounds of a Bed or Buſhel, of delivering up whole Aſſemblies to Satan, that he may caſt them into priſon, ſentencing them to black and dark reſtraints, the ſins of Profeſſours being the Forges or Moulds of ſuch more than Iron Fetters, whereby even the Word of God is taught to be bound, when the free uſe of it hath been abuſed by them.

Sect. 8. That theſe are the very lines, that make up the face of ſorrow, that is at preſent on this Church, is none of the advertiſements, that we can ſtand in need of at this time, the matter it ſelf ſpeaks too loud, to be news to any of us.

Sect. 9. The doubts that are more apt to exerciſe mens thoughts are founded in the acknowledgment of it, and every one hath borrowed his Objection or Argument from one of Job's friends, to add ſome weight of ſorrow to her whom God hath afflicted. A few of theſe it may be pertinent to examine a while, inſtead of farther inlarging on our Sylvodia.

CHAP. II.

A firſt Objection, or Argument of our guilt, drawn from our preſent condition; anſwered in the former branch of it; The judgment apportioned to our ſins.

Sect. 1. IT is firſt made matter of Argument againſt our Church, and eſtabliſhment, that God hath found us out, that it is becauſe of tranſgreſſions, that an hoſt hath been given againſt the daily Sacrifice, and therein hath practiſed, and proſpered, and that proſperouſneſs interpreted to be God's own deciſion, as ſignal, as any reſponſe from the Ephod, a ſentence by Urim and Thummim, that it is no other than the quarrel of God, which he hath thus ſignally managed againſt us.

Sect. 2. This Argument thus propoſed hath ſomewhat which muſt be granted, and by no means denied by us; and for the other part, wherein it is fallacious, it brings ſufficient light with it, to aſſiſt us in the diſcovery of the Paralogiſm. And it may be worth the while diſtinctly to conſider it, in theſe two branches of it.

Sect. 3. Firſt I ſay, it muſt not be denied, but that our ſins have found us out, all the puniſhments we have undergone, being but the juſt, and withall merciſull reward of our ſins.

Sect. 4. For although we are by our Saviour's anſwer, Luke 13. 3. reſtrain'd from making ſuch inferences of other men, to conclude their guilts by their ſufferings, though Job's friends are rebuked for this kind of Logick, arguing his unſincerity from the preſſures that fell upon him, yet ſuch methods are very ſafe to be uſed by our ſelves toward our ſelves. We are now obliged, and never more loudly called on to judge our ſelves, though it be not allowed to any man elſe to judge us upon theſe premiſſes.

Sect. 5. It is, I ſay, true beyond all contradiction, and never more applicable to any, than to us, that all God's puniſhments, eſpecially his ſpiritual, and heavieſt ſort of them, are brought upon men by their ſins. The lover of ſouls, the patient and long-ſuffering Father of all conſolations and mercies, never puts on the guiſe, or armature of an enemy, but when our methods have ſuggeſted this, and our unreformed ſins made it doubly neceſſary, to vindicate himſelf, and to chaſtiſe us. And herein how bitter ſoever our portion prove, though to have our lot with Admah and Zeboim, to be thrown away as ſtraw to the Dunghill, or unprofitable ſervants into utter darkneſs, yet our hands are on our mouths, the honour of a moſt perfect righteouſneſs belongeth unto our Judge, and to us confuſion of face, as at this day.

Sect. 6. And we ſhall be foully to blame, if theſe ſo generous medicaments do not, in ſome proportion to the wiſedom and deſign of our great Phyſician, prove effectually operative, beyond all the former gentler methods, if the ſins that have lain diſguiſed in their cloſeſt concealments, kept ſo ſtrictly from the eyes of men, and, in our deſign, of God himſelf, that they have even been unknown to our ſelves, do not now, upon this ſcrutiny, give God the honour, come forth and offer themſelves to juſtice.

Sect. 7. This is indeed but our juſt return to our ſins finding us out, for us to find out our ſins, to act this one revenge on them, to deliver thoſe up to wrath, which have ſo ſignally delivered up us. And inſtead of ſhaking off, or taking leave of this part of the Argument too haſtily, I ſhall deſire to give it its full ſcope, to reap as much benefit by it, as we may, and take notice of ſome (at leaſt) of thoſe guilts, which the ſignatures we diſcern in the judgment, the lines in this hand of God, do, according to the rules of the ſteadieſt augury, point out and diſcover to us.

Sect. 8. And 1. The deep, though moſt cauſleſs diſpleaſure, under which the Liturgy of our Church is fallen, is a ſhrewd indication of the great coldneſs and indevotion, ſo ſcandalouſly frequent among us, of the formal perfunctory performance of our offices, nay, of the many foul profane mixtures, which have ſo frequently interpoſed, and by a kind of faſcination converted the moſt ſpotleſs Sacrifice into the very lame and the ſick, the pureſt unleavened offering into bitter polluted bread upon God's Altar, and then no marvel that God ſhould have no pleaſure, and at length refuſe to accept an offering from ſuch myſtæ.

Mal. 1. 8. 7. 10.

Sect. 9. We know the unwaſht hands that brought it, defamed the Sacrifice of God's own ordaining, blaſted the very incenſe and fat of fed beaſts, the Sabbaths and calling of Aſſemblies, and turned them into mere abominations; and then what wonder that what he deteſts and cannot away with, he ſhould permit to be deſtroyed? lay down that weight, which he is weary to bear? ſuffer that to be deemed an abomination, and uſed accordingly, which our unſanctified uſage hath made ſuch?

Iſai. 1. 13. 11. 14.

Sect. 10. To deſcend to ſome particulars; Our continued obſtinate unreformed ſins have made forms of confeſſion and contrition unfit to be taken into our mouths; thoſe cannot be repeated by ſuch, without groſs hypocriſie and belying our ſelves before God and Men, and then what poſſibility is there, that the Miniſterial Abſolution ſhould with any juſtice be applied to us?

Sect. 11.

Sect. 11. And for that sacred form of words, which Christ commanded us to use in our addresses to our Father, [When ye pray, say, Our Father——] there needs no other argument for the discountenancing of it (and Hell it self can yield no other, though search hath been made into all Topicks to find some) this one is sufficient for the rending it from us, our unqualifiedness for the rehearsing the several petitions of it.

Sect. 12. We that are so far from our due charity to others, that we are not at unity within our selves, that live so unlike children, that we have not so much as the livery of the servants of God, with what face can we hourly and solemnly invoke our Father? We that do actually with horrid oaths defile, and reproach the name of God, cannot be thought to be in earnest, when we require it may be hallowed. We that like Rebels have dethroned God out of our hearts, cannot without the same mockery that the Souldiers were guilty of in the crown of thorns and purple robe, and ironical salutation, instyle him King, or pray for that coming of his Kingdom. And as long as we murine, and repine at the execution of God's will in Heaven, it is not possible we should heartily beg that honour of transcribing the Angels pattern of chearfull diligent obedience to his will on earth. Our wants may seem indeed to qualifie us for an ardent address of the fourth Petition; but our surfeiting on Manna makes us of all others the least fit to go out to gather it: And the bread that came down from Heaven being so neglected by us, with what face can we ask that other, which we mean but to consume upon our lusts? But beyond all, we are most unqualified for that Petition wherein we set our forgiving of trespassers, as the pattern for God to copy out in forgiving us. 'Tis but just that they which are implacable to enemies, should be excluded from, if they will not voluntarily renounce all part in this Prayer, this Legacy of Christ's to the mercifull: Why should they be inclinable to use a form, which is so ill fitted to their constitutions, an imprecation on those whom they tender most dearly? And yet those which are most unwilling to lose their right in this donative, have not been, to that degree they ought, mindfull of the condition, without which they do but call for vengeance upon their own heads, when they are most importunate for mercy and forgiveness. In a word, they that solicite and even court temptations, invade sin and Satan in his own territories, not to subdue, but to be subdued by him, how can they pray not to be led into temptation, or be reconciled to themselves for hoping deliverance from those evils, which themselves have brought down upon themselves? John 13. 3.

Sect. 13. As for the Sacraments, they also may deserve to be reflected on a while by us.

Sect. 14. The Baptism of Infants is well known to have of late found great opposition among us, many with some earnestness, as it were their solid concernment, denying their tender years the enjoyment of this privilege, whereby the benefits of the death of Christ (of which the Catholick Church against the Pelagians defined all that are born in sin, to stand in need) are, according to his institution, sealed unto them.

Sect. 15. And for others which retaining kindness to the Directory, do in obedience thereto, maintain Infant Baptism, yet have they taken away the form of abrenunciation, though such as hath been universally practised in the Church of [a] all Ages, and that as delivered to them by the [b] Apostles themselves, and in every word almost of that form which is retained in our [c] Liturgy, and that extended to the tenderest [d] Infants: Onely instead of this the people are appointed to be taught, [e] That all that are baptized do renounce, and by their baptism are bound to fight against the Devil, the World, and the Flesh,] Which yet cannot with any truth be affirmed of those, that neither doe it by themselves, nor by their proxies. And 'tis not sufficient to say, they doe it interpretatively, for unless it have been the constant custome of the Church, that they who are baptized should use forms of abrenunciation, they that are baptized, without using them, cannot be pretended to doe it interpretatively, and if it have been the constant custome, then how can they be excused, that have resolvedly omitted it? And besides, the condition of Covenants (such is abrenunciation here) ought to be expresst, and so the Church from the Apostles hath always exacted the expressing it, before the sealing of this Covenant. And yet, I say, this, though it be such an Apostolical Rite, containing no unconsiderable, supervacaneous condition, and qualification in the person baptized, is by interdicting the administration of Baptism according to the ancient order of our Church, or by those which have continued constant to that order, endeavoured to be superseded and removed from among us.

Sect. 17.

Sect. 17. The greatneſs of that crime of reſcinding oaths, and renouncing abrenunciations, was that which made the ancient diſcipline of the Church ſo ſevere againſt every preſumptuous act of ſin after baptiſm, in reſpect of the heightning circumſtances of ſuch, drawn from the ſolemnity of that vow againſt which they were committed, and of that preſence in which that vow was made, and of [f] that weight, which is ſet upon it by God, and of that judgment which attends every breach of it. And our ſcandalous negligence in this kind is by this interdict, ſignally pointed out to us; 'tis pity we ſhould ever want any more admonitions, or venture again upon one ſuch provocation, leſt a worſe thing yet happen to us, this being, if rightly conſidered, bad enough already.

[f] Παλιν φησιν ἰδου ὁτι δυο λίχνοι μαλιστα καθ' ἑαυτὸν τὸν φειδωλοτατον ἄρχειν ἐγχειρουσι τῆς τῶν ὅλων βιβλου· ἐπιδειν τουτων ἑκατερον η διαπεπιδυρω τόπος ἦν, ὡς ἐξελεσθαι κελευον. Cyril. Hieroſ. Katηχ. μυσταγ. 2. p. 510.

Sect. 18. In like manner and upon the ſame grounds of our unreformed ſins, it is, that the Sacrament of Chriſt's body and bloud ſhould be in all juſtice withdrawn from thoſe, who have no way approved themſelves for the eating of that bread and drinking that cup, this greateſt ſeverity being by our unprepared hearts converted into the onely ſeaſonable mercy; it being little for the advantage (or even the ſenſuality) of the Swine, to have the trampling of Pearls under their feet, and as little for the unworthy receivers to deal after the ſame manner with the bloud of the Covenant.

Sect. 19. And why ſhould the Sacramentals eſcape better, than the Sacraments? Marriage we know is become ſo deformed among us, ſo extremely unlike the union betwixt Chriſt and his Church, by which S. Paul thought meet to reſemble it, the band is ſo frequently and ſo ſcandalouſly torn aſunder, the deſigns of it ordinarily ſo very unlike what they ought to be, ſo more than polluted by either earthly or ſenſual conſiderations; that the myſterious band is in danger to become ὅλη σὰρξ, all Fleſh, nothing but luxury and brutiſhneſs, and in proportion thereto the very Rites of it ſo wholly transformed from the γάμοι or nuptial Feaſts in Scripture (honoured by Chriſt's preſence) into the Saturnalia or Heathen Riots in Macrobius, that it were even a reproach to the Churches Service, eſpecially to the offertory, and Sacrament of Chriſt's body (which our Rubrick exacts indiſpenſably from the married couple at the time of their eſpouſals) to bear part in ſuch kind of ſolemnities. And to theſe, and the like provocations we may reaſonably impute it, that the binding and bleſſing thoſe bands, and rendring them truly ſacred, to which the Biſhops or Presbyters hands were [g] always thought neceſſary from the Apoſtles days through all ages of the Church over all the World, is now ſolemnly laid aſide, and no image of it reſerved to the Church, the Presbyterian Miniſter, as well as the Prelatiſt (which in other particulars have not the like fellowſhip) not onely the Liturgy but the Directory deemed ſuperfluous, and equally impertinent in this matter.

Sect. 20. And ſo the Office for Burial, which is now under the like preſcription, may well be our ſeaſonable admonition, and memorative of the ſublime and ſacred uſes, to which our living bodies were by God deſigned, even to the ναοὶ ἔμψυχοι, the animate walking temples of his Spirit, and to bear their parts with the ſoul in all the devotions it offers up (the eye, the hand, the knee, the tongue, being thus obliged, as well as the heart) but are commonly ſo obſtinately withdrawn from all holy offices, and ſo profaned and polluted with our unſanctified practices, that as to ſo many felo's de ſe, ſo many ſacrilegious, anathematized perſons, the burial of an Aſs or Dog is but fitly apportion'd, and upon that account all more decent ceremonies or regard, all offerings for the dead, though but for a joyfull reſurrection, withdrawn from us.

Sect. 21. And even the Creeds of the Catholick Church, that great depoſitum, which the Apoſtles in their ſeveral plantations left as the ſummary of all that was to be believed to our ſouls health, and foundation of all Chriſtian practice, and reformation, together with the Nicene (or Conſtantinopolitan) and Athanaſian inlargements of that, for the ſecuring that depoſitum, and for the expulſing all Hereſies, riſen up againſt it. All theſe now being fallen under the ſame oſtraciſm, with the other parts of the inheritance of the Church, muſt ſerve to advertiſe us, that a pure faith attended with impure lives, foundations of reformation laid by God, without any conformable ſuperſtructures of ours, are like the talent laid up in a Napkin, ἀπολελαχέναι, teſtifications, and ſelf-confeſſions of an unprofitable wicked ſervant, and ſo very fit to be taken away from them, who have made ſuch unchriſtian uſes of them.

Sect. 22. The Solifidian that muſt be ſaved by his Faith without works, and hath found out artifices to elude Saint James's exhortation and reſolution, that ſuch a faith will never ſave or juſtifie any, well deſerves to have his amulet taken away from him, to be deprived of the inſtrument of his deſtructive ſecurity, as the Jews were of the Temple of the Lord, when that was become the great Sanctuary, and reſerve of ſafety for all their unſanctified practices.

Sect. 23. As for the contempt of the perſons of thoſe that have been ſet apart to that venerable office of waiting on God's Altar, and at length the interdict that is fallen upon them, there be many matters of ſeaſonable admonition, which ſeem to be deſigned us thereby. Firſt, It may mind us of a conſiderable defect.

Sect. 24. For though the four Ember weeks were according to ancient cuſtome preſerved for faſting and praying, and that in order to that buſineſs of greateſt weight, Praying to the Lord of the harveſt that he would ſend forth fit labourers into the harveſt (therein tranſcribing the example of the Apoſtolick Church, Acts 13.3.) yet there being no ſpecial ſervice appointed in our Liturgy for thoſe times, 'tis too probable, that duty being left to every man's voluntary, private devotions, hath been very much neglected, which neglect was therefore thus to receive its chaſtiſement from God.

Sect. 25. Secondly, The admiſſion of ſome men into that calling which were not duly qualified for it; and the negligent and unworthy performances of the offices of ſo ſacred a function, and the many profane mixtures, the ſeeking our own wealth, and eaſe, and praiſe, &c. qualifying us for that contempt, and ruine, ruine, which is now fallen upon us; and laſtly the unprofitableneſs of the people in the midſt of very plentifull means of inſtruction, were all fit to be thus diſciplin'd with a famine of the word, or unwholſome food in exchange for that ἄδολον γάλα, ſincere and unmixt, which began to be nauſeated. And many other ſad reflexions this may ſeaſonably ſuggeſt to us.

Sect. 26. And ſo in like manner for holy times, and places, which are fallen under ſo great diſpleaſure, and contempt, even thoſe that have been conſecrated not onely to the honourable memory and imitation of the Apoſtles and Saints and Martyrs of God, but even to the commemoration of the moſt glorious myſteries of our redemption, the moſt ſignal mercies of Chriſt himſelf, the deprivation of theſe bleſſed ſeaſons and advantages cannot but mind us how they have been formerly neglected, and even deſpiſed, and ſo either way profaned, and ſacrilegiouſly handled by us, inſtead of being inſtrumental to the inciting and advancing (as they were ſure deſigned) the works of holineſs in us.

Sect. 27. In a word (to cut off, and omit many particulars in this large, and vaſt field of uſefull meditation, beſeeching every man to examine his guilts by ſuch reflexions as theſe) when the characters, or diſcriminative marks of the Engliſh Reformation are principally two, one the conforming all our Doctrines to the Primitive Antiquity, receiving all genuine Apoſtolical Traditions for our rule both in matters of Faith and Government; the other in uniting that καλὴ συμμετρία fair, beautifull pair of Faith and Works, in the ſame degree of neceſſity and conditionality both to our juſtification, and ſalvation, and to all the good works of juſtice and mercy, which the Romaniſt ſpeaks of, adjoyning that other moſt eminent one of humility, attributing nothing to our ſelves, when we have done all, but all to the glory of the mercy, and grace of God, purchaſed for us by Chriſt; 'Tis but juſt that they which have walkt unworthy of ſuch guides and rules as theſe, lived ſo contrary to our profeſſion, ſhould at length be deprived of both, not onely to have our two ſtaves broken, Beauty and Bands, the ſymbols of order and unity, both which have now for ſome years taken their leaves of us, but even to have the whole Fabrick demoliſhed, the houſe to follow the pillars fate, and ſo to be left; and abide without a Sacrifice, and without an Image, and without an Ephod, and without Teraphim, deprived of all our ornaments, left naked and bare, when we had miſuſed our beauty unto wantonneſs. Thus when the Devil was turned out of his habitation, and nothing followed but the ſweeping and garniſhing the houſe, and keeping it empty of any better gueſt; the iſſue is, the Devil ſoon returns again, from whence he came out, and brings ſeven ſpirits worſe than himſelf, and the end of that ſtate is worſe than the beginning. Hoſ. 3. 4.

Sect. 28. And ſo ſtill the taking of the Ark, and the breaking the High Prieſt's neck, and the ſlaying his Sons, and many more, in that diſcomfiture, are all far from new or ſtrange, being but the proper natural effects of the profanations, which not the Ark it ſelf (that was built every pin of it according to God's direction) but the Sacrificers, not the Religion, but the worſhippers were ſo ſcandalouſly guilty of.

Sect. 29. Thus we that are taught by Chriſt to love our enemies, and by Nature, and natural kindneſs to our ſelves, to receive all profit we may, by their oppoſitions, muſt make our advantage of the firſt part of the objection, diſtinguiſhed betwixt the innocence or guiltleſneſs (nay more than ſo, fruitfulneſs and goodneſs) of the land, and the barrenneſs and wickedneſs and provocations of them that dwell therein, for whoſe ſake it is regular with God, to make that fruitfull land barren, to convert the Milk and Honey of Canaan into Gall and Wormwood, to leave it to imitate, and copy out the temper of the inhabitants (whom yet his own hand of tranſcendent ſpecial mercy had once plantèd there) to ſuffer it to petrifie and degenerate (as Geographers tell us of that once good Land) into Rock and Mine, at once to puniſh and reproach their obdurate impenitent hearts: And yet ſtill diſcerning the bleſſedneſs of that Canaan, both in it ſelf and to us, as long as we were thought worthy to enjoy it, and indeed judging by this one κρεῖττον (if we wanted all others) that it was a moſt pretious eſtabliſhment, becauſe ſuch provokers could not in the juſtice and wiſedom of God, be longer allow'd the fruition of it.

Sect. 30. Herein our puniſhment conſiſts, that that which we are deprived of, was truly valuable: 'Tis not a vengeance but a boon to have poiſonous drugs ſnatcht from us, and caſt out into the ſink, Ordinances that are not good, aboliſhed and nailed to the croſs; and in like manner 'tis but proportionable to our merits to have even the kingdom of heaven taken from us, that initial part, the Suburbs and Confines of it here, and beſtowed on them that are more worthy, and ſo capable of receiving benefit by ſuch jewels.

Sect. 31. Let us therefore here ſtop a while to doe our duty upon our knees to this firſt part of the Objection, by reflecting on thoſe ſins which have thus found us out.

A Prayer fitted for a day of Humiliation.

O Juſt and righteous Judge, who didſt once for the iniquity of thy people Iſrael give up thy Ark into the hand of the Philiſtines, we ſinfull creatures that are now under as great a degree both of guilt and puniſhment, do here caſt our ſelves down before thee, acknowledging that we are not worthy any longer to * receive the honour of Chriſtian profeſſion, that have ſo long defamed it by enormous practices; and that we who loved darkneſs more than light, deſerve to have our Candleſtick removed, and to be given up to that inundation of Atheiſm and profaneneſs, which now invades this gaſping Church: Yet, O Lord, deal not with us after our ſins, but turn thee again, thou God of Hoſts, look down from Heaven, behold and viſit this Vine; do not abhor us for thy Name's ſake, do not diſgrace the throne of thy glory: Behold, ſee, we beſeech thee, we are all thy people; though a rebellious and ſtiff-necked generation, yet thy Name is called upon us, leave us not, neither forſake us, O God of our ſalvation; but though thou feed us with bread of adverſity, and water of affliction, yet let not our teachers be removed into a corner, but let our eyes ſtill ſee our teachers, let not Sion complain that ſhe hath

* f. retain.

hath none to lead her by the hand among all the ſons that ſhe hath brought up, but provide her ſuch ſupports in this her declining condition, that ſhe may ſtill have a ſeed and a remnant left; and in what degree ſoever thou ſhalt permit this ſtorm to increaſe upon this poor Church, be pleaſed proportionably to fortifie and confirm all thoſe, that are members of it, that no man may be ſhaken or moved with theſe afflictions, nor pervert that glorious advantage of ſuffering for thee, into an occaſion of apoſtatiſing from thee, but that we may all run with patience the race that is ſet before us, and chearfully partake of the afflictions of the Goſpel; that ſuffering for Chriſt here, we may reign with him for ever hereafter; and all this for Jeſus Chriſt his ſake our onely Lord and Saviour. Amen.

Another.

* bitterer.

O Thou King of Nations, who doeſt according to thy will in all the Kingdoms of the Earth, who haſt made us drink deep of that cup of trembling, and yet ſeemeſt to have * bitter dregs behind for us, we thy wretched creatures that have highly contributed to that common weight of ſin under which the Land ſinks, humbly proſtrate our ſelves at thy feet; deſiring with all ſincere contrition to confeſs that thou art righteous in all that is hitherto come upon us, all that we have yet ſuffered being but the ſad arrear of the ſins of our peace, when we waxed fat, and kicked; and that thou ſhalt likewiſe be moſt juſt in the utmoſt of thy future inflictions, which whatſoever they prove, cannot exceed the ſins of our calamitous days, who in the time of our diſtreſs have ſinned yet more againſt the Lord, who have even paſſed through the fire to Moloch, with an undaunted obſtinacy ſuffered all the flamings of thy wrath, rather than we would renounce any of our deteſtable things. Nay, as if our old were too infirm, we have made new leagues with Death, new agreements with Hell, proceeding from evil to worſe, and making every new calamity thou ſendeſt to reclaim us, the occaſion of ſome freſh impiety. And now, O Lord, wilt thou not viſit for theſe things, ſhall not thy ſoul be avenged on ſuch a Nation as this? We are they, O Lord, that have perverted all thy diſpenſations toward us, grown wanton under thy mercies, and deſperate under thy judgments, and is there yet any third method left for thoſe that have fruſtrated both theſe? Behold, O Lord, theſe deſperate, theſe gaſping patients at thy feet, who have loſt ſenſe and motion to all things but the reſiſtence of their remedy. O give us not utterly over, but continue to adminiſter to us, whatever may remove this ſtupefaction, and bring us to a feeling of our condition; and what ſharpneſs and ſeverity ſoever thou diſcerneſt neceſſary for that purpoſe, forbear not, O Lord, to give us thoſe wounds of a friend. O ſay not concerning us, why ſhould ye be ſmitten any more? But rather caſt us into the place of Dragons, and cover us with the ſhadow of death, if by ſo doing we may be brought to remember the name of the Lord our God. Lord this is the one great neceſſary wherein we are principally concerned to ſolicite thee, that our eyes may be opened, that we may ſee every man the plague of his own heart; that ſo inſtead of thoſe Atheiſtical diſputes we make of thy providence, we may all joyn in an humble adoration of thy juſtice, and confeſſing that our deſtruction is of our ſelves, abhor our ſelves, and repent in duſt and aſhes. And when by this greater deliverance thou haſt put us in capacity of a leſs, then be thou pleaſed to be jealous for thy Land, and pity thy people, and whatever other judgment we muſt groan under, Lord deliver us not up to that barbariſm and irreligion, which hath already made too great a breach in upon us. We cannot but confeſs it moſt juſt in thee to permit us, who have ſo long reſiſted the power of godlineſs, to proceed now to caſt off even the very form, and that we who would not receive the love of the truth, ſhould be given over to ſtrong deluſions, to believe lies: And this ſaddeſt effect of thy wrath hath already overtaken many among us, and doth univerſally threaten the reſt. For ſince thou haſt laid waſte the wall of thy Vineyard, what can we expect, but that it ſhould be troden down: thou haſt broken our two ſtaves, Beauty and Bands, all order and unity, the neceſſary ſupports of a Church, at once periſhing from among us. The ſolemn Feaſts are forgotten in Sion, her Elders ſit upon the ground and keep ſilence, whilſt they, whom thou haſt not ſent, run; whilſt thoſe to whom thou haſt not ſpoken, propheſie. We, O Lord, who might once have gone with the multitude to the houſe of God, are now interdicted the more private exerciſes, and celebrations of thy ſervice. This, this, O Lord, is the inſupportable part of our afflictions, the ſting of all our miſery; if we had been onely ſold for bond-men and bond-women, we could have held our peace; but thine abhorring thine Altar, and caſting off thy Sanctuary, this is for a lamentation, and muſt be for a lamentation. Thy ſervants think upon the ſtones of Sion, and it pitieth them to ſee her in the duſt: O let not all thoſe tears and prayers that are poured out for her, return empty: and becauſe thou haſt thy ſelf recommended to us the efficacy of importunity, be thou pleaſed to give us that grace, to excite and ſtir up all that make mention of the Lord, that they may give thee no reſt, till thou eſtabliſh our Jeruſalem again a praiſe in the earth. To that end, O Lord, give us Paſtours after thine own heart, ſuch Prieſts whoſe lips may preſerve knowledge, and make us diligently to ſeek the Law at their mouths; and grant that we being by this deprivation taught the value of ſuch pretious advantages, and the ſin of our former contemning them, may unanimouſly contend for the regaining them, by a cordial forſaking thoſe ſins, which have turned away theſe good things from us. Grant this, gracious Lord, for his ſake whom thou haſt ſet forth to be our propitiation Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. Amen.

CHAP.

CHAP. III.

A view of the ſecond part of the Objection. The periſhing of the righteous.

Sect. 1. I Now proceed to the ſecond and more principal part of the Anſwer (in reference to the latter part of the Objection) which on the grounds premiſed muſt be this, That the improſperouſneſs and perſecutions, and even ſubverſion and eradication of a particular Church, is no way-an evidence, nay, not ſo much as a probable argument, that that was nocent, which thus periſheth, but onely that they were unworthy, which are thus deprived, and that too good to be enjoyed by them.

Sect. 2. An indication of this the Text referred to in the propoſal of the Objection doth expreſly afford us; The whole verſe runs thus, An Hoſt was given him againſt the daily Sacrifice by reaſon of tranſgreſſion, and it caſt down the truth to the ground, and it practiſed and proſpered.

Sect. 3. Here indeed tranſgreſſion is the one procatarctick, external impulſive cauſe, moving God to give that deſtroying Hoſt to the little Horn: and to continue ſo prodigious a ſucceſs, and proſperity to it, and this tranſgreſſion, not that of the Horn, or Hoſt, (which yet oft provokes God even in judgment, to give them ſuch kind of deſtructive proſperities, whether to be preſently out of their debt (to pay Nebuchadnezzar that hire, which is due to him for being inſtrumental to ſome of God's purpoſes) or to allow them, like Dives, their good things in this life) but I ſuppoſe the tranſgreſſion of thoſe, againſt whom the Hoſt proſpers, juſt as in our caſe it is.

Sect. 4. But then ſtill it is the daily Sacrifice, and the Truth, which it is thus impowered to caſt down. The Sacrifice we know of God's own preſcribing, and ſuch as was an act of his ſpecial favour to that above any other Nation, that he ſo preſcribed it; and this worſhip ſo true, ſo acceptable to God, that as he exacted it daily, loved to have it always before him, came conſtantly to meet with them at the ſeaſons of offering it, and was propitiated thereby; ſo 'tis there, by way of excellence, and in the abſtract, ſtyled truth and the truth it ſelf. And this the fitteſt as for that Hoſt to caſt to the ground, ſo for thoſe tranſgreſſours to be deprived of, ſuch as for whom no ill thing being too bad, any good thing was too pretious to be continued to them.

Sect. 5. In like manner, when the Temple was kept from being re-edified, when the Sanctum Sanctorum was prophaned, will any man affirm that theſe proſperities and great ſucceſſes, whether of Tobiah and Sanballat, or of Pompey, were a deciſion of God's, a verdict of Heaven brought in againſt the Temple, and Services?

Sect. 6. If there were need of more inſtances to evince this, the whole Hiſtory of the Turkiſh ſucceſſes and victories over the Chriſtians would not miſs to do it, that great Volume would croud together, and condenſate into one undeniable argument; the ſum whereof is this, that Chriſtianity hath been foiled, and Mahomediſm ſet up in many hundred Cities and Regions; whereſoever that falſe Epileptick Prophet's Banners were diſplayed, the Enſigns of truth and God himſelf ὀιχονται, were preſently baniſhed, or put to flight. And yet ſure God hath not thus decided the controverſie againſt Chriſtian Religion (to which his promiſe was long ago ſealed, that the gates of Hell ſhould never prevail againſt it) If he have, he hath alſo yielded the Great Sultan the honour of his own throne; for to that he hath as juſt a title, that of long, peaceable poſſeſſion, and preſcription, having put it ſucceſsfully, and as proſperouſly maintained it among his titles, to be King of Kings and Lord of Lords: God's verdict was herein intelligible enough, againſt the factions, and diviſions, and inteſtine broils of the Chriſtians among themſelves, too buſily and ambitiouſly ingaged in wars againſt one another, to attend the deſigns, and obviate the motions of that common Enemy. And many other ſins there were that fitted them for thoſe deprivations.

Sect. 7. If this be not ſufficient, I ſhall then aſcend but one ſtep farther in this argument ab exemplo, and demand whether Satan, that great Adverſary hath not ſometimes been proſperous in his attempts againſt the Church, and true Faith: and whether that be not the meaning of this being [a] looſed a little ſeaſon, after the determining of the thouſand years, and his deceiving the Nations before the commencing of them, and whether in both thoſe periods of time, wherein he had his deſired ſucceſs in the πλάνη ἐθνων, deceiving the Nations, God have decided the queſtion for him, and given judgment againſt the truth? If ſo, then was Simon of Samaria no longer a Magician, but a God, and all the powers of Heaven it ſelf ſubmitted to him, when he prevailed with the Emperour to have a Statue ſo inſcribed to him, Simoni ſummo Deo, to Simon the higheſt God: and the Strumpet Helena transformed from the ſtray ſheep into the Queen of Heaven, when once ſhe obtained to be adored as his prima ἔννοια. And [b] then did Arianiſm commence Orthodox (and Apoſtolical truth become the onely Hereſie) when by the favour of the Emperour Conſtantius it triumpht through all the Eaſt over the Catholick Doctrine; it being known in ſtory, how upon that Emperour's great proſperities and ſucceſſes, particularly upon the overthrow of Magnentius, and joyning the Weſtern Empire to the Eaſtern, which formerly he poſſeſt, he frequently [c] boaſted, Probatam divino calculo ſuam fidem, That God himſelf by thoſe victories decided the controverſie on the Arians ſide againſt the Fathers of Nice, and determined [d] their belief to be the true, (which preſumption Lucifer Calaritanus confuted in a Treatiſe for that purpoſe, and entituled De Regibus Apoſtatis.) And then (in brief) proſperity is not, as the Romaniſt but modeſtly pretends, one of his many marks [e] of the true Church, but like Aaron's rod, in the midſt of thoſe of the Magicians, devours, and ſupplies the place of them all, neither antiquity, nor purity ſhall any longer ſignifie any thing, nor Chriſt himſelf, if he have ever been ſo improſperous, as to be crucified, the Jews, and Judas, and Pilate muſt have been in the right for three days, till he conquered, and ſo confuted them again at his Reſurrection.

Sect. 8. These few I suppose may serve for some competent Topicks of reasoning, to repell all the force of this Objection, though if there could be need of it, the whole Christian Religion it self, which bears the Cross for its Standard, and hath no assurance of conquest, but by constancy in suffering, and gives us no promise of this life, but cum mixtura crucis, with the exception, or mixture of the Cross, would abundantly demonstrate such Objections as this to be perfectly unchristian.

CHAP. IV.

A second Objection answered. Where is now the Protestant English Church?

Sect. 1. THe next Objection is prepared and aimed against us from another coast, and will be, most for their advantage, put into this short question [Where is now your Protestant English Church] when your Church doors, and even Parlors themselves are shut up against those of you, which are the ancient remaining Bishops, and Presbyters of the Church of England, Officers regularly entred into, and continuing in that Function.

Sect. 2. To this (not to examine the truth of the suggestion, which I suppose to fail in many respects) the answer will be the same, as if the Heathens should ask, as once they are supposed to have askt the Psalmist, in a state of the like captivity, [Where is now your God] viz. that as our God, so our Church is now, where it was before, e'er this interdict came out against us.

Sect. 3. Or if it may tend to the satisfaction of any that I should a little inlarge on this theme also, I shall then as before first demand, where the Church of the Israelites was, when the people were carried into Assyria or Chaldea; were they not then removed as far from their own solemn place of worship, the Temple at Jerusalem, and from all their numerous Synagogues erected in Palestine, and that by the very same means, (a visible force) by which we are discharged from the Publick, and even more private exercise of our functions? and consequently was not the lot of that people the same with the worst, which can be suggested, or affirmed of ours, viz. to be sheep kept out of their pastures upon the interdicting of their shepherds?

Sect. 4. Secondly, Whether in the most prosperous times of Arianism when the Catholick Bishops were driven out of their Churches, banished out of Constantius's dominions, and forced to fly to the West, as to a hiding place, a refuge from those sad Calamities, it be by the Objecters imagined, that there was no Catholick or Orthodox Church in those regions, wherein the Arian Emperour thus persecuted the truth?

Sect. 5. Thirdly, Whether in the time of Anastasius the Emperour, who was an Eutychian Heretick, and a bitter enemy, and persecutor of the Orthodox, through the whole Eastern Empire, the Goths and Vandals, Arian Princes, mean while domineering in Italy, Spain and Africk, and Pagan Kings bearing rule in France, England and Germany: Whether, I say, in this space there were not yet an Orthodox Church remaining, though persecuted, in all those places, or whether there were at that time any part of the Church which enjoyed the ἀυδία, exempt from that black persecuted condition? Much might be added of the particular state of the African Church under the Vandals, out of Victor Uticensis, but the Argument is too copious.

Sect. 6. Fourthly, whether when the Othoman race of Mahometan Emperours subdued so great a part not onely of Asia, but Europe also, and therein so many eminent Christian Churches, setting up Mahomedism for the publick worship, yet permitting Christians to live, though but as under Saws and Harrows and Axes of Iron, instead of utterly depopulating their Cities, it can with truth be suggested, that these Christian Churches were all destroyed? I speak not of later times, wherein some liberty of Assemblies is at a dear rate sold to them: But before they came to purchase, or find so much mercy at their conquerours hands, whilst all exercise of Christian Religion was under close interdicts, all their Churches filled with their false worshippers; yet even then hath not this sad captivity been deemed sufficient to unchurch all the Christians under those proud Tyrants dominions.

Sect. 7. Lastly, What will these Disputers pretend, as to the Romanists themselves, who have continued for some years in this Kingdom without publick assemblies, and acknowledge willingly, I suppose, that their state hath been all this while a state of persecution, that no Priest of theirs is allow'd to celebrate Mass among them, that they can have no Bishop or Ordinary residing here, and (as is supposable at least) do not all receive influence either immediately or mediately from their Supreme Bishop? Will not their union with the Catholick Church over the World, and their sincere desire to enjoy the liberty of Assemblies, &c. preserve them within the bosome of the Church, though they do not enjoy these felicities?

Sect. 8. 'Tis vain to pay any larger, or more solemn attendance to this Objection, to which I have[a] elsewhere spoken more punctually, and do now onely suppose, that all that hath since been added to our pressures hath infused no fresh virtue into the Arguments.

[a] Tr. of Schism. Ch. 11.

Sect. 9. The truth is, these and the like ways of their demurest arguings, or suggestions at this time, are but acts of diligent observers of opportunity, which think to gain more by the seasonable application, by addressing their Fumes, or Medicaments, tempore congruo, when the pores are open, or the body in any special manner receptive, than by the intrinsick virtue, or energy of them.

Sect. 10. The Argument I suppose, the very same, which threescore years since was frequently prest against us of this Nation, that ever since our departure from the Romish yoke we have ceased to be a Church; onely now the darkness of our present condition makes them hope that their Sophistry shall uot be so easily seen through, as formerly it hath been, and that either we shall he found less diligent or less dextrous to defend a persecuted profession, or else more inclinable to part with it.

Sect. 11.

Sect. 11. It is meet therefore we ſhould be inſtructed by them, and learn warineſs from their wiles, and as Antidotes and Prophylactick methods, which are at all times of like power and virtue, are yet moſt neceſſary to be produced in time of a general diſtemper, ſo I ſuppoſe a more particular diſcourſe on this matter, though it will not now have more real force, or conſequently hope for better ſucceſs upon thoſe that are imperſwaſible, than formerly it had, may yet be more ſeaſonable to the wants of ſome weak ſeductible members of our perſecuted communion, in tenderneſs to whom it may not be amiſs more diſtinctly to conſider the argument it ſelf, that was now onely to be new dreſt, and furbiſhed, and receive ſome aid from the condition of our preſent preſſures, and to begin with examining, what, and how many things there are, which may by the Diſputers be thought ſufficient to unchurch, or deſtroy any particular Church.

Sect. 12. And I ſuppoſe them reducible to theſe four: Apoſtaſie; 2. Hereſie; 3. Schiſm: 4. Conſumption and utter vaſtation.

Sect. 13. For the Firſt, that of Apoſtaſie, or renouncing the whole Faith of Chriſt, I hope of that we ſhall not be deemed guilty, who are by our greateſt enemies acknowledged to retain many branches of that Faith, which was once delivered to the Saints.

Sect. 14. For the Fourth, that of utter conſumption, it can as little be pretended, as long as ſo many Biſhops, Presbyters, and duly baptized Chriſtians among us remain alive, and conſtant to their firſt faith.

Sect. 15. For the Third, that of Schiſm, the Fathers which aggravated the ſin of it to the higheſt, do not yet allow it the force of unchurching, but call them brethren, i. e. fellow Chriſtians, which were moſt obſtinately guilty of it: But howſoever it be, of that I have in a diſcourſe on that ſubject, and in a firſt and ſecond defence of that diſcourſe ſaid as much as yet appears neceſſary to be pleaded in defence of our Church.

Sect. 16. There remains then onely the ſecond, that of Hereſie, to which alſo ſome preparative matter hath been laid down in the Tract of Fundamentals, but not in ſo particular a relation to the preſent queſtion, as will excuſe the Reader from all addition of trouble at this time.

Sect. 17. I ſhall therefore on this account, and to perfect the anſwer to the preſent objection, tranſgreſs the bounds of my firſt deſign, and inlarge a while upon this inquiry, What may be defined the Formalis ratio, wherein hereſie, properly ſo called, muſt neceſſarily conſiſt, and without which no perſon or Church can juſtly be deemed guilty of that dangerous ſin, that piece of carnality.

CHAP. V.

Of the nature of Hereſie. Our Church ſecured from the guilt of it.

SECT. I.

The uſe of the word in Scripture.

1. AND firſt to prevent miſtakes, which may ariſe from the ambiguity of the word αἵρεσις, even in Scripture it ſelf; It is certain that this is ſometimes uſed more looſely in an indifferent ſenſe, for any conſiderable diſtinction betwixt men of the ſame profeſſion, as when ſeveral Schools of Philoſophers, and the courſes they took in them, are [a] called αἱρέσεις καὶ ἀγωγαὶ their Hereſies and ways of diſcipline, eſpecially when any [b] great number of men of ſuch or ſuch a denomination, do hold and keep together in maintenance of ſuch a way.

[a] Ἰππόσ[ο]θ· ἕνεκά φησιν αἱρέσεις τῶν φιλοσόφων καὶ ἀγωγὰς, πρώτῳ μαχαιρικῷ —— Phavorin. p. 74. l. 14.

[b] Ἡ δέξα πλειόνων ἀνθρώπων πρὸς ἀλλήλους μὲν συμφωνούντων πρὸς ἄλλους δὲ διαφερόντων, ἢ αἵρεσις δέη. Phavor. ibid.

2. Thus when the Sadducees were indeed the moſt eminent falſe teachers in the Jewiſh Church, yet not onely their falſe doctrine is ſtyled αἵρεσις their hereſie, Acts 15. 17. but even that of the Phariſees, Acts 15. 5. and that by Saint Paul, even when he looks on it ὡς ἀκριβεστάτην, as the ſtricteſt, and moſt exact Sect of the Jewiſh Religion, Acts 26. 5.

3. And thus I ſuppoſe Chriſtianity is called by the Jews at Rome, Acts 28. 22. This hereſie, without any evil character ſet upon it, as into which they deſired then to make inquiry, and be inſtructed, knowing no more of it at preſent, than by the partial and paſſionate rumours of men, by which they paſt no judgment of it, but onely ſaid that it was every where ſpoken againſt.

4. But of this notion of the word we do not now ſpeak; If we did, it is viſible that the ſtyle would belong to the way of the Romaniſts, were they never ſo purely orthodox, as well as to any other ſort of either true or erroneous Chriſtians, the conſideration of the verity or falſity of the doctrines being no ingredient in this uſage any more than in the origination of that word.

5. But the Scripture more frequently uſeth the word in an ill ſenſe, with connotation of ſome Fault either really inherent, or by them that uſe the word thought chargeable on that way, which they expreſs by it.

6. Thus Acts, 24. 5. in Tertullian's ſpeech, the αἵρεσις Hereſie of the Nazarenes is lookt on as an erroneous, dangerous, puniſhable way, and ſo v. 14. in Paul's reſuming of the accuſation, where he acknowledges himſelf guilty of that which they thus called Hereſie, i. e. deemed to be ſuch.

7. Thus in the Epiſtles it conſtantly ſignifies infuſions of ill; ſometimes diviſions and breaches of Charity and Chriſtian Communion, as 1 Cor. 11. 19. where αἱρέσεις Hereſies are but the interpretation of σχίσματα, Schiſms or Practices, verſe 18. and ſo Gal. 5. 20. where in the midſt of uncharitable breaches, hatred, variance, emulations, wraths, ſtrifes, ſeditions, before, and envyings, murther after, αἱρέσεις, Hereſies are incloſed, and ſo muſt receive their Tincture from the Society, wherein they are found, and ſo denote Schiſmatical diviſions peculiarly, in a very ill ſenſe indeed, as unqueſtionable works of the fleſh, verſe 19. yet not preciſely thoſe, that now we are to treat of, but, as Hereſie and Schiſm are ſometimes promiſcuouſly uſed the one for the other.

8. As for the ſtrict, ſeparate notion of the word, wherein it hath from the Apoſtles times come to ours, and is generally underſtood among men, that ſtill remains to be fetcht from one ſingular uſe of it, 2 Pet. 2. 1. whereof the falſe Teachers among the Chriſtians bearing, ſaith he, a proportion with the falſe Prophets among the Jews (thoſe two words διδάσκαλοι and προφῆται, Teachers and Prophets without any connotation of predicting future events, ſignifying in ſacred dialect one and the ſame thing; and ſo likewiſe falſe Teachers and falſe Prophets) he foretells them παρεισάξουσιν αἱρέσεις ἀπωλείας, that they ſhall bring in, either by the bye, or (as παρὰ oft ſignifies) in contrariety to ſound Doctrine, Hereſies of deſtruction, or deſtructive ruinous Hereſies, deſtructive of that foundation laid by the Apoſtles; for ſuch the Doctrines appear to be of which he there ſpeaks, being the denial of the great Article of our belief concerning our Redeemer, and ſuch the Gnoſtick Hereſie is confeſt to be, which is evidently there ſpoken of by Saint Peter.

9. That all Hereſies ſhould be equally deſtructive with this, we have no indications from that Text, nay ſeveral inhaunſing circumſtances are there diſcernible (if now that were any part of the inquiry) which may juſtly make a difference gradual both in reſpect of turpitude and danger betwixt that there ſpecified, and ſundry other Hereſies. Thus much onely muſt be thence concluded, that all the Hereſies that can be deemed proportionable or parallel to that Character, which, in that ſingular place, the Scripture gives us of αἱρέσεις, are doctrinal breaches or ſeparations from the faith as that ſignifies the true Chriſtian doctrine, by Chriſt or his inſpired and impowered ſervants, the Apoſtles, once or at once delivered to the Saints. Αἵρεσις ἐστὶ περὶ πίστως ἀπ ἀλλοῖας δόξα, Hereſie is an untrue or falſe opinion or doctrine concerning the Faith, was duly and fully reſolved by Phavorinus, meaning by περὶ πίστως any part of the Faith truly ſo called, the difference betwixt Hereſie on one ſide, and Infidelity or Apoſtaſie on the other ſide, being viſibly this, that the two latter are the denying or renouncing the whole Faith of Chriſt, but the former of any ſingle part of it.

SECT. II.

Of matter of Faith.

1. HErein then the definition of Hereſie (in our preſent notion) being completed, viz. in its oppoſition to the faith of Chriſt in any one or more branches of it, and the diſpoſition of the perſon guilty thereof, being but extrinſecal to the nature of the thing it ſelf (as whether it be cauſed barely by ignorance, or whether it have in it ſome mixture of obſtinacy, pride, or any other kind of carnality, whether it be onely in the heart, contrary to believing with that, or elſe proceed farther to profeſſion with the tongue, as Faith alſo doth, Rom. 10. 10.) theſe, I ſay, and the like being preſcinded, and taken off from our preſent inquiry, as they muſt be from the examination of the Formalis ratio of every other ſin (which being once found out what formally it is, is allowed to be capable of many aggravating or extenuating circumſtances, and degrees, without varying of the Species) All that can now remain to be eſtabliſht in this firſt part of the inquiry, is, to diſcern how far the faith of Chriſt may duly be extended, to what ſorts of things it can properly belong, that ſo by the law of Contraries we may ſafely conclude, to what ſorts of errours it is, that the word Hereſie is to be extended.

2. And 1. we muſt diſtinguiſh between matters of Faith and rites or practices or cuſtomes of all, or any of the Apoſtles; For theſe latter being prudentially deſigned to ſome perſons at ſome times, for ſome particular, occaſional, and thoſe mutable ends, as they are not founded in any univerſal precept, or doctrine of Chriſt, ſo neither are they obliging to all future times, but onely ſo far as they that ſo ordered, did deſign them.

3. Thus we know the Canon of the Apoſtles, and the Church aſſembled at Jeruſalem, concerning things ſtrangled and things offered to Idols, Acts 15. are promulgate to the Gentiles at that time of Antioch, Syria and Cilicia, from whom the occaſion of that Council and Canon was taken; but when they paſs farther, they promulgate them not, as appears by 1 Cor. 8. 9. where, in that of Idolothyta he acknowledges the Corinthians liberty not retrenched, ſave onely in caſe of ſcandal.

[c] An. 51. n. 58. 4. And [c] Baronius extends this obſervation to the Theſſalonians alſo (though the evidence be not ſo convincing) upon force of that Text, 1 Theſſ. 4. 2, 3. where repeating what Commandments he had given them by the Lord Jeſus, he ſpecifies onely ut abſtineatis à fornicatione, that ye abſtain from fornication, without any mention of the other parts of the Canon.

5. But without relying on ſuch arguments as this laſt of his (negative, and ſo unconcludent) ſuch ordinances as theſe, accommodated to particular times, and places, and perſons, are in the nature of them, temporary and variable, nay, not always the ſame at the ſame time. The Church ſtories give us little reaſon to doubt, but the controverſie concerning the time of keeping Eaſter, which at laſt brake out into ſuch a tempeſt in the Church, had its original in the different traditions of the Apoſtles, Saint John and Saint Philip produced by Polycrates for the Aſiatick, as Saint Peter and others by Victor for the other ſide.

6. And from thence as Polycarp and Anicetus, though each reſolutely adhering to their ſeveral ways, did yet communicate one with another (as Irenæus tells Victor in his Epiſtle to him, concerning this matter) ſo 'tis evident that ſuch ritual differences diſturb not the faith, nor infer Hereſie on either ſide; The [d] Epiſt. ex Reg. l. 1. Indict. 9. Ep. 41. words of [d] Pope Gregory the firſt are expreſs for it, In una fide nihil officit ſanctæ Eccleſiæ conſuetudo diverſa, Difference of cuſtoms is reconcileable with the unity of Faith, and no detriment comes to holy Church by this difference. This might be much more largely evinced, if there were need of it.

7. Firſt

7. First then, confining our ſelves to the Faith onely, It's granted on all hands, that by Faith here is meant the Object or matter of a Chriſtian's belief; not the belief it ſelf: ſo it is viſibly uſed in that eminent place of Jude 3. ἡ πίστις παραδοθεῖσα, the faith delivered to the Saints, i. e. the particular doctrines which all togegether made up the Saints belief.

8. Secondly, that this object of belief is nothing but the revealed doctrine of God, actually propoſed by him, and preached to men, on purpoſe that they that have ſo much reverence to God, and confidence of his veracity, that they queſtion not the truth of any of his affirmations, may by faith receive, and believe, and act according to them.

9. For this belief being a duty of the firſt Commandment, and ſo as all other parts of divine worſhip terminated ultimately in God (or elſe it is not divine, but at the moſt but humane faith) as it truly comprehends all that is, or ſhall ever be thus conveyed to us by divine revelation; ſo can it not be any farther extended, ſo as to compriſe thoſe things, even of God, which are unrevealed.

10. Many verities no doubt there are in God's ſecret Cabinet, which though moſt true in themſelves, and moſt worthy of belief, in caſe they were revealed to us, yet are never like to come out from under that veil, and ſo can never be Objects of our belief.

11. Thirdly, that even of thoſe things that have at any time been revealed, all are not incumbent on us, ſo as to lay obligation on every man to comprehend, or believe them; many paſſages of Holy Writ, though, when they are propoſed to us convincingly as ſuch, they may not be diſ-believed, may yet ſafely be unobſerved, or not underſtood, or eſcape out of our memory. Ἡ πίστις παραδοθεῖσα, The Faith by way of emphaſis and excellence, that was once delivered to the Saints, and ought by all ſuch to be contended for, is that which was ſet out by Chriſt, or his Apoſtles from him, to be by all men believed to their righteouſneſs, and confeſt to their ſalvation. Rom. 10. 10.

SECT. III.

The two ways of conveying the Faith to us.

1. THis then being the adequate object of the Chriſtian's Faith, thoſe verities which have been revealed to us by God to be thus believed to righteouſneſs, called therefore ὑγιαίνοντες λόγοι, words not onely true, but wholſome; the belief whereof is required in order to our ſoul's health: the next inquiry is, how we that live in the ſame diſtance from Chriſt and his Apoſtles in reſpect of time, that we are ſituate from heaven, which now contains Chriſt, in reſpect of place, may come within any reach of theſe revelations of Chriſt, or to any competent undoubted aſſurance, that thoſe are ſuch indeed, which are pretended to be ſo. 1 Tim. 6. 3.

2. And to this alſo my conceſſion ſhall be as liberal as any Romaniſt can wiſh, that there are [c] two ways of conveying ſuch revelations to us; one in writing, the other by oral tradition; the former in the Goſpels and other writings of the Apoſtles, &c. which makes up the ſacred Writ, or Canon of the New Teſtament; the latter in the Apoſtles preachings to all the Churches of their plantations, which are no where ſet down for us in the ſacred Writ, but conſerved as [f] Depoſita by them to whom they were intruſted.

[c] Basil. de Spir. Sanct. c. 27. Τῶν ἐν τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ πεφυλαγμένων δογμάτων καὶ κηρυγμάτων, τὰ μὲν ἐκ τῆς ἐγγράφου διδασκαλίας ἔχομεν, τὰ δὲ ἐκ τῆς τοῦ Ἀποστόλου παραδόσεως διαδοθέντα ἡμῖν ἐν μυστηρίῳ. [f] 1 Tim. 6. 20. 2 Tim. 1. 14.

3. And although in ſundry reſpects the former of theſe be much the [g] more faithfull, ſteady way of conveyance, and for want thereof many things may poſſibly have periſhed, or been changed by their paſſage through many hands, thus much being on theſe grounds confeſt by Bellarmine himſelf, that [h] The Scripture is the moſt certain and ſafe rule of belief; yet there being no leſs veracity in the tongues, than the hands, in the preachings, than the writings of the Apoſtles; nay, Prior ſermo quam liber, prior ſenſus quam ſtylus, ſaith [i] Tertullian, the Apoſtles preacht before they writ, planted Churches before they addreſt Epiſtles to them: On theſe grounds I make no ſcruple to grant, that Apoſtolical traditions, ſuch as are truly ſo, as well as Apoſtolical writings, are [k] equally the matter of that Chriſtian's belief, who is equally ſecured by the fidelity of the conveyance, that as one is Apoſtolical writing, ſo the other is Apoſtolical tradition.

SECT. IV.

The teſtimony from which we receive the Faith.

1. NExt then the inquiry muſt proceed by examining what is this equal way of conveyance, common to both theſe, upon ſtrength of which we become obliged to receive ſuch or ſuch a Tradition for Apoſtolical.

2. And this again is acknowledged not to be any Divine Teſtimony; For God hath no where affirmed in Divine Writ, that the Epiſtle, inſcribed of Paul the Apoſtle to the Romans, conſiſting of ſo many periods as now it is in our Bibles, was ever written by that Apoſtle, nor are there any inward Characters or Signatures, or beams of light in the writing it ſelf, that can be admitted, or pretended for teſtimonies of this, any more than than the like may exact to be admitted as witneſſes, that the Creed called the Apoſtles, was indeed, in the full ſenſe of it, delivered to the Churches.

3. It remains then, that herein on both ſides we reſt content with humane teſtimonies of undoubted authority, or ſuch as there is not any rational motive to diſtruſt, and of which alone the matter is capable. For as in caſe of queſtion concerning the Epiſtle to the Romans, whether this be it, which was addreſt by Saint Paul to that Church, the onely regular way of ſatisfying the queſtion, is 1. By devolution or appeal to the authority of thoſe Fathers and Councils, to whom it was de facto ſufficiently teſtified, and approved (viz. by examination of the Records of that Church to whom it was written, and by whom received, through the hands of ſome truſty meſſenger of that Apoſtle, ſuch as Phebe that miniſtred unto him, and by other creditable ways of confirmation) and Secondly, and by that conſequence, to thoſe very original records and proofs of undoubted fidelity: So the way of trial of any tradition, pretended to be Apoſtolical, whether it be ſuch or no, is by devolving it to thoſe ſame, or the like Fathers, and Councils, which having occaſion and commodity to examine the truth of the matter by the Records or Teſtimonies of thoſe Churches, to which it was delivered, found it ſufficiently teſtified by them, that it was in truth according as is pretended.

4. And from hence it follows, that as we of this age have no other way of judging of the Canon of Scripture, or of any Book, or Chapter, or Period contained in it, but by the affirmation and authority of thoſe teſtifiers in the firſt ages of the Church, either by their writings, or by the unqueſtioned relations of others, brought down and made known to us; ſo are we as unable to judge of Apoſtolical traditions unwritten, whether this or that doctrine be ſuch or no, unleſs it be thus by the undoubted affirmations of the ancients (who are preſumable by their antiquity to know the truth, and by their uniform conſent, neither to miſtake themſelves, nor to deceive us) communicated and conveyed to us.

5. 'Tis not poſſible for any man or men of the greateſt underſtandings or integrity, to ſee or know what is not done within the reach of their faculties, unleſs either they be inſpired by God, or otherwiſe informed either mediately or immediately from thoſe, who had really knowledge of it. Stories of former times are not wont to be written by the ſtrength of mens natural parts, invention, or judgment, but onely by conſulting of thoſe Records, either dead or living, by whoſe help ſuch matters of fact have been preſerved. Every thing elſe is but conjecture, and that very uncertain, the utmoſt probability in ſuch matters being little worth, that being oft-times done which really was (and much more to us, who know not the motives of actions far removed from us, is) of all things leaſt probable to have been done. Onely a creditable witneſs, ſuch as no prudent man hath reaſon to diſtruſt either as neſcient or falſe, is worth conſidering, or able to found belief in this matter.

SECT. V.

The qualifications of ſuch Teſtimonies.

1. NOW then comes the upſhot of the inquiry, what qualifications there are of a teſtimony, or teſtifier, without which, it or he may not be thus deemed creditable, or ἀξιόπιστον, worthy to be believed by a ſober Chriſtian: and where theſe qualifications are to be found: which when we have once reſolved, it will alſo be poſſible for us to paſs ſome judgment of Traditions duly ſtyled Apoſtolical, which as ſuch muſt be allowed to be the object of our Faith.

2. And herein I ſhall hope alſo that the reſolution will be unqueſtionable, if it be bounded by thoſe three terms to which [1] Vincentius Lirinenſis in his defence of the Catholick Faith againſt Hereſies and innovations hath directed us, Univerſitas, Antiquitas, Conſenſio, Univerſality, Antiquity, Conſent, viz. That the Teſtimony, we depend on, be the reſult of all, the ancients, conſenting, or without any conſiderable diſſent. Or, in yet fewer words, a Catholick Teſtimony, truly ſuch, i. e. univerſal in all reſpects; 1. Of Place, 2. Of Time, 3. Of Perſons.

3. For firſt, If it be not teſtified from all places, it is not qualified for our belief, as Catholick in reſpect of place, becauſe the Faith being one, and the ſame, and by all and every of the Apoſtles preached, and depoſited in all their plantations, what was ever really thus taught, by any of them in any Church, will alſo be found to have been taught, and received in all other Apoſtolical Churches.

4. To which purpoſe the words of Irenæus are expreſs, lib. 1. cap. 3. [m] The Church diſſeminated over all the world, having received this preaching and this Faith, preſerves it diligently, as the inhabitants of the ſame houſe, believe them alike, as having the ſame ſoul and heart, and teach and preach and deliver them alike, as having the ſame mouth, for though their languages are unlike, the virtue of Tradition is one and the ſame, and neither do the Churches which are founded in Germany believe or deliver otherwiſe than thoſe which were conſtituted in Spain, in France, in the Orient, in Egypt, in Africk, in the middle of the world, but as one and the ſame Sun ſhines through the whole world, ſo doth the light and preaching of the truth in every place, where it is received, diſperſe it ſelf.

[m] Hanc prædicationem cum acceperit & hanc fidem Eccleſia, & quidem in univerſum mundum diſſeminata, diligenter cuſtodit quaſi unam domum inhabitans, & ſimiliter credit his quaſi unam animam habens, & unum cor, & conſonanter hæc prædicat & docet & tradit, quaſi unum poſſidens os. Nam etſi in mundo loquelæ diſſimiles ſunt, ſed tamen virtus traditionis una eſt & eadem———

5. So [n] alſo Tertullian de Præſcript. c. 20. Preſently therefore the Apoſtles having firſt in Judæa teſtified the Faith and inſtituted Churches, and then taken their journey over all the world, made known to the Nations the ſame doctrine of the ſame Faith, and ſo planted Churches in every City, from which the reſt of the Churches afterward borrowed their ſeeds of Faith and Doctrine, and ſo daily continue to doe and are formed into Churches.

[n] Statim igitur Apoſtoli——primum per Judæam conteſtatâ fide in Jeſum Chriſtum, & Eccleſiis inſtitutis, dehinc in orbem profecti, eandem doctrinam ejuſdem fidei nationibus promulgaverunt, & proindè Eccleſias apud unamquamque civitatem condiderunt, à quibus traducem fidei, & ſemina doctrinæ cæteræ deinde Eccleſiæ mutuatæ ſunt, & quotidiè mutuantur ut Eccleſiæ fiant.

6. From

6. From which premiſſes his concluſion is juſt that, which I here deduce; ° If ſo, then 'tis evident that every doctrine muſt be deemed true which conſpires with the Apoſtolical Churches, which are the wombs and Originals whence the Faith came out, as maintaining that without any queſtion, which the Churches received from the Apoſtles, the Apoſtles from Chriſt, and Chriſt from God: and that all other doctrine is under the prejudice of being falſe, which is contrary to the truth of the Churches of the Apoſtles, of Chriſt, and of God.

° Si hæc ita ſint, conſtat proinde omnem doctrinam quæ cum illis Eccleſiis Apoſtolicis matricibus & originalibus fidei conſpiret, veritati deputandam, id ſine dubio tenentem quod Eccleſiæ ab Apoſtolis, Apoſtoli à Chriſto, Chriſtus à Deo ſuſcepit; reliquam autem omnem doctrinam de mendacio præjudicandam quæ ſapiat contra veritatem Eccleſiarum, & Apoſtolorum, & Chriſti, & Dei. Ibid.

7. 'Tis true indeed that whatſoever one Church profeſſeth to have received from the Apoſtle that planted it, is of it ſelf ſufficient, without the confirmation of all others, to beget and eſtabliſh belief in him, to whom it thus teſtifies: whereupon P Tertullian refers the inquirer to that Apoſtolick Church that is next him, be it Corinth, if he live in Achaia, Philippi or Theſſalonica, if in Macedonia, Epheſus, if in Aſia, or if he be near Italy, Rome. But this is no farther to be extended, than while we ſuppoſe without inquiry, that other Apoſtolical Churches have received, and are ready to teſtifie, the ſame; which preſumption, or ſuppoſal muſt then ceaſe, when upon inquiry we find the contrary; there being then none of this firſt kind of univerſality, viz. of place, and ſo far, no validity in the Teſtification.

P Age jam qui voles curioſitatem melius exercere in negotio ſalutis tuæ, percurre Eccleſias Apoſtolicas; proxima eſt tibi Achaia? habes Corinthum; Si non longè es à Macedonia, habes Philippos, habes Theſſalonicenſes; ſi potes in Aſiam tendere, habes Epheſum; ſi tamen Italiæ adjaces, habes Romanam. De Præſcrip. cap. 36.

8. Secondly, for the univerſality of time, that muſt be cautiouſly underſtood; not ſo as to ſignifie it a prejudice to any doctrine, if in ſome one or more ages it have not been univerſally received; for then there could be no Hereticks at any time in the world: but ſo as to extend to the firſt and pureſt, and not onely to the latter ages of the Church.

9. That which was delivered by the Apoſtles was certainly received in that firſt age, wherein they lived; and by carefull inquiry will be found from their monuments to have been then among them. And that which by this trial is diſcerned to be of later date, not to be deſcried in the firſt times, nor teſtified by ſufficient authority to be derived from thence, falls ſhort again of this ſecond part of univerſality in reſpect of time.

10. Thirdly, for the conſent of Teſtifiers, that is alſo neceſſary to the rendring it a Catholick and authentick teſtimony; any conſiderable number of diſſenters being of neceſſity to weaken our belief, and infuſe reaſons of doubting, and a preponderancy of diſſenters the other way, to weigh down (at leaſt to incline) the belief to the contrary.

SECT. VI.

Where theſe qualifications may be found. Of the conſent of ancient Doctours, and definitions of Councils truly general.

1. THis therefore being thus eſtabliſht, and the conjunction of all the three ſorts of univerſality being in all reaſon required to the authentick teſtifying of tradition; It is ſoon defined, where theſe qualifications are to be lookt for, and where they may be found.

2. Queſtionleſs not in any one Biſhop, or ſucceſſion of Biſhops in any See for many latter ages, not including the Apoſtles; for whatever his pretenſions may be to authority and Supremacy over all other Churches, this can never convert a particular whether Man or Church, into the Univerſal, nor make his Teſtimony authentick according to thoſe rational and Chriſtian Rules, which we have learn'd from Lirinenſis.

3. There are many Apoſtolick Churches beſide that of Rome: Great difference of Rome in theſe latter ages from the Primitive Apoſtolick Rome, to which the Depoſitum was intruſted. And there are many diſſenters to be found, who have always lived and flouriſhed in the Catholick Church, which never acknowledged thoſe doctrines to be delivered to them by the Apoſtles, which the Church of Rome hath of late aſſumed to be ſuch. And for any privilege annexed to that Biſhop's Chair, or to that ſociety of men, which live in external communion with him, that he or they can never define any thing to be (de fide) part of the Faith, which is not ſo, as that is, beyond all other their pretenſions, moſt denied by us, and leaſt attempted to be proved by the Romaniſt, and not ſo much as conſented on among themſelves; ſo muſt it in no reaſon be ſuppoſed in this diſpute, or taken for granted by them, but is rejected with the ſame eaſe that it is mentioned by them.

4. As for other pretenders, I know not any, ſave onely that of the Univerſal conſent of the Doctours of the firſt ages, or that of an Univerſal Council. And both theſe we are willing to admit with ſuch cautions onely as the matter exacts, and the grounds of defining already laid.

5. The Univerſal conſent of the Doctours of the firſt ages, bearing teſtimony that ſuch or ſuch a Doctrine was from the Apoſtles preachings delivered to all Churches by them planted, or their General conform teſtimony herein, without any conſiderable diſſenters producible, is, I acknowledge, ἀξιόπιστος, authentick or worthy of belief, and ſo hath been made uſe of by the ᵠ Orthodox of all times, as ſufficient for the rejecting of any new doctrine.

ᵠ Πίστιν ἣν ἐξ ἀρχῆς παρελάβομεν καὶ ἔχομεν διδαθεῖσαν, καὶ παραδοθεῖσαν ἐν τῇ Καθολικῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ μεχρὶ τῆς σήμερον ἡμέρας ἐκ διαδοχῆς ἀπὸ τῶν μακαρίων Ἀποστόλων. Epiſt. Orthodox. Epiſc. Synodi Antioch. Paul. Samoſat. Miſſæ. Bib. Gr. Pat. Tom. 1. pag. 30. &c. ὅπως ὁμολόγησαν οἱ ἅγιοι πατέρες, καὶ παρέδωκαν ἡμῖν ὁμολογῆν καὶ πιστεύειν· Δέδεικται ἐν τῷ σοφισμα ἀδύνατον, &c. Dionyſ. Alexand. Epiſt contr. Paul. Samoſat. in Bibl. Pat. Gr. To. 1. p. 275. E.

6. So likewiſe is the declaration of a General Council, free, and gathered from all quarters, and in ſuch other reſpects, truly ſo called, founded in the examination of the monuments of the ſeveral Apoſtolical Plantations, tations, either produced in Council, or authentically confirmed from the Letters of the ſeveral Churches, either formerly prepared in Provincial and National Councils, or otherwiſe ſufficiently confirmed to them, and this Declaration conciliarly promulgate, and after the promulgation univerſally received and accepted by the Church diffuſive; Or elſe 'tis evident all this while, that it is not a Catholick (truly ſo ſtyled) Teſtimony.

7. For that any Council of Biſhops, the moſt numerous that ever was in the World (much leſs a but major part of thoſe few, that be there preſent) is not yet really the Univerſality of Chriſtians, is too evident to be doubted of.

8. It can onely then be pretended, that it is the univerſal Repreſentative, or ſuch an Aſſembly, wherein is contained the virtue and influences of the whole Univerſal Church. And thus indeed I ſuppoſe it to be, as often as the Doctrines there eſtabliſhed by univerſal conſent (founded in Scripture and Tradition) have either been before diſcuſs'd and reſolved in each Provincial Council, which have ſent their Delegates thither from all the parts of the World, or elſe have Poſt factum, after the promulgation, been accepted by them, and acknowledged to agree with that Faith which they had originally received.

9. That the former of theſe is a conſiderable ingredient in a General Council, appears to be Saint Auguſtine's judgment in l. 7. de Bapt. contra Donatiſt. c. 53. [r] 'Tis ſafe for us not to proceed raſhly to thoſe things which have not been begun in any Catholick Provincial Council, and determined in a plenary or Univerſal. That we muſt, if we will be ſafe in our pronouncing, take care to affirm that which in the Regiment of our God and Chriſt Jeſus our Saviour is confirmed by the Confeſſion of the Univerſal Church. Where as the Confeſſion of the Univerſal Church (or their Teſtimony that ſuch a doctrine hath been delivered to the Church by the Apoſtles) is that which gives validity to a doctrine, ſo this univerſal confeſſion is then truly ſuch, when it is the determination of a General Council prepared for in the Provincial Councils, of which that General is made up. And what hath not been according to this courſe eſtabliſhed, or the truth whereof (as he † elſewhere ſpeaks) is not firſt Eliquata, ſtreined out, or extracted by Provincial Councils, and ſo Solidated or put together by a General Council, may very ſafely be disbelieved; for ſaith he, [t] How could that obſcure controverſie be brought to a clear declaration and confirmation of a general Council, if it were not firſt throughly handled and cleared by the conferences and diſputes of Biſhops through all the regions of the World?

[r] Nobis tutum eſt in ea non progredi aliqua temeritate ſententiæ, quæ nullo in Catholico religionali Concilio cæpta, nullo plenario Concilio terminata ſunt. Id autem ſit cura ſecuræ vocis aſſerere, quod in Gubernatione Domini Dei noſtri & ſalvatoris Jeſu Chriſti univerſalis Eccleſiæ confeſſione roboratum eſt. † Ibid. l. 2. c. 4. [t] Ibid. Quomodo potuit iſta res——ad plenarii Concilii luculentam illuſtrationem confirmationémque perduci, niſi primo diutius per orbis terrarum regiones multis hinc atque hinc diſputationibus & collationibus Epiſcoporum pertractata conſtaret?

10. And this ſeems to be acknowledged by [v] Baronius, who ſpeaking of the Provincial Synods called in the Weſt, before the meeting of any Univerſal Synod in the Eaſt; not onely affirms it to be Uſus priſtinus, the ancient cuſtome, but withall takes notice of this end or deſign of it, that thoſe Biſhops of the Weſt, which could not all reaſonably take ſuch a journey, might yet by ſome means give their ſuffrages, ſuppoſing, as it was reaſon, that the Council could not be truly Univerſal, in which all the Regions in the World did not ſome way give their votes; and farther, that this was the way by which the Pope was inabled to ſend his Legates à latere, not onely in his own name, but of the whole Weſtern Church, viz. by the Metropolitans in the Provincial Synods ſending Letters to the Pope, which contain'd their ſenſe in that matter which was to be debated in the General Council.

[v] Tom. 6. An. 451. n. 20.

Aliquo tamen modo ſuum ferrent Suffragium.

11. Many evidences of this cuſtome and reaſons of the obſerving of it, in order to the rendring a Council truly General, might be farther added; but this is, I ſuppoſe, ſufficient.

12. Onely by the way, I add, That by this expedient the want of General Councils might in ſome degree be ſupplied, the concordant declarations of each Provincial Council compared and communicated, being (for the teſtifying of Apoſtolical Tradition, or the Catholick ſenſe of the Church) equivalent to the voice of a General Council.

13. So we find the practice in [x] Euſebius; where, upon the riſing of Novatus a Roman Presbyter, firſt a Provincial Council at Rome, ἰδίως τε καὶ τοὺς λοιποὺς ἐπαρχίας ἅμα καὶ χώρας, and ſeverals in the ſeveral Provinces in every Region, the Paſtours or Biſhops conciliarly conſidering of the matter, δόγμα πεποίηται τοῦτο πᾶσι, the reſolution was made by all of them againſt Novatus. Then follow the Letters of Cornelius Biſhop of Rome to Fabius of Alexandria, giving him the relation both of the Roman Synod, and of the determinations of all the Biſhops through Italy and Africk, and thoſe Regions; and others of Cyprian, and thoſe with him in Africk, declaring τὸ κοινὸν αὐτῶν συνευδοκεῖν, the concordance of their judgment herein. But this by the way in paſſing.

[x] Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 6. κεφ. μγ'.

14. And for the latter of theſe there can be as little doubt, there being no poſſibility without it, that the voice of a Council never ſo general, ſhould be the teſtimony of the whole Church.

15. When a doctrine is conciliarly agreed on, it is then promulgate to all, and the Univerſal, though but tacit approbation and reception thereof, the no conſiderable contradiction given to it in the Church, is a competent evidence, that this is the judgment and concordant Tradition of the whole Church, though no ſuch reſolution of Provincial Synods have preceded.

16. But if that be alſo wanting, if the ſentence of a major part of Biſhops in a Council be not (when it comes to be declared to the world) admitted or received in the Church, as conſonant to the doctrine of the Apoſtles, written or unwritten, if the grounds whereon it hath been by the Council defined, (for ſo the ſuffrages are conciliarly to be delivered together with their grounds, and reaſons of them, out of Scripture or Tradition) be by others which ſate not in that Council, found to be falſe or vain, and are as ſuch contradicted and proteſted againſt; This evidently prejudiceth the authority of that Council, and ſhews their incompetency for the work (in hand) of Univerſal teſtification.

17. On which grounds it is, that [y] S. Hilary in his Tract of Synods againſt the Arians, ſetting down all the Creeds which after the Nicene Council had been ſet out in ſeveral times and places, deſires all the Biſhops of France and Britain, &c. to whom he writes, to give their judgment whether they be Catholick or Heretical.

[y] Siquid rectum atque ex doctrinis Apoſtolicis deprehendetur——vos an Catholica, an hæretica ſunt, fidei veſtræ judicio comprobate. p. 220.

SECT.

SECT. VII.

The benefit from General Councils. Reverence due to them. To the first four especially.

1. FRom these premisses thus briefly deduced, it now appears 1. What it is that we owe to the Councils of the Church; I shall most safely express it in the words of [z] Vincentius, What hath the Church ever brought forth by the Decrees of Councils, save onely that what was before simply believed, the same should after be believed more diligently; what was before less vigorously preacht, that same should after be preacht more instantly; what was before more securely observed, that same should after be more solicitously dreſt or cultivated? This, I say, and nothing but this hath the Catholick Church, stirr'd up by Hereticks new doctrines, done by the decrees of Councils; what before it had received from the Ancestors by Tradition onely, it hath after committed to writing, and as an obligation under its own hand consigned to posterity.

[z] C. 32. Quid unquam aliud Conciliorum decretis enisa est, nisi ut quod antea simpliciter credebatur hoc idem postea diligentius crederetur? quod antea lentius prædicabatur, hoc idem postea instantius prædicaretur, quod antea securius colebatur, hoc idem postea solicitius excoleretur. Hoc, inquam, semper, neque quicquam præterea hæreticorum novitatibus excitata Conciliorum suorum decretis Catholica perfecit Ecclesia, ut quod prius à majoribus solâ traditione susceperat, hoc deinde posteris etiam per Scripturæ chirographum consignaret.

2. In a word, that which was before the constant belief of the whole Church received from the Apostles times and preaching, and by conciliar discussions and search, found to be so, is thus delivered down to us by those Councils, and testified by them to be that which they found in the Church Universally. This I suppose the meaning of the ἀναχειρότονον ἀλλὰ λέγειν τὰ δόγματα τῆς εὐσεβείας, in the thirty seventh Apostolick Canon; Let them in their Councils discuss, and examine the doctrines of piety, enquire, and discern what have been delivered to them as such, and then τὰς ἐμπεσούσας ἐκκλησιαστικὰς ἀντιλογίας διαλύσασθαι, let them answer or satisfie the incidental objections which shall happen to be made to them in the Church. And so no new doctrine ever received from their authority or power of defining, but the ancient Apostolical Catholick pious doctrine testified to us.

3. Secondly, It is hence manifest also, what is the ground of that reverence that is by all sober Christians deemed due and paid to the four first General Councils, which Vincentius looks on, as the great Conservatories of tradition, wherein he might fitly instance, and which [a] Pope Gregory the Great professeth to believe as he doth the four Gospels, and Theodosius Cenobiarcha so much commended by [b] Cyril and others, [c] anathematizeth all, who are not of that opinion, viz. because 1. As Theodoret Hist. l. 1. c. 8. out of Athanasius declares of the Nicene, that they set down and convinced the truth of their doctrine ἐξ [d] ἐγγράφων μόνων εὐσεβείας ἐννοουμένων λέξεων, out of the Scripture words understood with piety, i. e. so as the pious Orthodox Fathers had always understood them, οὐκ ἰδιωτικῶς εὑρόντες τὰς λέξεις, ἀλλ' ἐκ τῶν πατέρων ἔχοντες μαρτυρίαν, not inventing words or phrases for themselves, but having testimony from the Fathers for what they wrote, (for, saith he, the Bishops of Rome and Alexandria for almost CXXX. years had found fault with them, who affirmed the Son to be τέκτημα a creature, καὶ μὴ ὁμόσιον τῷ πατρὶ, and not of the same substance with the Father;) so it was true of all the other three; they fetcht their definitions regularly from Scripture, and that sense thereof, which the several Churches had received down from the Apostles; and so were approved and received universally in all Churches, not as those which had formed any new Articles, but which conserved the Depositum intrusted to the Churches, and in time of need brought them forth and discovered them, to the securing of the truth against Hereticks.

[a] l. 1. Ep. 24.
[b] In Saba. Suidas in verb. Ἀνάσασις. quis sit Saba, vide præf. ad Moschi Prat. Spir. & c. 3. c. 80.
[c] See Baron. An. 511. n. 33. Siquis quatuor sanctas Synodos non tanti esse existimat quanti quatuor Evangelia sit anathema.
[d] ἐγγράφων. Thus Capreolus Bishop of Carthage in his answer to Vitalis and Constantius (who style him Bishop of the Catholick Church of Carthage, and Pope, and Sanctus Apostolatus vester, your holy Apostolacy, and consult him, that they may learn from him quæ fides Catholica recta teneat; as high titles and dignities as the Bishop of Rome can pretend to) speaking of the Nestorian Heresie and the Council of Ephesus, saith that it was therein radio Apostolicæ lucis extincta, extinguisht by a ray of Apostolical light, and for the asserting of the truth, appeals to the doctrine and tradition of Evangelical antiquity, doctrinam confitemur quam Evangelica tenet ac tradit antiquitas, &c. p. 42, 43.

4. Thirdly, because these being so near the Apostles times, and gathered as soon as the Heterodox opinions appeared, the sense of the Apostles might more easily be fetcht from those men and Churches, to whom they had committed it, and it was not in the power of Subtilty and Craft to infuse their poison undiscernably into those Fountains.

5. This account is also given by Lirinensis, where speaking of the way of confuting Hereticks * by producing and comparing the concordant doctrines of the old Fathers, he puts in this among other cautions. [c] All Heresies are not always thus to be impugned, but onely those that are fresh risen, and have not yet had time to vitiate the volumes of the Fathers, or falsifie the rules of the ancient Faith: Wisely foreseeing that in this case there is no course of dealing with, or convincing of Hereticks, unless it be [f] either by the sole authority of Scriptures, or by the Councils of Catholicks, which were long ago Universal.

* C. 39. Prolatis atque collatis veterum Magistrorum concordantibus sibimet sententiis.
[c] Sed neque semper neque omnes hæreses hoc modo impugnandæ sunt, sed novitiæ recentesque tantummodo, antequam insalsarint vetustæ fidei regulas.
[f] Aut sola Scripturarum authoritate, aut jam antiquitùs Universalibus Catholicorum Conciliis.

6. Fourthly, Some consideration may also be had of the special matter of the definitions of those four Councils, which were all spent upon the Deity and incarnation of Christ, and the Trinity, the great Fundamental Doctrines of Christianity; and to that also Vincentius directs us, in another caution of his, [g] The ancient consent of the holy Fathers is not to be sought and followed in all the little questions of the Divine law, but onely, sure principally, in the rule of Faith, those which the Apostles thought necessary to be believed, and so taught them universally.

[g] Ibid. Antiquorum Patrum consensio, non in omnibus divinæ legis quæstiunculis, sed solum, certè præcipuè, in fidei regula —— investiganda & sequenda est.

7. And therefore of the Scriptures, of the Creed (that Regula fidei una, sola immobilis & irreformabilis, that one, onely immoveable and unreformable rule of Faith, as Tertullian calls it, De vel. Vir. c. 1.) and of those four Councils, as the Repositories of all true Apostolical tradition, I suppose it very regular to affirm, that the intire body of the Catholick Faith, is to be eſtabliſht, and all Hereſies convinced, or elſe that there is no juſt reaſon, that any doctrine ſhould be condemned as ſuch.

[h] Reply to Cath. Gent. Ch. VIII. Sect. 2. n. 4, 5, 6, 7.

8. This I have [h] elſewhere cleared both out of the expreſs words of the Council of Epheſus, the third of thoſe four, that no man ſhould produce, or offer to any convert whether from Gentiliſm, Judaiſm, Hereſie, any other belief beſide that which was eſtabliſht by the Fathers at Nice: From the Greeks in the Council of Florence, that no man except he were mad, would charge that Faith of Imperfection. From the Latines, who acknowledged there, that all difference as well as contrariety of Faith was forbidden by thoſe Fathers, and that a bare explication of the ſame for the whole Church was not lawfull for any to attempt, but an Univerſal Council: From the Epiſtle of Celeſtine there cited, that the faith delivered by the Apoſtles admits neither increaſe nor diminution: and Laſtly from the Catechiſm collected out of Coſterus, Petrus à Soto, and others, ſet out by command of the Archbiſhop of Triers, that there was never any Hereſie which might not be condemned by the Apoſtles Creed. Add to theſe the authority of the Greek Church, as we find it teſtified by Jeremias Patriarch of Conſtantinople in their cenſure of the Germans, where having recited the Nicene Creed (without the filióque) as propoſed by the Nicene, confirmed by the Conſtantinopolitan Fathers, p. 13. he adds, Hæc eſt illa communis confeſſio omnium ſanctorum Patrum, Hæc eſt illa divina, ſanctiſſima, perfecta, ac univerſalis per orbem terrarum fuſi populi Chriſtiani teſſera. Hic eſt certiſſimus univerſæ Chriſtianæ fidei limes— and again, veluti quoddam cœleſte, integrum & incorruptum—divino numine afflatorum hominum depoſitum, p. 15.

SECT. VIII.

Of the ſubſequent General Councils. The Romaniſts difference them.

1. IF after all this it be ſtill farther demanded, what reverence is due to all other Univerſal Councils, and why not the ſame as to theſe four? I anſwer, Firſt, that the reaſons of a difference have been ſufficiently given already, and ſo as is, Ad homines, to the Romaniſts, unreprovable, it being moſt evident that among them there is difference made between ſome of thoſe, which yet they deem to be all Oecumenical Councils.

2. For Firſt, it is certain that they reckon above eight of theſe; And even the Biſhops of Rome themſelves in their exaltation to the Papacy, who would ſure be ſuppoſed to undertake the maintaining of the whole Catholick Faith, do profeſs to maintain no more than the eight firſt of them. The words of this profeſſion we have ſet down out of their own Day-Book, in the Corpus Juris Canon. in this form, [i] I profeſs to keep whole to a tittle the eight holy univerſal Councils, the firſt at Nice—and to eſteem them worthy of like honour and veneration, and by all means to follow and preach all that they have promulgated and decreed, and with heart and mouth to condemn all that they have condemned.

[i] Decret. Par. 1. diſt. 16. c. 8. Sancta octo univerſalia Concilia, i. e. Primum Nicenum—immutata ſervare & pari honore & veneratione digna habere, & quæ prædicaverunt & ſtatuerunt modis omnibus ſequi & prædicare, quaque condemnaverunt ore & corde condemnare profiteor.

3. Secondly, it is as evident, that all Biſhops of Rome in former times, have not (at leaſt with equal reverence) received all theſe eight, which theſe now thus receive. I ſhall give an inſtance or two.

[k] Ep. 7. c. 1. Concil. To. 6. p. 496. [l] Omnium ſimul ſanctorum atque venerandorum ſex Conciliorum authoritate.

4. [k] Pope Nicholaus the Firſt, in the damnation of Photius, after the authority of God and the Princes of the Apoſtles Peter and Paul, mentioning that alſo of all the holy and venerable univerſal Councils, numbers but [l] ſix of them; and this Anno Chr. DCCCLXII. that is LXXX years after the holding of the ſeventh Council.

5. And ſo alſo doth [m] Pope Adrian II. his ſucceſſour, Epiſt. 26. ad Carolum Calvum.

[n] Ibid. p. 496. [o] Cur hic Nicolaus, & infra Adrianus ſex tantum Oecumenicas Synodos nominent, dicam infra in notis Conc. Rom. III. Sub. [p] Not. in Conc. Rom. III. Tom. 6. Conc. p. 655. [q] Tom. 10. p. 275. An. Ch. 863. n. 5. Cur tam Nicolaus hic quàm ejus ſucceſſor Adrianus—ſex tantum Oecumenicas Synodos nominet, inferius ab authore alia occaſione dicetur.

6. And Binius that in his [n] margin takes notice of theſe two paſſages, and [o] promiſeth to render a reaſon thereof afterwards, when he comes to the [p] due place of performing that promiſe, ſpeaks not a word of that matter, unleſs this be it, that Anaſtaſius Bibliothecarius ſaith of two Archbiſhops; Epiſtolas Pontificis ad libitum falſaſſe, that they falſified at their pleaſure the Epiſtles of Pope Nicholaus. Which if it were granted to be true, yet neither concludes it that they thus falſified this particular paſſage in this Epiſtle, which indeed nothing concern'd the cauſe of thoſe Archbiſhops, nor can be any-way deemed applicable to Pope Adrian doing the ſame, of whom neither Anaſtaſius nor Binius himſelf ſo much as ſuggeſt any. ſuch thing, and therefore this was certainly a moſt gainleſs artifice of evaſion, and an indication that there was no better to be found, to ſalve this buſineſs.

7. Baronius in his reciting that Epiſtle of Nicolaus, hath in effect the ſame [q] Marginal obſervation, before Binius, and promiſeth to render the reaſon of it, afterward on another occaſion, not directing us where that ſhould be lookt for; yet he defers it not long, for he doth it in the very next Section, rendring this onely account of it. 1. That [r] in all the other Patriarchal Churches, but Conſtantinople, there were onely ſix Oecumenical Councils named in their publick Confeſſions, citing Photius's Epiſtle for it; and thence concluding that what Nicolaus did, was done by the other Patriarchal Sees, even by his enemies confeſſion. Secondly, that the like cauſe was to be rendred for both, that till Anaſtaſius helpt them to a tranſlation of the Acts of that Synod out of pure Copies, they † did not give it the title of an Oecumenical Council, and accordingly [t] Nicolas thus long alſo ſuſpended his judgment.

[r] In reliquis omnibus Eccleſiis Patriarchalibus Orientis, Conſtantinopolitanâ exceptâ, ſex tantum Oecumenicas Synodos in publicis confeſſionibus nominari conſuevisſe. † Non eodem præconio nempe titulo Oecumenico fuerunt eam perſecuti. Baro. an. 863. n. 6. [t] Nicolaus judicium ſuſpendit ſuum ex dicta cauſa.

3. But

8. But Binius which ſurely ſaw theſe anſwers of Baronius, could not (though he were much diſtreſt, as hath appeared) think fit to make uſe of either of them, or refer the reader to them, though he bids Vide Baron. An. 863. n. 20, &c. which belongs to another matter.

9. And indeed the firſt part of the Cardinal's account doth confeſs that no other Patriarchal See but Conſtantinople did at this time receive this Council. And ſo Photius then Patriarch of Conſtantinople, which moſt zealouſly aſſerted it, doth acknowledge, in his [y] Encyclical Epiſtle to the Archbiſhops of the Orient. And theſe Patriarchal Sees had great reaſon ſo to forbear; for they were none of them preſent either in perſon, or by Legates, or Proxies, at that Council, as may well appear by the ſame [x] Baronius in his ſetting down the Hiſtory of it: confeſſing that Tarafius's Legate could not come to them, that when they were as far as Paleſtine, they heard of the death of Theodorus Patriarch of Jeruſalem, and were advertiſed by ſome Monks, how dangerous it was to go either to the Patriarch of Antioch or Alexandria, and conſequently were perſwaded to give over the attempt. As for the pretended Legates of thoſe Sees, they were evidently but Impoſtours, John and Thomas the Presbyters were not ſent by the Patriarchs of Alexandria and Antioch (and for the See of Jeruſalem, it was void, as was ſaid, by the death of Theodorus) but were ſent onely by thoſe Monks or Hermits of Paleſtine, as appears by the Letters, which they brought with them, beginning thus, Τοῖς Πατράσι, &c. ἡμεῖς οἱ ταπεινοὶ καὶ ἔσχατοι τοῦ κατοικεῖν ἐρημικῶν ἐσταμένοι τόπων, Having read your Letters, We the mean, and laſt or loweſt of thoſe that have deſired to live in the Deſart, or the Hermetick life.— See [y] Concil. Nic. 2. Act. 3. And ſo this being moſt true, is very far from an anſwer to the objection; 'tis a large addition to the force of it, as far as concerns the authority of that Council.

[y] An. 785. n. 40.

10. And for the other part, that the Latines as yet wanted pure Copies of it, that can as little be pretended ſo many years after the holding of that Council, eſpecially when the Acts of it had now long ſince, immediately after the making them, been diſcuſs'd in the Council of Frankfort, and by Pope Adrian I. defended againſt that Council.

11. That which [z] Bellarmine adventures on in this matter is yet more ſtrange, and unreconcileable with the confeſſion of Baronius; for Baronius had confeſt that Anaſtaſius had tranſlated that Council out of a pure Copy, and ſo brought it to Rome; and yet this other Cardinal would perſwade us, that long after Anaſtaſius, even after the time of Thomas Aquinas, and Halenſis, the Acts of this ſeventh Council lay hid, and ſo were not produced till that laſt age wherein himſelf had lived; which if it were granted him to be true, it would ſure be little for the dignity and authority of that Council.

[z] De Imag. lib. 1. cap. 22.

12. Farther yet; In the Corpus Juris Canonici ſet out emendate by the command of Pope Gregory XIII. there is no mention of any more than ſix General Councils, ſave onely in that one paſſage out of the Day-book of the Pope's profeſſion to maintain the eight, which is to me an argument, that all General Councils are not ſo revered by them, as that all their Canons are obliging among them.

13. I ſhall not need to add more evidences to infer ſo obvious a Concluſion, that among the Romaniſts themſelves, all General Councils have not had the ſame reception and Veneration, when in their Corpus Juris Decret. Par. 1. the 17 Diſtinction is thus prefaced; Generalia Concilia quorum tempore celebrata ſint, vel quorum authoritas cæteris præmineat, ſanctorum authoritatibus ſupra monſtratum eſt, In whoſe time the General Councils have been celebrated, or which of them hath a more eminent authority than the reſt, hath been ſhewed by the authorities of Holy men, referring to Diſt. 16. wherein yet, as I ſaid, there is no mention of any more than the firſt ſix, ſave onely that the Pope profeſſeth to maintain Eight.

SECT. IX.

Our Reverence to all General Councils. The Fifth and the Sixth.

1. THis might make any ſecond or farther anſwer unneceſſary; yet I ſhall not doubt to proceed ſome ſteps farther, and 1. allow the ſame credit, though not the ſame degree of Reverence (for the reaſons premiſed) to all Aſſemblies of Chriſtians, which have ſerved the Church in this office of conveying Apoſtolical Truths to us, and which are according to right reaſon and by the grounds premiſed, qualified for a good Chriſtian's reception, or as are not under ſome very juſt prejudice: Nay 2. though I make it no matter of Faith, becauſe delivered neither by Scripture nor Apoſtolick Tradition, yet I ſhall number it among the Piè credibilia, that no General Council, truly ſuch, 1. duly aſſembled, 2. Freely celebrated, and 3. Univerſally received, either hath erred, or ever ſhall err in matters of Faith.

2. The expreſſing my ſelf more fully in which particulars, will be a means to bring this whole matter to ſuch an iſſue, as I ſhall hope no adverſary will with any colour of reaſon, or truth, be able to gainſay.

3. And 1. for the Fifth General Council, it being for the Doctrinal part of it, but a Corroboration of the fourth, Our Church makes no more doubt of that, than of the fourth it doth. Onely after the example of Vincentius Lirinenſis, that famous propugnatour of the Catholick Faith againſt all Hereſies, and by ſtrength of the premiſed Epheſine Canon, we believe the four firſt Councils to be the conſervatories of all truly Catholick, i. e. Apoſtolick Tradition, from whence together with the Scripture all Hereſies may be oppugned, and confuted, and ſo have no ſuch need of, or benefit from this fifth, as from the former four Councils.

4. So 2. for the Sixth, as far as that concerns the errour of the Monothelites, which denied the two wills in Chriſt, ſo it is duly founded in Scripture, and the ſame Apoſtolick Tradition, which had aſſerted the two natures againſt Eutyches, and we willingly receive it, thinking it unneceſſary to proceed to thoſe other Acts, that go under the name of that Council, but were written afterward, and which the [a] Romaniſts acknow-knowledge to be corrupt and not to ſavour of Apoſtolical Tradition. [b] There are, ſaith the Hiſtory of that Council, carried about ſome Canons in the name of that Sixth Synod in Trullo, but they were ſet out without the Legates of the Apoſtolick See, and not approved by them, wherein there be alſo ſome things which ſavour not of Apoſtolical Tradition.

[a] See Corp. Jur. Can. Decret. 1. par. Diſt. 16. c. 6. Nat. Habeo librum. Et Ibid. c. 7.

[b] Conc. Tom. 5. p. 8. Circumferuntur autem nonnulli Canones nomine ſextæ Synodi in Trullo, veruntamen editi ſine Legatis Apoſtolicæ Sedis, nec ab ea comprobati, in quibus & nonnulla ſunt quæ minus Apoſtolicam ſapiunt Traditionem. See alſo the Admonition to the Reader prefixt to the Canons of this ſixth Synod, Concil. t. 5. p. 311, &c. which abſolutely rejects thoſe Canons.

5. From which words I ſuppoſe I may conclude the reaſon of the Legates not confirming them, to be this, becauſe they did not ſavour of Apoſtolical Tradition. And then theſe two inferences are clear. Firſt, that 'tis the Romaniſts judgment unqueſtionably (and that appears not onely by this, but by many other inſtances, eſpecially by that of Chalcedon, about the privileges of New Rome) that the Decree of a General Council is not valid from it ſelf, or any innate authority (for if it were, it would not need the authority of the Pope himſelf to give it that validity) but receives its force from ſubſequent approbation, or elſe is not a Catholick Decree.

6. And then what reaſon can be rendred, why the want of the approbation of other Apoſtolical Churches ſhould not have the ſame efficacy to prejudge the Univerſality of a Decree: for ſure they are Chriſtians and Biſhops, as well as the Biſhops of Rome, and conſequently their Negatives as evident exceptions and prejudices to, and as utterly unreconcileable with an Univerſal affirmative as the Pope's can be; and the ſuppoſing that the Pope hath power for the whole Church, and that infallible, for the approving or repudiating Decrees, is ſtill the removing all authority and Univerſality from the Council, and placing it in the Pope, making him, and not the Council the Grand Repreſentative Church, and ſo is the deſtroying the whole doctrine of the authority of Councils.

7. Secondly, That the Reaſon or Rule of the Romaniſts judgment may certainly be drawn into example, and prove imitable to other Chriſtians, and then it muſt be lawfull for the Church of God, as well as for the Biſhop of Rome to inquire whether the Decrees of an Univerſal Council have been agreeable to Apoſtolical Tradition, or no, and if they be found otherwiſe, to reject them out, or not to receive them into their belief.

8. And then ſtill it is the matter of the Decrees, and the Apoſtolicalneſs of them, and the force of the teſtification, whereby they are approved and acknowledged to be ſuch, which gives the authority to the Council, and nothing elſe is ſufficient, where that is not to be found.

9. Agreeable to which is [c] S. Auguſtine's practice, Contr. Maximin. l. 3. c. 14. Neither, ſaith he, do I produce the Nicene Council, nor ſhould you that of Ariminum, neither am I obliged to the authority of this, nor you of that: By the authorities of Scripture, which are not proper to one but common to both, let the matter be debated, reaſon contending with reaſon——and then devolving all the authority of that moſt ancient and truly General Nicene Council, as well as of that other of [d] Ariminum, to the Apoſtolical grounds of truth, and thoſe expreſly in the written word of God (I and my Father are one, as the ground of ὁμούσιον) from whence they framed their Decrees.

[c] To. 6. p. 733. D. Nec ego Nicenum, nec tu debes Ariminenſe——proferre Concilium, nec ego hujus authoritate, nec tu illius detineris, ſcripturarum authoritatibus non quorumque propriis, ſed utriſque communibus, res cum re, cauſa cum cauſa, ratio cum ratione concertet. [d] Synod. Arimin. & Seleuc. Tom. 1. p. 873.

10. To which belongs that ſaying of [e] Athanaſius himſelf of the manner of Subſcriptions in the Council of Nice, who though in the matter of Eaſter (being not a Doctrine, but a Rite) they thought good to uſe this form, Τότε γὰρ ἔδοξε παῖται πεῖσαι, It ſeemed then good to us that all ſhould obey or obſerve that time, which they had defined; yet concerning the matters of Faith, ἔγεγραπται, οὐκ ἔδοξεν, ἀλλ', οὕτως καθόλου ἡ Καθολικὴ ἐκκλησία, They wrote, not [It ſeemed good to us] but [Thus the Catholick Church Commands] preſently ſetting down the Confeſſion it ſelf, that they might demonſtrate that their ſenſe was not new but Apoſtolical, and that what they wrote was not invented by themſelves, but was the very ſame which the Apoſtles had taught.

[e] Ἵνα δείξωσιν ὅτι μὴ νεώτερον, ἀλλ' Ἀποστολικὸν ὄντων αὐτῶν τὸ φρόνημα, ἃ ἔγραψαν, οὐκ ἐξ αὐτῶν εὑρέθη, ἀλλὰ ταῦτ' ἐστὶν, ἅπερ ἐδίδαξαν οἱ Ἀπόστολοι.

SECT. X.

Of the Seventh General Council.

1. AS for the Seventh Council, that Second of Nice, I have already more than intimated the Reaſons, why no Romaniſt can blame him that allows not the authority thereof.

2. Yet becauſe thoſe Teſtimonies, though of Popes themſelves, are indeed but Negative Teſtimonies, and being deſigned onely Ad hominem, to the Romaniſt, may ſtill ſtand in need of ſome farther confirmation to others; That alſo is ready at hand, and may be deduced from two heads, 1. From the Council of Eliberis, 2. From the Council of Frankfort, which preſently after the publiſhing of the Decrees of Nice for the worſhipping of Images, oppoſed and refuted that Doctrine.

3. For the firſt of theſe, the Council of Eliberis, that yields us an irrefragable proof, that the Doctrine of the Second Nicene Council was not teſtified by all the Church of all ages to be of Tradition Apoſtolical.

4. The 36th Canon of that Council lies thus, Placuit Picturas in Eccleſia eſſe non debere, ne quod colitur aut adoratur in parietibus depingatur, 'Tis reſolved that Pictures ſhould not be in the Church, leſt that which is adored be painted on walls. Which though it be but a Canon of a Provincial Council, and that in a matter of Rite, and ſo hath no power of obliging all others beyond that Province, and might alſo be there after retracted again; yet being in the year of our Lord 305. twenty years before the firſt Nicene Council, and ſo 482. years before the ſecond, is a convincing argument, That what was in the ſecond Nicene defined, was not the language of Apoſtolical Tradition, univerſally teſtified to be ſuch; for then theſe Fathers at Eliberis, and among them the great Oſius, which ſate after in the firſt Council of Nice, and Liberius, whoſe name we have have in the Council of Arles, would never have made this Decree ſo directly contrary to ſuch pretended Tradition Apoſtolical.

5. In this matter 'tis worth obſerving how Cardinal Baronius hath behaved himſelf. In his firſt Volume Ad An. Ch. 57. n. CXIX. being troubled that 19 Biſhops in a corner of the world, ſhould decree otherwiſe than (as he is concerned to believe) the Univerſal Church of all places profeſt, he attempts to annull this Council, rendring his reaſon, Pleraque enim in eo ſunt quæ fines Novatiani erroris viſa ſunt prope attigiſſe, There were many Canons in it, which ſeemed almoſt to touch upon the borders of the Novatian Hereſie: and if they were but the borders of Hereſie, and theſe Canons did onely touch upon thoſe borders, or indeed but ſeem, and that again but almoſt ſeem, then theſe Canons might be very Catholick and Orthodox for all that. P. 626.

6. The truth is, thoſe Canons that deny onely Communion to the Lapſi, but deny them not repentance and abſolution, are far enough from Novatian, and ſo preſently after he acknowledges, Ceterum quod ſciamus ejus conventus Epiſcopos fuiſſe Catholicos, de Novatiana Hæreſi nulla ſuſpicio eſſe debet, cùm præſertim hi licèt communionem, tamen pœnitentiam non negarent, ut de eo Innocentius Papa tradit: But ſeeing we know that the Biſhops of that Council were Catholick, they muſt not be ſuſpected of Novatianiſm, eſpecially ſeeing though they denied communion, they did not deny repentance, as Pope Innocent affirms of that Council.

7. Here in the ſame Paragraph he hath freed them from that ſuſpicion, which he was willing to have affixt on them; and it ſeems Pope Innocent was to be thank't for it, who appeared on their ſide, or elſe Oſius, &c. muſt have gone for Novatians, and then never have been worth heeding in any other matter. This farther appears by the ſame Baronius in his Second Volume Ad An. 305. n. 41. Where having the ſame words again, of the Propemodum viſi * S. Novatianorum limites attigiſſe, that they almoſt ſeem'd to touch upon the borders of the Novatians; he renders that as the cauſe that there is no mention of this Synod by name among the ancients, and ſo that it remain'd almoſt antiquated, therefore (ſaith he) he remembred he had ſpoken elſewhere (in the place forementioned) paulò liberiùs, a little too freely of that Council; but ſeeing their reſolutions herein were excuſed by Pope Innocent, Nemo ſit qui accuſare præſumat, No man may preſume to accuſe that Council. And then ſure this Cardinal had been too bold in thus preſuming. * ſunt.

8. What other arts he now betakes himſelf to, to deliver him from the force of that Canon againſt Images, I ſhall not now examine; there being nothing of any force to ſuperſede my concluſion, that this Canon is ſufficient prejudice to the Univerſality of the teſtification, that the Nicene Canons for Images are of Apoſtolical Tradition. And 'tis here obſervable that though this Synod pretend to tradition of all times on their ſide, yet the higheſt teſtimony thereof to which they pretend is that of the ſixth Council (See Act. VI. Tom. 5. p. 732. B.) whoſe Canons they aſſert, and cite the 82. for their turn: And yet, as hath been here ſhewed in this Chapter, Sect. 9. Sect. 4. the Romaniſts themſelves reject theſe Canons, and ſo doth the Admonition to the Reader prefixt to them in Binius's Edition of the Councils, Tom. 5. p. 311, &c.

9. As for the Council of Frankfort, that makes it as plain, that the Decrees of theſe Nicene Fathers were not received, but rejected by other parts of the Chriſtian Church in France, in Germany, and Italy, if not in Spain alſo.
